Nurse Pigott had her nerves too, and for days she had been preparing to nerve herself to undergo with fortitude a separation, which the dandy, to do him justice, had warned her was inevitable. But for the stay to part with a domestic pet round which the cords of your heart have twined themselves is very, very hard. And Nurse Pigott had known Lily long before she could speak or walk. She had taken her son from the breast, she had sat by her night after night in those sicknesses when the life of a little child is so easily blown out as a rushlight. She had rejoiced in the growing strength and beauty. For what light and knowledge there was already in Lily's mind Nurse Pigott, with many humble, homely sayings, had opened the door. She had taught the little morsel of Christianity to prattle out some prayers, to lisp some hymns of divine worship, to hear about God, and the sky, and good and naughty people. Lily used to call her "mumma," and the male Pigott (plasterer and bass, honest and kindhearted fellow by nature) she accosted as "dada." Yes; the divorce was hard, albeit the youngling was gone of Hebrew race to her own folk, and Lily had possessed as a foster-brother the surviving twin, a tranquil little boy, with wisdom far beyond his years—who, during the major part of his time in sprawling on the ground, in earnest contemplation of the curious features of that other world of which the doctor forbade his parents to entertain a lengthened hope of his living to investigate. Nurse Pigott had many examples of Nurse Pigott had been the very reverse of refused, but it had never lacketed affectionate and seduloss love. Lily was therefore absolutely doted on her charge, although five shillings a week was all the amount of the remuneration she received for tending it. Work was sometimes slack with the plasterer, and he, his wife, and the twin (whose profoundly philosophical temperament led him to be a practical police-potice as an ailment equal in succulence to bread and butter, or even to meat) had occasionally to go on short commons; but Lily was never short of a meal, abundant in quantity and nourishing in quality. She had never known what it was to go without pudding. At night-nor-after she was, as he seemed her age; yet what morsels of flesh she required were never wanting, one brass farthing had to be put down before the doctor for measuring the deposit in tribulation of the plasterer's great boy with the pails. The male Pigotts adoration for her was prodigious. In her earliest youth he could with difficulty be deterred from offering her sups of beer from his evening pint; and when told that the fermented infusion of malt and hops was improper refreshment for a child, he, on the morn, absolutely forewent a mighty moiety of his beer-money in order to purchase apples and gingerbread for his fosterbaby. The price of half a pint of porter was not a very sumptuous bounty; but a penny, as you may be aware, goes a very long way in a large family indeed.

The stock of clothes, beginning in the mere langes of infancy, and renewed from time to time as the child grew old enough for little frocks and socks, had never been very extensive nor very abundant; but Nurse Pigott had kept Lily's wardrobe with admirable and scrupulous neatness. Only once during the three years and a half had she ever importuned the dandy (with whom she was instructed to correspond through the medium of a London post-office, and the initials P. P.) for money. There was after a journey to Kensington undertaken by the nurse, when in the window of a certain haberdasher's in the High where she had seen a cloak of mouse-colored merino, so curiously embroidered with silken braid that she had there and then determined to secure it for Lily, either by legitimate means of asking Mr. Blunt for the money, or by selling or pawning her own goods and chattels, or by bursting bodily into the shop and stealing the much-coveted robe. Fortunately, however, measures as desperate had not to be resorted to. The dandy happened to be in funds, and in a good humor, when he received a pathetic and ill-spelt letter directed to P. B., and the sum demanded, which was but two guineas, was forwarded. But chiefly had Mr. Pigott found favor in the dandy gentleman's eyes from the exquisite cleanliness and neatness in which she had always kept Lily. The philosophical twin objected on principle to soap, and his father deprecated his being subjected to much lavatory discipline, on the ground that he (the twin) should be washed away if he were washed over; but there was always warm water for Lily and Windsor soap for Lily; nay, on one occasion, good Nurse Pigott had purchased of the Castile soap, which, from its curiously marbled appearance, the child imagined to be sweetmeat, and essayed to suck. Without comment she never went without her bath, and although her poor little garments had frequently to be pieced and darned, she was always tidy and shining as the newest of pins.

A very few words will suffice to explain how Lily came into Nurse Pigott's custody. Three years and a half before the commencement of this history the plasterer became acquainted of an advertisement in the day before yesterday's Morning Advertiser (it was before the days of penny journalism), which he was in the habit of borrowing from the hostelry where he purchased his modest allowance of beer. This advertisement set forth that a lady and gentleman were desirous of placing an infant at nurse with some respectable person in the immediate vicinity of London. Nurse Pigott then occupied a diminutive cottage at Brentford. Forthwith they answered the advertisement in an epistle which the plasterer rendered to be a chef d'œuvre of caligraphy and composition, and which was, indeed, a marvel of archaic orthography and ahnormal pothooks and hangers. The letter was answer arrived and an appointment made to meet the advertiser in London. Thither went Nurse Pigott, arrayed in her Sunday clothes, and at a specified hotel in Dover Street, Piccadilly, she was received, not by the dandy, but by Monsieur Saurnois, a native Switzer-lad, he said, who made all the necessary arrangements for the reception of an infant six months old, and paid a month in advance of the sum stipulated for. Being asked whether the child was christened (for Nurse Pigott was a stanch member of England woman), he replied that it did not matter. Being pressed on this point he said that it was all right, and that the child's name was to be Lily Smith. And as Lily Smith she was received by Nurse Pigott. The good woman did not feel herself called upon to ask any more questions. Infants are put out to nurse every year, and by the thousand, in and about London, without evidence far more satisfactory than a money payment in advance being given or required. Very often no name at all is asked for or furnished. I am sorry to say that such a system encourages immorality. I should like to hear, on this subject, those blessed Sisters of Ln. Sainte-Enfance—Society for Childhood Redeemed, long, who buy babies from the Chinese mothers to save the little innocents from being eaten alive, or, her throws, by any one in the interior of China, to the pig.

The little Lily Smith throve space, and had not more than an average share of infantile ailments. I believe that I am correct in stating that she had the measles beautifully, that she got through her teething with promptitude and dispatch, and that only the most favorable symptoms were developed when she had the whoop-ing, as it was called among the fashionables at Richmond. With the unfashionables on the other side of the Thames at Brentford it was known as the chicken-pox. Monsieur Saurnois came at first once a month to see Baby, and greatly impressed Nurse Pigott with the politeness of his manners and the affability of his conversation. By-and-by he was succeeded by Mr. Smith, an severe kicked old gentleman, never bundled it, and, indeed, took not much more notice of it, in a languid survey through his eyeglass, than a glance. And if Lily had been a mewet doll in a toy-shop. Thus did the little girl remain until she was nearly four years of age—the payments for her maintenance falling sometimes, as I have hinted, into arrear. But Nurse Pigott and the plasterer (who loved Lily as the apple of his eye) never grumbled. They would gladly, as the poor woman had said, have kept their foster-child for nothing; and it was a day of bitter sorrow for them when a cart letter arrived from Mr. Blunt—or F. B. —as he continued to sign himself, directing the child to be made ready and brought to the place of rendezvous he pointed out on such and such a day. So Lily, poor little shorn lamb, after having the wind tempered to her, was suddenly to be given up to the grim gaunt wolf.

I return—I don't say that I have not grim; for all the while that I have been telling the story of Lily's babyhood Mr. Blunt's countenance had been robed in his most dulcet smile, and he has been exhausting his seductive arsenal to soothe and conciliate the sobbing child. He has shown her his trinkets, his teeth, and the gold knob to his cane: he has done every thing but kiss her. Besides the tears for innocent kisses as for that of bread and jam. Tiger Blunt liked his kisses conditioned with caviar or cayenne pepper.

The nurse was consoled and the child quieted at last; and after an infinity of hugging, the poor plasterer's wife announced that she was ready to go, and that she was sorry for having kept the gentleman so long. Between the spasms of her parting embrace she told Lily that she should see him again very soon.

"And I may, mayn't I, Sir?" she continued, turning with an appealing look to the shabby. "Oh say that I may, if it's only once a year. I shall break my 'art, I know I shall, if I don't see my darling again."

"Of course!" replied the dandy, who would have promised any thing to secure a good deliverance. "The child shall write to you"—Poor little Lily, who didn't know great A from a bull's foot as yet: "that is, I'll write, yes, yes. Now, my good Nurse Figott, we really must be going; you know."

So two heavy hearts and one very callous one went out of the little tavern parlor and into the road: the landlady and her inquisitive daughter craning their necks after them. There was no luggage to carry. Lily's little effects would have filled an ordinary carpet bag; but the dandy had graciously informed Mrs. Figott that she might keep the child's clothes, as new ones would be provided for her at the place whither she was bound. Where that place might be the good woman did not venture to ask, for although the dandy's teeth helped his mouth admirably towards a smile, they also looked as though they were capable on occasion of biting.

At the end of the lane—not that by which the dandy had originally approached, but its opposite extremity—a hackney-coach was waiting. It was now nearly dark. By the dandy's direction Nurse Figott lifted Lily into the vehicle, which, by the way already, as she could discovery discern, one occupant, and that a man. The child was by this time half asleep and wholly tired. The dandy condescendingly gave Nurse Figott a couple of fingers, dextrously hustled her on one side, and in another minute she found herself crying in the middle of the road, quite alone.

But not so lonely as poor little Lily, albeit she was in a coach-and-pair with two men, one of whom told her that he was her papa.

CHAPTER IV.

THE MISS BUNNYCASTLE'S ESTABLISHMENT.

"EARLY to bed and early to rise," was the time-honored maxim in the establishment of the Misses Bunnycastle, Rhododendron House, Rhododendron private road, Stockwell. Time-honored indeed, and with justice it might be called, for it had been acted upon for at least twenty years, during which lengthened period the Bunnycastle family had kept a ladies' school in Rhododendron Road, as aforesaid. Stay; I have fallen into a slight error. When Mrs. Bunnycastle first underwent, in the second decade of the nineteenth century, those scholastic duties at Stockwell which her daughters subsequently and so efficiently performed, Rhododendron proper had existed only in the form of a narrow path between two market gardens, and went, I fear, by the painfully unacademic name of Cut-throat Lane. But when culture came to Clapham, and civilization in Stockwell, the by-path became a "private road," neatly graveled, and bordered by trim villas. The old market gardener's habitation indeed remained, but was rechristened Rhododendron House. Formerly it had been known as Bubb's Folly. Bubb was the last market-gardener, and inherited the house, a respectable one-storied structure of red brick, from his grandfather. Long and careful attention to horticulture brought him riches, and in his old age it was bruited about that he had become somewhat mad, not so as to require any restraint, or being in any way incapable of managing his own affairs (for he was to the day of his death as avaricious as ever), and as keen a hand at a bargain, as could be found between Bermondsey and Brixton). His madness did not go further than that harmless eccentricity which physiologists may have observed that enriched tailors, hatters, and market gardeners are frequently subject to. It possessed him at this crisis to turned all his nephews and nieces out of doors, contracted a morganatic alliance with a bold face housekeeper, with an abusive tongue and an uncontrollable taste for silk dresses and ardent spirits, and—he who had sat for so many years under the round Mr. Bradbury of Soothey Bay, and had even been a deacon to that shining congregational light—plunged headlong into sectarianism, attended infidel lectures, and ceased to believe in any thing. He took to drinking also; and it is reported to find how often a contempt for revealed religion is combined with a fondness for cold rum-and-water. In a word, Mr. Bubb was in his latter days, both by no means uncommon character, a "wicked old man;" and the good pietists of Stockwell, albeit they wrestled manfully with him, could neither convert nor extract subscriptions from him. Rumor ran in the neighborhood to the effect that he kept his coffin under his bed, and that he had told him*self* to the Powers of Evil; but mere report should have little weight in presence of the facts that he was a querulous old curmudgeon, who swore, drank hard, and didn't wash. As a climax to his strange proceedings he added a tower or Belvedere to his grandfather's old brick house, for the summit of this edifice, which resembled externally a Chinese pagoda brick faced, and with a dash of the truncated factory chimney about it, he built a smoking-room where he drank and took tobacco, and read unbelieving books till his time came, and he died. Twas the pagoda-chimney Belvedere that caused the house to be called Bubb's Folly; and long after his decease ancient people persisted in applying the old title to Rhododendron House.

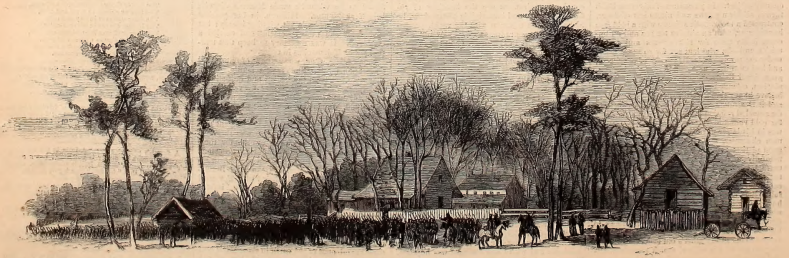
If the Belvedere, however, was Bubb's Folly, his surviving property which he directed in his will to be carefully let out in building lots might, with equal propriety, have been designated Bubb's Commodities. The morganatic housekeeper, to the rage and despair of the nephews and nieces, came into all the property, save what the High Court of Chancery could not pick a hole in the crazy old market gardener's testament. The enriched housekeeper removed to more genteel quarters at Clapham, and (doubtless to make amends for the latitudinarianism of her morganatic life) became a partizan of zeal, and an under a congregational luminary even more shining than the Reverend Mr. Bradbody. The old brick Folly passed through many vicissitudes of alternate desolation and unprofitable tenancy, while house in the most modern style of domestic architecture sprang up on either side. Then, however, had willed that his Folly was not to be demolished, and being advertised, at last, as "eligible school premises," with an observatory admirably suited for scientific purposes," it was taken about the year eighteen hundred and sixteen by Mrs. Bunnycastle, and made into a select establishment for young ladies.

Mrs. Bunnycastle's husband was a gentleman who had taught writing, arithmetic, and the use of the globes in suburban seminaries for many years. He also gave lessons in the Belles Lettres; that is to say, he would recite, with the sonorous emphasis of the late John Kemble, any number of pages from Milton, "Childe Harold," and "Enfield's Speaker." To this declamation young ladies of a literary turn (it was a time-looking age) were invited to listen on moonlight nights. Mrs. Bunnycastle had been, in her youth, a nursery governess in a great family—as nursery governesses were in those days. She had waited, and dressed, and physicked, and romped with, and, on occasion, castigated her young charges; and mended their clothes, and was the housekeeper's room, called the butler "Sir," was very kindly treated by her noble employers, and was perfectly happy. In a word, she had her place. In these times nursery governesses make themselves miserable because they are not put on a par with duchesses. They don't know their place. So, at least, their noble employers bitterly complain. Mrs. Bunnycastle (née Lappin) was of a soft and sentimental disposition. She was a great educational theorist, and had so filled her head with dogmas of training as Locke, Jacques Rousseau, Madame Leprince de Beaumont, and Mesdames Chapone, Trimmer, and Hannah More—to say nothing of Dr. Watts, Jacob, and the Reverends Messrs. Gisborne and Chirol, and Dr. Fordyce's "Discourse on the Character and Conduct of the Female Sex"—that the instructional system ended in her permitting her pupils to do pretty well as they liked. She was much beloved by them in consequence. Her favorite work after "Emile" was "Adelaide and Theodore; or, Letters upon Education"—that dreary, dispiriting old foreign book of dialogues, wherein in which the baroness writes to Madame d'Ostalis to tell her how Seraphine has bitten her little brother; but which is chiefly remarkable as "producing perfection" in her daughter Adelaide, who is "fourteen years old, an excellent musician, knowing with equal facility, speaking and singing Italian like a native, and absolutely cured of every female deficiency." Happy Adelaide, and thrice happy baroness!

The worthy Bunnycastle, who taught Belles Lettres, died a year before Rhododendron House was taken. His widow was faithful to his memory, and brought up her three daughters Adelaide (so christened after the baroness's paragon), Celia, and Barbara up in love and reverence of their inoffensive papa's portrait with its shirt collar and its hair (the latter most beautifully painted), and with the silver standish "presented to him by the young ladies of Ostrolenka College, Queen's Lithuania," and a variety of his unwearied exertions in teaching them plain and ornamental writing, arithmetic (on Mr. Wilkinson's principle), the use of the globes (Jacques

SANDERSON, FLORIDA, OCCUPIED BY OUR ADVANCE BEFORE THE BATTLE OF OLUSTEE.

SCENE OF THE FIGHT AT THE PLANK BRIDGE OVER BIG CREEK, AT BARBER'S, FEBRUARY 19, 1864.



BARBER'S HOUSE AT THE FORD ON BIG CREEK, COLONEL BARTON'S HEAD-QUARTERS.

THE WAR IN FLORIDA.

We publish on the preceding page three sketches illustrating the late movements of General Seymour's forces previous to the great battle on the 20th of February. The town of Sanderson was occupied by our advanced force. The main infantry force was in the vicinity of Barber's House. The artist who sends us these sends also a third sketch, giving the scene of the conflict on the 11th, at the bridge over Big Creek, near St. Mary's River. This bridge was carried by Colonel Henry, assisted by Major Stevens, with a loss of one man killed, three mortally and twelve severely wounded.

ESCAPING UNION OFFICERS SUCCORED BY SLAVES.

The sketch on page 164 represents a party of the Union officers who lately escaped from Libby prison, under the guidance and protection of negroes living in the environs of Richmond. They are conducted by one of these poor slaves to his cabin for temporary safety and provision against cold and hunger. The attitude of the negroes assembled in the cabin, the apprehension shown on the faces of the prisoners who in every sound hear the tramp of Confederate cavalry, and the anxious but determined look of their guide tell the story better than could any verbal description. We are tempted, however, to say one word in favor of these poor negroes. Both in the South and the North they are helping us—helping our soldiers that escape from rebel prisons, and going from our midst to help them fight our battles for us. Hunted to death by the mobs in our cities, they retaliate by joining our armies, and they do their duty on the battle-field. In the late reverses at Olustee the First North Carolina and the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts—both negro regiments—stood their ground with unflinching bravery and perfect coolness. "The Fifty-fourth," says the Herald's correspondent, "sustained the reputation they had gained at Wagner, and bore themselves like soldiers throughout the battle."

GENERAL SHERMAN.

We give on page 161 a portrait of General Sherman, whose late advance from Vicksburg toward Montgomery has been one of the best executed and most important movements of the war.

William T. Sherman was born in Ohio in 1818. He graduated at West Point in 1840, in the same class with General Thomas, and was promoted to the First Lieutenancy in 1841. He served in California during the Mexican War, and was brevetted Captain for meritorious conduct. At the commencement of hostilities with the South he offered his services to the Government, and was appointed Colonel of the Thirteenth infantry, which regiment he commanded in Bull Run. Afterward appointed a Brigadier-General, he succeeded General Anderson in command of the Department of the Ohio. He was removed because he said that 200,000 men would be needed to fight the rebels successfully in Kentucky. This statement—afterward found to be true—was at that time suggestive of insanity. At the battle of Shiloh he took so prominent a part that Halleck reported to the War Department that the final success of that battle was mainly due to him. Having been promoted to a Major-Generalship he was placed in command of the Fifth Division of General Grant's army, and took an important part in the siege of Vicksburg. The movement in which he is now engaged, taken in connection with the approach of Farragut's fleet, was at first supposed to be directed against Mobile; but this was probably no more than a feint to cover a more important aim in connection with movements from Chattanooga. Selma, where Sherman was stationed at last accounts, is on the Alabama River midway between Mobile and Dalton.

GENERAL TRUMAN SEYMOUR.

GENERAL SEYMOUR.

We give on this page a portrait of General Truman Seymour, commanding the Florida expedition. He is a native of Vermont, and was appointed to the First Artillery from that State, July 1, 1846. He served through the Mexican War, and was made Captain by brevet. He was one of the officers of the garrison under Major Anderson's command at Fort Sumter, and has been engaged from that time in the work of suppressing the rebellion. His expedition to Florida was a perfect success up to the time of the occupation of Lake City. But the movement was of so much importance that the enemy concentrated a large force of 15,000 men at Olustee, on the Jacksonville and Tallahassee Railroad, and upon the advance of our forces against that point, with a greatly inferior force, General Seymour was compelled to retire with considerable loss.

WRECK OF THE "BOHEMIAN."

In our news column last week we gave an account of the wreck of the steamer Bohemian off Cape Elizabeth, near Portland, Maine. We give below, this week, a sketch representing the wreck as it appeared on Tuesday morning—the next after the vessel sunk. The steamer lies about a quarter of a mile from shore, in Staple's Cove, where she sunk in four fathoms of water, on a sandy, pebbly bottom, with her bow off shore and two anchors out. The greater portion of the hurricane-deck and officers' quarters have broken up, but the main-deck and hull remain firm. As the baggage was stowed on the upper-deck and under the bridge, it was all washed overboard, and will undoubtedly be a total loss. The sea has swept every thing clear from that quarter.

Captain Borland, we learn, reports that he was entirely misled by the hazy state of the atmosphere, and supposed that he was some four miles further off than he proved to be. He also says that he was steaming but one and a half knots per hour at the time, as he was anxiously looking for a pilot, and had been throwing rockets and burning blue-lights for half an hour.

None of the officers were lost, but the loss of passengers is now reported at twenty-six, besides five of the crew, thirteen more than was at first supposed. Fifty-four mail-bags have been recovered, leaving but one to be accounted for.

A WISH.

Dreary are the nights in winter,
When the north winds blow,
Shouting, shaking at the casement,
With a mighty woe—

Panting, sobbing through the darkness
Like a child that grieves;
Moaning at the doorway—creeping
Low, about the eaves.

But to-night the snow is lying
In a still moonlight—
O my Love—whom Death has hidden,
Visit me to-night!

Can you hear me through the raptures
Of the shining fields?
Where the waste of rose and lily,
Breath of Eden yields;

Where you walk with troops of spirits
Purged from earthly tears—
Can you hear? For one short vision
I would linger years.

Come, my Love! the snow is shining;
You may walk in white,
As upon the floor of heaven,
If you come to-night—

Not a print of mortal treading—
It is chastely meet—
You may walk, nor fear the soiling
Of your gentle feet.

Come! the dawn will shine upon it,
The great face of day—
Like a dream—in tears and silence,
It will melt away.

WRECK OF THE "BOHEMIAN" AS SEEN THE MORNING AFTER SHE SUNK.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case charged his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Premium Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

Tightness of the Chest.

We encase, a slight, thin, sharp, laborious matter comes from our nose; we have heaviness of the head, great oppression of the chest, some tightness and a little tenderness in the region of the lungs. Now attention must be given to this state of facts, or inflammation of the lungs or congestion may take place, and death be with us before we are aware.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS,

say two, four or six, according to age, sex and constitution, must be taken. They must purge very freely; drink warm drinks while the fever lasts, and as a diet eat plenty of good Indian meal gruel, or chicken broth with a spoonful of rice in it. By this treatment on the second or third day the disease will be cured. This complaint is going the rounds and will be followed by dysentery and diarrhœa—but they will be cured by the same process. The wise will have BRANDRETH'S PILLS where they can be easily laid hold on, and by taking them by the directions safety and health will follow.

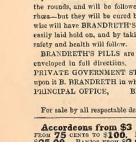
BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, envelope with directions. Purchase none unless the PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

Accordeons from $3 00 to $25. Flutes from $2 50 to $100. Violins from $3 00 to $25 00. Banjos from $2 00 to $20 00. Drums from $5 00 to $12 00. Fifes Drums and Trimmings. On receipt of the money will forward any instrument by Express. WM. A. POND & CO., No. 547 Broadway, N.Y.

THE RIDGEWOOD PATENT SMOKING CASE.



Major-General Burnside

Writes, Jan. 20th, 1864, after thanks for what he is pleased to call our "useful and beautiful present" of a "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case." "It is the most complete thing for a Smoking Apparatus that I have ever seen, and an entirely within the reach of the Soldier in price, that it will certainly work itself into general use." Compact and portable as a Cheer Case, it is made in Pipe sizes as at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, $3 00, $3 75 and $5 00, the two latter richly plated and engraved. Smoke Cases sent by mail, free to the Army, and everywhere, on receipt of price, with 25 cents. A liberal Discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Also the

Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

of superior quality and flavor, put up in Packets to fill the Case, and in various sizes for the General Trade. All Orders promptly filled.

OFFICE RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO., 409 Broadway, cor. Howard street, New York.

Madame Benedict's MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING Establishment is now REPLETE with every IMPORTED NOVELTY of the season.

12 Waverly Place, N. Y.

The Newest Thing Out.

WANTED CANVASSERS, NEWS AGENTS, JOBBERS, and DEALERS generally, everywhere, to sell STEPHENS' COLORED ALBUM VIEWS, splendidly lithographed in Oil Colors from original designer; three parts, twelve views each. FAST ONE: GOD RELATIVES at HOME and ABROAD. FAST TWO: THE ADVENTURES of a CONSCRIPT (both captivity views). FAST THREE: THE SLAVE; in 1863 a thrilling Series of the Most Vivid Pictures. FIFTY Cents each, post-paid. Dealers sending One Dollar supplied with the three parts, no samples, post-paid. Trade terms liberal.

WM. A. STEPHENS, Publisher, No. 400 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. They are an INFALLIBLE REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &C. METCALF & CO., No. 629 Broadway, N.Y.

Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 30 cents additional.

Enameled Chamber FURNITURE.

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, walnut and chestnut, plain and ornamental, in suite, wholesale and retail. Also Mattresses and Palliasses. WARREN WARD, 277 Canal St., N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST, OF ALL PENS, MORTON'S GOLD PENS,

THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Executive Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in size to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Executive Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridosmine Points. The average wear of every one of which will for outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the Gold Pens, and the gold pens are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate size only: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pens, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 25 a No. 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 a No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 75 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 50 a No. 7 Pen;

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridosmine Points, carefully selected by hand; the "2d Quality" are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and the utmost scrutiny could detect.

The "3d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1861.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Fine Points, Durability, and Good Writing Qualities, any true considerations any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In regard to the Close Gold Pens, he begs leave to say that, previous to opening his New and Splendid Premises, he could not have made a Good Writing and Durable Pen for the price, and the trade has been thanked gratuitously.

Persons ordering must in all instances specify the Name of the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pen they want, and in particular to describe the kind they prefer—whether stiff or limber, coarse or fine.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents extra for registering, in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guaranty their safe delivery.

Further sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, of 15 per cent. on $20, and of 20 per cent. on $30, if sent to one address at one time.

A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

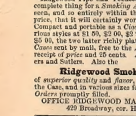
Just what every Family wants. Savage & Co.'s No Chimney Burner for Hand Lamps and Lanterns. Produces Maximum Light, Absolutely Odorless and without chimney, smoke, or soot. Sample sent Free for $0 75. Price-list, 3c. Agents wanted. Send for sample and circular. Savage & Co., American Institute awarded First Premium, and Medal, 1863.



Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper-cupped cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition.

This arm is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great advantage of loading with either kind of loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and durability.

Send to offer to the Public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition loading revolver. This arm has no equal as a self-cocker, and for accuracy, rapidity and certain aim should be without one.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. S. Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols may be used with either kind of loose ammunition alone.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
No. 293 Broadway, N.Y.

THE "JERKS," or CONVULSIONS, when under religious exercises—Wonderful Phenomena in France—Cause explained—A change of Heart—The Spirit of Revivals—A Funeral—Praying Fortunes, etc., in MARCH NO. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 15 cts., or $1 50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

ARMY BADGES,

Watches, Gold Pens and Canes. Jewelry of all kinds at reduced rates. Send for a Circular.
E. KEITH, 209 Broadway, N. Y.

For an Article of Interest and information to every body, send your address (20 cents) to Box 4091, P. O., New York.

THE BLOODHOUND OF THE CARIBBEAN AND YOLA HIS VICTIM.

A Great Literary Engagement.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY,

(The Greatest Story and Sketch Paper Published).

Has succeeded, at great expense, in securing the services of one of the greatest of living romance writers, who, for reasons of his own, chooses to write for us not under his own proper name, but under the nom de plume of

LOUIS LEON.

The fame of this gentleman is world-wide, and it is safe to say that there is hardly a reader of romance on this continent who has not, at one time or another, been charmed by his genius. He combines the dramatic power of Dumas, the rich imagery of Bulwer, and the graphic force of Dickens, in a style which is peculiarly his own—simple and unpretending, and yet so forcible as to hold his readers from first to last as by a spell of magic. With the power of true genius he takes possession of the human heart, and rules it at will. He has the singular faculty of riveting the attention of the most illiterate, as well as of the most intellectual reader, and carrying them captive as long as it suits his purpose.

Louis Leon's first contribution to the columns of the NEW YORK WEEKLY, which will appear on Thursday, March 17, is indisputably the finest of all his productions. He himself in a letter to us says:—"It is superior to anything which I have ever written." This splendid romance is entitled

THE SILVER SHIP;

OR,

The Bloodhound of the Caribbean.

A SPANISH-AMERICAN STORY.

The tale is historical, and the main incidents are true. The principal characters are CALLOAGHAN, the famous pirate, commonly called by the Spanish-Americans of his time, before the pirate name was known, El Sobrino del Mar Caribe, or the Bloodhound of the Caribbean—a title that arose from his terribly mysterious way of learning about the movements of treasure-ships, and tracking them, a secret which is clearly explained for the first time in these pages. EDY LEON, the hammock-maker of Isla Grande, who also lives, and moves in a singular mystery. CONDE CHACA, of Mexico, the proprietor of the great silver mine of Regla. YAMA LAGOA, the priest of Isla Grande. SEÑOR SAN ROMANO, the commander of the golden Buenaventura, the Silver Ship. SEÑOR NIETA, a person of wealth and mysterious tastes, who lives buried in a beautiful villa on Isla Grande, and to whom an extraordinary interest attaches. YOLA, a young girl of marvellous grace and loveliness, under charge of Padre Lagoa, and reputed among the inhabitants of Isla Grande to be his niece—a glorious type of the Spanish-American woman, a being of ravishing and fervent love when life, at the moment of her introduction, rests a painful mystery, in which is threatened an appalling doom! JUAN LEON, the foster-sister of Juan Leon. The CHEVALIER DE BELLA.

It is useless to attempt to describe the sensations which take possession of one while perusing this truly great story. Language is too weak to give a true idea of its thrilling effect. The reader becomes so absorbed as to lose himself, and the effect is rather that produced by a thrilling mesmerism upon the beholder than that wrought by the simple perusal of a story, so actually does the reader sympathize with the characters introduced—so entirely is he carried away from them as to imagine himself a veritable actor in the scene.

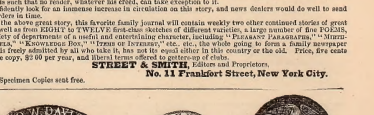
The work is dedicated to President Juarez in these terms: "To the Senor Don Benito Juarez, President of the Republic of Mexico. I dedicate this work, with a serene confidence of the rising of the entire world against the infamous pretensions of tyrants." The tale is a Spanish-American story in a sense heretofore unknown to the Anglo-American public. It is the first real and faithful picture of Spanish-American Dons, Donnas, officials, priests, etc., ever published in the form of a story. It is perhaps necessary to say, in advance, that although Padre Lagoa—one of the characters represented—is a villain who "lies since the garb of Heaven to serve the devil in"—the moral of the story is such that no reader, whatever his creed, can take exception to it.

We confidently look for an immense increase in circulation on this story, and news dealers would do well to send in their orders in time.

Besides this great story, this favorite family journal will contain weekly two other continued stories of great merit, as well as from EIGHT to TWELVE first-class sketches of different varieties, a large number of fine POEMS, and a variety of departments of a useful and entertaining character, including "PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS," "MUSICAL MONITOR," "HOUSEHOLD RECEIPTS," "TERMS OF INSERTION," etc., etc., the whole going to form a family newspaper which, as it freely admitted by all who see it, has not its equal in any other journal in this country or the old. Price, five cents for a single copy, $2 00 per year, and liberal terms and premiums to clubs.

STREET & SMITH, Editors and Proprietors.
No. 11 Frankfort Street, New York City.

Specimen Copies sent free.



Fine Gold Plate Pistol, $1 50. Solid Silver, $1 50.

Also for $1 I will send a Solid Silver Shield or either Army Corps, Division, or Company Pin (made of Pure Coin), with any Name, Regiment, and Company Inscription engraved thereon. Also for $1 50 I will send either a Naval, Engineer, or Pontonier's Pin in Fine Gold Plate, New and Beautiful Designs. Either of the above Pins will be sent by Gold Gold for $2. Also for $1 I will send either a Gold Masonic Pin, or a fine Gold Pen and Pencil, or a Plain or Chased Gold Ring, or a Seal Stone Ring, or a Beautiful Vest Chain, or Engraved Locket. Agents wanted in every Regiment, Hospital, and Town in the U. S. Extra Premiums and Commission allowed to Agents. With each sample it will be sent a wholesale Circular.

R. T. HAYWARD, Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

THE NILE EXPLORERS, CAPTAINS SPEKE AND GRANT, with Heroines, including their Address—An Africian Beauty, How begotten—Virtues—Treachery—Death, Cremation, Origin of Vegetation—What Mind is—The Microscope—Mounds, Birds, Physiological and Stellar Wonders, in MARCH NO. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. 15 cts. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

CHURCH VIEWS.—Card Photographs of 150 Principal Churches of New York and Brooklyn; also 75 Splendid Views of Central Park. Price 25c. each, 5 for $1, or per $3 doz. Views. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price. Send stamps for catalogue. W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, N. Y.

POLLAK & SON.

METTENHAM MANUFACTORY, 257 BROOME ST., NEAR BOWERY, N. Y., sell wholesale and retail. Will send, free of charge, a Sample Plate of Fifteen Pipes cut to order and repaired.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES? My Organic will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face; will restore gray hair to its youthful color; is not a dye; will, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order, by R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 60 00 each.
500 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 35 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches.. 15 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Bond Bracelets..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 " " ..... 2 00 to 7 00 each.
2000 Cameo Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops.. 4 00 to 8 00 each.
5100 Gent's Breast Pins..... 2 50 to 8 00 each.
5000 Watch Keys..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Fob and Ribbon Slides..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Studs..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
5000 Plain Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
5000 Stone Set Rings..... 3 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mounted Holders 4 00 to 6 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—These setting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.
We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Fins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field, at $1 00 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the proficient Armies, by the single one, 100, or 1000.
Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a circular. Address
DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers, 208 Broadway, New York.

Solid Silver, $1 00.

VETERAN

H. BROWN, C. E. ANN. OVAL

Solid Silver, $1 00.

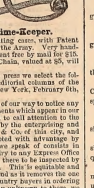
"The Human Face Divine."

A new system of Physiognomy. Eyes, Ears, Nose, Lips, Mouth, Head, Hair, Hands, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all "Signs of Character, and How to Read Them," in THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED for 1864. New vol. $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, New York.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 26x31. Price $1250.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N Y.

NEW ARMY WATCHES.



Double-Time Duplex Stop-Watch,
With Washington and London time,
FOR ARMY AND NAVY.

Sportsmen, and all desiring a beautiful and accurate Timepiece, will find this the best Silver Hunting Watch ever fully engraved Works in 15 jeweled settions. Gold balance. Sweep Second Hand. Patent adjusted Stop; and also repeats a first-class watch.

EVERY OFFICER SHOULD HAVE IT.

Sent free by mail for $40 00, or if remitted in advance, a handsome and fashionable chain, valued at $7 00, will be paid in gratis.

All Watches are sent out in good working order, properly regulated, mailed free to the Soldier, and warranted for twelve months.

AGENTS WANTED in every County and every Regiment, on very liberal terms. Money in registered letters can be sent at our risk, if properly mailed.

☞ Watches sent for inspection, before payment.

ARNOLD & CO., 212 Broadway, 3 doors from Barnum's Museum, New York.

NEW ARMY WATCHES.

THE GREAT NEW ARMY WATCH, just invented for the Soldier, in very heavy solid silver hunting cases, fine ENGLISH MOVEMENT, full ruby jeweled, handsome white dial and steel cut hands. Each watch carefully engraved, on plain cases, warranted a perfect time-keeper for one year. $15.

GOLD COMPOSITE, same as above, exact imitation of Gold, and warranted Watch, $15. $15

FINE DOUBLE BOTTOM silver English HUNTING WATCH, FULL JEWELED, CHRONOMETER BALANCE, $25. $25

OFFICER'S WATCH, GENUINE AMERICAN LEVER WATCH in a fine, sterling silver case, full jeweled, 3 gold joints, and double bottom cases, $35. $35

AMERICAN LEVER, same as above, with Chronometer Balance, 45. $45

Silver Hunting Watch, fine movement, $11. $11

Ladies very small hunting Gold Composite Watch, beautifully engraved, ample spring, rock seconds. Can be securely be delivered by mail, $16. $16

SPLENDID 18 CARAT HEAVY GOLD AMERICAN WATCH, full jeweled, chronometer balance, $85. $85

SAME AS ABOVE, WITH CHRONOMETER BALANCE, $92. $92

GOLD HUNTING ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, RUBY JEWELED, Screw Balance M. J. TOBIAS, $38. $38

Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

We will send any of the above Watches, on receipt of price, free of expense, to any address. Registered letters sent at our risk if properly sealed. All Watches registered $5 extra. GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO AGENTS. SEND FOR OUR CIRCULAR.

Parties ordering will give their address plain. All orders promptly and carefully filled.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., IMPORTERS, 208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The FIRST has the name
"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The SECOND has the name
"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The THIRD has the name
"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The FOURTH has the name
"Appleton, Tracy & Co., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous counterfeits which have already been put upon us. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are engraved as made by the "UNION WATCH Co., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are nicked the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our FOURTH or VIA EXTRA grade, usually known as our "SOLDIER'S WATCH"; others are branded the "APPLETON WATCH CO.," others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT. In many cases the counterfeits are so close as to convey the idea that they are the veritable production of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

SOLDIERS OF THE UNION!!!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades in inducements of 10

WORLD-KNOWN AND WORLD-TRIED REMEDIES

of

Professor Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

Not only to yourself, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives, and Brothers. Then while you may, Preserve Health!

For 30 cents, 70 cents, or $1 10,

We will have expended in these localities, before you down to the greenest and ripest old age.

The following are genuine letters, on file for inspection at this office.

60 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,
20th Illinois Volunteers,
FOLLY ISLAND, S. C., November 24, 1863.

Prof. HOLLOWAY, 80, Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

Sir,—I enclosed you, from Savannah, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please direct them as I state, for I am much in need of the above remedies. Address

Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
20th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA.,
January 7, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: I have bought a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in need of them until now, I wish to try them. Diarrhœa is very prevalent at the present time: send me the worth of the enclosed.

Yours, &c.,
JOSEPH WALSH,
Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

Deafness Overcome BY USING HASLAM'S SOUND MAGNIFYING TUBES. They can be concealed. Send for a descriptive pamphlet to

E. HASLAM, 29 John Street, New York.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light free from smoke or smell, and needs no chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which everywhere gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid for 25 cts. Agents wanted.

P. ESSIG & CO., MANUFACTURERS, 2 Platt Street, New York.

False Whiskers and Mustaches, $2 50 a pair; Whiskers, $2 a pair; Mustaches, 50 cents and $1 a pair. Sent free by mail. Address H. PHILLEBROWN, P. O. Box 2,000, Boston, Mass.

Soldiers and Everybody! A great Book for you! Over 2000 things worth knowing! Mailed free for 25 cents. Address "Union Book Association," Box 362, Providence, R. I.

Agents, order our UNEQUALED STRATIONERY PACKAGES.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 enameled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 185 William Street, N. Y.

To Compositors. — Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to Mr. MARSH, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chronometer.—N. Y. Weekly, July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-piece ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it all connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted as accurate time piece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $264. Simple watches in neat morocco boxes, $55; if sent by mail, the postage is 35 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.
FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, MOST ALL, DESCRIPTION OF PRICE, THESE WATCHES MEET INSIDE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The outer case being of two metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be distinguished by testing or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best timepiece for a Gold Sterling Silver is extensive.

The rank and file wearing in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

☞ Purchasers can rely upon An honest watch and case, scientifically executed, white enamel dial, and fancy set hands, in proof whereof we refer to the bold letters of the postage, $2 38; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk. Our Order will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS. Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

Excelsior Music Book for Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet. I have that old Flag and big pencil, "When the boys come home. Your fortune is too small for me. My love is on the battle-field, each 25c. Violin strings 25c. mailed. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS illustrated price list sent on receipt of post stamp. F. BLUME, 289 Bowery, N.Y.

Two Dollars will be made from twenty-six, call and examine, or two samples free by mail for 25c., that retail for $2, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Cavalry Badges.

Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest Cavalry Badge. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co., and Regiment handsomely engraved thereon.

Solid Silver, ... $3 00
Solid Silver, letters gold-plated, ... 3 50
Solid gold, ... 9 00
Solid gold, enameled, ... 10 00

Also new style Artillery Badges, and every style of Pin and Corps Badge worn by the Army. Send for our illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALDEY & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry
Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Manufacturing Jewelers, Providence, R. I.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Grecian Lamps, and 13 other articles. Circulars sent free. Address JOHN F. LOBD, Biddeford, Maine.

CONJUGAL RESEMBLANCES, where Love begins and ends—Marriage—Intermarriage—Children in the wrong—Money—Its nature, use and abuse—Etiology, Skills and textural diseases of the Breast, Bosom, Genitals, French, Sclavon, Hindoh, Circassian, etc.—Character Sketches—Rev. H. M. TRIPP—Its Heroes, and a sketch of character—in the MARCH No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 15 cents, or $1 50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

ALLIARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

In Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway, Baltimore, Md.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

TERMS.
One Copy for one Year $3 00
Two Copies for One Year 5 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and WEEKLY, together, one year, $9 00.
HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.
One Copy for Four Months $1 00
One Copy for One Year 2 00
One Copy for Two Years 3 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 00 each, or 11 Copies for $20.
Payment invariably in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, PRICE $3 00 per Volume.
HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

ONE OF THE HORRORS OF WAR.

SISTER CLARA. "Augustus! What are you doing with my Hoop-Skirt and Hat-Box?"

BROTHER AUGUSTUS. "Don't you see? I'm giving the Children an Illustration on the Art of War. Your Hoop-Skirt makes a capital Tent for Six: and I've made a Rebel Torpedo of your Hat-Box. There's a pound of Powder inside and a Slow-Match. It'll go off in just half a minute. Wait, and you'll hear a noise!"

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications.—Novels: No. 1. The Hunters. 2. The Trapper's Betrothal. 3. The Patriot Highwayman. 4. The Hunted Unionist. 5. A Cruise with the Pirate Semmes. 6. The Mad-Hatter. 7. Charlotte Temple. 8. The Death Face. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, 10 cents.

GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 137 William St., N. Y.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our NEW NOVELTY STATIONERY PRIZE PACKET. Only $15 capital required to obtain a WATCH, FREE, with first order. We also offer SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered.

Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,

501 Broadway, New York.

Card Photographs.

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over

FOUR THOUSAND

different subjects, to which additions are continually being made of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

70 Major-Generals,	870 Statesmen,
200 Brigadier-Generals,	177 Divines,
220 Colonels,	176 Authors,
84 Lieut.-Colonels,	30 Artists,
201 Other Officers,	119 Stage,
60 Officers of the Navy,	40 Prominent Women,
141 Prominent Foreign Portraits.

2,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,

INCLUDING REPRODUCTIONS OF THE MOST CELEBRATED ENGRAVINGS, PAINTINGS, STATUES, &c.

Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp.

An order for One Dozen Pictures from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1 50, and sent by mail, free.

Photographic Albums.

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each.

Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.

The smaller sizes can be safely sent by mail at a portion of the cost per oz.

The more expensive can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views

Our Catalogue of these will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamps.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,

MANUFACTURERS OF PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS,

501 Broadway, New York.

Friends or relatives of prisoners at military posts will confer a favor by sending on their likenesses to copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned unharmed.

IF FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Congregations to present to their Pastor, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, &c.

The Celebrated AMBROTYPE MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, post-paid, for $2 25; or with a beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,

352 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, pre-paid, the Stereoscope, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Fold-Plate, accommodating all eyes, for $3 50; with 12 assorted views, $5. A liberal discount to the trade.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BASSFORD'S Cooper Institute, New York.

A Bad Breath.—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is a delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentrifice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 165 and 167 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

F. GROTE, Manufacturer of IVORY Goods, 19 Division St., New York, cor. Gold. Billiard Balls, Pool Balls, Ten Pin Balls and Pins, Checks in great variety, Mangnale and Napkin Rings, and all other kind of Ivory Goods, wholesale and retail. Also Manufacturer and Importer of Cane, Cane Leather, Cloth, &c. The only place to get a good set of seasoned Billiard Balls at reduced prices. All Orders by mail promptly attended to.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

LOCK STITCH

Sewing Machines, 505 Broadway.

HOW TO BE A GENTLEMAN.

Read that excellent new hand-book, indispensable for all who would really know

HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO BEHAVE,
HOW TO TALK, HOW TO DO BUSINESS.

One handsome 12mo vol., 600 pages, sent by first post for $2. Agents wanted. Address FOWLER & WELLS, No. 308 Broadway, New York.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. JNO. W. WHEELER, of Moreland, Ohio, and John D. Lefferts, of New York, to PUTNAM MFG. CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I know from practical experience that iron well galvanized with zinc will not oxidize and rust one particle. I am daily, after several years' experience, in the manufacture of chains, for chain-pump and water-wheels, by which I have tested the affinity of iron and zinc, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect weld of the two.

Nearly one year ago my family commenced using one of your Wringers. It is now perfect as at first, and is as well as it did the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article with us. The closely-pressed water and other kinds of clothes-wringers, the reader operated being stiff or, trying to perform the same results as the Putnam Wringer, but in my judgment they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is a perfect success, and I can therefore cordially recommend it to be the best in use.

Respectfully yours, JOHN W. WHEELER.

Many years' experience in the galvanizing business enables me to indorse above statement in all particulars.

JOHN C. LEFFERTS, No. 109 Beekman Street, New York, January, 1864.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted. Address

No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. A, $8.

Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,

No. 13 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.

S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

IVORY JEWELRY.

A fine assortment white and imitation of CORAL and JET DRESSING ST 50. BALL EARRINGS, $1 00 pair. IVORY BUFFALO BUTTONS, 75c. pair. NEW PATTERNS PEARL $1 00 pair. Sent free on receipt of the price. For sale at WILLIAMS, 391 Canal St., N. Y., Sign of the GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

Dawley's Camp and Fireside Library.

50,000 Copies Sold the Past Week.

BOOKSELLERS, NEWSDEALERS, SUTLERS, AND PEDDLERS, can make an immense profit selling these books. Send immediately for a trade circular.

No. 1, INCIDENTS OF AMERICAN CAMP LIFE, being Events which have actually transpired during the present rebellion. Large 12mo, 168 pages, Price 15 CENTS. Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price.

CONTENTS.—The Scout—Hunters of Western Virginia.—Joking on the Battle-Field.—An Inquisitive Rebel.—An Exacting Incident of Picket Life.—A Picturesque Rebel Army.—Scouting Round in.—Extraordinary Tobacco Strategy.—Hunt, the Tennessee Scout.—Daring Adventure of a Union Soldier.—Rebels and their Fishermen.—Drubbing a Prisoner.—A Female Scout.—Tragic Close of an Eventful Career.—Gen. McCall's Escape.—A New York Heroine.—An F. F. V. Outwitted by a Chicago Courier.—Take your Choice, Madam.—A Ride.—California Joe at his Work.—The Wrong Way.—Corson, the Scout.—Humming a Coward out of Camp.—A Dumpling Drilled and its Contents Spilled.—A Yankee Trick in Missouri.—Some are not Born.—Scene at a New York Recruiting Office.—Death Scene of Capt. John Griswold.—A Camp of Foreigners.—The Shoe.—Miss Tucker at Camp Dick Robinson.—The Dying Soldier.—The Drummer-Boy.—&c., &c.

Buy it.—Read it.—Then send it to a friend in the Army.

T. B. DAWLEY, Publisher, 34 Park Row, New York.

In Press, No. 2. Mercedes; or, The Outlaw's Child. In preparation.

No. 3. Norma Denton; or, The Children of the Lighthouse. Also will soon be issued Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Tried for her Life. Price 15 cents each. For the four mailed, post-paid, on receipt of $0 60. Order of Booksellers, Newsdealers.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies refuse to collect C. O. D. packages on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,

208 Broadway New York.

Shults' Unguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent post-paid, for 50 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

To the Trade.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

Excelling everything in the line yet produced, in beauty of execution, and selection of subjects.

These Photographs are produced in the highest style of the ART, and from subjects, with the exception of some that are standard—are all new, and the very choicest that can be procured in Europe. Each month we add new subjects; all choice. No poor stock will be used in the manufacture of our Photographs, and no subject will be found among our Stock, that will not command a ready sale. Parties in ordering by mail, can depend upon getting the most saleable Photographic Stock produced in the country. Send for a Catalogue. Address E. W. HITCHCOCK, 24 Chambers Street, New York (Manufactory).

WARD'S SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready made or to measure, at $23, $20, and $40 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Bosoms sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3 00, $3 75, and $4 50 each: all cut one yard long. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 61 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMULLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned when soiled with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cts. each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 00.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 367 Broadway, N. Y.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane & 23 John Street, N. Y., 31 Ann St., Cor. Ann Park,

Sands St., Birmingham, Engd.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to Box 5173, and receive it by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 94 Pine St., N. Y.

UNION LEAGUE MELODIES.—A collection of Patriotic Hymns and Songs, both words and music. Adapted to all social and patriotic gatherings. It includes the "President's Hymn." "Nation's Golden Hour," "Hero's Coronation," &c. A very rare collection. 12mo, 99 pages. Price, in paper, 25 cents. 17 styles for $1. H. B. RUSSELL, Publisher, Boston, Mass.

The Perfect Gentleman;

Or, Etiquette and Eloquence.

A Book of Information and Instruction for those who desire to become Brilliant and Conspicuous in General Society; or, at Parties, Dinners, or at Popular Gatherings.

Containing Model Speeches for all Occasions, with Directions how to deliver them; 500 Toasts with Sentiments for everybody, and their proper mode of introduction; Eloquence, or proper Behavior in Company, with an American Code of Politeness for every Occasion. To which is added, The Duties of a Chairman of a Public Meeting; together with Valuable Hints and Examples for Dressing of Parties and Receptions, and a great deal of Interesting and amusing matter never before published. 12mo, 300 pages, nearly 400 engravings. Price $1 25. Published by DICK & FITZGERALD, No. 15 Ann Street, N. Y.

Mailed to any address, post-paid, by mail, to any address, free of postage, on receipt of the price.

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day made Easy.

By selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" DIMOND PEARL AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "more real valuable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Jewelry, Pictures, Many Ways to Get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, &c. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price only 25c. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Valid assurance. Every purchaser and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and county. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting-case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect timekeepers, RESERVED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations. Send for our great new Circular for 1864, containing extra premium inducements; free.

S. C. HICKARDS & CO., 102 MASON ST., N. Y. Original, Largest, and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 800 times. MAILED free everywhere for 50 Cents. Five different powers for $1 00. Address C. C. BOWEN, Box 290, Boston, Mass.

$7 ARMY $7

WATCH.

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, examined dial, cut hunter, Jewelled movement, Stem Wind and Set, warranted a sure guide in all respects, mailed free by mail in neat case, only $7.

The Silver Steam Watch, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the Army.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A Splendid "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine English Jewelled Movement," Independent Action, Stem Winder, a perfect timekeeper, "warranted one year." WILL STAND A ride, and is as

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch.

Used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, only $15.

THE CELEBRATED ENGLISH CENTRE WATCH, for ladies. Each watch has a beautifully engraved case, with heavy gold plate, in STERLING SILVER HUNTING CASE. "HALF A DOZEN YEARS" Exact timekeeper, and a perfect "Lady Article." Sent free by mail, in richly embossed Turkey Morocco Case, only $18.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Case Watch, Jewelled movement, $16.

Real English Duplex Gold Watches. Fine article, from $20 to $30.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above Styles of Watches. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.

The "Anglo-American Timekeeper" for $9 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is in imitation of the best English timekeeper in make, and is supplied to British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers on the field." Illustrated News says of the same timepieces; except in appearance to $100 watches.

Address LHAS. F. NORTON & CO., IMPORTERS, 58 & 60 Ann Street, New York.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are requested to correspond with us, to send us their address, and we will send in return, FREE, information for which they will receive $5 per day. We offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS. From $6 to $15 per day AGENTS WANTED. Address with stamp, SECOMB & CO., 12 Pearl St., U. S., and from EVERY RECRUIT in the Army. Address SECOMB, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 NASSAU STREET, B 3131, N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Gold Silver Case, with Pencil, Pen-holder, and Sleeve, in one accompanying each Pen. Send for a circular. Pens repointed on receipt of cash.

E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

HOYT'S HAWATHA

Hair Restorative.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair to its natural color by their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading of the hair with soft, luxuriant beauty. It is the most concentrated of the dull dead black of dyes, so that the most extra reserve can be used at its use. It will not require previous coaping and washing, and hours for its application. It does not stain the skin; it is easily applied and easily wiped from the skin as any hair-dressing. It leaves the hair soft and pliable, and it is not because fallen out; nothing will do that, whatever may be advertised to the contrary. It will prevent it from falling out, make it soft and silky, and cleanse it and the scalp from all impurities. Numerous testimonials become the bad effects of previous use of preparations containing nitrate of silver, sugar of lead, &c.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL

COLORING CREAM.

An appropriate accompaniment to the HIAWATHA; oils and colors the hair at the same time, and changes light hair to dark brown or black, according to shade, everywhere. JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

American Swiss and English Watches.

In superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army large or small promptly and faithfully attended to. Price list of 50 styles

T. B. DYNNER, 175 Broadway, N. Y.

Volunteers for the Army should not leave the City until supplied with SULLIVAN'S PATENT ADJUSTMENT. For Sores, Scurvy, Wounds, Small Pox, Fevers, and Bowel complaints they are the best in the world. Every French Soldier uses them. Only 50 cents, 75 cents, or $1 00 per box of pills.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 207 Centre St., New York, second door. Sent free by mail for 65 cents.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating. It will not injure. Lee's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at variety stores

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 377.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL GEORGE A. CUSTER.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 187.]

THE SENTINEL ON MORRIS ISLAND.

When measured tread along his lonely beat,
At twilight, dawn, or in the darkness night,
Or when at noon the sun, with growing heat,
Lets fall his dazzling light—

The watchful sentinel, up and down the shore,
Paces with weary feet the yielding sand,
While the salt waves, with deep and sullen roar,
Shout hoarsely to the land.

At dawn he sees the glittering morning star
Set like a jewel in the rosate sky;
And glimpses to the night, within the bar,
The fleet at anchor lie.

He sees the city, distant, dull, and gray,
Its quaint old roofs and steeples, towering spire,
When darkly pictured at the close of day
Against the sunset's fire.

At night he sees the heavens all spangled o'er
With shining gems that like bright watch-fires burn;
And though far off, and on a hostile shore,
His thoughts to home will turn.

Or maybe, in the pitiless, cold storm,
While mouns the wind like some poor soul in pain,
With drooping head and weary, bended form
He braves the pelting rain.

And now his mind there dwells a picture fair—
A cottage-room with walls his purest know,
And round his hearth-stone friendly faces there
Shine in the fire's warm glow.

An aged man, with locks all silver white;
An aged dame, his helpmate she through life;
And still a third, with mild eyes beaming bright,
Perhaps the soldier's wife;

And rosy children climb upon her knee—
With smiling face looks on the aged dame—
They, laughing, clap their little hands in glee,
And sweetly lisp his name.

Now from the frowning batteries bristling side
Pale forth the murderous cannon's awful roar,
Waking the unnerving echoes, far and wide,
From shore to farthest shore.

So fades the picture: each loved form is fled—
That waking vision, beautiful yet brief;
And up the dark with solid, steady tread
Comes on the brave "Relief."

Then on his bed, while falls the chilly rain
And other sentinels their vigils keep,
Sweet thoughts of home go flitting through his brain,
And fill his dreamful sleep.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1864.

THE OPENING OF THE CAMPAIGN OF '64.

THE preliminary operations of the campaign of 1864 have not been entirely satisfactory, but, with the exception of the battle of Olustee, in Florida, they have resulted in no disaster. The rebels have been kept wide awake along their whole line, and the lesson which was taught in the General Jeb Stuart's ride around McClellan's army on the Peninsula, Kilpatrick's second raid proves that we have very thoroughly learned. This last movement was a rapid dash, breaking communications and scaring Richmond. Its result is inevitably a sense of insecurity in the rebel capital. It teaches that city an every specimen of the great struggle that we have at last learned war, and that the daring Yankee genius has recovered from the astonishment and supreme paralysis into which the outbreak of the rebellion seemed to have plunged it.

There has been considerable lamentation over the result of this raid and of Sherman's mystic march. But any man who has closely watched affairs can only be amused by it. When Sherman moved from Vicksburg the absence of his column was accompanied by the most imposing newspaper columns of military speculation and promise. He was on his way to Mobile. He was flanking Johnson's army. His objective was Meridian, or Selma, or Montgomery, or the Gulf. He would outer Georgia at this point or at that. As was a very fine army of hopes, surmises, theories, possibilities, probabilities. Meanwhile the solitary fact was that he had moved with an uncertain number of men and with the lightest artillery. If we had waited for some definite news from him we should have been spared much distress and disappointment. It is to the positive assertions upon half knowledge, and to the speculations upon inaccurate data, that we owe much of our chagrin at the present moment's result. A mere raid, a reconnaissance in force, a diversion, were theories quite as plausible and more probable than the capture of Mobile or the turning of Johnson's flank. Very much of our ill-humor is simply revenge upon our own mistake.

So with Kilpatrick's raid. We had the usual mysterious leakage in the newspapers that the army of the Potomac was in motion; that mens might be expected; that there was no battle up to 10 A.M.; and all the rest of it, with which three years' experience ought to have made us good-humoredly familiar. Then Kilpatrick was fairly off. He was to destroy Lee's communications. He was to suck Richmond, release our prisoners, and bag the rebel authorities. Butler was to join him—had joined him—and victory was settling and about to perch upon his flag. Meade was to advance, fall upon Lee with no retreat behind him, and effectually finish him. And all this because the brave Kilpatrick with three or four thousand men was off upon a raid through the enemy's rear.

He makes his raid. He destroys railroads, canals, and bridges. He captures prisoners, and burns mills and supplies. He fights his way through the first line of defences about Richmond. Colonel Dahlgren is misled by a guide whom he hangs, and is therefore unable to join him in time. Kilpatrick withdraws. He comes riding sadly into General Butler's lines, his total loss in every way not more than a hundred and fifty men; and after three days' rest soldiers and horses will be ready again for duty. It is a brilliant raid. That it reached Richmond is not taken, nor Lee defeated, nor the rebel leaders snared, we cry pish! and exclaim, "Is that all?"

Now is this fair? Is not our disappointment the result of the failure of our theories rather than of the expedition? We make a plan which looks very admirable. It does not chance to be the plan of the movement, and we are disgusted. There can be no doubt that Kilpatrick's plan was to do all he could in all that the force, the circumstances, and good fortune permitted. That he and his brave troops have done, and most gallantly. All honor to them! The next time a movement begins with the usual mysterious intimations, let us try, at least, to shape our anticipations as nearly as possible by what we know, and not by what we wildly wish, and we shall have less occasion to feel or to express disappointment. There is nothing in the opening of the campaign, except the and day of Olustee and the battle of Sorrig, which need disheaten any man. We must remember that the rising of the tide is not shown by every single wave at every moment, but by the great body of water from time to time. How often last spring we were foiled at Vicksburg! But last year's was a grand campaign. Don't grumble at that waves. Watch the tide-marks.

THE QUESTION AND THE ANSWER.

There is surely no need of misunderstanding the reported correspondence between Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Chase. After the Pomeroy Circular appeared Mr. Chase asked the President if the attitude in which his friends had placed him of a candidate for the Presidency could prejudice the public interests under his charge. The President replied that he could not see why it should, but that, of course, Mr. Chase must be the judge.

Nothing could be simpler or fairer on both sides. Yet it is equally clear that, if Mr. Chase had known the contents of the Pomeroy Circular, he could not honorably remain in his position; not because he is a candidate for the Presidency, but because he is the confidential adviser of the President, and the Circular charges Mr. Lincoln with corruption and with treachery to the nation and liberty. But when Mr. Chase assures the President that he had no knowledge of the Pomeroy Circular, there is no more occasion for his withdrawal from the Cabinet than for that of Mr. Seward.

The contest for the nomination promises to be warm, as is natural when men are in earnest. But it should be remembered that it is for the nomination, not for the election. And when the Westliche Post, a German paper in St. Louis, raises the standard of Fremont, and says that it means to fight the Baltimore Convention, opinion may decide, it merely declares that it will gratify itself at any cost or risk to the country. It is to be hoped that the Westliche Post does not regard such a course as loyal or patriotic. For while every man has a right to vote for whomsoever he will, yet at a time like this every loyal man is bound to ask, Is this vote my own way exactly, what is the next best course? If the friends of Mr. Lincoln, of Mr. Chase, of General Fremont, or of General Butler, should all take the ground that they will in any case vote for their favorite, and for nobody else, it certainly is neither worth while for Union men to go to the trouble to pay another penny for the prosecution of the war.

We do not anticipate such an early suicide of the country. Such expressions are but the frank ardors of the canvass, and will soften until the nomination, but if the heart of the people is sound they do not last until the election. We can remember that many of those that Mr. Lincoln was nominated at Chicago eminent political friends of Mr. Seward gnashed their teeth and vowed that New York would not vote for him. The eminent gentleman himself better of it before the election, and imperial New York gave Mr. Lincoln fifty thousand majority. Unless the party spirit of the Union is stronger than their patriotism the Union candidate will be surely elected. The question for us then is, simply, who of all the gentlemen mentioned is, under the circumstances, most likely to carry the country with the least peril through the necessary excitement of a renewal of the Administration, and to preserve, with the largest share of public confidence upon all sides, the present policy of the war. It seems to us that to ask this question is to answer it with the name of Mr. Lincoln.

THE TWENTIETH U. S. COLORED REGIMENT.

Union Square is fast becoming historic ground. Less than ten years ago we stood there one evening while a band played a serenade; after which Fernando Wood introduced James Buchanan from the balcony of the Everett House to the crowd beneath. Last year we stood there, while from a platform beneath the balcony the son of Rufus King, in lofty and touching words, presented the flag of the Union and of Liberty to the first regiment of colored troops that has marched from this city to defend both. Elsewhere in this paper there is a picture of the scene. On the scene of the war has been more striking or significant. In the same Square three years ago there was the first great gathering of the American people in support of the war; when General Anderson and the soldiers of Sumter were the heroes of the hour, and the war begun in Charleston harbor had been continued in the streets of Baltimore. Last spring, in the same Square, was the great meeting upon the anniversary of Sumter, presided by the formal dedication of the Loyal Club-House. This spring's spectacle completes the cycle. The seed that Buchanan planted and Fernando Wood watered the nation has Sumter, and the riots in Baltimore and New York; and no less, by God's grace, it produced the meetings of April 1861 and 1863, and the hands and hearts God-speed to the colored soldiers.

The day was soft and bright. The winds of March forgot to blow; and at 11 o'clock the regiment arrived from Riker's Island, where it had been encamped, and marched down the Fifth Avenue. Windows and door-steps were thronged with eager faces, and under waving handkerchiefs and friendly salutations the brave men marched by. At 1 o'clock they wheeled into Union Square from Fourteenth Street. The music of drums and trumpets mingled with the loud buzzas of the great crowd. The windows and steps here also were solid with welcoming hands and faces, and the Loyal Union Club-House the flag was flying, as on the chief buildings in the Square. A line of policemen kept the space clear between Fourteenth Street crosses the Square. The tops of the houses were dotted with spectators. A huge platform was built out from the windows of the Club-House and filled with ladies; and on a smaller stage, from which the speech of presentation was to be made, stood between the Club-House and the Everett House. The regiment advanced into the open space amidst the cheers and tears of those who felt the significance of the spectacle. The soldiers had handled their muskets but five days; but when they came to the "order arms" there was a solid, simultaneous ring upon the pavement, which enforced the heartiest applause. Then Colonel Dahlgren and Captain Cooper rode and in a few noble and thrilling sentences, fervent, cheering, and pathetic, addressed Colonel Bantham, and handed him the national and regimental flags. Colonel Bantham, who has seen constant service since the war begun, and who has commanded colored troops, and believes in them, made a modest and appropriate reply. Cheers were given for the Colonel and the troops. The band played the national airs. Then the regiment raised a mighty shout, and was dismissed for a few hours to partake of a collation. Refreshments went into the Club-House for oysters and coffee; and toward 4 o'clock the line was formed, and the regiment broken down Broadway.

Every where the soldiers were greeted as a great city ought to greet its defenders, and as it has saluted every departing regiment since the Seventh, marched in April, three years ago. The flag of the country waved over them in benediction. The prayers of all noble hearts follow them. For these soldiers go to peculiar dangers. Officers and men, they have counted the cost; and for union, liberty, and peace they are willing to pay the price. "It has been the habit of rebels to say," said Colonel Dahlgram, "who sympathize with the traitors now in arms against us, to sneer at what they are pleased to call the experience of the negro. I hope that Port Hudson, Fort Wagner, and Olustee have forever settled this question." Yes, and he and his soldiers will settle it still further, and finally, by fighting to lift the latter prejudice from the national heart. To no holier work could any man be devoted. God bless the Colonel, his officers, and the men of the Twentieth United States Colored Regiment and the cause they go to defend!

ULRIC DAHLGREN.

"A prisoner states that a Colonel with one foot had been captured," said the first report of Kilpatrick's raid.

"A rebel deserter informs one of my Aids that a one-legged Colonel and about a hundred men were taken prisoners," telegraphed General Butler to the President.

"Of one thing the public may rest assured that these officers will escape if such a thing is within the region of possibilities," said a later account.

"The President received a dispatch from Fortress Monroe this afternoon stating that Colonel Dahlgren, with his hundred men, had safely arrived within our lines. The Colonel was at Fortress Monroe. The President and Secretary Stanton immediately called upon Admiral Dahlgren, to convey the glad tidings and congratulate him upon the safety of his gallant son," said one still later.

"Colonel Dahlgren is dead," said yet another report.

Ulric Dahlgren is scarcely more than twenty years old. He was wounded in the leg last summer, just after the battle of Gettysburg, in the daring dash by which he succeeded in capturing the rebel dispatches from Jefferson Davis to General Lee. His leg was subsequently taken off. A few weeks ago he was a tall, slight, pale-faced boy, sitting quietly in Washington, and saying, pleasantly: "I shall be waiting for my new leg about the 1st of April, and whether I can ride again." Four weeks ago! We know now whether he can ride again. The brave boy has ridden the only deadly ride that any of the rebel city, but, living or dead, he has ridden straight into the love and honor of his countrymen.

THOMAS STARR KING.

By the death of the Rev. Thomas Starr King the country loses a most valuable citizen; and the large circle which knew him as a preacher, a lecturer, or a friend, deplores the loss of a most genial and delightful companion. Characteristically an American; devoted to every good work; hospitable to every new thought and movement; of the most cheerful temperament and most good nature; vigorous, incisive, and brilliant in his public discourse; racy, thoughtful, and generous in his private intercourse, his life is ended before he had completed his fortieth year.

Until five years ago Mr. King was generally known as one of the most eloquent and brilliant of lyceum lecturers, and in a smaller sphere as a popular preacher of the most liberal school. Removing to California, the newness of the country and the exigency of the times at once developed the peculiar force of his genius, and he was universally recognized as a most efficient and successful worker in the great cause. His clear perception, his fervid eloquence, his simple manners and life, his unassuming piety, his signal sagacity took the heart of the young and distant State, and held it fast to the common mother. It was a noble work nobly done. That mother has seen many of her best and dearest fall in the great struggle; none in the whole field, in the camp, at home, or afloat, by sudden shot or by lingering disease. But no son of hers had concerned himself more entirely in the service for which his powers had fitted him, of deepening and strengthening the purest patriotism, and preparing the most faithful love to God and man, than Thomas Starr King.

A FAITHFUL WIDOW.

The loiterer along Broadway who stops to look at the monument of General Montgomery in St. Paul's church, will be glad to read this touching inscription translated by Mr. Irving lately published "Life of Edward Livingston." Montgomery was a captain in the British army when he first met Livingston's sister, to whom he afterward married. When the revolutionary war began he was made one of the eight Brigadier-Generals of the army of the United Colonies. He had been married but two years, but his wife did not oppose his departure, and he took leave of her at Saratoga, in 1775, upon his way to Canada. The following words to her were, "You shall never have cause to blush for your Montgomery;" and she never saw him again.

In the year 1818 the Legislature of New York resolved to transfer his remains from Canada, and Edward Livingston's brother, Brockholst, one of Mrs. Montgomery, was commissioned by Governor De Witt Clinton to superintend the removal. On the 9th of May they reached Albany, and lay in state in the Capitol. On Monday they were taken from the Capitol under the steamer Richmond to New York.

Mr. Hunt says:

"The Governor had advised Mrs. Montgomery of what hour the boat, bearing the remains of her husband, would pass her home, Montgomery Place. By her own request she stood alone upon the portico at the appointed hour. The boat, with its solemn freight moved slowly on. It was then almost forty-three years since she had parted with him at Saratoga. Few of the incidents of war, of his letter period the waters of the Hudson, like all other waters, had been ignorant of storm and tempest. The young widow, in the same time, had come over her person was not greater than that which the face of the country, its government, and all the events which make this was feudtor, but undergone. Yet she had continued as faithful to the memory of her husband as the cold stone, as if she still looked for him to come back alive and unstirred. The steamer halted before her: the Chief Mourner of the day stepped upon the shore; the widow fainted, and the ashes of the departed hero passed on. The attendants of the venerable lady bore her sorrowful home. She had attended to her sometime, and failed to the floor in a swoon."

LITERARY.

Thackeray at the time of his death, was engaged upon a Novel, to be published simultaneously in the Cornhill and Harper's Magazine. He had completed and corrected about four of the monthly parts. The fragment will appear in Harper's Magazine commencing in the April Number. The title is "Denis Duval," the opening scenes are laid in France some half a century ago. From this story Charles Dickens says: "In respect of earnestness, of far-seeing purpose, character, incident, and a certain loving picturesqueness flanding the whole, it will be to be much the best of all his works. That he fully meant it to be so, that he had become strongly attached to it, and that he had bestowed great pains upon it, I trace in almost every page. It contains one picture which must have cost him extreme distress, and which is a master-piece." This picture, which is essentially a chapter from Thackeray's own life, is contained, we presume, in the first part, now before us. We shall speak our table a new edition of "Vanity Fair," published by the Harpers—the work by which Thackeray first fairly made his mark in literature. The illustrations are from his own sketches, and are as characteristic as the text. It is well known that the illustrations to all of Thackeray's writings are to a greater or less extent from his own drawings; but of late years he was too busy with the pen to often do more with the pencil than furnish bare hints to the artist. But in "Vanity Fair," produced when he had leisure, the drawings were full and free. They show that he might have succeeded in attaining the first object of his ambition—that of being the illustrator of Dickens's works.

"The Web's Evidence," by W. G. Wills, forming the last number (240) of "Harper's Library of Select Novels," is a story of very decided interest.

The new edition, revised and enlarged, of Mr. Calvert Vaux's "Villas and Cottages; a Series of Designs prepared for Execution in the United States," is well worthy the attention of every man who proposes to build a house which shall be something more than a mere shelter—a home. It contains a series of designs, with plans of interior arrangements, ranging from the humblest log-cabin of the settler up to the village house, suburban villa, and city mansion of the man of larger means and more varied wants; from the country school-house to the stately church. The designs are so carefully prepared and fully worked out that any man who proposes to build can select one suited to his needs and means, and can fully appreciate to it what it will cost. And to our mind the most notable feature of this book is the proof which it presents that comfort and privacy may be secured in a dwelling erected at the most moderate cost, as well as in those of higher pretensions.

WHAT WAS IT?

It was not a sold, nor a cuff, nor a kick,
The wound of a sword, nor a blow from a stick,
A shot from sort of a gun
That ever was forged beneath the sun,
A fall from a horse, nor a kick of a dog;
A burn from a torch carried out in a fog.
That made me echo confoundedly
Just where a cold hand is pressed on me.

It was not a plaster, nor lotion, nor draught,
Homœpath practice, or Allopath craft,
Nor any device of patent pills
That ever was pounded to cure or kill:
Nor the cure for nerves that are running to seed—
A sedative pull of the pungent weed.
That cured my pain. 'Twas a smile for me
Just where my pretty glyte lips should be.

For my heart had been aching for many a day,
And my mind full of trouble and sorrow;
I vowed that never would sea last again,
But haunted her steps on the morrow.
I worried my hands and neglected my work,
Was horribly jealous of stupid young Smirk,
In short, was a nuisance to hear or to see,
Just as a fellow in love should be.

Well! well! it's all over, my smile I got,
And stole something else from its pretty birth-spot;
Went home with a breast that of wish rapture was full,
Gave a bogzor a dollar instead of a shilling,
And the next day that ever I saw her was Sabbath and we
Are just where a gentleman's wife's should be.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—March 9. The bill to encourage foreign emigration was passed; the principal provisions have been given in our summary under date of February 13.—Resolutions introduced a bill to equalize the grade of line officers in the army. It provides for a board of officers to rate the moral, mental, and professional qualifications of all candidates for nomination to a grade higher than that of Commodore; any one failing to pass to be placed on the retired list.—Wilkinson, in the form of a personal explanation, made a speech censuring the different members of the Army of the Potomac, from McClellan to Meade. Among other things he asserted that at Gettysburg Meade had given orders for a retreat, which were countermanded only because an advance corps had become engaged, but that retreat was impossible. The army of Gettysburg he thought the greatest on record; and if it had been beaten after its enemy would have been disorganized; but the army was baited, and Lee advised to recross the Potomac, while he had only ammunition enough to last four minutes. The want of success of the Army of the Potomac was not to the soldiers, but to the incapacity of the commanders. Mr. Johnson replied, defending McClellan and Meade, laying the blame upon the President. Senators Anthony and Wade attributed Burnside's failure at Knoxville to the failure of others to obey the command to obey orders.—A joint resolution was adopted for changing the name of the lake district in Oregon to Klamath. The report of the House for a joint committee on the Whiskey Ring was ordered to be agree upon as to the less than 20 or more than 60 grain upon spirits on hand, was ordered.—March 10. A resolution authorizing a free committee was adopted.—March 2. The Military Committee reported that the House bill extending to the 1st of April the time for the payment of bounties with a recommendation that the Secretary of War be left to pass, &c.—Mr. Davis offered a joint resolution for amendment to the Constitution, as follows: "No term, no person shall hold the or grandmother sees a negro, shall be a citizen of the United States, or be eligible to any civil or military office, or to any place of trust or profit under the United States." Second, "The citizens of Maine and Massachusetts, which constitute one State, to be called East New England, and Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Connecticut shall constitute one State, to be called West New England." Ordered to be printed.—Mr. Powell reported the bill, upon which the Military Committee had reported adversely, authorizing officers of the army and navy to hold interfering in election. We were, he said, the only people who would allow such interference in elections. He was only recently that it had been permitted. He considered it dangerous to vest in Kentucky and Maryland the General Government had overthrown the laws regulating local elections in the United States, and held the Union responsible.—March 4. Mr. Sherman, from the Committee of Conference on the Whiskey tax, said that after a full discussion the joint Committee of the two Houses had failed to agree; if the Senate adhered to its amendments this bill would be lost, and they would have to wait till month, or was matured. The Committee therefore recommended that the Senate should recede from its amendments. The bill would then impose a tax of 60 cents upon all liquor manufactured after its passage up to July, having any tax after that time to be provided for by future legislation. It also left an additional tax of 40 cents a gallon upon spirits on hand. This was incongruous, and was only to be remedied by future legislation. The Senate then, by 29 to 11, receded from its amendments, and the bill passed.—Mr. Powell concluded his speech on the interference of the military with elections, reiterating the charges against the Administration, and affirming that the only reason why the people had borne with the usurpations of power by the Executive was that they could soon have power to make a change. The President was using the military power to promote his own re-election. The amnesty proclamation was a move in that direction. This proclamation was revolutionary, because it overthrows the Constitution upon which the Union is based. What right has the President to dictate who shall be a qualified elector in a State? No honest man could take the oath prescribed in Louisiana by General Banks, for it bound him in the same way to support a policy adopted by a majority to vote, provided the President should recommend it. It would require a revolution in the States to carry into effect the provisions of this proclamation, which would place non-resident of four fifths of the people in full control of the other tenth.—The Senate adjourned to Monday.—March 7. The Senate passed the bill for the geographical and Statistical Society in favor of a Commercial and Scientific Mission to Japan.—Mr. Sumner's bill, increased railroad and mail facilities between Boston, New York, and Washington, passed to a third reading.—The bill for confiscating the lands of rebels and distributing them among soldiers and sailors was taken up.—Mr. Sumner moved for adding to the construction of a railroad from the Missouri to the Pacific, resolutions prescribed and referred.—Mr. Sherman offered a resolution, which was referred, relating to the manner in which the President shall be chosen. It says that a quorum of the Senate shall consist of two-thirds of Senators duly chosen and qualified; if a majority of qualified Presidential electors vote for one person, he shall be President; if not, then a choice shall be made upon the House, and the majority of the States represented in the case by one person, but not by Representatives. A bill amending the act incorporating the city of Washington was passed.—Mr. Sumner's resolution in relation to the way was instructed to inquire into the expediency of building the Northern Pacific Railroad.—Mr. Lovejoy, of Illinois introduced a bill for the better organization of the Quartermaster-General's department.—Mr. Stevens, from the ceiling for the report of the Committee to investigate the conduct of contracts, made a report, which was laid on the table, and that equalizing the pay of soldiers, were taken up and passed.—The House adjourned.

HOUSE.—March 2. Miscellaneous business was transacted, among which was the passage of the Senate bill appropriating $1,000 for the relief of Mrs. Lincoln temporarily, and an ineffectual attempt by Mr. Eldridge to call upon the Executive to furnish him certain papers in connection with forts and prisons or banished to the rebellious States, and a call for correspondence relative to the arrest of Mr. Vallandigham.—The bill declaring that the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims did not extend to cases arising from the destruction of property by the forces engaged in suppressing the rebellion was passed by a vote of 80 to 58.—Several members of the Border States earnestly opposed the bill; their constituents had suffered severely, and should be indemnified; amendments were adopted providing that certain claims be referred to the Secretary of War, Quarter-master Generals, and to be paid if certified by them; commissioners to be appointed to examine such claims, care being taken to exclude disloyal persons from indemnity; and limiting the time within which claims must be presented: the whole bill was postponed.—Mr. Stevens reported from the Reconstruction Committee of Conference on the whiskey tax.—March 8. The bill amending the Judiciary Committee to the Judiciary Committee on the bill, with the amendments relating to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.—The bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the surplus gold in the Treasury for Treasury notes was postponed.—The question between the two Houses on the whiskey tax was taken up, and the report of the Committee of Conference having again failed to agree. The House refused to ask for another Committee of Conference, and votes to adhere to its disagreement.—March 4. The day was devoted to the Reconstruction Committee's report, which finally adopted thanking the surviving soldiers of the Revolution, declaring the unbroken allegiance of loyal to the resolution to be sent to each of the survivors.—After declining an election case, the House, by a vote, contested the seat of Mr. Rice, from Massachusetts, in favor of its holder, the House adjourned.—March 7. This day, being Saturday, was devoted to making and listening to speeches.—Mr. Mallory, of Kentucky, spoke, condemning both the Democratic party and the doctrine of State Rights, and contended Mr. Richardson's bill, for the reimbursement, assents to the duties with which he had been furnished.—Mr. Wood, of New York, replied in a lengthy speech of his colleague, Mr. Blair, and asserted that the Cabinet members were the real Presidential candidates.—Mr. Cox spoke in defense of the Union men of Kentucky, and said that they were opposed to slavery and secession, and the man who would pledge himself to crush out the rebellion.—Mr. Grinnell, of Iowa, Williams, in the form of a personal explanation, made a speech censuring the different commanders of the Army of the Potomac, from McClellan to Meade. Among other things he asserted that at Gettysburg Meade had given orders for a retreat, which were countermanded only because an advance corps had become engaged, but that retreat was impossible. The army of Gettysburg he thought the greatest on record; and if it had been beaten after its enemy would have been disorganized; but the army was baited, and Lee advised to recross the Potomac, while he had only ammunition enough to last four minutes. The want of success of the Army of the Potomac was not to the soldiers, but to the incapacity of the commanders. Mr. Johnson replied, defending McClellan and Meade, laying the blame upon the President. Senators Anthony and Wade attributed Burnside's failure at Knoxville to the failure of others to obey the command to obey orders.—A joint resolution was adopted for changing the name of the lake district in Oregon to Klamath. The report of the House for a joint committee on the Whiskey Ring was ordered to be agree upon as to the less than 20 or more than 60 grain upon spirits on hand, was ordered.—March 10. A resolution authorizing a free committee was adopted.—March 2. The Military Committee reported that the House bill extending to the 1st of April the time for the payment of bounties with a recommendation that the Secretary of War be left to pass, &c.—Mr. Davis offered a joint resolution for amendment to the Constitution, as follows: "No term, no person shall hold the or grandmother sees a negro, shall be a citizen of the United States, or be eligible to any civil or military office, or to any place of trust or profit under the United States." Second, "The citizens of Maine and Massachusetts, which constitute one State, to be called East New England, and Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Connecticut shall constitute one State, to be called West New England." Ordered to be printed.—Mr. Powell reported the bill, upon which the Military Committee had reported adversely, authorizing officers of the army and navy to hold interfering in election. We were, he said, the only people who would allow such interference in elections. It was only recently that it had been permitted. He considered it dangerous to vest in Kentucky and Maryland the General Government had overthrown the laws regulating local elections in the United States, and held the Union responsible.—March 4. Mr. Sherman, from the Committee of Conference on the Whiskey tax, said that after a full discussion the joint Committee of the two Houses had failed to agree; if the Senate adhered to its amendments this bill would be lost, and they would have to wait till month, or was matured. The Committee therefore recommended that the Senate should recede from its amendments. The bill would then impose a tax of 60 cents upon all liquor manufactured after its passage up to July, having any tax after that time to be provided for by future legislation. It also left an additional tax of 40 cents a gallon upon spirits on hand. This was incongruous, and was only to be remedied by future legislation. The Senate then, by 29 to 11, receded from its amendments, and the bill passed.—Mr. Powell concluded his speech on the interference of the military with elections, reiterating the charges against the Administration, and affirming that the only reason were also severely attacked for their policy in relation to Danish affairs. The London Times, however, lays the blame chiefly upon the other European Powers.

"A single word," it says, "from France, Russia, and Sweden would have prevented the invasion of the Duchies: but the ties of gratitude for all services do not bind France: a common nationality and a common danger can not move Sweden: treaties and alliances are alike for upon Russia. These Powers will answer do any thing now nor tell us what they intend to do hereafter. It is left to England to stand isolated. She is isolated. She is left honorably itself seems to be threatened. Nothing remains but to send the unarmed fleet to the Baltic. But it is not by sea that the Danish capital can be attacked. The Danes can not be conquered nor permanently influence the decision of a war carried on by 50,000 or 60,000 men on the Continent unless which could, if necessary, place the whole of the west coast of India, and captured and burned the ship Emma, of New York.

A later advice from Cape Town confirms the report of the seizure of the rebel privateer Tuscaloosa at that place.

The British government has commuted the sentence of the deserters heretofore condemned to death to imprisonment for life or transportation beyond the seas.

It appears that the torpedo which sunk the Housatonic off Charleston was itself destroyed at the same time.

The Japanese embassy to Europe has arrived, and its first of a series of meetings for the purpose of calling the attention of the contraband to the matter of enlisting in our army.

Captains SAWYER and FLYNN, who were sentenced to death by court-martial and pardoned by the President, in relation for the hanging of two spies, by General BURNSIDE, have been released.

Admiral DAHLGREN is in Washington. It is rumored that he has been relieved from the command of the Monitor-fleet off Charleston. Admiral FARRAGUT will probably succeed him in command.

Brigadier-General BARRY, Inspector of United States Artillery, has been ordered, at his own request, from artillery duties, in which he has been engaged, and ordered to report to Major-General GRANT.

A report reached Cairo of the 21st Mississippi Infantry were surprised and cut to pieces by rebel guerrillas, dressed in Union uniforms, on Wednesday night last week, while standing guard for a foraging party from the steamboat Platte Valley. None of the regiment escaped. Loss not stated.

Rear-Admiral has been appointed by the Secretary of War to visit the camps where all rebel prisoners are confined, and report to them the oath of allegiance under the President's recent Amnesty Proclamation.

Lieutenant-Commander JOSEPH H. SYDNEY has been detached from the Mahaska and ordered to the Naval Academy to the command of the Arcadia.

Lieutenant-Commander HAYDEN has been detached from the Arcadia and ordered to return North.

Captain PINCKNEY, who was captured with General Stoneman, has been released from Libby prison, and is now with standing guard for a foraging party from the steamboat Platte Valley. None of the regiment escaped. Loss not stated.

The Richmond Examiner of March 1 says that on February 29th 400 more Federal prisoners were shipped for Georgia. On the 1st inst. Nearly 1000 more are to be sent, and there are accommodations for 6000.

The rebel raid in the Roanoke and Nouse rivers, in North Carolina, are said to be almost ready, and are also to be sent. They forcibly formidable. They will distribute yet a warm reception.

There is a rumor that Major-General D. N. GUION, now Commander of the Department of Arkansas, will be called to take an important command in the Army of the Potomac.

A private letter from Havana, dated March 1, states that the Spanish steamer Guipuzcoa had run on a dry dock there. The blockade-runners and secessionists in Havana having been driven from the place, and also the consul and the officers with violence. The Spanish authorities, however, had ordered the officers of the ship of war ordered to wear their side-arms, and they now visit the city fully armed.

Brigadier-General D. H. RUCKER, Chief Quarter-master of the Army of the Cumberland, has asked to be relieved from duty here and rest into the field.

Committee from different Districts in Pennsylvania are now engaged in the delivery of the Legislature of the additional bounty of $200 to veterans, the money to pay the same having been placed in their hands.

Twenty-five of the thirty thousand veterans of the Army of the Potomac whose terms of service expired during the present nine months, have re-enlisted. Of the six thousand veterans of the Army of the James who have re-enlisted, a large furlough, five thousand five hundred have already returned to duty, their furloughs having expired.

There is a great rush of Major and Brigadier Generals out of employment for active duty to avoid the effect of the bill to retire them from the service.

The total loss at the battle of Chickamauga on the part of the Federal army, at 7:30, the day after the fight, by latest news was 19,600. The time consumed in fighting was from 11 A.M. to 7:30 P.M. The total loss of the rebels was of 36,000, or over 2500 per hour. The total Federal force engaged was 60,000. The rebel force according to their own reports was 64,000.

The Louisville Democrat says, in reference to the Court of Inquiry, which consisted of Generals M'COOK, CRITTENDEN, and NEGLEY, that the evidence elicited does not sustain the charges against Generals Crittenden and Negley. On the contrary, it shows that "every thing that could be done was done to prevent the disaster which befell us."

At the battle of Chickamauga, Brigadier-General of the New York State Militia, died on Thursday, in Buffalo, of disease of the heart.

Captain Porter is preparing for an active spring campaign against the Indians in the Northwest.

Official Treasury documents show that, during the year 1863, thirteen thousand claims of deceased Union soldiers were settled. The number settled during 1863 was 4,000. Of the thousands unsettled, on the first of January last, 74,000.

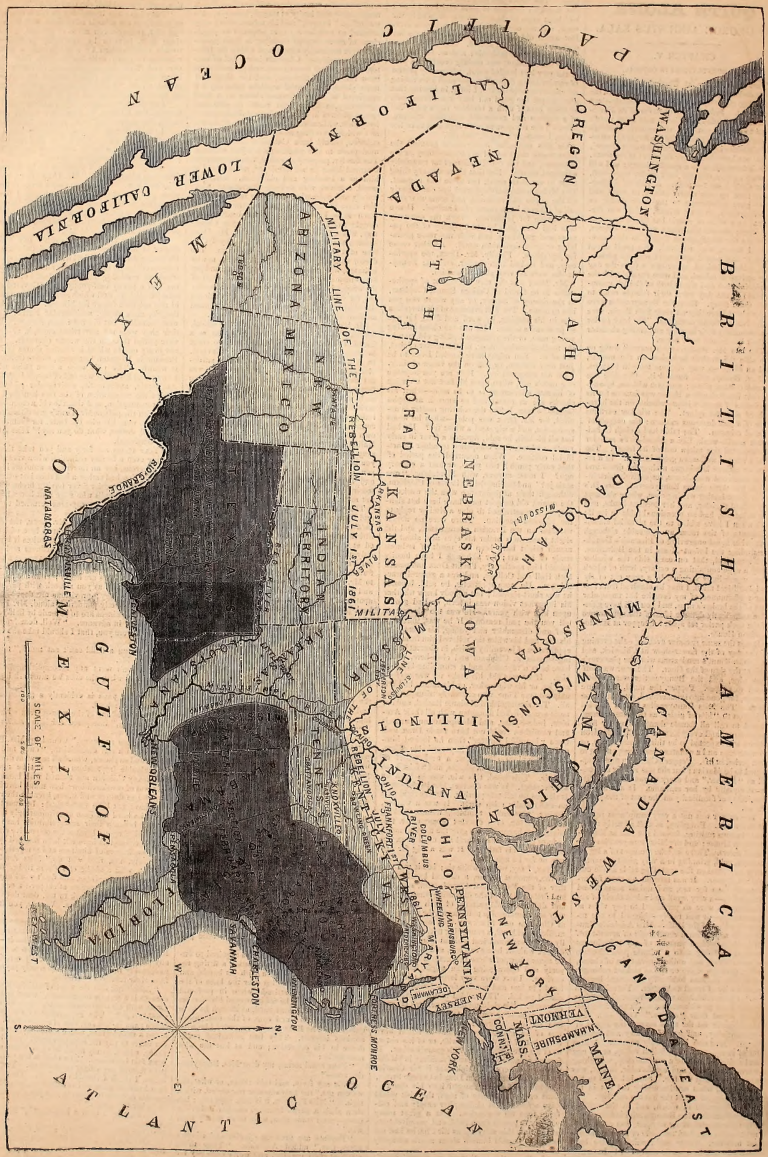
By information from the War Department, furnished the Senate, it appears that there are 70 major-generals, the number authorized by law, in service, and seventy, and 276 brigadier-generals, one less than the number provided for by law.

It is estimated that the cost per man of the army is nearly if not quite $1200 per annum.

The revised army regulations are amended so that enlisted men who lose or dispose of revolving pistols intrusted to their care will hereafter be charged $20 in each case.

It ought to be generally known that the Government will not pay bounties to any man who shall be in service with another one, free of expense, and take care of him when sick or wounded. Send letter, through the medical director, 455 Broome Street, New York.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL JUDSON KILPATRICK.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 167.]



MAP OF THE REBELLION, AS IT WAS IN 1861 AND AS IT IS IN 1864.—[See Page 187.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

CHAPTER V.

THE BUNNYCASTLES IN COUNCIL.

The back parlor at Rhododendron House, dedicated to the nocturnal mess spoken of in the preceding chapter, was a very moderately-sized apartment. Indeed, if an observer of its dimensions had hazarded an opinion that there wasn't room to swing a cat in it, the remark, although coarse (and as such naturally intolerable in an establishment so genteel as Rhododendron House), would not have fallen very far short of the truth. This is intended to be a candid history; so I will at once confess that the back parlor was—well, what shall I say?—poky. A pair of folding doors took up very nearly one of its sides, and these gave admittance to the front parlor, or drawing-room, or state saloon, which was furnished in a style of classic but frigid splendor, and where parents, guardians, and other visitors, to whom the Bunnycastles desired to show enormonial honor, were received. No pupil dared to enter that sacred apartment without permission. Many, indeed, never saw it from the day they arrived at school, and were regaled with the sacrificial cake and wine (both of British manufacture) to the day when their friends came to fetch them away. Even the Bunnycastles were chary about intruding on their Sala Regia, save on festive or solemn occasions. The back parlor was essentially their keeping and sitting chamber —their bower and their home.

The late Mr. Bunnycastle's portrait hung on one side the modest pier-glass on the mantle, and an effigy—very like too—in crinoline of Mrs. Bunnycastle, flanked it. Opposite was a small cottage piano; and you will see by-and-by, that Rhododendron House was famous for its specimens of modern improvements on the harpsichord and the spinet. The window curtains were of a dull dreadnought mourning; the carpet of a faded crimson. The table had a cloth in imitation needle-work, like a school-girl's sampler of unwonted size, taken out of its frame. The chairs were of well-worn green leather. In a recess were three handsome mahogany desks and three rosewood desk-boxes, respectively pertaining to the three sisters Bunnycastle. Mrs. B.'s great black leather writing-case, where she kept her school accounts, and her account-book, and her valuables, had an occasional table to itself; and when I have added to the pictorial embellishments of the room an agreeable although somewhat faded engraving of Pharaoh's Daughter finding the Infant Moses in the Bulrushes, and remarked that on each side the window hung a cage containing a canary, both of which were unceasingly watched by a gray cat of Angora breed, I may be absolved from further performance of my favorite but unpopular part of the historian's task, and you will have gained a sufficiently definite idea of the appearance of the back parlor set apart for supper at Rhododendron House.

It was the same summer evening—the evening of the day of the flower-show at Chiswick, and of Griffin Dubb's rendezvous with the pilgrim and wife at the sign of the Goat. The hour was half past nine, and the Bunnycastles were sitting down to supper. Pepper, the maid, a demure person, far gone into spinsterhood, attended upon them. The Miss Bunnycastles had a decided objection to "maid of girls," as they were accustomed to call all female domestics under five-and-twenty, and every servant at Rhododendron House was expected to be thirty years of age, or to wear caps and a countenance corresponding to that period in life. Pepper's Christian name happened to be Martha; but she was rigidly addressed as "Pepper," and every servant in the house went equally by her surname. It averted the possibility of familiarity on the part of the young ladies.

The supper was not a very sumptuous repast. It never was. Frugality, as well as early rising and timeous retiring, formed the rule at Rhododendron House; and the Miss Bunnycastles were small eaters. There was the remnant of a leg of mutton, cold, grinning in a very ghastly manner after its attack on the operating table at the usual o'clock dinner. It was brought up more for ornament than for use, and unless some friend dropped in to sup, it would select circle of acquaintances were so permitted to pay visits at supper-time—it was rarely subjected to the renewed action of the knife. Miss Adelaide Bunnycastle supped on a small basin of arrow-root. Miss Celia seldom partook of any refreshment more substantial than a minute parallelogram of stale bread, and a diminutive cube of cheese, with, perhaps, a slip or two of pickled cabbage; and Miss Matilda habitually contented herself with a slice of bread and butter. Yet all of them would have submitted to the severest of sacrifices rather than go without that which they imaginatively styled their "supper." Only with Mrs. Bunnycastle did the meal assume the aspect of substantiality, and not of an airy and fanciful myth. Madame Mère really supped. A nice bit of mutton, or a boiled cod-fish, or an egg and a slice of ham, or a mutton-chop, something warm, and meaty, and comfortable, in fact, was always prepared for her. She belonged to the old school, when sentimentality did not in the slightest degree affect the human appetite.

The beverage in which, and in the strictest moderation, the Miss Bunnycastles indulged during their unpretending be ..ast, was not a more aristocratic one than tea—pale of the very smallest brewing. There could scarcely have been malt enough, in a whole cask of it, to have given one headache to the rat that rioted upon the germinated grain lying in the house that Jack built. The ladies just took two or three sips of the mawkish infusion of gyle and hops, which had been more frightened than fermented by the yeast, and the ceremonial supper beer was over. But again did Mrs. Bunnycastle vindicate her descent from the old school. She liked something better than table-ale; and so, for her peculiar sustentation, was nightly provided a pint of the very best bottled stout. Not—my protest against doing duty allowed—that she ever tasted a pint unwarrantable liberty, I am inclining that after supper the good old lady was accustomed to solace herself with a tumbler three parts full of a curious and generously-smelling mixture, of which the component parts appeared to be hot water, lemon-peel, sugar, and gin.

On this particular flower-show evening the ordinary routine underwent a slight modification in character, and the conversation of an unusually animated nature. Not that there was any thing unusual to eat than usual; but there was a guest. The Mid-summer holidays were just over, nearly all the pupils had returned, and some new ones (each of them to learn music) had arrived. Hence one reason for jubilation. Then the quarterly bills had been paid by the majority of the parents and guardians, and with not more grumbling or reluctance than usual. Another cause for joyfulness. Finally, Mr. Drax, the apothecary, had looked round from the list of the Bunnycastles were all very glad to see him.

Mr. Drax was the very discreetest of apothecaries to be found in the parishes of Clapham, in the county of Surrey, or any where else you like to name. The first evidence of his discretion was in his keeping. He was a bachelor. He kept no profound a secret. He was the oldest lobking young man, or the youngest looking old man in the medical profession, as the case might be at that out of it. You might have fancied Drax to be just "passing through"—just on his way to—he didn't am not exaggerating. How are you to judge of a man's age, when upon his face not a vestige of hirsute adornment is to be seen, except a few shocks are as round and as smooth as apples (apples in wax, before the coloring matter is applied, for Mr. Drax's cheeks when he wears spectacles, and a wig, and a white tie? He had lost all his hair, he said, through a fever in early youth, and was true enough to the letter of official coiffure. When occurred the period of that early youth? two years, or half a century ago? It was impossible to say. "Guess, you scale je?" and the inquisitive ladies of Clapham, although their acquaintance with the works of the psalm and ode ought to have made them sharper, were constrained to give a similar reply to the oft-posed question. There were no actual wrinkles on the flower-like countenance, and the slight puckerings under his eyes and about his mouth might have been the result of acinous gout of the air: for although Drax had never rubbed him apothecary, Parfitt Drax had passed both Hall and College, and was a general practitioner. He wore spectacles, but his eyesight was short-sighted; but nobody knew whether his imperfect vision was inborn, or had grown upon him with years. He was too discreet to tell you the real reason. If he was, indeed, a professional man about town, his specialty was his wig, and his white tie, relieved him from that appearance of juvenility which, in discreet boarding-house, or Clapham High-street society, would have been a reproach and a stumbling-block to him. If he was old, his make up was perfect, and he, or his valet, had a knack of brushing his lamplied over Time, who ordinarily triumphs over all. The accomplished Madame Rachel, and her no less accomplished colleagues, all that Arbuthnian, Indo-Syriac, and Mesopotamian enamels and varnishes, could not have made Drax look more "beautiful forever" than he did. He prided himself under the influence of imperturbable discretion, scrupulous cleanliness, a neckerchief of soft cambric, a wig of the best, and a false head of hair. This head, this wig, was in itself an achievement. It was discreet, like its possessor. It showed no signs of "parting," all hair of which its unnaturally crisp curls. It was a waving, flowing, reasonably tumbled, human-looking undergrowing, of a dubious, but not glaring, that might have begun to turn gray the next moment, or have preserved its natural hue until the day it gathered its last. It was a wig for any age, or for no age at all.

Drax, I say, had a white tie; but it was not, in the remotest degree, a clerical kerchief, either of the Established Church (stiff, starched, and orthodox) or of Dissent (voluminous, floppy, and dubious-hued) pattern, of both which you may see innumerable patterns all the year round at Clapham and Brixton. It was a tie of secular medical neckband, a consulting neckcloth, a family cravat—symmetrical without being formal—a badge without insignia. It was tied in a bit of square bow, of which the experience in evening party and opera-going beau might have been envious. Drax—we have already touched his hands, in hue and consistence belonging to the glacial period. They added to his discreet appearance. His right middle finger was adorned with a mourning ring containing a lady's hair, and an indecipherable monogram. The hair was of an ambiguous shade. It might have been that of his deceased wife, or of his sister, or of his mother, or of his grandmother. It formed an additional piece of artillery in his discretional battery. I think that if Sir Charles Hall had looked upon Drax's hair, he would, in Clapham, before he entered into his disertations on the anxiety of man, the visit would have afforded that philosopher ample and edifying food for cogitation. But a great many years have passed since 1836, and, peradventure, at the time this story opens Sir Charles had not begun to trouble himself about man's antiquity at all.

Mr. Drax, the apothecary, or general practitioner, was the darling and enfant gâté of Rhododendron House. He was the Vert-Vert of this semi-monastic community—without Vert-Vert's naughtiness and laxity of tongue, however. He was called "Doctor," and his ministrations were deemed so satisfactory that surgeons or physicians of more exalted standing in their profession were but rarely summoned within the Bunnycastle precincts. Clapham being full of doctors driving their broughams, and possessing the utmost fraternal of feelings, and the biggest of brass plates, the gentlest medicos naturally felt aggrieved at the preference shown to a mere apothecary, a fellow who made up pills and spread plasters in a flourishing establishment of "family gin," without wasting the grave faculties, and which, according to ordinarily received calculation, should have yielded a handsome annual profit to the professor's healing vocation. The faculty, properly so called, consequently denounced Drax as an interloper, and sneered at him as a humbug and charlatan. Drax, as usual, behaved with infinite discretion. Constantly and detraction did not so much as make him raise his eyebrows in distinction; and when Miss Furblow, the parlor boarder, and daughter of a rich draper of Newington Causeway, was taken ill with the measles, Mr. Drax insisted that Dr. Hopscotch, of the Royal College of Physicians, should be called in. The doctor came, looked at Miss Drax, who, nothing irritated, was most obsequious to him, and got his guinea a visit, duly charged to the debit of the draper in Miss Furblow's quarterly account; but, for all that, Dr. Hopscotch failed in gaining the slightest footing as authorized or habitual medical attendant at Rhododendron House.

Mr. Drax was a frequent visitor at the school, not only in his professional capacity, but as a friend of the family. He would attend to some as often as he liked, and to supper uninvited. In fact, he "dropped in" just as the family supper-tray came to supper, as soon after nine as ever you possibly can. We want so very much to see you, and consult with you on a most particular and important matter." The original underscorings are Miss Barbara Bunnycastle's, and not mine.

This missive, signed with the initials B. B., and "yours ever faithfully," and sealed with Barbara's own device of the charming enough little motto of "Dinna forget," was duly dispatched at tea-time by the page and knife-boy (the only male creature in the establishment but the gardener, who came once a week for four hours, forming part of the Rhododendron retinue) to Mr. Drax's residence, Drax Lodge, in College Street; and punctually at half past nine the discreet apothecary made his appearance within the back parlor. He had as small an appetite—or, in his discretion chose to be as abstemious as the Bunnycastles themselves—and so, after consuming a very thin slice of the grinning mutton, and sipping a very small quantity of the tablebeer, Miss Adelaide Bunnycastle mixed the old her own fair hands (never mind if they were slightly bony), a tumblerful of the warm, colorless, but comforting beverage which her manma was in the habit of imbibing after supper. Then the conversation, which had hitherto been fitful and desultory, became concentrated and engrossing.

"Did you ever hear of such a strange, romantic affair as Miss Adelaide's speculation?" said Miss Barbara Bunnycastle, addressing the company in very thin slice of the grinning mutton, and sipping a very small quantity of the tablebeer. Miss Adelaide Bunnycastle mixed the old lady a tumblerful of the warm, colorless, but comforting beverage which her mamma was in the habit of imbibing after supper. Then the conversation, which had hitherto been fitful and desultory, became concentrated and engrossing.

"Did you ever hear of such a strange, romantic affair as Miss Adelaide's speculation?" said Miss Barbara Bunnycastle, addressing the company in very thin slice of the grinning mutton, and sipping a very small quantity of the table-be nyesatile, with an energy unusual to one of her soft and sentimental nature. "When you've kept a school as long as I have, girls, you'll know that there are, as the doctor says, hundreds of reasons for putting a little bit of a child away, and leaving her under proper care till she's grown up. I think we're all agreed. The little one is to be taken?"

"Certainly," chorused the three maidens.

"You could not have arrived at a more sagacious decision," acquiesced Mr. Bunnycastle.

"But the most embarrassing thing of all is," Miss Adelaide resumed, "that she is to be brought here this very night. We expect her papa and mamma. The gentleman with the diamond ring —the man-servant, I mean—said they might be as late as half past ten. Of course I could not stay late an hour, and from a stranger too, at Rhododendron House. Such a thing has never happened in our house since we first came here."

"Nor is it likely, I should hope, to happen again," Drax interposed, with another sitting bow.

"And it was principally for that reason, doctor," pursued Miss Adelaide, "that we asked you to come. We wished, in case we found it up to take this little thing, to have you here as a friend of witness, as it were, when her papa brought her."

"Perhaps her papa will object," remarked Barbara.

"To what? To something he can't see any more than the man in the moon can?" retorted her sister, sarcastically. "Nothing could be likelier than his objection to a stranger being present if his object is to secure secrecy; but, at the same time, nothing is easier than to avoid the slightest unpleasantness."

"Of course, of course," said the discreet apothecary. "I apprehend I may remain for a moment, my dear young lady. You wish me to be a witness, but an invisible one. You must receive the visitors in the front drawing-room. If you will kindly have the lamp lit there, and leave me here in darkness" (and he might have added, "in discretion"), "with one of the folding-doors the slightest degree in the world on the jar, I shall be an auditor to all that passes, and you may depend on my adroitness to be as well as hear."

Miss Adelaide Bunnycastle clapped her hands in grave applause at the apothecary's suggestion. Celia regarded him with eyes of favor. Barbara smiled upon him; and Mrs. Bunnycastle was just on the point of asking him if he would take just one little drop more of spirituous-and-water (although I am certain that Drax, in his discretion, would have refused), when the gate-bell was rung, and, a moment afterward, the sound of carriage-wheels was heard crunching the gravel-walk before Rhododendron House. The ladies hurried into the drawing-room. A solemn hush with a grave shade over it seemed to befall the gravel-walk before Rhododendron House. The ladies hurried into the drawing-room. A solemn hush with a grave shade over it seemed to befall them, and presently Pepper announced that two gentlemen, with a little child with them, requested an interview with Mrs. and the Misses Bunnycastle.

CHAPTER VI.

LILY SITS UP A LITTLE.

FRANCIS BLUNT, Esq., sometimes called Frank, but now familiarly known as Griffin, entered the scholastic presence with the assured air of one who felt himself among those ready to do him homage. He was still exquisitely polite—indeed, courtesy was second nature to him; but his politeness was the condescension of a sovereign among his subjects—of the Marquis de Carabas among his vassals and his wealth. He did not cry "Chapeau bas!" but his look commanded more irresistibly than the most peremptory tone of his voice would have done.

Mr. Blunt had thrown over his attire of the afternoon a long ample cloak of circular cut, deeply lined with velvet, and made of the finest broadcloth. It was called a "Spanish" cloak; and in Spanish I am afraid the eminent Mr. Nugee, the tailor who had made it, was paid. Blunt had long since passed into that state of indebtedness when a man gets credit solely on the strength of his already owing an enormous sum.

In this Spanish mantle there was no denying that he had the aspect of a mysterious stranger. Some of its jewels were artfully contrived to peep from among the folds of the cloak, and glittered out of the dark shadows. His hair, whiskers, and teeth were more fascinating than ever.

Close upon the dandy's heels, and carrying a slight cloak from wrapped up in the hair, was Mr. Blunt's friend. Yes; he was his friend—his guide and philosopher too, although to the world the relation in which he stood to the leader of fashion was not more exalted than that of a valet de chambre. Mr. Blunt's friend was hero and valet in one, and looked each character equally well.

In his way he was as exquisitely dressed as his master. It is difficult to make any but a remarkable out of a full suit of glossy black. You must needs look, in general, either like a waiter, or a doctor, or a schoolmaster, or an undertaker. The friend and valet of Francis Blunt, Esq., did not approach any one of the above-mentioned types of humanity. Mr. Nugee made the coats of the man as well as of the master. The valet's coat was peculiar. It wasn't a frock-coat, and it wasn't a swallow-tail—nay, nor a frock, nor a surtout, nor a spencer, nor a shooting-jacket. It was a coat with which no one could quarrel. It had the slightest clerical appearance, just tinged with a shade of the sporting cut. It was as a Cambridge Don strolling on Newmarket Heath. And then it subsided into the plain, unadorned, but exquisitely neat coat of the English gentleman. It was eminently a Conservative, a Chancloc clause, a Test and Corporation, a "No-Surrender" coat. Mr. Nugee would have seemed to make such a coat for a Whig. For a Radical he would naturally have declined to confect coats at all.

There is little need to say any thing of the supplementary garments worn by Mr. Blunt's friend. That incomparable coat disarmed all ulterior criticism, and would have compensated for any shortcomings in the remainder of the attire. Such shortcomings, however, were nonexistent. Every thing came up to a high standard of excellence. A delicate appreciation of art was shown in the fine, delicate, pearl-like pearl buttons, that showed itself between the termination of the pantaloon and the foot of the tasselled boot. A refined spirit of propriety was manifest in the narrow shirt-collar, and the quietly-folded scarf of black ribbed silk, fastened with a subdued cameo representing the head of a Roman emperor. Even that diamond ring to which Miss Bunnycastle had so indignantly referred, and evidently valuable as it was, had nothing about it on which the imputation of obtrusiveness or ostentation could be fixed. It was worn on the little finger of the left hand, and rarely brought into play.

It is time to say a few words about the individual for whom a skillful tailor and his own delicacy of taste had done so much. Nature had been partially kind, but with her accustomed severity had withheld from the individual. He was of the middle size, and clean-limbed, but all the powers of the coat were required to develop them fully, but not entirely, succeeded in disguising the fact that he was so round-shouldered as to be almost humpbacked. Without the coat he would have been Quasimodo; with it he was only a gentleman who, unfortunately, stooped a good deal. His head was small, and the color of that invaluable coat was so cut as to make his neck sit well on his torso. His hair was of the deepest raven black, and had the reflections, indeed—and, had it had its own way, would have grown in widely-ruffled luxuriance. Its possessor, however, kept it under by the use of the decorative of Cloclon le Chevelu. From nape to temples his locks had been made to undergo severe pressure; yet, close as the scissors had gone, you could tell at a glance that a forest had been there.

In the whole attitude of the man there was repose, concealed strength, abnegation of outward show. Had he given his mind and lips full play, the expression of his countenance would have been terrible. But with rare self-denial he kept his eyelids habitually drooped, and his mouth had a great flashing, devouring orbs with the yellow circle round each pupil. In the same spirit of self-restriction, his lips, so accustomed to rail and pulpy, were under inflexible management, and were kept firmly set together. Not half the full, red beard could be seen, though a part of it had. He sometimes smiled, but he never hit, in public. There was one concealment he could not or but did not care to effect. The heavy, bushy black eyebrows were untampered with, and notwithstanding the labored anemity of his physiognomy, they gave it a terribly Satanic look. Add to this that his complexion was dark, but so far removed from sanguineous hues as to be well-nigh alabaster, and you have a check he wore a short, closely-cropped, triangular whisker strongly resembling a mutton cutlet in hue, and you have the individual's carte de visite complete. Pardon my mentioning photography so many years before the discoveries from the first crude experiments of Niepce and Daguerre; but it is my habit to write retrospectively.

This individual was Monsieur Constant, valet de chambre and confidential factotum to Francis Blunt, Esq. He had been all his master did; and there were a great many things within his, the servant's ken, of which the master had not the slightest idea. Monsieur Constant knew that he was five-and-thirty years of age, bien sonnés, which means that he might have been between five-and-thirty and forty, and there was no reason for disbelieving his statement. Monsieur Constant came from Switzerland—from one of the cantons where they talk French through a pipe, to judge from his swarthy complexion. I believe his Christian name was Jean Baptiste. All his foreign servants have that name. The English ones could be known to all who were at the pains to inquire. They were enrolled in the catalogue of distinguished men with the British aristocracy. His character, or rather his behavior, was unexceptionable. He was attached to a Duchess. He had valeted the Duke of Pumpotter, and attended on his son and heir, the young Marquis of Bellair, in all his travels throughout the grand tour. He had been for a short time groom of the chambers to Lord Bullborough, when the latter nobleman was ambassador at Paris. Griffin Blunt had won him from the diplomatic service, and although he lost promotion, if not caste, by the change, the valet clung with strange tenacity to his new master, in whose service he had now been three years. His pecuniary profits were considerable. He purchased, had his own game to play, and played it with tranquil skill. Mr. Blunt declared that his man Constant was invaluable. "None of your five-act comedy valets," he would say; "none of your Mascarilles—your flippant, impertinent, dishonest jackanapes, but a steady-going, responsible fellow, who knows his business, and does it without bothering you. I wouldn't lose him to know the winner for the next Oaks. He's a proud fellow enough. Sells his old clothes to the Jews, but his own coats made by my tailor. Never dresses beyond his station, however. He does me credit; and, egad, I fancy he shares in it, though I dare say he's got much more money than I have." I fancy Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant had.

He spoke English fluently and idiomatically, as it is the custom of his countrymen to do. His foreign accent was apparent, but it was not grotesque. He did not call people "his little cabbages," nor say that he "mocked himself of them," nor translate as an excessive Verre Saint Gris into "Stomach Saint Grey." In a word, that foreigners speaking English are not so accustomed to render literally their native locutions, and that to ascribe such a habit to them is an agreeable myth invented by English writers who can not speak French, and have contracted an imaginative way of making French-can talk English.

As for the jovial person in this group, poor little Lily, the child was placidly slumbering in the folds of the great warm shawl. She had cried herself to sleep in the hackney-coach, and when, during the vehicle stopped at Rhododendron House, was fast for a moment. Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant laid her gently down in the state arm-chair, with its elaborately-worked crimson cushions, slightly to the annoyance of Mrs. Celia Bunnycastle, who had never seen a new pupil permitted to occupy that imposing throne of instruction on her entrance, and then stood respectfully in the back-ground, a demure smile mantling on her dark face. Adelaide Bunnycastle admitted in the inmost recesses of her heart that the scene was eminently romantic. It was like Lara; it was like the Corsair; it was like Byron's Bride of Abydos.

Meanwhile the dandy had allowed his mantle to drop gently from his shoulders, and accepted with his graceful courtesy the seat offered him by Mrs. Bunnycastle, who had reserved the moreen morocco fauteuil for his reception, but had in the excess of agitation of the fair to fall back on a high-backed chair of walnut wood. He was overwhelming in compliments and apologies for intruding on the ladies at so unseemly hour; but pleaded stress of business and an imminent departure for foreign parts, and having said something flattering to the effect that the house, castles, and thus fulfilled all the ornamental requirements of the occasion, turned, as in pursuance his wont, to Monsieur Constant for what was needed in the way of utility.

"Ah! he is asleep," said he; "has he missed Mr. Drax to himself, in the dark. "The man-servant's a foreigner too. Let's have another look at him." And the dandy, still keeping his mantle view, Mr. Drax, slightly deroguing from his reputation for discretion, opened one of the doors with a little and looked in. He was asleep.

The dandy started. "What the devil is that noise?" he asked with an abruptness not precisely unison with the tone of mellifluous suavity he had adopted a moment before.

Mrs. Bunnycastle had no time to be shocked at the irreverence of the stranger's oath, as she was too much flurried by the creaking of the door, and in a nervous murmur laid the blame of the occurrence on Mr. Drax. The dandy seemed perfectly satisfied when the grave, respectful voice of Monsieur Constant gave a fresh turn to the conversation.

He had politely declined the seat offered him by the youngest Miss Bunnycastle, and remained standing; but now advanced a couple of paces. "Monsieur, whom I have the honor to serve," he said, "has brought the little girl of whom mention has been made. Monsieur is ready to pay the sum agreed upon, fifty guineas, for one year's board and education, and only requires a little paper of receipt undertaking that no further demand shall be made upon him until a year shall have elapsed."

"We don't even know the gentleman's name if we made such a demand," Mrs. Bunnycastle remarked, with a sniff. "For all we're going any body must be called by some name or other."

"Certainly, certainly," broke in the dandy. "Call her Miss Lily, or Miss Floris, or by any other name, you know, and what's in a name?"

"Floris; a very pretty name indeed," said Miss Barbara, writing it down on a sheet of paper. "And her Christian name? Will you oblige us with that, and her age?"

The dandy looked uneasily at his valet. I declare I think he had forgotten his daughter's name.

"Lily," said Monsieur Constant, briefly, and red to.

As he spoke, the child woke up from her sleep, and thinking herself called, answered with a sob that she was "yay tyde." Poor little thing, she was tired enough in all conscience.

The sound of her voice was a signal to the two younger Miss Bunnycastles to hasten to the rescue. They took the little one from her father's to kiss her, and smooth her hair, and fondle her, and go through the remainder of the etiquette invariably observed by Rhododendron House on the reception of a new pupil of tender age. Not that the Miss Bunnycastles were either hypocritical or insincere. They were naturally women fond of children, but they saw so many and so much of them.

Miss Barbara continued to write. "Lily Florris," she repeated: "I have no doubt of her being an ornament to our school," she said, "and am sure she will be happy here."

"If she understand most unremitting, the most watchful supervision, the kindest treatment and the most liberal diet can conduce to her physical or spiritual welfare, said Mrs. Bunnycastle, who had got the prospectus atop on, I can vouch for this establishment affording every guarantee for the happiness of those confided to its care. I do not, I trust, said, Sir, that you declined giving a reference."

"Monsieur does not decline," respectfully interposed Monsieur Constant; "but he holds it to be unnecessary, and in three months, if not oftener, either Monsieur or myself, having the honor to serve him, will call to see how the child is progressing, and what she requires. She is to be Miss Lily Floris until further orders, and there are to be no extras and no vacations. I have now fifty-two pounds ten shillings in a bag, which I will hand to you if you will favor me with the receipt."

The required paper was duly made out, and signed by Miss Barbara; and Monsieur Constant, advancing to the table, respectfully placed a little wash-leather bag, containing the sum he mentioned, in the hands of the schoolmistress. Nothing loth, Mrs. Bunnycastle proceeded to count it; and even the eyes of her two eldest daughters twinkled as the sovereigns came out their faint "chink, chink," surely the pleasantest sound that can ever be heard by mortal ears, save and except only the voice of the dear one who murmurs "I love you," and the cry of your first child. Barbara Bunnycastle was insensible to the gold's seductive sound. Her eyes wandered from the dandy to his valet, and her soul was filled with wonder and admiration for both. It was like the Corsairs of Glenhurst; it was like the Children of the Abbey. It grew more and more romantic every moment.

Till the dandy, who had been eyeing with his rings, and flicking specks of dust from his boots, had subjected his valet to such close ocular inspection that you might have counted his eyes were Stanhope lenses, rose with an expression very much akin to relief in his countenance, to go. He was assured, he said, that with the one would receive every care and kindness at the hands of the ladies of Rhododendron House, and he left her in their charge with every trust and confidence. He was proceeding to make the cadence complete in one of the most graceful of bows, and to have the honor of wishing them all a very good evening, when Mrs. Bunnycastle deferentially interposed.

"There is only one little thing more," she said, rather hesitatingly; "has—has—has your—has the gentleman—the individual (Monsieur Constant) brought the young lady's boxes?"

"What boxes?" asked the dandy, with a polite stare.

"Her clothes, her linen," explained all the Bunnycastle family with one voice.

Francis Blunt, Esq., looked at them generally in blank discomposure. He turned to Monsieur Constant, but that retainer resigned his absolutes as though it were beyond his province or his power to interfere.

"Confound it," cried the dandy, "it's very vexatious; but the fact is, we've forgotten the clothes."

"A nice affectionate father," murmured Mr. Drax, in the dark. "Poor little lamb, to have fallen among these wolves!"

The dilemma was perplexing, but not irremediable. Monsieur Constant explained that Monsieur, whom he had the honor to serve, had left Rhododendron House unprepared for a visit in London. Would ces dames undertake to procure clothes for the child if a sum were left in advance sufficient for the purpose? They probably require? Mrs. Bunnycastle bowed her head in gracious approval of this proposal. What sum would be needful? Only a trifle, merely a pounds, the valet whispered his master. The latter, looking any thing but pleased, but still too well-bred to give way to his wrath, assented, acquiesced in what his companion suggested, and from a purse elegantly embroidered with beads and gold thread took out a roll of bank-notes, and some notes which he handed to Mrs. Bunnycastle. Again he rose, suppressing a slight yawn, and saying that it was past eleven o'clock, and that he had detained the ladies an unconscionably long time, proceeded to take his leave.

All the women's garments rustled too—for they had dressed themselves in silk attire, in expectation of this visit—as he made his reverence of farewell. Mrs. Bunnycastle was profuse in her thanks and protestations of solicitude for Lily's welfare. The young ladies chimed in harmoniously.

"She is to be brought up in the principles of the Church of England?"

"Of course—of course. By all means—eh, Constant?"

Monsieur Constant bowed diplomatically, as though to convey that, professing as he might himself a different creed, he had the profoundest respect for that of England; and then at that of the ladies before him, of Monsieur whom he had the honor to serve, and of the gentel classe in general.

"As her little mind expands," said Mrs. Bunnycastle, "no effort of ours shall be spared, not only to instil into her the rudiments, but also to lay the foundation of clever ornate accomplishments."

"Thank you, thank you," Mr. Blunt returned, rather hastily, and cutting short a further compliment which was evidently impending: "she's she's old enough, of course she'll learn French and drawing, and that sort of thing."

And about to suggested the valet, in a low, deeply respectful voice.

The dandy started as though a wasp had stung him. When he spoke again there was no grace, dry harshness in his voice. "Madam," he said, turning to the schoolmistress with a sternness unmoved in the most genial condition, "I do not want my daughter to learn to dance. Mind that, if you please. No dancing for Miss Lily Floris. I have the honor to wish you a very good-night."

He was going. He was on the threshold when Monsieur Constant whispered to him:

"Monsieur has forgotten to bid adieu to la petite."

The dandy looked disconcerted. I declare he was departing without taking any more notice of Lily than if she had been a dog. He soon recovered himself, however, made a genteel dash in our step toward the moreen morocco fauteuil, and with his usual charming grace imprinted a kiss upon Lily's brow. The little one did not heed him. She had fallen asleep again He turned, bowed, and touched the tips of all the ladies' fingers in succession. He was unrivaled in the art of touching your hand without shaking it. The women's garments rustled again as they bent in edifying courtesies. Monsieur Constant bestowed a bow on the company, reverential but not servile, as became his degree, and Pepper ushered the two to the door, and they went away.

[Continued on Page 186.]

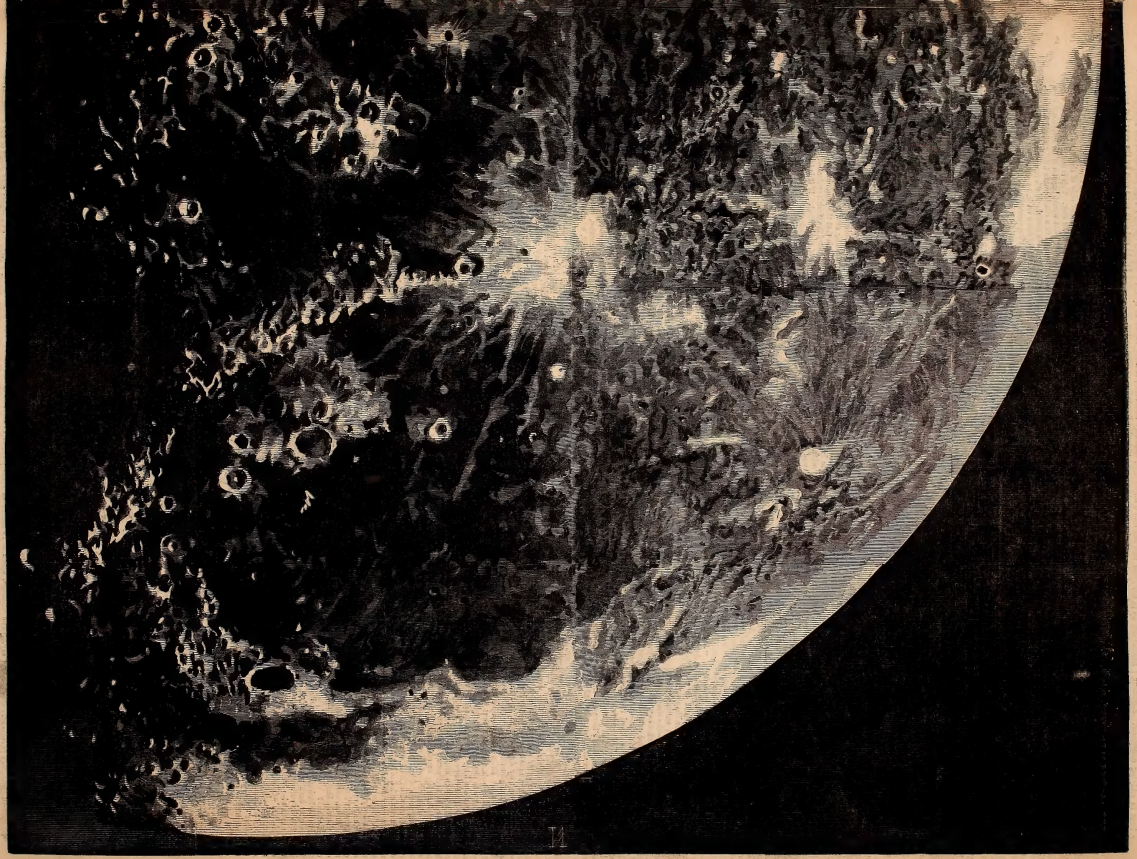
FAC-SIMILE OF A PHOTOGRAPH OF THE MOON, TAKEN BY DR. HENRY DRAPER'S TELESCOPE.—[SEE PAGE 186.]



(Continued from Page 183.)

"La petite n'est pas mal," Mr. Blunt vouchsafed to remark, as the exiles made their door open for him.

Constant knew very well that by la petite his master did not mean his little daughter. He slightly inclined his head.

"The one they called Barbara—what a Gothic name," pursued Blunt, "why not call her Brunehilde at once. But she is passable. She has a fatigued air and long coats. C'est une femme qui rêve, et qui se tourmente. Does the coachman know where to drive, Constant?"

"Back to town. He has received his instructions. He never had so good a job in his life. Shall I give monsieur his cigar-case?"

"If you please," the dandy said. The valet handed it to him with a bow.

"Put down the glass," Mr. Blunt continued, in the polite peremptory tone.

The valet did as he was bidden. He sat with his back to the horses. His voice never rose beyond the muted breath of a dependent. He never took a liberty. Monsieur Constant knew his master and man there was not the slightest familiarity, but there was a good deal of mutual intelligence. Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant knew all that his master did, and was aware besides of a good many things to which that refined gentleman was an entire stranger.

So they drove away, the dandy yawning and stretching himself, and saying how tired and hungry he was, and what a bore it was to have any thing to do with children, and how glad he should be to get to bed. But Mr. Francis Blunt had much more to go through that night before he retired to rest.

The first thing the Bunnycastles did when the sound of the hackney-coach wheels had died away was to beat the lamp and the money they had just received on the back parlor table with the discreet Mr. Drax. Then they proceeded to count the fifty-pound sovereigns and a half all over again. Then they examined the crisp banknotes from the medallion of Britannia to the signature of Mr. Henry Hase. Then they turned to the backs of those documents, scanning the much blotted dorsal scribblings—the worst pens, the worst ink, and the worst pot-hooks and hangers in the world always seemed called into play for the indorsement of bank-notes—and wondered whether "Hase" was dated from Hase Court, worth, or "Cutchins & Co.," who gave their address in Leather Lane, or "C. J. Gumby," who seemingly lived at Rose Cottage, could have any thing to do with the mysterious strangers who had just faded away from their ken, leaving a little child, not four years old, clutching woolen shawl, and sixty pounds odd, sterling money of this realm, behind them. They could make nothing of the notes, however, beyond the fact that they were genuine, or of the gold, save that it chinked cheerily, or of either, save that the money looked very nice. Then they drew breath, and interchanged glances of pleasing perplexity.

I think it was Mr. Drax who, with his never failing discretion, now suggested that it might perhaps be better to put the "new pupil" to bed, as she looked very sleepy after the journey and must be very tired. Poor little "new pupil!" The Bunnycastles had forgotten all about her. The tangible hope that her arrival would have exhausted had caused the tiny mortal of humanity, who was to be boarded and educated, to fade away into the realms of nuisance. They were on too familiar terms with Drax to manifest much shame when thus reminded of their forgetfulness. They never put on company airs before the apothecary. Adelaide acknowledged with a smile that the little body had quite slipped her memory, and while she rang the bell for Pepper, enjoyed Barbara to fetch the child from the drawing-room. It was summer weather, and not so very chilly then. Besides, had she not the warm checked shawl?

The child looked up at her with a strange light into the candle, but did not cry. She seemed to be rather relieved by the absence of the two men who had brought her to Rhodendendron House. The dandy's resplendent attire and dazzling teeth, and the valet's coat, cameo, and smile had not failed in producing a favorable effect on her. On the other hand, while she submitted to be patted on the head by Mr. Bunnycastle, and generally smiled at by the two young ladies, she took very kindly to Mr. Drax, and coming toddling toward him essayed to climb upon his knees, reaching forward one of her plump little hands as though she desired to touch his discreet and mystic necktcloth.

"Ah!" said Drax, as he lifted her up and imprinted a discreet kiss on her forehead, just at the roots of her hair. "She won't be so very fond of me when she takes half the nasty things I shall be obliged to give her. Poor little thing! I wonder whether she's had the measles."

He leaned back in his chair and regarded her in fond anticipation, as though mildly gloating over a subject who was to conduce to the enlargement of his professional experience, and in the increase of his quarterly bills. Drax became for the moment a Rosicrucian. Even as the Sylphs, in the Rape of the Lock, hovered round Belinda at her toilet, so did the little baby girl to the discreetly expectant Drax seem encompassed by a multitude of gnomic forms, menacing to childhood, but conquerable by pills and potions, rhubarb and magnesia, sirup of squills, and compound extract of pyrogenic.

His reverie was put an end to by the arrival of Pepper, who, like a good-natured woman as she was, had stroked Lily's brown curls, kissed her on both cheeks, chucked her under the chin, hoisted her up in her arms, told her half a merry story about a little girl who was always ready to go to bed, and was, in consequence, much beloved by the angels, all, so it appeared, in a moment. The Bunnycastles were struck by the striking out these impromptu acquaintances with small children. They saw too much of the big ones.

"This is Miss Floris, Miss Lily Floris, Pepper," Mrs. Bunnycastle remarked, with calm dignity. "Her papa, who is going abroad, was obliged to bring her very late. We must bestow her as best we can to-night. What beds are there vacant, Pepper?"

"There's number two, in the first room, mum," answered the domestic.

"Number two, Lily!" interposed Adelaide; "that would never do. They never go to sleep until daybreak, I do believe, and they'd question the rest of her life before breakfast-time. And Mamselle, though it's her duty not to allow them to talk, is just as bad as they are."

"There's five and nine in the second room; but there's no mattress on five, and as for nine, you know, mum—"

"Well, what do we know?" asked Miss Celia, sharply.

"It's the bed Miss Kitty died in," Pepper returned, with an effort.

There was a family vault in Rhodedendron House against sleeping in the bed that Kitty had died in.

"Stuff and nonsense!" cried Mrs. Bunnycastle, giving vent to her favorite ejaculation, when she wasn't sentimentally didactic. "What can't matter? twelve and nine, Pepper, indeed! I suppose Kitty Waycell's ghost shows the second room?"

"Well, ma," pleaded Miss Barbara, "if she wasn't frightened, the girls would be sure to terrify her with bogey stories. She'd better not go to bed. At least not yet. I'll sit with her, Rose again sleeping in the shed, the junior's room, Pepper?"

"Just one, miss, some of the young ladies are sleeping two in a bed."

"Well, where are we to put her?" Adelaide asked, rather testily. "We can't keep the child up all night."

She looked remarkably wide awake, and as though she intended to remain so. She was playing with the ribbons in Pepper's cap, and seemed to would not be at all averse to making objection to the continuance of that amusement until cock-crow. As for Mr. Drax, his discretion was quite sufficient of himself to keep artificially domestic conversation, and he feigned to be immersed in the perusal of a volume of the Gentleman's Magazine.

"Well, if you please, mum," Pepper ventured to represent, "I think that as the dear little creature's young and tired, and as she says that I'd better take her to bed with me, mum, and then, to-morrow, you know, mum, you can see about it."

The ladies were grac ously pleased to accept this suggestion, and it was agreed to mem. con. And then—it being then close upon the eleven o'clock—Lily and her new guardian disappeared, and the discreet Mr. Drax, vowing that he was quite astonished at himself for having sat late, took his leave, promising to call in on the morrow afternoon, in case his advice should be required.

"A very nice girl is Barbara Bunnycastle," said Mr. Drax, softly to himself, as he walked home to College Street. "A very nice girl, and one who would make any man's home happy."

It is my purpose to inquire what Mrs. Bunnycastle and her second daughter Celia dreamed of that night, although probably the mysterious strangers were more the mysterious strangers; but if I have any clairvoyant privilege, I am entitled to use it for the revelation both Adelaide and Barbara dreamed of Mr. Drax.

DR. HENRY DRAPER'S PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE MOON.

SINCE the invention of the telescope, in the seventeenth century, many attempts have been made to represent the appearance of the moon. Drawings produced have only shown the position of the various parts, and have not given any idea of how the moon really looks. In the year of photography, however, it was perceived that that art would give the means of procuring exact representations of our satellite; and Professor J. W. DRAPER produced pictures, one inch in diameter, which he presented to the New York Lyceum of Natural History, and which several months ago he exhibited. A great many scientific men have worked with the telescope and camera, but their instruments, telescopes required, and the great expense necessarily, but few have prosecuted it to any advantage. The chief difficulty arises from their perfect truthfulness, and from the fact that, by comparing together those made at various dates, any changes in the moon can be observed.

The telescope which Dr. HENRY DRAPER (Professor of Natural Science in the University of New York) has said to be the largest reflecting telescope in America, and has been built by him especially for photographing the moon and heavenly bodies which have nearly six years to complete. He has involved a very heavy outlay, although the more delicate parts—as the silvered glass mirrors—have been made with his own hands. An Observatory at Hastings, near New York, 20 feet square and 22 feet high, is required to hold it, besides other buildings for photographic apparatus and machinery. The telescope, which is 16 inches in aperture and 13 feet long, has been mounted on an entirely new kind of stand; the revolving roof is turned around by a new method; indeed the observatory is full of novelties. A full description of it, copiously illustrated, is being published by the Smithsonian Institution at Washington.

The photographs of the moon that he has made during 1863 have greatly surpassed any that have been made before, some of even three feet in diameter, which show the moon on a scale of 60 miles to the inch having been produced. The wood-cut on the adjoining page is a fac-simile of one which represents that luminary on a scale of 100 miles to the inch. The highest talent and skill have been required, both in the draughtsman and engraver, to procure a faithful resemblance on the wood, and several weeks have been consumed in the operation.

The moon has always been an object of superstitious reverence to the uneducated. The Jews made their holidays to depend on her phases, and the Gentiles named a day of the week after her. The Mohammedans chose the crescent as their symbol, and it is to be regretted that our Revolutionary Fathers did not do the same, considering its eminent appropriateness to a young and growing country. It would have strengthened the hearts of those who fear that our present eclipse may be permanent, and have shown them that, sooner or later, a very dark shadow was destined to cross our path.

Many people suppose that the moon exercises a directive influence upon the weather—an opinion shared in by the gallant knight Hudibras:

"The Queen of Night, whose vast command
Rules the tides and governs the land;
And over moist and crazy brains
In high spring-tides at midnight reigns."

And this belief was carried to such an extent that, in King Edward's time, a man would swear that when he signed a paper he was moon-struck, he was ipso facto released from his bond. What a convenience such a law would be to some India-rubber consciences now! Other writers of the period had the same idea. Shakespeare calls that Caliban is a moon-calf—that is, a brute spawned by the moon's light on the scum of the sea—because he has an "ancient and fish-like smell," a kind of, not of the newest. So, too, Neocles of Crotona believes that Argive Helen, the cause of the Trojan war, was born of an ox egg found in the moon, and lunars bore extraordinary fairness. And Werenfels, speaking of a superstitious man—"He will not commit his seed to the earth when the moon is full but when she requires it. He will have his hair cut when the moon is either in Leo, that his locks may stare like his lion's mane, or in Libra, that they may curl like a ram's horn. Whatever he would have to grow he sets stout it when she is in her increase; but for what he would have to be closes her wane. When the moon is in Taurus he never can be persuaded to take physic, lest that animal which chews the cud should cause him to do the same." If any time do has a mind to be admitted to the presence of a pet, we would tell the moon is in conjunction with the sun, for 'tis then the mystery and it affection with 'superior is salutary and successful."

Of course, in the days of the Seers and Literary men, doctors were no better. The Honorable Robert Boyle (who poor Tom Hood says wrote "But Oh dream!") was a very ingenious physician, who practiced in Java, assured me that he observed some persons become lame by contraction of certain cramp-like nerves, and so continue for many weeks or months together. He also experienced it upon himself; for having, while he was a student in that island, to sleep after a very hot day for a considerable time on the ground that lay fully exposed to the moon, upon waking he found his leg contracted, and that his mouth drawn awry in a hideous manner, which obliged him to keep within doors till by the use of brisk aromatic medicines he freed himself from that disorder." The philosophers thought that most set in the moonshine produced maggots.

We are quite at these old misconceptions, but there are modern open just as gross. Many think that the moon appears as large as a cart-wheel, while almost all will agree that it is certainly "as big as a plate." One is about as far from the truth as the other, and size to the naked eye being about that of a pepper-corn. The only astronomical observation made by the national Scottish poet Burns, quoted in his "Death and Dr. Hornbook," may suggest to the public a modest and sober diffidence in expressing their opinion on such matters:

"The rising moon began to glow'r,
The distant Cumnock hills out-owre:
To count her horns, wi' a' my pow'r
I set myself;
But whether she had three or four
I cou'dna tell."

If a pea is held up at the nearest distance of distinct vision (ten inches), between the eye and the moon, it will be found that the moon's disk will be covered entirely by it. By the same means the delusion respecting its larger size when rising than when at the meridian is dispelled. The reason given by Alhazen, the Mohammedan astronomer, for this optical deception, was that it appeared in connection with intervening objects; but this seems at best unsatisfactory, for it looks equally large at sea. The actual diameter of the moon is 2160 miles, and her weight $\frac{1}{81}$ that of the earth.

Things weigh a good deal less upon the moon than they do upon the earth. A six-pound weight carried there would only be equal to one pound. Amateur artrronomers have amused themselves with calculating how high they could increase force of gravity, and find that a man might jump 30 feet high, and not come down harder than he does from an ordinary jump on the earth. The distance of the moon from us, 240,000 miles, may seem to be very great, but is not so in reality. Mr. BARNES, in his history of the cotton manufacture, says that, even in 1833, the woven fabrics of that substance exported from England in one year would form a girdle for the earth passing eleven times round the equator, and therefore more than sufficient to form a continuous sheet from the earth to the moon—a fact that will interest those who may inquire whether the distance will ever be bridged.

An examination of the fac-simile of the lunar photograph (pages 184 and 185) shows the well-known bright and dark parts seen by the eye; but many more things too are visible. The surface is diversified with elevations and depressions, which are more and more apparent as the eye traverses from the rounded to the straight side where the ruggedness is very marked. Some of our readers may inquire why it is that half only of the moon is shown, and not the whole disk. This is made apparent by considering what would happen if an individual were taken up to a considerable height above a mountain on the earth. If the sun were shining perpendicularly down on it, he would not be able to distinguish the mountain from the ground around; but if the sunlight fell sideways, so as to cast a shadow, it would be visible enough. So it is in the moon. The sunlight is coming from a point away to the left hand in this picture, and consequently the elevations and craters cast shadows which enable us to see them, while in the full moon, which is just as easily photographed, the light falls straight down, and the mountains become indistinguishable from the rest of the surface. This was the case on the left side of the moon when this photograph was taken. But besides the variety of tints arising from shadows, there are variations belonging to the different reflecting power of the rocks of which the moon is made. The broad places called seas—which do not, however, contain any water—are of a darker substance than many of the volcanoes; just as a dark rock looks darker than grass from a distance, would be darker than one in which chalk predominated.

Coming now to a closer examination, let us see why it is that the ruggedness of the straight edge is attributed to volcanic craters—that is, cavities blown out of the ground. If it is borne in mind that the light which is coming to us from the moon is reflected from the sun, and that he is away to the left hand, it will be found that these places must be pits, because the bright side is from the sun, and the dark side toward him. A well on the earth will have a shadow cast toward the west, and a dark one toward the east, when the sun has just risen.

The reader will observe that these craters are circular, and of very large size. As one circle in the picture corresponds to 100 miles, several of them must have their diameter, three to 300 and 75 miles across being quite common. Very many of the craters, too, as Aristillus (B7), have a central annual mountain resembling, in their circular, Vesuvius, near Naples; but the craters on the moon, as a rule, are far larger than those on the earth. Then, however, as no more than we can expect from the greater lightness of bodies there, less force being required to eject the lava. Besides, there is an atmospheric obstacle, because there is none air.

There are more volcanoes in the southern than in the northern hemisphere. In the latter there has been evidently a more gentle action. The range of mountains, as the Apennines (2G), have been produced, which are precipitous on the north, and gradually shelving on the south side. The great valleys—as the Mare Imbrium (D), and Oceanus Procellarum (C)—are in the northern hemisphere, and have a much smaller list than the volcanoes. They must be of darker materials, for where the lava mountain Copernicus (2S) has ejected his stream over the valley, the lava shows as bright lines running for hundreds of miles in all directions. But these volcanoes are now probably all extinct, though Herschel thought he saw one burning. Nevertheless we are not without evidence that there have been great changes in the appearance now exposed on the earth. In the reign of King Nekhempâle—"Beloved of the Moon"—(the second son of Moses, who was the third Pharaoh of united Egypt), the Libyans revolted, but alarmed by an unexpected increase in the size of the moon, submitted.—(Wilkinson.) This record does not state with enough precision what the change was; though, from its attracting popular attention and giving a name to a king, it must have been something extraordinary. It would be well for Chinese scholars to examine the records of that ancient people to see if it was recorded there.

The appearance of the moon at various times, from the new to the full, is constantly changing. To the naked eye she seldom ceases, as they are called, gradually increasing from a crescent to a circle, and then decreasing again. But in the telescope these changes are still more striking. At new moon it is night on all the side of the moon turned toward us, but this was gradually given on it, peak after peak, and the mountain-tops in succession receiving its beams, until at the end of a fortnight the whole hemisphere is in brilliant light. Along the rugged edge in the wood-cut there are seen several instances where the sun is just rising on the tops of mountains and edges of craters, giving at the first glance the idea that there are isolated bright places altogether separated from the body.

The first glance that every one takes on looking at the moon is, Is it inhabited? Apart from the well-ascertained evidence of the absence of air and water, still the lack of any signs of vegetation—conditions essential to the existence of any organized being that we know of—the horrible rigor of the cold at night, and desolate and inscrutable nature of the country forbid the supposition. Not the slightest trace of any work of human hands has ever been discovered, though telescopes like DR. DRAPER'S should enable the observer to contemplate the moon at a distance of 200 miles, and should permit us to perceive a city easily.

But although it shows no signs of living beings, it has been the source sometimes of great use to dead philosophers, consecrating the different mountains to different men, just as Egyptian kings had pyramids. The parcelling out of the moon's surface, however, has been conducted with fairness, for some almost unknown have good places, while great men like Galileo are put off under the fence. Some, too, are there who have no business among scientific people, whom they sheltered and ill-treated to their utmost while alive. The reader may judge of the comparative merits of Cyril (4L), who has a splendid tomb, and Hypatia (1J), buried in a miner one close by. The story is extracted from "Draper's Intellectual Development of Europe:"

"Among the cultivators of Platonic philosophy whom the times had left, there was a beautiful young woman, Hypatia, the daughter of Theon, the mathematician, who not only distinguished herself by her expositions of the Neo-Platonic and Peripatetic doctrines, but was also honored by the ability with which she commented on the writings of Apollonian and other geometers. Every day before her door stood a long train of chariots; the instructress was invoked with the wealth and fashion of the city. Her aristocratic assistance were more than a rival to whose attendance the presiding of the assembly and perhaps contemporaneous comparisons were instituted between the philosophical lectures of Hypatia and the incomprehensible sermons of Cyril. It was not to be borne that a heathen woman should thus divide such a multitude with a prelate; it was not to be borne that the rich and noble and young should be carried off by the black art of a diabolical enchantress. Alexandria was too fair a prize to be left unmolested. . . . . .

"Cyril at length determined to remove this great rival—and everyone what now appeared to be the only obstacle in his way to uncontrolled authority in the city. As Hypatia came forth to her residence she is assaulted by Cyrilic mob—an Alexandrian mob of many monks. Amidst the fearful yelling of these barbarians the unprotected female she is dragged from her chariot, and, in the public street, stripped naked. In her martyr career she is hauled into an adjacent church, and in that sacred edifice is killed by the club of Peter the Reader. Vials the tears given by Peter the alm of Cyril was reached, but his merciless adherents not glutted their vengeance. They dismembered the corpse, and, incredible to be said, finished their barbarous crime by scraping the flesh from the bones with oyster-shells, and casting the remnants into the fire! Thus perished, at the instance of Cyril that Hecate might laugh at the call of his antagonist, his memory must bear the weight of the righteous indignation of posterity."

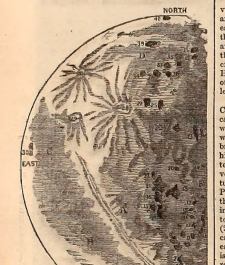

DIAGRAM FOR FINDING THE MOUNTAINS ON THE MOON.

As a sight-seeing traveler, guide-book in hand, examines the decaying tombs in Père la Chaise, when he does Paris, so we too will take a turn through this celestial church-yard, and examine some of the grave-stones, although hundreds must pass unnoticed. Our starting-point shall be Tycho (2), a great cavity, 55 miles across and 17,000 feet deep, with a high cone in the centre. This is dedicated to Tycho Brahe, the Dane, the builder of Uranieburg, one of the oldest observatories in Europe, which cost $200,000; one half of it he paid out of his own purse. He was not always so peaceful as he has been for the last 250 years, since it is related of him that he fought a duel with a nobleman, who cut off his nose. He, however, replaced it so skillfully with one made of colored wax that the loss was not perceived. He kept in his family a madman, whom every day at dinner he made a footstool of, in the belief that the remarks made in that position were prophetic. From the edge of Tycho there is a deep groove extending many hundred miles to the northeast.

Let us look to the south before we move. (1) away at the south is named after Newton, and affords another instance of the unfairness we have alluded to. He, the Prince of Astronomers, deserves the most conspicuous place, although his disparagers would have us believe that he became insane before he wrote on the prophecies, imputing it to his studying many days and nights in one position, trying to turn other metals into gold by the aid of a furnace.

To the southwest (3) is called Bacon. There are two claimants for this monument—Roger Bacon, the discoverer of spectacles, gunpowder, gases, "whose writings were centuries in advance of the time, and who was imprisoned ten years for the sake of science, and tortured without complaint. The other, Francis Lord Bacon, who never made a discovery in his life, who inveighed against mathematics and the use of instruments, and who abused his power as a judge to torture men. He is now being found out. Which has the best right we leave to the reader to determine. If the latter is to have a place, let it be on the other side of the moon, out of the sight of scientific men, or in Milton's Limbo.

In the same vicinity is (4) Cavier, whose discovery of fossil bones in the ground has taught us what animals roamed on the earth in long ages past, and how the tiger, elephant, and rhinoceros lived in England, under the shade of palm-trees growing in that (then torrid) climate. Close by (5) is Maurolycus, which exhibits a high central cone casting a long shadow to the right. Other more recent craters have broken here and there through its walls.

Toward the east (6) belongs to Fernel, who measured the earth by his carriage-wheel revolutions; and (7) to Nonius, whose true name was Peter Nunez, and who invented a scale for measuring minute parts. North of Nonius is a group of four, one of which (8) commorates Werner, who thought that the face of the earth was made irregular entirely by the action of water. If he has since looked about him on the moon, and observed how pock-marked the surface is, and yet how devoid of water, he must have changed his opinion. A little to the northwest (9) is Geber. Dr. Johnson says that gibberish is derived from his name, because he talked so obscurely. Next comes (10) Timocharis, the great historian, distinguished for the very opposite quality, the pithiness of his sentences. Speaking of Roman consuls, he said, "They make a solitude, and call it peace." Between the two is interred the great caliph Almamoun (11), who did so much for Arabic literature, and in fact, on every contrary measured the size of the earth on the shore of the Red Sea, and ascertained it to be three diameters within a few miles. Astronomers have not been as much disposed to deny the Arabians their rights as historians have; for within a little distance Abulfeda (12) and Albategnius (13) lie. The latter more than nine hundred years ago determined the length of the year within two minutes. To the east are also Arzachael (14) and Alpetragius (15), distinguished Moorish astronomers; and close by the latter (16) Alphonsus, the celebrated Spanish king of Castile, who said that if the heavens were indeed arranged as awkwardly as his contemporaries affirmed, he thought he could have fixed them better himself.

On the shores of the Sea of Nectar (17) are the volcanoes Pic (18) and Piton (19), the rival of Newton, and (18) for Kant, the metaphysician. To the northeast are the mountains to Hipparchus (20), the father of astronomy, who first numbered the stars, and Ptolemy (21), whose book on the heavens was the great authority for fifteen hundred years. A crater (22), insignificant in size, commemorates Herschel, but, considering the great achievements of father and son, a double one should have been selected for them.

On the brink of the Sea of Vapors (23) are Julius Cæsar (24) and Sosigenes (25), who reformed the calendar just previous to the birth of Christ. Cæsar, who was a good astronomer, found that autumn fell where winter used to, and where harvest spring. He brought Sosigenes from Athens to Rome, to assist him in rectifying this confusion. They gave fourteen months to the next succeeding year, and invented leap year, to avoid the difficulty in the future. On the opposite shore of that sea is Marco Polo (26), the Venetian traveler, whose statement that he saw black stones (that is, coal) used for fuel in China was so disbelieved in Europe in the thirteenth century. North of Cæsar is the Apennines (26), and on their eastern verge (27) Eratosthenes, called the universe-measurer.. Still farther to the east is (28) Copernicus, who is justly placed, for he is the restorer of the ancient doctrine that the earth revolves around the sun, for which he was put in jail at Rome, and forced to recant on pain of death. Kepler (29) too, still farther to the east, deserves his conspicuous place, for he discovered the three great astronomical laws.

From the top of Kepler, and on the far edge of the moon, is (30) Grimaldi, who, when a child, had added to light may produce darkness. Aristarchus (31), to the north, occupies the brightest spot on the moon. He is properly placed by above Copernicus, for he originated the doctrine that the latter developed. The Apennine range, where it turns to the northwest, separates Plato, on the western side of which are Eudoxus (32) and Aristotle (33). Few men have exerted a greater intellectual influence than this latter, who, by his writings, put harmony in scientific pursuits, kept a druggist's shop in Athens. Subsequently, however, Alexander the Great gave him a million of money, and the services of several thousand men to make experiments and write a history of animals. In the midst of the Sea of Showers (34), and close to the foot of the centaphs of Timocharis (34), who first determined the motions of the planet Venus, of Cassini (35), the first Director of the Paris Observatory, discovery of Autolycus (36) and Aristillus (37), old Greek astronomers, and (38) the celebrated Archimedes, the great geometer and mechanician of Syracuse. In the present age of big ships his doings are of the highest interest. Polybius, one of his contemporaries, relates how "Hiero, king of the Syracusans, was very earnest in ship-building, having built many vessels to carry corn, the largest number of one of which is described. For the wood he caused to be cut down such a number of trees as would have been sufficient for six ordinary galleys. This ship was half finished in six months, and plated with lead heh on by brass nails, three hundred master workmen besides very many carpenters having been employed. Archimedes, the famous mathematician, was the engineer-in-chief, having undertaken the superintendence when the other was already engaged in the launch. He inverted the screw, and so drew her into the water. It took six months more to complete the outside. The ship was propelled by rowers and sails, and had 20 banks of oars. The length was more than 420 feet, and the height out of the water more than 60 feet. Inside there were the most luxurious fittings—gardens and fishponds, temples with beautiful mosaic floors, tents, and stables for 20 horses. On the deck were 8 turrets, and an engine that threw bolts 18 feet long a distance of 200 yards. Another engine threw a bolt low, and served to convey darts and stones to the men and engines at the mast-heads and on the prows. The poop was provided with more than one rom. When the ship was done Hiero found that no harbor in Sicily could contain it safely, and therefore . . . it as a present to Ptolemy of Egypt."

We may boast in this age of progress of the things we are doing, but find that more than 2000 years ago there was an Ericsson alive who also could build formidable turreted metal-clad ships, and could launch them when they stuck fast.

On the northern shore of the Sea of Showers (D) is Plate (39). Every one knows how greatly his works were prized by Charles I; every one does not know that when put up at auction and sold for a slave he only brought 420 dollars. Not far from Plato rests poor Captain Scoresby (40), whom many of us have seen in the flesh—a good whale-fisherman, a writer on magnetism, and Arctic navigator. He appropriately reposes near the north pole of the moon.

We might extend our journey back again toward Tycho, and examine hundreds more of these volcanic vents; but as we have already come 3000 miles the reader must be fatigued, and will be ready to rest when he remembers that Beer and Mädler, who were the undertakers of this funereal work, spent twenty years in accomplishing it.

GENERALS KILPATRICK AND BUFORD.

We give on page 181 a Portrait of BRIGADIER-GENERAL JUDSON KILPATRICK, whose late raid in the rear of Lee's army is the most successful of the war. He was born near Deckertown, Sussex County, New Jersey, on January 14, 1836, and is therefore only 28 years of age. He was admitted to West Point, where he graduated in 1861, and entered the United States army as Second Lieutenant of Artillery on May 6, just after the war broke out. A week after he received a First Lieutenancy. He entered the war as Captain of a company in Duryea's regiment (Fifth New York), and was soon promoted in the battle of Big Bethel, June 10, 1861. As soon as he recovered he was made Lieutenant-Colonel, and afterward Colonel, of the Harris Light Cavalry. In Pope's Virginia campaign his regiment formed part of the late General Buford's brigade. He took part in the Maryland campaign under McClellan, Fredericksburg, and in Burnside's campaign he particularly distinguished himself at Falmouth. He participated in Stoneman's raid, commanded a brigade, and increasing 200 miles in less than five days, capturing over 400 prisoners. For this success he was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers, his commission dating from June 13, 1863. At Aldie, Middleburg, and Hanover, Kilpatrick distinguished himself in the movements preceding the battle of Gettysburg; he also commanded a division in that battle, and was engaged in the pursuit of the rebels to the Potomac. Afterward he came to New York city, where he commanded the cavalry forces during the riots of last summer. General Kilpatrick has thus early lost both his wife and child, and is also without father, mother, brother, or sister.

We give on page 181 a Portrait of BRIGADIER-GENERAL GEORGE A. CUSTER, who was born in Ohio, and was graduated at West Point, 1861, with the grade of a Second Lieutenancy of Cavalry. He was attached to the Army of the Potomac, and distinguished himself at Williamsburg in the Peninsular Campaign, for which success he was made a First Lieutenant. On June 29, 1863, he was appointed a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He participated in the Cavalry fights upon the Rapidan last fall, and was at one time wounded in the leg, though not seriously. He was promoted about a month since. In the late expedition, a full account of which will be found in another column, he commanded the cavalry division lately under the command of General Buford.

THE REBELLION IN 1861 AND IN 1864.

We give on page 181 a dissolving view of the Rebellion, representing the proportions to which it has been diminished since October 1, 1861. The light tint on the map shows the territory which since that time has been occupied by our forces, amounting to at least one half of the original Confederacy. And the half which has been left has as the rebels themselves now entirely cut loose from separate sections by our possession of the Mississippi and our victories in East Tennessee.

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

THIS town, which is now the head-quarters of General Logan's division, of which we give a view on page 188, is the only one in the South that I have visited, says our correspondent, that in itself suggests intelligence and refinement, and refinement. The streets are regularly laid out, and well shaded by fine trees. The houses, too, have architectural design—a meaning that few homes of "ye" The Parlor" can boast—and have about them gardens well laid out, and very neatly kept. The inhabitants are disposed to be "civil," but are by no means in consequence of an avowal in its favor, in event of the reoccupation of the town by the rebel troops. I shall there see how the citizens were treated staunch Union men, who do not hesitate to say their thought. I have seen but one female endeavor to show her devotion to the "wretched Yank." This one, after much effort, got up such a visage that I produced sketch-book and pencil to reproduce the novelty; but she would not stay on pose, and for consequence has not the distinguished honor of an appearance in these pages. The Court-house there is each evening the scene of a dress-parade of the Thirteenth Regulars—General Sherman's bodyguard, and a splendid regiment—Vicksburg material too. The command of General John E. Smith is in and near the town, in camps that age said to be the very poorest that have ever been seen.

THE TWENTIETH REGIMENT.

We give on page 189 a sketch representing the TWENTIETH REGIMENT, UNITED STATES (COLORED) TROOPS, receiving their colors, in front of the Union League Club-House, Union Square. The regiment, composed of a thousand stalwart men under the command of Colonel Bartram, left its camp on Riker's Island at 9 A.M. on Saturday, March 5, and were conveyed by the steamer John Potter to the foot of Twenty-sixth Street, East River, when they disembarked and formed in regimental line. The very streets through which they passed were those which, during the riots of last July, had witnessed a far different scene. The hunted then were the fêted now; the crouching supplicants for life then were now the upright and triumphant defenders of the Government that momentarily found itself unable to defend them against their persecutors. Over a hundred thousand spectators were assembled on Union Square to witness this noble act of revenge. We quote the following from Colonel Bartram's speech made on that occasion:

It has been the habit of those among us who sympathize with the traitors now in arms against us to say that what they are pleased to term the cowardice of the negro. I hope that Port Hudson, Fort Wagner, and Olustee have forever settled this question. In this regard I must be permitted to say that I have had the honor of the Eighth United States colored troops, in the last-mentioned action. The object of my visit to-day is, that for some time to-day months I was on duty with this regiment, as its Lieutenant-Colonel, and during that period I had ample opportunity to become thoroughly acquainted with its officers and the material composing its rank and file. So prominent ever went to the field better officered than the Eighth, and no regiment ever commanded a higher or more heroic set of men. How well they fought is shown by their list of casualties; and, although a subordinate officer in a battery thought it a misfortune to be supported by a colored regiment, yet when we bear in mind that two war-ten regiments had already found the position too hot and had left the field, it was an effort to which few officers would say that the misfortune, if misfortune there was, was not in having a colored regiment for a support, but in having an officer in the service of the United States so biased, so prejudiced, so cowardly, as to slander the brave men who fell around his guns.

LOGAN CROSSING LOOKOUT CREEK.

On page 189 we give a sketch of GENERAL LOGAN'S THIRD DIVISION ACROSS LOOKOUT CREEK en route FOR EAST TENNESSEE,—this movement having connection with the late operations of Grant's army. The sketch was drawn by Lieutenant Colonel General Matthias. The view given in the sketch of Lookout Mountain is said to be the very best.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

MIND YOUR LIGHTS.—An "incorrigible young thief" is more likely to attain "age before honesty!"

A paper called Le Gratin has appeared in Paris. It costs forty francs a year. Every thing's dear in France, it seems. You can't get even gratis for nothing.

An Irish gentleman visiting some friends, was received with so much hospitality, and drank so very hard, that he departed in a shorter time than was expected; and when asked the reason, very gravely said, "that he liked them so very much, and had so much pleasure in their company, he was sure, if he had lived there a month longer, he must have died in a fortnight."

M. About, in a recent publication, says of an eminent man, that "it had been proved that after having kindled his fire, he stuck a cork in the end of the bellows to save the little wind that was left in them."

Mr. Jones called upon the gentleman who advertises to restore sal-paitinge, and requested him to restore a valuable bulldog which was missing. He said he would do his best.

The following contains the alphabet: "John P. Brady gave me a black walnut-box of quite a small size."

A REFLECTION BY A SCHOOL-BOY.—The man who plants a birch-rod for a school-house little knows what he is conferring on posterity.

A gentleman who was determined to outdo the bottle-conjurer who raised chickens from egg-plants has succeeded in producing a calf from a horse-chestnut and a calf from a cow-yard.

The death of a miser was lately announced thus: "On Tuesday last, John Smith, aged 80, died of starvation at the age of ninety-eight. He retained his money to the last."

A Dutchman being advised to rub his limbs well with brandy for the rheumatism, said he had tried one of the remedy, but added, "I dunk butter as dat—I drinks de brandy, and dat vill make mine leg rub itself."

"Why don't you fire at those partridges?" exclaimed a gentleman to a Cockney sportsman; "don't you see you have the wind right before you?" "I know I have," said Tomkins; "but when I have a good aim at one, two of those others will fly up right between me and the one I aim at."

A poet has commenced a new epic, which begins well. It opens with the following line: "Of the Muses, bursting forth with these words, "Ye femi-nines!"

"Boy!" called out Brown to the waiter at Sam's. "I don't call no boy," was the reply, "I'm a waiter." "Well, waiter, you'd be done by," put in Brown, "and don't call this muster lamb any more."

A man noted for his calmness and a scolding wife was one day dropping in his wash words by a pretended ghost. "I can't stop, my friend," said he. "If you are a man, I will conquer you in the next world, and you in this one. If you are the devil, come along and take support for I married your sister."

The question has been asked, why it is considered impolite for gentlemen to go in the presence of ladies in their shirt-sleeves? The reason is in every case that ladies themselves to appear before gentlemen without any sleeves at all.

Where should a captain of a packet-ship keep his poultry?—In the hatchway.

When do 9 and 2 not make 4?—When they are 22.

NEW DANISH OATH.—"Dash my Schlee-wig!"

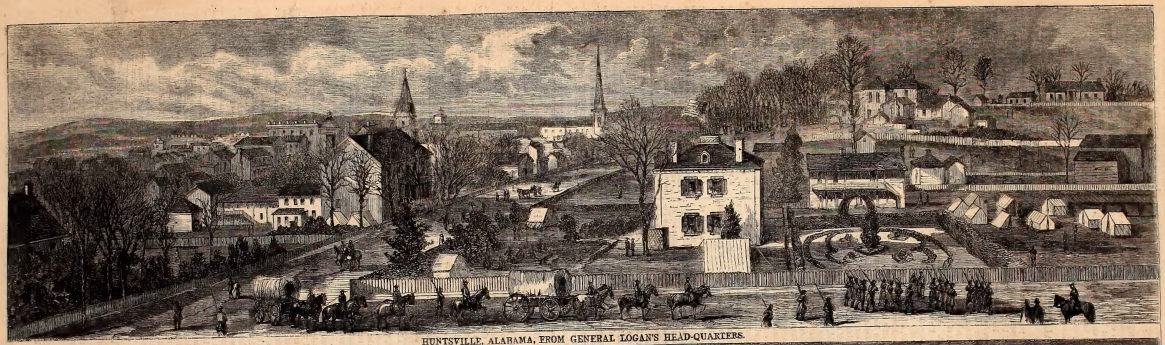
Why is blindman's-buff like sympathy?—Because it is feeling for others.

Some men not only forget their own names when they are drunk, but forget themselves when they are sober.

An Irishman, while fishing in a stream, was suddenly caught in a heavy shower of rain, which drove the boatsmen under a bridge near by. On being asked if he expected to get wet, he replied, "Arrah, then, by the powers, won't they be after comin' in here for the shelter?"

At a christening, while a minister was making the certificate, he forgot the date, and happened to say, "Let me see, this is the thirtieth?" "The thirtieth!" exclaimed the indignant mother; "indeed, but it's only the eleventh."

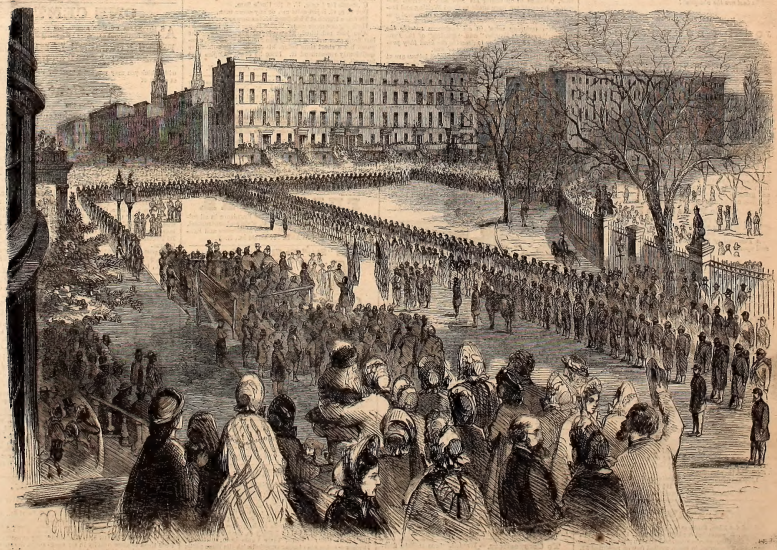
Mrs. Partington, when fire was about to proceed to the Black Sea, among other burning sublimities, gave him strict injunctions not to bathe in it, for she did not want to see him come back a bigger.



HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA, FROM GENERAL LOGAN'S HEAD-QUARTERS.

DRAGGING ARTILLERY THROUGH THE MUD.—[Sketched by A. R. Waud.]

A PORTION OF LOGAN'S COMMAND CROSSING LOOKOUT CREEK FOR EAST TENNESSEE.—SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 187.]



THE TWENTIETH UNITED STATES COLORED TROOPS RECEIVING THEIR COLORS ON UNION SQUARE, MARCH 5, 1864.—[SEE PAGE 187.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same price before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword." In next column.

BURNETT'S

Standard Flavoring Extracts

For Cooking Purposes.

THE SUPERIORITY OF THESE EXTRACTS CONSISTS IN THEIR

Perfect Purity and Great Strength.

We select the following testimonials:

POPULAR HOTELS.

"Pre-eminently superior to all others for culinary use."
PARKER HOUSE, Boston.

"Superior to any we have ever used."
REVERE HOUSE, Boston.

"Have used your Extracts for several years, and regard them the best in the world."
FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, New York.

"Our test has proved them very excellent."
ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL, New York.

"Have been found really superior for strength and excellence use in our Establishment for years."
CONTINENTAL HOTEL, Phila., Pa.

"Possess all the rare qualities claimed for them."
ITTNAW HOUSE, Baltimore, Md.

"Far superior to any in the market."
WILLARD'S HOTEL, Washington, D. C.

Comment is unnecessary. Our standard quality will remain unimpaired.

These Extracts are for sale in every city and town in the United States and Canadas.

The best are the cheapest!

MANUFACTURERS AND PROPRIETORS,

JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.,

BOSTON.

LATEST INVENTION IN GOLD PENS. JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with an Iridium or Diamond Point, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest price pen made, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an elastic and diamond pointed pen at a low figure, and, until now, all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising low-priced pens and calling them gold. We know that ours is the only solid gold and genuine diamond pointed and elastic pen in the market that can be sold anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices by the Dozen.

No. 1. MEDIUM FINE,	$2 50.
No. 2. MEDIUM ENGROSSING,	$3 75.
No. 3. LARGE ENGROSSING,	$4 50.

A Discount of 10 per cent. made on all orders of $50 and upward.

Sample Pens.

No. 1. MEDIUM PEN,	40 cents.
No. 2. MEDIUM ENGROSSING,	50 cents.
No. 3. LARGE ENGROSSING,	65 cents.

Warranted.

We warrant every pen for one year, and to be solid gold, genuine Iridium or Diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity of the most expensive gold pen made.

We send them post to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price. Money properly registered and sealed comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 182 Broadway, New York.

New Cavalry Badge, in Solid Silver, $1 50.
New Artillery and Battery Pin, in fine Gold Plate, $1 00.
New Battle Pin, with the likeness of either General, in fine Gold Plate, $1.
New Naval Pin, fine Gold Plate, $1 50.
New Pontoonier's Pin, do., $1 50.
New Engineer's Pin, do., $1 50.

Also a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Div., or Co. Pins, with your Name, Reg., and Co. handsomely engraved thereon, for $1.

Liberal commission and premium allowed to agents.

H. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 207 Broadway, N. Y.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack; 52 enamelled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 405 William Street, N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PENS—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen. These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in sizes to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 Pens, below.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridium Points. Any one may send a copy of one of which will for either a gross of the best Steel Pens; although five are warranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The names "Warranted," "Warranted, and Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except ruptured accidents.

The Numbers indicate size only: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, and the usual size for pocket. No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 to No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 75, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 7 Pen, 3d quality.

For $5 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 7 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 3d quality.

For $7 50, a No. 7 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 9 Pen, 3d quality.

For $10 00, a No. 8 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 9 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 10 Pen, 3d quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 7 Pen, 3d quality.

For $4 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 7 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 3d quality.

For $5 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED PENCIL HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $3 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $3 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $4 50 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridium Points, carefully selected, and the "Warranted" pens are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1861.

"The 3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true consideration) any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he begs leave to say that, previous to opening his New and Patented Machines, no pens had ever been made at such prices, for reliable Pens, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" of the Pen or Pens they may want, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer—whether stiff or limber, coarse or fine.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send remittances (the sum not registering), in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guarantee their safe delivery.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $5, of 15 per cent. on sums of $10, and 20 per cent. on $40, if sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Malden Lane, New York.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using the Gold Paper Linen Cartridge.

This arm is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. The great advantage of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others.

We also offer to the public our new Pistol & Revolving Cartridge and Ammunition, unsurpassed whatever. This arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon.

Send for descriptive particulars and prices circular.

P. S. Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or paper linen cartridge.

MILLWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
No. 348 Broadway, New York.

CARPET WARP.
WOOL TWINE.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Malden Lane, New York.

THE AMERICAN HOME.

MRS. P. DANA will start at the beginning of July with a limited number of pupils, to establish a Model American young ladies in Cartaville, Georgia.

For particulars, see circulars, Hurlbut, Phelps, Rev. E. M. Van Deusen, Rector of St. Peter's Church, Rev. T. Ferebee, President of the Female College, Mrs. W. Carter, Mrs. Judge Underwood, Mrs. Dr. Gardner, Mrs. Dr. Gamble, No. 141 East 14th Street, William Hahn, Esq., 48 Exchange Place, Troy, N. Y.; Mrs. Addison Worthington; Mrs. Macleod, Mr. Carlisle, Counsellor at Law.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to Mr. MARSH, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

Brandreth's Pills.

THEIR MEDICAL QUALITIES.—In small and repeated doses, the effect of Brandreth's Vegetable Universal Pills is to increase the activity of the secreting and excreting organs. The alvine discharges become more liquid, and contain a larger proportion of bile. The operation of this extraordinary medicine does not stop here; the membranes of the lungs, of the eyes, and all the membranes become moister; the urine is increased in quantity, except in cases of Diabetes, when the secretion is reduced; the skin becomes damper and at the same time warmer where too cool, and cooler if too warm. So that Brandreth's Pills seem to vitalize and promote the exercises generally. Even accumulations of fluids in the solid tissues—as in dropsy, the peritoneum, arachnoid, and synovial membranes—diminish in quantity, and in some cases rapidly disappear, from the use of these Pills. They operate with extraordinary effect on glandular swellings, enlargements and indurations. Phlegmonous and other tumors are apparently melted away by their use, as well as small or large irregular tumors, such as scirrhous, &c., &c. In large doses, say of from five to ten Pills, they act as a powerful purgative, clearing the bowels first of their contents, and then cleansing from the internal organs, cleansing them of slime, mucus, or any secretions not required for their healthy action. Thus the action of Brandreth's Pills is what is required to remove that state in all the organs, which results in their full restoration to health. The blood-vessels, as well as the blood, are thus restored to perfect purity and vigor.

"Our Paper." for March, contains the celebrated recipe for Worcester Sauce, without apples, and the cure for the love of strong drinks, together with other useful and valuable information. Sent post-paid, on receipt of a red stamp, by RICHARD PARKER & CO.,
COR. ANN and NASSAU STS., N. Y.

Best Thing Out!

The "Patent Pocket Army Pipe," just out, is decidedly the most unique novelty artists for soldiers in the market. It is of fine aparatus, SELF-CLEANING, will turn out all the tobacco, CAN BE CARRIED IN THE VERY POCKET, is not easily stopped up, so it can be taken into FOUR PARTS immediately. The fire can not be seen, neither can it drop out. By a very ingenious arrangement the vessel is sealed and cannot before entering the mouth, making it the cleanest, most economical, and delightful smoking pipe in the market. Sent to any part of the country for $2 75. We also manufacture the famous Magic Tobacco Pouch, Tobacco Cleaner, Cigar Case, Garment, Prize Packages, Match safes, &c., and we will send 2 different articles of the above kind, worth $4 each, free, on receipt of $4 00. Circulars sent free per mail. Address for ORIGINALITY & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau St., Box 5181, New York.

P. S. Money sent in registered letters is at our risk.

U. S. G.

The immensely popular song of the times, sung by Bryant's Minstrels, Words and Music composed by Dan Emmett, author of "DIXIE." Price 30 cts.

U. stands for Uncle, U. S. for Uncle Sam,
But U. S. G. for Ulysses, or any other man.
He dug a trench at Vicksburg, and as sure as you're alive,
He'll dig us one more Pitt'sburg Rifle House dog, in Dixie.

Also, for the publisher, Beautiful Dreams. The greatest Song ever written by the late Stephen C. Foster, composed but a short time before his death. The publisher confidently recommends it. Price 30 cents. Copies sent by mail, postpaid.

WM. A. POND & CO., No. 547 Broadway, N. Y.

EXTERNAL CANCERS of all kinds treated successfully without cutting or using caustic. No charge made until the treatment has been tried and found satisfactory. Inclose stamp for reference. Address in this city DR. MARX, 170 Bleecker St., N. Y. Office hours 10 to 12 A.M.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. THEY ARE PURELY GALVANIC. Sold by Dr. HOYT, Cold Fury, &c. METTAM & CO., No. 429 Broadway, N. Y. Send for Circular. Agents wanted. Articles, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 30 cents additional.

Enameled Chamber FURNITURE.

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, walnut and chestnut, plain and ornamental, in suite, wardrobes, bureaus, tables, washstands, and Parlor Ingrain. WARREN WARD, 277 Canal St., N. Y.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil, Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light free from smoke or smell, and no chimney. We are now ready to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which everywhere gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 25 cts. Address

TURNER, 9 Platt Street, New York.

P. ESSIG & CO., MANUFACTURERS.

False Whiskers and Moustaches, $2 50 a pair; Whiskers, $2 a pair; Moustaches, 50 cents and $1 a pair. Sent free by mail. ADOLPHE WILHELM, Wig Maker, 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

Soldiers and Everybody! A great Book for you! Over 2000 things worth knowing! Mailed free for 25 cents. Address "Union Book Association," Box 362, Syracuse, N. Y.

Agents, order our UNEQUALED STATIONERY PACKAGES.

Madame Benedict's MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING Establishment is now REPLETE with every IMPORTED NOVELTY of the season.

No. 9 Waverly Place, N. Y.

The Newest Thing Out.

WANTED CANVASSERS, NEWS AGENTS, SUTLERS, and DEALERS generally, everywhere, to sell STEREOPHIC COLORED ALBUM CARDS, splendidly lithographed in Oil Colors from original designs; three sorts, twelve cards each. PART ONE: OUR RELATIONS at HOME and ABROAD. PART TWO: THE ADVENTURES of a CONSCRIPT (both realistic pictures). PART THREE: THE SLAVE in 1863 (a thrilling Series of the Great Evil). Price, FIFTY Cents each, post-paid. Dealers sending One Dollar supplied with the three pictures, as samples, postpaid. Address, WM. A. STEPHENS, Publisher,
No. 400 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

MANTILLAS.

BRODIE'S SPRING OPENING

Took place on

Tuesday, 8th March.

BRODIE,

The Leader of Fashions,

Will make an early Spring Opening of

Ladies' Garments.

For novelty of style, for richness of material, and for endless variety of colors, coupled with moderate prices, the ladies of America never had such inducements to call on the

"Leader of Fashions."

No. 300 Canal Street,

Near Broadway.

THE "RIDGEWOOD PATENT

SMOKING CASE.

Major-General Burnside

Writes, Jan. 20th, 1864, after thanks for what he is pleased to call our "useful and beautiful present" of a "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case." "It is the most complete thing for a Smoking Apparatus that I have ever seen, and so entirely within the reach of Soldier in price, that it will certainly work itself into general use." Compact and portable as a Cigar Case, it is offered in various styles at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, $3 00, $3 75 and $5 00, the two latter richly plated and engraved. Single Cases sent by mail, free to the Army, and everywhere, on receipt of price and 25 cents. A liberal Discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Also the

Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

of superior quality, for sale by the Package or by Pailroque to fill the Case, and in various sizes for the General Trade. All orders promptly filled.

OFFICE RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
429 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, New York.

ONE CENT.

A the warm weather approaches prepare to reduce your household expenses by grinding

FISH'S KEROSENE LAMP COOKING APPARATUS,

with which you may prepare a meal for FIVE PERSONS at a cost of

One Cent.

Price, from $3 to $6. Also, the

"Union Attachment,"

to be used on a common lamp to heat water, cook food, or support a dish. Price 50 cents. No family can afford to be without one of these articles. For sale at the Lamp Depot, 277 Canal St., and will be supplied by WM. A. STEPHENS, Agent, 266 Pearl St., New York. Send for Circulars.

Complete Musical Library for $10.

Comprising nearly

One Thousand Pieces of Piano Music.

"HOME CIRCLE," a large collection of Piano Music, Marches, Waltzes, Polkas, Quadrilles, &c., 2 vols. "SHOWER OF PEARLS." Choice Vocal Duets with Piano Accompaniment. "SILVER CHORD," a collection of Songs, Ballads, Duets, Quartettes, &c. Piano Accomp. "SPECIAL PEARLS," comprising the Vocal Beauties of the Best Operas. Piano alone. Piano Instruction Book, Violin Instruction Book, Flute Instruction Book, post-paid, for $10, or each at the following prices: Home Circle, $3; Pearls, $3; Silver Chord, $3; Special Pearls, $3; Full gilt, $8. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

$100 a Month made by discharged Soldiers, and others, with Stencil Tools. Samples free. Send for Price Catalogue, containing full particulars. Address
MILLIKEN & SPENCER, Vermont Block, Concord Office, Brandon, Vermont.

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS. Number One, for April 2, 1864, now ready, containing the most graphic Illustrations of IMPORTANT EVENTS, MILITARY MOVEMENTS, STARTLING NOVELTIES, HUMOROUS, DOMESTIC, and LOCAL INCIDENTS; the LATEST STYLES of FASHION; the LATEST LITERATURE, ART, and SCIENCE, and the LATEST NEWS, presenting the most interesting and complete collection of LIVE SKETCHES of the National and Family Newspaper in its most comprehensive shape. Price 10 cents.

Subscribers can have the splendid weekly. Sold everywhere. Specimen copies mailed free on receipt of price. 20 Beekman Street, New York.

"The Human Face Divine."

A new system of Physiognomy. Eyes, Ears, Nose, Lips, Mouth, Head, Hair, Heads, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all "Signs of Character, and How to Read Them," in Two Professional Manuals and Life Illustrated for 1864. New vol. $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, New York.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38x51. Price $2500.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N. Y.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Ointment will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without the least injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 100 Nassau Street, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 60 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 30 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches!.. 15 00 each.
3000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " " " ..... 3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Jet, and Etn. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Etn., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2150 Gent's Breast Pins..... 2 50 to 8 00 each.
2000 Watch Keys..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Fob and Vest Slides..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Bosom Studs..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
6000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mounted Holders 4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops can be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

All interested in Shorthand should send for the PHONOGRAPHIC JOURNAL for March 5th, containing a second Chapter of Phonographic Books. No. 2 explains the Phonographic Alphabet. No. 3 explains the Outline, explaining all the more general principles of the Art. Single No. 7 cents. Nos. 1, 2, and 3, 17 cents.
Address A. J. GRAHAM, No. 491 Broadway, N. Y.

Military and Naval
COLLECTORS will HAVING OFFICE.—SOUR, BROWN & CO., No. 2 Park Place, New York, appoint and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

POLLAK & SON.
MERSCHAUM MANUFACTURERS, 287 BROOME ST., NEAR BOWERY, N. Y., will wholesale and retail. Will send, free of charge, a genuine Pipe for 5 Dollars. Pipes cut to order and repaired.

NEW ARMY WATCHES.

THE GREAT NEW ARMY WATCH, expressly for SOLDIERS, in heavy silver hunting cases, fine ENGLISH Movement, full jeweled, silver cap, handsome white dial and steel cut hands. Engine turned, engraved, or plain cases, warranted a perfect time-keeper for one year, $15.
$15 $15

THE GREAT ENGLISH ARMY WATCH, in beautiful Oxide Hunting Cases, fine English jeweled movements. Warranted a perfect timekeeper for one year. These watches are a perfect imitation of gold, and will keep their color as they are the genuine Oxide.
$15 $15

FINE DOUBLE BOTTOM silver ENGLISH HUNTING WATCH, FULL JEWELED, warranted a first-class watch, $25.
$25 $25

OFFICER'S WATCH. GENUINE AMERICAN LEVER WATCH, in fine coin silver cases, FULL JEWELED, gold joints, and double bottom cases, $35
$35 $35

Silver Hunting Watch, Key movement, $11.
$11 $11

Ladies very small hunting Gold Composite Watch, beautifully engraved, magic spring, quick movement. Can scarcely be detected from gold, $16.
$16 $16

GOLD HUNTING ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, HUNT AWARDED, Seven Balances. M. J. TOBIAS, warranted, $38.
$38 $38

Constantly on hand Watches in every description.

We will send any of the above Watches, on receipt of price, free of expense, to any address. Parties ordering will come at our risk if properly sealed. All Watches registered 50 cts. extra. GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO AGENTS. SEND FOR OUR CIRCULAR.

GEORGE A. ILY & CO., IMPORTERS, 181 BROADWAY, late 208 BROADWAY, N. New York.

BAKER'S RHEUMATIC BALM,
BAKER'S FEVER COOLER,
BAKER'S CHOLERA MIXTURE,
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR,
are four remedies which no family should ever be without. Price $1 per bottle each.

Also,
BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $2 per bottle.

PRINCIPAL DEPOT: No. 154 Tenth Street, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists.
Remedies sent to any address upon receipt of price.

We are now offering our Gold Pens and Extension Silver Plated Holders at the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1 Nogle Gold Pens and Holders, per dozen, $5 50
No. 2 " " " " " 7 00
No. 1 Albertine fine Gold Pens and Holders, per doz. 8 00
No. 3 " " " " " 9 00
No. 1 Always Ready " " " 11 50
No. 2 " " " " " 13 00

These Pens and Holders are all warrafted, and will retail from $2 to $5 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $20 and upwards. Each Holder contains a nice fancy Case, containing one dozen each, and are not sold in less quantities. Sent by mail or express, pre-paid.
Address SALISBURY BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.
We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Flies for the Regiments and Corps in the field, at $1 50 each. Also all kinds of Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one, 100, or 1000.
Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a circular.
DOREMUS & MOORE, Manufacturers of Jewelry, 208 Broadway, New York.

Two Dollars made from twenty etc. Call and examine, or ten samples sent free by mail for 50c. Retails for $5; by R. L. WOLCOTT, 178 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Cavalry Badges.
Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest style Cavalry Badge. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, viz: $1 00 each. Regiment handsomely engraved.
Solid Silver,..... $3 00
Silver Gilt,..... 2 50
In gold relief,..... 2 50
Solid gold,..... 5 00
Solid gold enamelled,.. 9 00
Any other style Artillery Badge, and every style Colonel and Staff Badge worn by the Army. Send for our illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW
is a little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of
MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.
Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Tape Worm, Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Affections of the Urinary Organs, Barrenness, Impotence, Self Abuse, Consumption, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Regulate the Sight and Hearing, Diseases of the Nervous System, Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Flagellation, Hints to Mothers, Management of Children, and a thousand things of value to married and single never written before, making, altogether, a most valuable book for every people, and a good book for every one. 400 pages; 100 illustrations. Contents table sent free to any one. All applications for this book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., No. 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

CHURCH VIEWS.—Card Photographs of 160 Principal Churches of New York and Brooklyn; also 75 Split-Solid Views of Central Park. Price 25c. each, 5 for $1, or $5 per doz. Views. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price. Send stamps for catalogues. W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, N. Y.

Now Catalogue of Jewelry
Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products,—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we have published the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The first has the name
"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The second has the name
"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The mum has the name
"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The fourth has the name
"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and painted on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually imperfect in time, and many so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH CO.," others as by the "AMERICAN WATCH COMPANY." Others are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our FOURTH or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as the "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others as the "AMERICAN WATCH CO." others the "P. S. BARTLETT," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company.
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy
Complete Printing Offices, Druggists, and all who have to print quickly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circulars, Price-Lists, Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., &c., sent by Adams Press Co., No. 58 Ann St., N. Y., and 93 Lincoln St., Boston.

TO SOLDIERS.
A new Rings, made entirely of 1 ine Gold, with the Name, Co. and Regt. of any deceased upon the outside, for $6; in Solid Silver, at $2 50. Sent by mail on receipt of price. R. SMITH, 505 Broadway, N. Y. Dealer in all kinds of Army Badges, Watches, Gold Pins, &c.

THE COLOR OF YOUR EYES. Language of Blue Eyes, Black Eyes, Brown Eyes, Hazle Eyes, Gray Eyes, Green Eyes, Children's Eyes, and the Eyes of Celebrated Persons.—Story of the Eyes.—

The bright Black Eye, the melting blue,
I can not choose between you;
But this is sure—at all the while,
Which catches you, the sweetest smile, and much more on the same subject, in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for March, now ready, only 15 cents, or $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway.

The Army Lantern.
The Convex Reflector Lantern,
PATENTED APRIL, 1863.

For burning Coal Oil or Kerosene without Chimney.
GIVES A PURE WHITE LIGHT without Chimney.
HAS NO GLASS TO BREAK, and is therefore economical.
FLAME IS REGULATED from the outside.
IS THE MOST PORTABLE AND CONVENIENT IN USE AND CONSTRUCTION.

Sample sent on receipt of $1.
ARCHER & ALDRIDGE, Manufacturers of Gas Fixtures, Coal Oil Lamps, Chandeliers, &c., 9, 11 and 13 Mercer Street, New York.
A liberal discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Circulars with particulars sent free.

Opera and Field-Glasses
Can see a man distance of 3 to 4 miles. Spectacles and Eyeglasses, for Ladies, Gents, and Children. Also Microscopes of every description, from $1 to $50. A. H. HORN, Optician, 219 Broadway, cor. Fulton St., up stairs.
Wholesale and Retail. Send for Circular.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every County in the United States, to whom I will pay the above salary, or a large commission, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
M. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The April Spring Number of the magnificent Fashion Magazine presents a splendid display of beautiful novelties for the Spring Fashions, and some unusual and extraordinary attractions, among which are the Mammoth Fashion Plate twice the usual size, and the most beautiful Initial Alphabet ever offered in a magazine in the world. The Spring Number also contains Six Full Size Patterns, an elegant Braid Design, and a thousand other information, &c., all for only 25 cts.; or yearly subscription, $1, with a premium of One Dollar's worth of Extra Patterns. Do not fail to subscribe immediately. The April number and Specimen of Fashions are forwarded upon receipt of $1 75. Arthur's and Peterson's Magazine and the Mirror of Fashions, $2 75. Harper's Lady's Book and the Mirror of Fashions, $2 75. Leo then the cost of Godey's Lady's Book, Demorest's Illustrated News and the Mirror of Fashions, $3. Splendid Premiums for Clubs. Address Mme. DEMOREST, No. 473 Broadway, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT
At your own homes. Thousands can realize a Hundred Dollars Weekly.—No utensils required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent by mail, with a sample package, for 25 cents.
Address C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Dieckter St., N. Y.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chaste and elegant style. July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. — The Illustrated News, Jan. 30.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved Patent lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. PRICE, expressly engraved, or case of 18ct. fine gold, $204. Sample watches in 24 morocco boxes, $35. If sent by mail, the postage is 16 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.
FOR ACCURACY OF MINUTE, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES ARE UNEQUALED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so fruitless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one fine gold, and the inner one of our own German Silver. It can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, as the whole is not only to appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they readily do, at $20 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a few days by any one of ordinary business tact.

AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, with jeweled movement, and warranted, in cool running order, by the half dozen, $72; postage, $2 38; registering, 20 cents extra. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

CASH TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

DR. B. C. PERRY,
DERMATOLOGIST,
49 Bond Street, New York,

Formerly of 29 Winter Street, Boston, treats successfully all Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair, and Premature Baldness. Also, removes Moth Freckles, and other Discolorations from the face, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultations free.

For particulars enclose stamp for Circular.

JUST WHAT EVERYBODY WANTS.
OUR NEW POCKET ALBUM.
(FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.)
Holding Sixteen Pictures. Is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.
Sent by Mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of twenty cents.
It can be filled with Pictures (16) and sent by mail to soldiers in the army, or friends anywhere in Uncle Sam's domain, at the very trifling cost of Twenty Cents postage. All orders promptly filled by
SAMUEL BOWLES & COMPANY,
Photograph Album Manufacturers,
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Celebrated Pamphlets, Colestial Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. Address JOHN F. ROSS, Biddeford, Maine.

HARPER & BROTHERS

Have Just Published:

LYMAN BECKER'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND CORRESPONDENCES. Autobiography, Correspondence of Lyman Becher, D.D. Edited by his Son, CHARLES BECHER. With Two Steel Portraits and Engravings on Wood. In two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth. (Vol. I. just ready. Price $1 75.)

THE WIFE'S EVIDENCE. A Novel. By W. G. WILLS. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

A POPULAR HAND-BOOK OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By GEORGE GRENVILLE MCWHORTER. 12mo, Cloth, $1 00.

VERY HARD CASH: a Matter-of-Fact Romance. By CHARLES READE, Author of "Love me Little, Love me Long," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $1 00; Paper, 75 cents.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year	$3 00
Two Copies for One Year	5 00
An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25 00.
Postage Prepaid by the Publishers.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI., and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863, of HARPER'S MONTHLY, handsomely bound in cloth, will be supplied for $2 50 each. Price $3 00 each. Are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months	$1 00
One Copy for One Year	4 00
One Copy for Two Years	7 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25. Postage Prepaid by the Publishers.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI., and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863, of HARPER'S WEEKLY, handsomely bound in cloth, will be supplied for $3 00 each. Price $3 00 each. Are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

A HINT FOR THE SANITARY FAIR.

VISITOR. "But don't you think you might have a little of your hair cut off without spoiling the general effect?"

GOLDEN-HAIRED LASS. "Oh no! I'm keeping it all for the Fair! I'll have Scissors, you know, and let the Cavaliers cut off little locks of it at the current prices for gold."

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our NEW NOVELTY STATIONERY PACKAGE. Only $15 capital required to obtain a WATCH, FREE, with first order. We also offer SECOND-SIZE INDUCEMENTS. $100 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered.

Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

HOW TO BE A GENTLEMAN.

Read that excellent new hand-book, indispensable for all who would really know

HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO BEHAVE,
HOW TO TALK, HOW TO DO BUSINESS.

One handsome 18mo vol. 600 pages, sent by first post for $2. Agents wanted. Address FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. JNO. W. WHEELER, of Cleveland, Ohio, and John C. Lefferts, of New York.

PUTNAM WRINGER CO.

GENTLEMEN: I know from practical experience that iron well galvanized will rust, zinc will not oxidize and rust in particle. I can safely say, after several years experience in the manufacture of tinning, for chain-pump and wire-drawers, in which I have tested the affinity of iron and zinc, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect weld of the two.

Nearly one year ago my family commenced using one of your Wringers. It now performs all of its functions as well as it did the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article with us. I have closely observed several other kinds of clothes-wringers, the rubber spring being different, trying to produce the same results as the Putnam Wringer, but in my judgment they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is no more perfect as possible, and I can cheerfully recommend it to be the best in use.

Respectfully yours, JOHN W. WHEELER.

Many more testimonies in the gubernatory business examine me to indorse, the above text must in all particulars.

JOHN C. LEFFERTS, No. 100 Beekman Street, New York, January, 1864.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in all towns.

No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. 4, $8.

Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 18 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.

S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

Andrews' Excelsior Yeast Powder.

Gives universal satisfaction. "It's the best." First class dealers throughout the country keep it. Established 14 years.

THOS. ANDREWS & CO.,
136 and 138 Cedar Street, New York.

DAWLEY'S CAMP AND FIRESIDE LIBRARY.—The bestselling books in the market. Nearly 100 per cent. allowed to the trade. Now ready, No. 3, Incidents of Camp Life; No. 2, Mercedes; or, the Outlaw's Child; No. 5, Nora the Quaker; or, the Children of the Lighthouse. Price 15 cts. F. E. DAWLEY, Publisher, 13 Park Row, N. Y.

A Beautiful Complexion free from Tan Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For sharing it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey, and other rahas he articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 199 and 201 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in this article. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Chalet." to C. H. WILLIAMS, 94 Hide Street, N.Y., and receive it by return mail.

To the Trade.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

Excelling everything in the line yet produced, in beauty of execution, and selection of subjects.

These Photographs are produced in the highest style of the Art, and the subjects—with the exception of some that are copyrighted—are all new, and the very choicest that can be produced, to which will be continually added new subjects, all choice. No poor stock will be sent in the manufacture of our Photographs and no subjects will be found among our Stock, that will not command a ready sale. Dealer, in ordering of us, can depend upon getting the most saleable Photographic Stock produced in the country. Send for Catalogue. Address E. W. HITCHCOCK, 14 Chambers Street, New York (Manufactory).

The Parlor Magician;

Or, One Hundred Tricks for the Drawing Room.

Containing an Extensive and Miscellaneous Collection of Conjuring and Legerdemain Feats by Wiz, Dice, Dominoes, Cards, Billiards, Rings, Fruit, Coin, Balls, Handkerchief, etc., all of which may be Performed in the Parlor or Drawing Room, without the aid of any apparatus; also embracing a choice variety of Curious Deceptions, which may be performed with the aid of simple apparatus; the whole illustrated and clearly explained with 91 engravings. Paper covers, price 25 cents; bound in boards, with cloth back, 37 cents. Published by DICK & FITZGERALD, No. 15 Ann Street, N.Y. Also for Sale by all Booksellers in this place. A copy of the above book sent by mail, to any address, free of postage, on receipt of the price.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For New Edition of descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address H. G. BATES & CO., 298 Broadway, N. Y.

Holloway's Ointment.—The base of Scrofula, the King's Evil of our ancestors, has so far like this decrepant and exhausting power, the having qualities unequaled in the cure of salt rheum, sore legs, sore breasts, and the still more malignant forms of the enemy of the nursery. It removes the cutting of the skin, and leaves no trace behind of former disfigurement. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 25 cents, 70 cents, and $1 90 per pot.

The Beard &c.

IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the germs do exist, the Restorative will be found a powerful and stimulating parent, the Tennessee Swamp Shrub Balsam has been found infallible, in exciting the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The Shrub Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent rebel, on receipt of return postage.

JOHN RAWLINS, 315 Broadway, N.Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 500 times. Mailed free everywhere for 30 Cents. Five of different powers for $1 00. Address C. E. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it, by using Irvin's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Stores.

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day made Easy.

By selling the GREAT "Original and only genuine" INDIAN PRIZE PACKAGES, each of which contains "more real articles" than any other half-dollar sales packages ever sold. Packages now on hand Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, &c. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price only 25c. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and county. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Huntingcase Watch, patent English movements, presented to each purchaser, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL RICHARDS PRIZE PACKAGES, each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. Set on copies of the swindling operations as practiced by other parties, see editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our great new Circular for 1864, containing "extra premium inducements, free."

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Original, Largest, and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cup, small size, enameled dial, cut hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, sent free by mail in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $5. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

OR, COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved or elegant turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine English Jewels or Nickel Movements," Independent Action, Self-Balance, and has in a NEAT METASTYLE COMPASS set in the movements, making it a "Correct Guide!" to the Settler or Traveler. Perfect timekeeper, "unrivaled as one goes." WILL STAND ACID, and is an Exact Imitation of $100 Watch.

Used by the British Army Officers,

Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

THE CELEBRATED ROYAL COURT WATCH, for Indies' Rich enamelled designs," ruby movements, only $18.

EXCELSIOR LEVER, Stem Winding, Stem Setting, Hunting Case, full jeweled movements, $13.

Genuine American Watch, in Gold Case, and in massive Sterling Silver Hunting Cases, only $20.

Real English Duplex Gold Watches. Fine article, from $45 to $100.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of European Watches. Catalogue of Prices sent free by mail.

"Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper:" "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the Turks. In many offices, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says: "Good appearance; and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."

Address CHAS. F. KOETTER & CO., Importers, 36 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 ct. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each pen. Send for a circular. Pens repaired at 50 cents.

T. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA Hair Restorative.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair and whiskers to their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading of one hair with another, and thus gives a life appearance instead of the dull dead black of dyes, so that the most critical observer will not detect its use. It does not require previous soaping and washing, and forms for its application, and does not stain the skin; but will apply or plied and easily wiped from the skin or any hair-dressing. It does not clog the pores of the hair even in when it has once fallen out; nothing will do that; whatever may be advertised to the contrary notwithstanding. It will prevent it falling out, make it soft and silky, and cleanse it and the scalp from all impurities and humors, and entirely overcome the bad effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, lead, &c.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM.

An appropriate accompaniment to the Hiawatha; cleanses and colors the hair at the same time, and changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black. Sold everywhere. JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N.Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready made or to measure, at $3, $3 50, and $4 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $2 50, $3, $3 50, and $4 00 each. Also, a large assortment of Staple shirts sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 65 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cts. each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 367 Broadway, N. Y.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box, a Depot No. 207 Centre St., New York, second floor. Sent free by mail for 65 cents.

Shults' Organist, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent post paid, for 50 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVER WATCHES.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All cases and Cases Warranted. Sold by the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches, 208 Broadway New York.

Get the Best.

☞ TEN FOR ONE DOLLAR. ☜

Card Photographs

(5000 Different Subjects)

OF ALL

Prominent and Noted Persons,

LIVING AND DEAD.

All the Major-Generals, the President and Cabinet,

AND ALL THE

Prominent Officers of the Army and Navy.

ACTORS, ACTRESSES, DANCERS, AND MISCELLANEOUS PICTURES, &c., &c.

☞ 10 for One Dollar, or 15 Cts. Single Picture. Sent free to any address. Enclose Stamp, and send for List of Cards and Card Albums.

To insure prompt and honorable dealing, SEND YOUR ORDERS TO

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,

439 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

N. B. A Classified Catalogue of over 16,000 different books in every department of literature sent to any address on receipt of 3 cents. Premium Certificates of new Watch and Jewelry Enterprise sent on receipt of 10 cents.

250 Rare Receipts.

Seventeen Electrotype Engravings.

TELLS WHAT TO DO, AND HOW TO DO IT.

The best Family Receipt-Book ever published.

Sent free by mail for 25 cents.

HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
442 Broadway, New York.

Perfectly Pure Articles.

"CREAM TARTAR," "BI-CR. SODA," "PARAGON SALERATUS," "ESSENCES YEAST POWDER," "SPICES, &c.

THOS. ANDREWS & CO.,
136 and 138 Cedar Street, New York.

Another Brilliant Contributor

TO

The New York Mercury.

Miss Harriet E. Prescott,

AUTHOR OF "AMBER GODS" AND OTHER POPULAR TALES, whose works of fiction have placed her among the first in

The Front Rank

OF

American Novelists,

has been engaged to write for the LEADING FAMILY PAPER OF THE COUNTRY, and her initial contribution, entitled

Miss Devonshire,

will appear in THE NEW YORK MERCURY of March 19th, now ready everywhere at the News Depots.

Miss Harriet E. Prescott is the daughter of the great American historian, WILLIAM H. PRESCOTT, whose fame is as wide as the circle of civilization, and whose memory is cherished by his countrymen with a feeling of veneration accorded no other author, with the exception, perhaps, of Washington Irving. The daughter, like the father, has the gift of genius, and her stories in the "Atlantic Monthly Magazine" have placed largely to prestige and popularity of that able periodical, and the chapters to every subject upon which she has employed her fascinating interest. To a mind richly stored with varied knowledge, she adds an imaginative that is fertile in its depths, though it never soars into the region of the impossible. Her style is graceful.

Miss Devonshire,

written expressly for THE NEW YORK MERCURY, is founded upon a striking and very peculiar incident of the war, portraying, with consummate skill and brilliancy, the role played by the little Boyds and other circles of the Confederacy, and verifying the old adage, that "Love rules the camp, the court, the grove."

THE NEW YORK MERCURY is the sharpest and most brilliant of all the literary weeklies, and expends more money for eminent talent than any other paper. Terms of subscription, cash in advance, $3 per annum. Single copies 6½ cents; eight copies $15; with an extra one free to subscriber. Address, HURLBUT, WILLIAMS & PETERSON, 348 and 350 Pearl Street, New York City.

WORCESTER, O., May 28, 1863.

GENTLEMEN: Please send me a dictionary to use Perry Davis' Pain Killer in my family for the last five years. I am pleased to acknowledge its edge its beneficial effects in every instance. Feeling confident that it was the medicine that saved my child's life, when attacked with Cramp Colic, it is a pleasure to me to recommend it as a good family medicine, and one which every family ought to have in their house. In cases of emergency, there can be nothing better; at least. I have always found it so, and I find it to be generally known and esteemed.

Yours respectfully,

J. H. P. MCKENNAN.

American Swiss and English Watches.

In superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army large or small promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.

T. B. BYRNES, 179 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. VIII.—No. 378.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1864. [$3.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

COLONEL ULRIC DAHLGREN

COLONEL ULRIC DAHLGREN, of whose death we give an illustration on page 196, was killed near Richmond, Virginia, during the recent raid of KILPATRICK. Colonel DAHLGREN, with a body of 100 men, having been sent on detached service, was entrapped and surrounded at night by the rebels, who posted their forces in ambush, and while attempting to cut his way out was shot at the head of his column by persons lying in wait. The Richmond Whig of the 6th inst. says that after DAHLGREN was fired upon a general volley was poured into the Federal ranks, causing a considerable panic, which was heightened by the intense darkness. His body was subsequently carried by the rebels into Richmond, and after having been exposed to public view for some hours, was buried in a common pine coffin in some place unknown to any but the rebel authorities. The rebels pretend to have found papers on Colonel DAHLGREN'S body, directing the massacre of DAVIS and all the officials in Richmond; but it is denied by Federal officers that any such orders were ever issued or suggested. His address to his officers and men, upon starting on his expedition, certainly did not disclose any such blood-thirsty purpose. He enjoined upon them to "keep well together, and obey orders strictly;" to allow "no thought of personal gain to lead them off." "We will have a desperate fight," he added, as if with the voice of prophecy, "but stand up to it when it does come, and all will be well."

Moreover, a correspondent of the Times, who accompanied Colonel DAHLGREN, says that his memorandа on the day he started, says positively that they "contained no such words as the rebels pretend to have found in them."

Colonel DAHLGREN had been engaged in the military service from the outset of the war, and, though only twenty-two years of age, had earned distinguished honors by his gallantry and courage on several fields. He was first assigned to duty in May, 1862, under Gen. FREMONT, but subsequently he was with Gen. SIGEL in West Virginia. Afterward he was placed on General HOOKER'S staff, and passed with that General through his Chancellorsville campaign, participating in all the cavalry engagements which then and afterward occurred. During the pursuit of LEE'S forces in the invasion of last summer DAHLGREN was in every successful action, and was finally wounded at Hagerstown, Maryland, and lost his leg by amputation. For his services in this campaign he was made a Colonel by the President. He had not fully recovered from his wound when the KILPATRICK expedition was projected. He asked and obtained leave to accompany it, being assigned to a separate command. His failure to accomplish the work apportioned to him is said to have been due to the treachery of a guide, who led him into danger and to death. His father, Admiral DAHLGREN, has attempted to obtain the body from Richmond, but has failed; but it matters not where such as he may be buried. A grateful people will enshrine his memory in their hearts, and keep green forever the brave boy's name!

It is mentioned as an illustration of Colonel DAHLGREN'S earnest patriotism, that when the war broke out he was traveling in the Southwest, where great inducements were offered him to enter the rebel service, but, fired with indignation, he at once made his way to Washington and applied for a place in the Army. His sublime daring on every field to which he was called after that time justified fully the sanction which the Government gave him in its first appointment to an honorable position. His temper and character as a soldier remarkably resembled that of the lamented WINTHROP, and his career affords another illustration, beautiful and significant, of that sturdy and courageous manhood which these troublous latter days are maturing as the future hope of the Republic.

GENERAL GRANT AS LIEUTENANT-GENERAL.

WE give on page 197 an illustration of the formal presentation of the commission of LIEUTENANT-GENERAL to Major-General GRANT, by President LINCOLN, on the 9th instant. The presentation ceremony took place in the Cabinet Chamber, in the presence of the entire Cabinet and a number of high military officers. The President, in presenting the commission, remarked, "With this high honor devolves upon you also a corresponding responsibility. As the country herein trusts you, so, under God, it will sustain you." General GRANT, in replying, said he felt the full weight of the responsibilities now devolving upon him, and added that if they are met he felt it will be due to our noble armies, and above all to the favor of that Providence which is over both nations and men.

GENERAL CUSTER'S RAID.

WE present our readers this week, in a double page sketch by Mr. A. R. WAUD, several interesting scenes connected with General CUSTER'S late movement against the rebels. This movement not only accomplished a successful diversion in favor of the commands directly engaged in KILPATRICK'S raid, but served also the equally important purpose of a reconnoissance. "Leaving Madison Court House, a handsome town at the foot of the Blue Ridge," says our artist, who was the only civilian accompanying the expedition, "soon after midnight, CUSTER'S command rapidly pushed on, and still night through a country alternately open and woodland toward the Rapidan. All went quietly until we reached Wolftown, where the Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, being in the advance, was fired upon by a rebel force; but drawing their sabres they dashed on, putting the enemy to flight without loss, and the head of the column soon reached the Rapidan. Having captured a wagon loaded with hams and two negroes, the command forded the river without opposition and pushed on, seizing all the horses on their way and all the male citizens—as a precaution against bushwhacking and to prevent information being given to the enemy.

"As we proceeded we found a tolerably well-cultivated and high rail-fenced country, the farmers plowing in the fields; when the horses were worth all they were taken in the name of the United States; and occasionally some of the men would make a descent upon the poultry while their officers were not looking. In one place a very handsome lady, quite young, expostulated loudly with a cavalryman for taking the farm-horses. 'My dear Miss,' said the soldier, 'we do not want to take your horses; ours are much better; and besides it goes against our feelings, but military necessity requires this step, and we are merely the agents of unrelenting destiny.' In spite of her concern the pretty creature laughed at such eloquence from a rough cavalryman.

"At a turn of the road we met a couple of children on a horse; that horse the men did not take: they looked too innocent to be molested. In the town of Stannardsville the people came out to see the procession, as if it were a show got up for their amusement. The men were exceedingly disgusted when they found they had to accompany the column as temporary prisoners. The female relatives of one person hung about him with outcries and shrieks, as if they imagined he would be led at once to execution. In the afternoon we reached and crossed the Rivanna River, and found the enemy in force near Charlottesville. A squadron of the Fifth regulars, under Captain ASH, scouting on our left, came so suddenly upon an artillery camp that the gunners had barely time to run off the guns by hand. Before they had recovered their surprise the camp was in flames, the caissons blown up, harness, forges, and battery-wagons destroyed, and our handful of dare-devils off again. At this time train after train came up from Gordonsville with troops, and the General recalled his column, which was at this time being shelled in a random way by the enemy's artillery, answered by our two little guns, which checked an effort to turn our left. Recrossing the river, the pioneers soon put the bridge in flames, and destroyed a large mill full of Government corn and meal, the enemy's infantry keeping up a wicked but harmless skirmish-fire the while. Returning, the troops were halted about four miles from the river to feed and rest. The night was rainy, and all had to lie upon the ground and get wet through. It was difficult to get fires to burn, and the rain began to freeze upon the limbs of the trees, so that by morning every thing appeared to be cased in crystal; and when the enemy's forces got in our way, to contest the return of the troops, the cannon-shot made a wonderful crashing among the frost-bound limbs of the forest. After two or three pretty little skirmishes, in which our troops invariably had the advantage, General CUSTER, inveigled them down a wrong road, and then, having started them upon a false scent, quietly recrossed the Rapidan, without the loss of a man, and with but few wounded, bringing with him a large number of horses and refugees—colored people—and some thirty prisoners, soldiers; the civilians being all allowed to return to their homes when it was no longer possible for them to do us damage. Like lost children the command was welcomed back into the lines by the forces of General SEDGWICK, who was not without anxiety that we should be all used up when he heard the distant guns in the morning."

The account of CUSTER'S movement given above by our artist represents faithfully the incidents that usually enliven a cavalry expedition within the enemy's lines. The most striking of these incidents he has related with the pencil. Thus he has given us a portrait of Captain ASH, who surprised STUART'S camp. In this connection he has presented us a scene representing the destruction of the rebel caissons by Captain ASH'S command. This was in the vicinity of Charlottesville, the point which our forces had reached when they were compelled, by the superior numbers of the enemy, to retrace their steps toward the Rapidan. The rear-guard, as General CUSTER'S command was leaving Charlottesville, has also received its share of attention from Mr. WAUD. He has also sketched for our readers the burning of the mill at Stannardsville, which contained a great amount of grain belonging to the Confederacy; also the burning of the bridge across the Rivanna, one of the tributaries of the James. One of the skirmishes in which our troops were engaged with STUART'S forces in the retreat has also been portrayed. Not the least pleasant of these sketches is that one which represents the negroes leaving their plows in the field to join our troops in the movement Northward.

THE LATE COLONEL ULRIC DAHLGREN.—[FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.]

MARCH WINDS.

Come out to the moors, little friend, with me,
For the March winds whistle right cheerily;
Shut the Latin books, now our task is done,
Cock your hat, and away for a coasting run.

Ah, whangs, what a gust! Blow, Boreas, blow,
And set my young "roy cheeks" all in a glow;
Play at "blind-man's-buff" with his golden hair—
There is health in the touch of thee, Jolly March air.

It will tease your young limbs, little play-fellow mine,
And make your blue eyes like bright diamonds shine;
It will scatter your bonny brown curls out of place,
And bring the rich healthy blood into your face.

How the dead leaves rustle! Away, away,
To the hill-top we come on this glorious day.
The green blades crunch crisp, yet the field-fares sing,
"Pis old Winter taking a timid wild spring.

Whizz! now go the crow rabble one by one,
With their white tails erect in a frenzy of fun,
Come along, little Tom, and we'll give them a chase,
Let us see which of us will be first to the race!

There's a cunning old raven sits looking at me,
From the high bare bough of yon withered tree,
The very old father is out for a meal,
And he knows that we know he is longing to steal.

See the first of the lambs to the old ewe creeps,
And sakmai at the bustling the shy bird peeps,
But he shows in a minute his bold attack
Till the mother sheep shall have turned her back.

Get away, cruel thief, shat your greedybeak,
'Tis a cowardly act to assault the weak.
How he crouks, and he glouts on the old hare there,
Come, a good long shout! Ah, the rogue has gone.

O'er the rough plowed fields the grey plovers run,
And the purple violets nod at the fun,
In the sere dry bramboed the pheasants "whirr,"
And the thrushes quarrel it getting cold.

What a famous wind! How the high elms shake;
How the tall, slim poplars quiver and quake;
How the shattering rocks to the tree-tops swarm,
Like rudderless ships blown about in a storm.

Come on, little friend, we are both in a glow,
While our arms are strong, and our legs can go,
And our veins make music the old woodlands ring:
What need we of wealth? We are each a king!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1864.

A DANGER.

THE manifesto of the "War Democracy," of the Cincinnati party likes to be called, has one proposition which should be very thoughtfully pondered by the citizens of this country. It declares that the next President should be a military man. Yet if the country is truly wise it will never elect a chief magistrate merely upon the ground of military success. The school of the soldier is the school in which a President of the United States should be trained. Military success dazzles a nation accustomed to despotic rule, but ought not to deceive a free people who govern themselves. In a warlike community the triumphant chief is naturally the most captivating figure, but in a peaceful free society the qualities of the soldier are by no means those which are best fitted for the work of government.

That those who best serve the country should be most highly honored is true; but that a century ago any British General in the field or Admiral upon the sea better served England than Lord CHATHAM, who directed the Government, would be difficult to prove. Military success, however essential, however indispensable, is not necessarily the highest service. Military heroes, however pure, however single-hearted, however noble, are, by the necessity of the case, accustomed to regard their own will as law, and will inevitably incline to govern a country as if it were an army. WASHINGTON was an exception to this rule, JACKSON was not; and WASHINGTON was exceptional men.

Emerging from any great war, and especially from a civil struggle, the devotion of an army and its officers to their chief is an incentive to personal ambition, and a danger to civil liberty so much greater than that it needs but to be named; for History is the record of governments overthrown and people subjugated by victorious military leaders. How sure and driven to ancient or even modern history to find the evidence of these truths. The spirit which solicits a military head of the Government is simply that of despotism. The ascendency so long maintained in this country by the Southern Policy, under the auspices of what was called "the Democracy," was due to the absolute annihilation of the fundamental right of a free government—the right of debate. And when, under the same name, a plea is made for a military Presidential candidate, it ought to surprise no man that the most ardent supporter of the proposition says plainly of one of the Generals of our armies: "He must have as little respect for these wretches as CÆSAR had for those in Rome." By the word "wretches" he describes the lawful, constitutional authorities of the Government, and he calls upon a military leader to set them aside as NAPOLEON did the Convention and CROMWELL the Parliament.

This is the spirit from which a military candidacy springs. It is impatience of constitutional rule. It is the instinct of despotism. Let us hope that the people of this country, in so momentous a crisis as the present, will be governed in the election of a President by some principle more profound than mere enthusiasm for a soldier. When the soldier has shown the qualities for civil rule that WASHINGTON displayed, we may justly aspire to the chair that WASHINGTON filled.

MR. CHASE.

THE letter of MR. CHASE, in which he asks that no further consideration be given to his name as a Presidential candidate, will surprise no one who has watched his patriotic course. The Presidency could not win him a higher honor than that of the masterly management of the national treasury during this war; and it is to the universal conviction of his great fitness for this office he fills, and the doubt there is adequate successor could be found, that much of the reluctance of the popular response to his nomination was to be attributed. Himself an essential part of the Administration which is now upon trial before the country, it could hardly be supposed that he seriously differed from its general policy, or that an Administration of which he should be the head would radically change that policy. While, therefore, he agreed upon the whole, it was certainly wiser to do as he has done.

Whatever honors may yet await him, MR. CHASE will be known in our history as one of the most eminent of the leaders who early saw and always resisted the mortal peril which menaced the American Union and human civilization from the essential character of the spirit which now seeks its overthrow. Called into a vitally important responsibility in the Government when the struggle began, he has fulfilled it with singular ability. He will in the manned among the least of his claims to the permanent regard of his countrymen that, in the midst of the great war, he saw no chance the necessity of devoting every energy and effort to the suppression of the rebellion, that he would not allow any preference of his friends for his personal advantage to perplex the great issue. He would have been his duty to do so, however, had he felt that the public safety was imperiled.

We differ entirely from those who regret his withdrawal upon the ground that every man's candidacy should remain open until the nomination. We are to deal with facts, and the fact is that the Union candidate will probably be one of three or four conspicuous gentlemen already indicated. If there were comparative unity of feeling—if, surrounded by the clash and conflict of rose and criticism, the Union party of the nation could move forward to the election as the Union party of New Hampshire lately did to that of Governor GILMORE, and as that of Connecticut will, on the 4th of April, to that of Governor BUCKINGHAM—would it not be infinitely better for the country and the cause that the ordeal of those upon whom candidature is likely to be?

It is upon that ground, unquestionably, that MR. CHASE has withdrawn, and for that reason his course will command the sincerest public approval.

GENERAL FRÉMONT.

IT is no secret that General FRÉMONT and many of his friends think that he has been unfairly treated by the Administration; that his opportunities of military distinction have been systematically baffled; and whatever explanation the General himself might give, it is very sure that his friends have considered his personal his treatment to political jealousy. It is the same feeling that the immediate friends of General MCCLELLAN indulge in regard to him, and it is a question which will never be settled to the satisfaction of either side.

We observe that some Union men, who, like the German AMERICAN and the Cincinnati Commercial Ward in this city, are resolved that under no circumstances will they support MR. LINCOLN'S re-election, are disposed to erect the name of GENERAL FRÉMONT as a candidate. Such a journal, recently established, attacks the Government with the fury of the most malignant Copperhead writing, and declares that MR. LINCOLN, more as its candidate, while the chuckling Copperheads warmly applaud the "FRÉMONT direction."

Now FRÉMONT has been a charmed name because it stood for unswerving fidelity to Liberty and Union; and to suggest that it could be used for the purpose of defeating MR. LINCOLN, who had deliberately decided who was to bear their standard, is insulting both to the General and to his friends. No candidate has any prescriptive right to the nomination. The field is clear; and it is of transcendent importance that the question of fitness shall be thoroughly discussed in every case. That General FRÉMONT may choose to try the popular confidence in his name so far as to await the action of the Convention is very probable. But that a man, who has been so truly respected, and who, when he was a candidate, was so faithfully supported by as earnest a body of men as ever voted, will permit his name to be used in any manner whatever as a menace—that he will allow any considerable number of persons to declare either that the national Convention must nominate him or some compromise candidate with his consent, or that he will take the field as an independent candidate, we no more believe than we should believe any other imputation upon his perfect patriotism.

A SOPHISM.

"IF the spring campaign is successful, nothing can prevent MR. LINCOLN'S renomination. If it fails, nothing can prevent it," says some one.

That may be true; but it certainly does not follow that the change, however inevitable, will be advantageous. Governments are not in a speculation of the kind of candidate that comes in upon a tide of general disgust and reaction. The President will unquestionably be held responsible for the campaign which may occur, and the public indignation may very probably demand that his place be filled by another. That he ought to be held chiefly responsible we are very far from saying or thinking. But we ask the gentlemen who deprecate any discussion of the Presidential question, and who declare that MR. LINCOLN'S renomination is impossible in case of defeat, whom they propose as his successor? Nothing is so uncertain as the event of a battle, and the fortune of war is a proverb. In the spring campaign we may suffer reverses. In that case there must be a new President, say the gentlemen. But is it worth while to take one as hazard? If the case occurs we shall need, more than ever, exactly the right man. Are we to know him by instinct? If so, who is he? "Oh! there are many men." Yes—and so there are twenty hundred. The answer—it is answer—it is merely a poor evasion.

If the text be true, no man who urges it is justified in refusing to enter the fullest discussion of the Presidential question. For the contingency suggested is not impossible. Should it arise, do we prefer to find ourselves at a loss among the twenty or twenty hundred? Is it not rather the part of trusty and loyal and prudent citizens to consider most carefully what hand is fittest to take the helm if the storm shall wash the pilot overboard?

ABOMINABLE GOOD-NATURE.

THERE is something very pathetic and utterly futile in the periodical spasms of New York indignation with overcrowded cars and omnibuses. In fact, the Union candidate will be as new people crowding into an omnibus when it was full. "Brave, indeed! Why, we Americans haven't pluck enough to keep the thirteenth man out of an omnibus." But we are trying very hard to do it. We have actually sent a petition to the Legislature asking them to pass a law to do it. Let us hope the Legislature will reply that if twelve New Yorkers can not keep out the thirteenth from an omnibus, or if twenty-four can not submit to the tyranny of the twenty-first, they may submit and thank themselves for their own discomfort.

Yet as that it is very disagreeable to exclude a person. So it is. But it is no less disagreeable to be excluded. And when half New York finds that it can not get into the cars and omnibuses, New York will have sufficient accommodation of the kind. Why does not the chastising parent, "I punish you for your good. One day you will thank me for making you smart." So let us say to the thirteenth passenger: "Gentlemen, you can't get in. But one day, when you are amply provided, you will heartily thank us." The advantage is, that the thirteenth man will not be likelier than the twenty-first, so that we shall all know how pleasant it is.

But even if the Legislature passes the most solemn laws our own abominable good-nature will prevent their enforcement. We shall squeeze and crowd, and feel sorry for the unfortunate man is going to see his dying parent, or will miss a boat, or will encounter some frightful calamity if we do not suffer him to get in. So he will get in, and sit upon the knees, and grind the feet of his chicken-hearted fellow-citizens, and then jump off at his street and go growing in to his wife. "My dear, nobody dared to keep me out of the car!"

A NEW TH'NG.

THE British officers took their race-horses to the Peninsula, and General NAPIER complained bitterly that they were useless in the field. They were destroying the army. The Yankees make war after their own fashion, and carry their luxuries to the field. A gentleman was lately surprised by a letter inviting him to speak before the Lecture Association of the First Division, Second Corps, of the Army of the Potomac! This is the kind of army which the Union sends forth to fight its battles. These are the men who are to overthrow as well as bullets to subdue the rebellion. This is the spirit and the strength against which hate and desperate fury are powerless. It has taken some time for the Yankee genius to uncoil itself. But an army which so calmly addresses itself to its work as to construct a Lecture System in its midst, serves notice upon the world that it has gone out to stay until it is victorious. It has under its placid exterior the grim earnestness of the exhorting Ironsides of CROMWELL.

FROM CHATTANOOGA.

A FRIENDLY letter from the head-quarters of the Army of the Cumberland is full of the most alluring temptations to a visit:

"About the 1st of April we can show you green grass, and smelling buds, and other evidences of spring, wherever our soldiers have left enough vegetation to sprout, or to recognise as all 'these kind mothers of the Spring,' which some so much scatter here than in your latitude.

"You will find this army in an admirable condition as to spirits, hopefulness, and a determination to finish the war under the guidance of 'good Father Abraham,' as the most ardent lover of his country can desire."

No man can doubt that the great armies of the West and East, by which the campaign is to be decided, are the most powerful and effective we have ever had in the field. The brave men among the Tennessee mountains know that the hopes and prayers of the sea-coast follow them: and the host in the shadow of the Blue Ridge are ready for their work. The Blue Ridge will reply to the Alleghenies, as

"Jura answers from her misty shroud
Back to the joyous Alps, that call to her aloud."

GENERAL CUSTER'S RAID.

In another part of this paper there are illustrations of General CUSTER'S late diversion in favor of KILPATRICK, and an account of it so simple and graphic that we are glad to call attention to it as a model of intelligible description.

HARPER FOR APRIL.

IN the April number of the Magazine begins the story, "DENIS DUVAL," left unfinished by THACKERAY on his dead. DICKENS has said what he thinks of it, and we have no doubt that the public will confirm his verdict. Its interest is profound and pathetic, as the great fragment of his literary life, while from the opening of the work his step is so light and free that the reader understands how fully he was himself still enjoying his work. In the same number there is a most genial and sensible plea for the children, enforcing the text that they are to be treated as children; and the old grandfather is quoted as saying, "Babies are to be brooded yet like chickens." Another paper, "My Escape from Richmond," is a timely and graphic passage of military experience.

In the June number, which begins the volume, the new tale of CHARLES DICKENS will open. We advise our readers to begin it with the beginning, and to secure the regular reading by a prompt subscription to the new volume.

THE NEW PICTURES.

THE Sanitary Fair will have a picture-gallery in which there will be admirable works, and the National Academy will open its doors in April. Meanwhile there are pictures to be seen worthy of the most careful study. Three we have in mind at this moment—KENSETT'S "Lake George," BIERSTADT'S "Rocky Mountains," and THOMPKINS'S "Upsala Inn." They are all very American and very different. MR. THOMPKINS'S picture, indeed, is now in the hands of the engraver, and is a charming study of it at GOUPIL'S, one of the truest and most exquisite American domestic realities that we remember. The landscape is painted in sunset. The comfortable gable-roofed inn sits broad and snug upon the ground, looking as if it had been there for twenty years, suggesting a homely comfort and spaciousness which belong to the ideal country tavern. The barn and hay-mow close by, the great oxen to the Yankee temple of comfort—the exquisite tracery of the boughs of the trees against the gray sky—the quaint bridge—the gentle hill—the road, and the boy fishing through the ice—all compose a picture so interesting and characteristic that the poet's pubbaus will gratify every art if they do not make it the vignette of all future editions of the poem.

MR. KENSETT'S "Lake George" is now upon exhibition at GOUPIL'S. It was painted for a noted connoisseur, who understands that one of the chief duties of those who are able to buy pictures is to let others see them. It is a thoroughly characteristic work, representing upon a large scale a certain aspect of American climate and scenery which no painter so completely renders. The view is down the lake toward Caldwell. The fore-ground is a wood, traversed by a small stream which falls in a lovely cascade by the way to enter the lake; and the gleam of the lake, broken by the islands, dotted with sails, and wooded by the mountains that rise from the shore, complete the picture. The firm and faithful treatment of the single tree-trunks in the fore-ground, the delicate quality of color, the clear shadows and the sunny greenness of the forest aisle, are points of artistic excellence which will escape no one. But the exquisite gradation, the delicate airy perspective, the depth of the sky, the fidelity of the mountain forms, are not less remarkable. And above them all, and in them all, and through them all, are the spirit and splendor of Nature in the serene triumph of her summer repose. And it is Nature in her American costume. It is not Italy, nor the Orient, nor Switzerland, nor England, nor the Tropics; it is the clear-breathed, well-decked Nature in the green and soft of our summer experience. It is pure landscape also. Nothing wins the mind from its brooding delight in the beautiful forms, from its dreamy gaze upon the bounding deer which the eye does not see. It lingers around the invisible camps. It muses upon the dusky departing canoe. It regenerates the gay Sabbath flotilla of ABERCROMBIE'S army. It hears ETHAN ALLEN thundering in the name of the Continental Congress. Or, still receding, glides along the calm with the canoe of the Jesuit explorers. Thus it has the highest charm of landscape art, the unobstructed presentation of the scene leading on to all its historical and imaginative associations.

From this most thoughtful and masterly work the transition is not difficult to BIERSTADT'S "Rocky Mountains," which is no less thoroughly American. It is a scene upon the head waters of the Colorado at the foot of the great range of the Wind River Mountains, which fill the depth of the canvas, pouring the rills and streams from their sides and glaciers into the calm lake, upon whose broad green meadow, which forms the fore-ground of the picture, is an Indian camp. It is purely an American scene, and from the faithful and elaborate delineation of the Indian village, a form of life now rapidly disappearing from the earth, may be truly called a historic landscape. It is the extinction centuries with its sublime natural forms and its rude savage human life; nor do we recall any work in which the subject is so strikingly presented. It is an extremely interesting picture, stimulating the imagination and satisfying curiosity. And unlike Mr. Church's pictures of the equatorial mountain scenery of America, which from their volcanic and tropical character, however luxuriant, yet forbid hope and leave an impression of profound solitude and desolation, this work of BIERSTADT'S inspires the temperate cheerfulness and promise of the region it depicts, and the imagination contemplates it as the possible seat of supreme civilization.

It is a most interesting parallel to the "Lake of George" of Mr. SANFORD. And who now will undertake the Prairie and the Mississippi Valley with the same delightful skill; or the home-life of the Gulf and the Everglades? Are not these, also, the kind of picture which should adorn the Capitol?

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

WHAT born produces the most discordant music?—The drinking horn.

A romantic young man says that a woman's heart is like the moon—it changes continually, but always has a man in it.

A matter-of-fact philosopher asserts that "if love is domestic life what butter is to bread—it possesses little nourishment in itself, but gives substantials a grand relish, without which they would be hard to swallow."

Two countrymen went into a butter's to buy one of them a hat. They were delighted with the sample, inside the crown of which was inserted a looking-glass. "What is the price for it?" said one of the men. The other, impatient at such a display of rural ignorance, exclaimed: "What for? why for the man who buys the hat to see how it fits him."

A girl, hearing the lady of the house, at dinner, ask her husband to bring Dombey and Son with him when he came home to-day, drew extra plates on the supper-table for the opposed visitors.

"How many years have you been dead?" said a gentleman to an Irishman, in a beggar. "Five years, please your honor," answered the mendicant, completely taken off his guard by the question.

The youth who stole a kiss has been discharged on condition that he will not embrace another opportunity.

The bellman of Watertown, in announcing a temperance meeting, said it would be addressed by six women "who had never spoken before."

Voltaire says: "A physician is an unfortunate gentleman who is called upon to explain to perform a miracle—to reconcile health with intemperance."

"Wanted, expert needle-women to make babies' clothes!"—Well, that beats all!" exclaimed Mrs. Partington, throwing down the newspaper in wrathful disgust. "In my fifteen minutes, she had been spelling out the advertisements, and expected to be her own work-woman, and the greatest drama-maker and donkey-engine. But this impostorous idea of getting ship-work babies is enough to make the poor thing throw down her tools and shut up shop altogether. Work my needle, indeed! Perhaps these cities will be pressed into this new-fangled business before long; and then an unemployed lady in the world won't be able to keep down the surplice popplation."

Charles Lamb's opinion of the water-cure: "It is neither new nor wonderful, for it is as old as the deluge. When, in my opinion, it killed more than it cured."

In spite of the ill-founded contempt which Dr. Johnson professed to entertain for tea-table, he treated Mrs. Asbton with great politeness; and when she called on him in Bolt Court, out his servant could not immediately provide her with a chair, he said, "You see, madam, wherever you go there are no seats for the poor."

CAUGHT A TARTAR.

"Have you any first-rate servant-girls for the kitchen? I want one that can mind her own business and attend to her work." Some asked the question of a neighboring Irish proprietor, "any quantity; but no show you one."

Jones is at once introduced to a daughter of the Emerald Isle, and is greeted with,

"An' shure you want a servant?"

"Yes," says Jones.

"How many are ye in yer family?"

Jones answered.

"And how far hot and cold water?"

Answers again.

"How many children ber yez? Do yez make yer girls work Sunday? Is the church far away?"

All these points, with about fifty more, were answered heroically by Jones, when he thought it about time to take the bull short himself.

"You look," says Jones, "like a pretty nice girl; but I want to ask you one question. Do you play the piano?"

"No."

"Then," says Jones, blandly, "you won't answer my turn."

And away went the astonished Celt, feeling that she for once had caught a Tartar.

A pretender to science seriously maintained, one day in company, that the earth did not make a revolution round the world, either real or apparent; but that having performed a revolution from east to west, it came back again to its rondeau against morning. "How is it, then," he was asked, "that we never see it on its return?" "Because the journey is performed by night," he gravely replied.

When you see a man's likeness in a photographic album, it is a clear proof that he has been "taken off" with a distended chin.

A photographic friend of ours, returning from giving a lady of high rank lessons in the art-science, and having a few odd minutes on his hands, found out the owner of a neighbored street, sounding an opportunity of coming to her call. Being asked, a costs-monger, calling for a subscription. "Keep a forty-graphic, Sir?" inquired the fruit-vendor. "Why, yes, I have, my good fellow," returned our friend. "Ah!" repeated the corner-monger, with a mournful look, "I'm sorry to hear it, Sir, for my friend, with a smile, as he thought of the sweetest photographs he had just left, and the brother in the art down at dressing him. "Yes," continued he of the barrow, "if man's evil is used to him, man's forty-graphy."

A young gentleman was fondling his betrothed's hand. "I hope it is not counterfeit," he said. "The best way to test it is to ring it," was her reply.

EPIGRAM.

Since Tom went first to law with Ned,
And made the suit attack,
'Tis said he scarce has had a coat
To put upon his back:
But, verily, the case is such,
Tom has had a suit too much.

CUPA.—A bundle of sticks with a few sobs at the top.

"Jennie," said a venerable Cameronian to his daughter, who was asking his consent to accompany her urgent and fevered suitor to the ball—"Jennie, it's a very solemn thing to get married." "I know it, father," replied the sensible damsel; "but it's a great deal solemner not to."

He who lives with a good wife becomes better thereby, and those who live among vicious arise with the performance upon their garments.

Mundon, the actor, was once, at a dinner party, placed before a haunch of venison and requested to carve it. "Really, gentlemen," he said, "I am by myself, and set every dilute about this anatomy; I dare say, now, there is some particular one in a haunch—some fat-lib—I never was at it—but I assure you I am quite ignorant where to put it." A dozen hands immediately pointed to the spot. Mundon was instructed where the rich meat lay. He inserted a long string of knives and forks into a piece, and loaded it with sauce and jelly, and then, with the plate in his hand, looked through his glass and said, "Ah! Sir, very hard way really, and every mouth prepared."

"Gentlemen," said the musician, "I will send this song you; but if I give the title-bill to one, I shall offend the rest, so, again, I shall not." Upon which he myself, and let every gentleman help himself to what he likes best."

Which, on the face of the earth, is the best place for a sleeping-car?—The Rocky Mountains.

If a young woman bids fair to take heart, you can probably take hers.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—March 9. Mr. Wilson reported from the Military Committee a substitute for Mr. Chandler's resolution on the war, declaring "that the object of the war is the subjugation of the rebels in arms, and the lawful authority of the United States; that in the prosecution of the war the United States may adopt whatever measures are fitted to assists with the rules of civilized warfare, may be deemed necessary to secure the object of the war, and to punish and overthrow the Emancipation Proclamation as a necessary and legitimate war measure." Mr. Grimes reported the House joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt, with an amendment as follows: "And be it enacted and declared to be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States not necessary for the payment of interest on the public debt, to apply any portion of the proceeds of his amendment to the bill equalizing the pay of colored troops, similar to that allowed to white troops, and authorizes its ascertain and award to loyal owners a just valuation for their slaves——" Mr. Grimes said he was opposed to the franking privilege to the President and Vice-President.—Mr. Sumner moved to amend by adding to the bill: Freedmen, reported a bill providing that the Proclamation of Emancipation issued by the President of the United States January 1, 1863, so far as the same declares that the slaves in certain designated States and parts of States therein named should be free, is hereby adopted and declared as a statute of the United States; and that a rule and article for the government of the military and naval forces thereof.—Mr. Sumner, in support of his amendment to the House resolution for the sale of surplus gold, argued that speculation in gold, even in time of war, was right.—Mr. Chase also authority proposed.—Mr. Powerry addressed the Senate at length in opposition to the resolution. He used urging Mr. Chase claims for the Presidency. He insisted that the citizens of the Territory of Nebraska were distinctly that Mr. Chase had nothing whatever to do with it.—The joint resolution authorizing the payment of the arbor debate, was passed, 30 to 8, with an amendment that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt "for a period not exceeding six months from the 4th day of March next."—Legislation bill for the current fiscal year was passed.——

March 10. The Senate was not in session.

HOUSE.—March 9. The Committee on Ways and Means reported a resolution for the appointment of a committee of the law as not to exempt United States bonds from State and municipal taxation.—The Senate bill to provide for protection of emigrants to the Territories, authorizing the distribution of provisions, animals, and munitions by the Secretary of War to all emigrants passing through hostile Indian country, and to establish a Bureau of Emigrant Military Justice, to be connected with the War Department, was passed.—The Senate bill to be composed of a Judge Advocate-General, with the rank of Brigadier-General, and two assistant Judge Advocates of Colonel's rank.—The Resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to Major-General Grant and the officers and men under his command for his bravery at Chickamauga, was passed, with an amendment also thanking Major-General Rosecrans.—The Military Committee reported a bill making the Camden and Amboy Railroad, with its franchise built on to be built; and the Raritan and Delaware Bay Railroad, published in the Territories, and repealed so much of the act of 1862 as relates to the Territories, authorizing the distribution of provisions, animals, and munitions by the Secretary of War to all emigrants passing through hostile Indian country, and to establish a Bureau of Emigrant Military Justice, to be connected with the War Department, and to consist

AMBUSCADE AND DEATH OF COLONEL DAHLGREN.—[SEE P. 195.]

GENERAL GRANT RECEIVING HIS COMMISSION AS LIEUTENANT-GENERAL FROM PRESIDENT LINCOLN.—[See Page 196.]

DR. PEREGRINE'S PAGE.

I.

I; one of the earlier volumes of my diary I find the following passage:

"Sunday, January 17, 18—. This morning, at half past three A.M., poor John Bentmore expired. Conscious to the last—full of self-condemnation for errors which were more those of judgment than intention; pious, earnest, humble-minded, he died, bitterly accusing himself of having injured his boy's prospects. A touching end. I pray mine to be[illegible] his child. How shall I fulfill that promise?"

Of all my humble protégés John Bentmore was the most grateful, and the least satisfactory. He was emphatically an unlucky man. Nothing prospered with him. He had tried every thing. Service in all sorts of capacities. He had been a greengrocer—a lodging-house keeper, a traveler for a tobacconist, a traveler in the grocery line, foreman to an upholsterer. I got up a subscription for him, and fitted him out for Australia; but in less than two years he was back again, with little besides the clothes which, to use his own expression, he stood upright in. By-and-by he set up for himself in the upholstery trade with capital borrowed from one of his old employers. He had been brought up to it, his father having been an upholsterer; and he ought to have understood it himself. But he is ill-luck, or rather his want of business habits pursued him still. He employed the best workmen, bought the best materials. Yet his wood always warped; his blinds never worked properly; his carpets were thin; his very nails never held. He was never to admit himself with a sigh, as he wiped the perspiration from his brow, that "there was a screw loose" somewhere. He didn't know how it was, and there was a many complaints."

At last he sunk under his ill-fortune. On his death-bed he recommended himself bitterly, and bewailed the destitute state of his son, whose future prospects naturally formed his chief anxiety. I had myself made to reconcile him to the idea of the boy's seeking his living (at any rate in the first instance) by servitude, and I undertook, before I escaped from the room for Arthur, to induce Mr. Moreen, the upholsterer—with whom John Bentmore had lived since as foreman—to employ him; but John's hopes of his son were slight. "He won't do it, Sir," he said, with a sigh of self-reproach; "and I don't deserve that he should. He's a just man—Mr. Moreen—and I—I owe him wages. He's also a large sum of money, and he's not one to overlook that. If Indeed he would let the boy work for him—my number of years without wages, and to pay off what I owe, that would be a blessed thing; that's what I'd like he won't do, Sir! I know Mr. Moreen him; and Mrs. Moreen—she can't overlook the being lent me the money; not but what it would be a good thing they could do to get paid; for Arthur would do his duty by them, I'm sure of that. He's very different from me you see, Sir—a real believer. I've got twenty times my head for figures, and book-keeping, and that. He'll make a first-rate man of business, will Arthur. They say at his school that he's an uncommon turn for mathematics. It is a pity, ain't it, to make a mental of such a lad as that?"

And the father looked proudly and fondly at his boy, who was seated in the hospital window intent upon a book, and a single tear rolled down upon his pillow.

The hour came at last. He fixed on his boy the glance of loving recognition, and the tender light faded away; in its place there came a film, and all was over.

II.

Arthur Bentmore had not completed his thirteenth year when his father died. He was tall for his age, with small and well-cut features. The mouth was full and handsome; but the compressed lips and square chin indicated firmness. The remarkably prominent eyes had in them a thoughtful observation beyond his years or young. I had learned from Mr. Gillies, his schoolmaster (whom I had met more than once by his father's bedside), that he was studious and persevering, though not particularly clever; and from the father himself, that he was dutiful and obedient in no ordinary degree. But my observations had served me nothing to puzzle than to enlighten me, although at one conclusion I had arrived, namely, that he was reserved even to secretiveness. His manner seemed to be one of those which, to open at all, must be wrenched open.

His father's affairs were set in order with as little delay as possible. When all was sold, scarcely enough remained to pay the funeral and other necessary expenses; nothing whatever toward the heavy Mr. Moreen's debt. I had clothed the boy in decent mourning, and paid his small arrears of schooling, intending him for the mercantile line of my own lodging; and now I felt it was time to think of putting him in some way of earning an independence. Instead; but it was not without considerable difficulty and considerable exercise of persuasion that I wrung from him the reluctant admission that he would rather be an upholsterer than a servant.

I took him to Mr. Moreen, whom I had long been in the habit of employing professionally, and who I believed had a real regard for me. I would make an attempt in that quarter. After all, it could but fail.

Mr. Moreen was a huge, sturdy, ruddy-faced giant, working hard, living generously, doing business, as a business should be done, in a handsome manner. He piqued himself on the quality of his materials and the excellence of his workmanship, and was not to look with an eye of something like contempt on any work but his own. Though as straightforward, shrewd, and experienced a tradesman as London ever produced, he was completely under the thumb of his wife. He came down to us now, from his comfortable meat tea in the room adjoining with Mrs. M. (as he respectfully called her) and the children, wiping the crumbs from his mouth as he entered. He smiled on seeing me; but cast a sharp glance of something like disfavor on my companion; who, pale and slender, looked shorn his station in his new mourning suit, relieved by an inch or two of his father's gold chain, that peeped from his waistcoat. I said it had been his late foreman's last wish that his son should be brought up to the trade he had followed himself, and that he had not been without hope that Mr. Moreen would permit the boy to be in his shop, at least for a while.

The upholsterer heard me attentively to the end. He was not one to speak hastily, nor yet one to mince matters when he did speak. He knew his own mind, in general—when Mrs. M. was not by.

"Sir, I wouldn't have a son of John Bentmore's in my shop, not if he were to pay me all his own and fifty pounds more to the back of that. I've had enough of the father; I don't want no more of the lot. That boy's like his father—he's as cross as bad as the rest. John Bentmore used me ill, Sir. I trusted him, and he deceived me. He deceived me."

"Not wilfully," I interrupted. "When he borrowed that money he intended to repay it."

"I mean him, and he knows it very well," Mr. Moreen resumed, not condescending to notice my interruption. "He promised in black and white that he would pay back that money before the year were out, and he never paid me a shilling of it—no, nor meant to it. There's no honesty in the blood that's where it comes from, and there's no luck in it. Eighty-seven pounds nine shillings and threepence that man owed me, and I shall never see a farthing of it. No, Sir, I thank you; but I'll have nothing to do with his boy!"

"Father would have tried to pay you if he had lived, Sir," Arthur's young voice was heard to say; "I know he would have done his best to pay you."

I glanced at the boy. He was pale, and the perspiration stood in beads upon his forehead. His eyes, full of an eager and painful interest, were fixed intently on the upholsterer. My heart bled for him. It was cruel to speak thus of his dead father in his presence.

"Not he!" Mr. Moreen replied, putting his hands into his waistcoat-pockets and jingling his loose silver, with a dogged kind of contentment. "Not he! twasn't in him. Twasn't in him, no more than 'twas in his brother Charles, who died some eight or nine years ago, deep in debt. He was another of the same sort—always borrowing, never paying nobody again—always in trouble and difficulties—and proves it when he's dead and buried. It's in the blood. There's no backbone among them. And the boy's one of them."

He spoke with a bitterness that had strong contempt, making short pauses between each, that seemed to add tenfold weight to his words.

I felt indignant at the cruelty of such remarks, before a lad whose parent was scarcely yet cold in his grave. "Mr. Moreen," I said, "you have a perfect right to refuse to employ the boy; you have no right to wound him, by casting bitter reflections on the memory of his father."

"Sir," said Mr. Moreen, laying one square brawny hand out of his pocket, and stretching it toward me with a gesture of power, "I speak as I find. You forget as I've boy myself—and a handful he is."

He heaved a sigh, that seemed to come from some cavernous depths, and made a kind of draught in the shop. "I've no less than five boys—two and Mrs. M. expecting again in October. Sir, them boys look to me to be fed and clothed, and put in the way of feeding and clothing themselves; they'll be enough to do for them. They're brought up strict, and honest, and hard, they are—not taught to give themselves airs—not dressed like gentlefolks. Now What they weare is paid for, honest and regular. I should seem to have committ a sin to—You see, Sir, I've had little comfort since the day when that money was borrowed. Mrs. M., she'll never overlook it. Never overlook it. It's like the lives to a hundred. She has her ideas, has Mrs. M., and her opinions. Strong. She was always against lending of it. She was right. She says to me, says she, 'Mark my words, M. Don't you trust that Bentmore—he's a slippery fellow.' If you please, Sir," said Mr. Moreen, suddenly, with his hands from his pockets, and changing his tone to one of uncommon business, by way of changing the subject, "if you please, Sir, we'll say no more about it. Only I won't have nothing to do with his lad."

And so we parted.

III.

A page's place was soon found for Arthur Bentmore; and a good one. One of my patients willingly engaged him, his experience as to was, after the particular fashion of his years, very small. My friend and Mr. Sullivan were kindly, liberal people, living alone, spoiling their servants, as they would have spoiled their children if they had any, and any, laying themselves out to be imposed upon in a hundred ways, even by the butler, Mr. Tapps, having decanted their wine, and imbibed the greater part of it, for two-and-twenty years, was looked upon by them as a privileged person. Their coachman, a corpulent but lenient man, allowed them the use of their horses for an hour or two occasionally, when his wife thought it good for the quality of his master's horses, and was locked upon by that lady with a truly filial respect. The cook had grown fat on the proceeds of that which she sold out of her luxurious kitchen. The housemaid and scullery-maid might as yet be considered babies in the service, having been only three and four years in the family; but, influenced by the general tone of the establishment, they were of course prepared to remain there (if spared, and not taken possession of by the baker or the green-grocer) half a century at least. Every one of the domestics spoke of the house, and all it contained, as theirs. It was "our plate," "our carriage," "our dinner-parties," "our uniforms," "our court-dresses," and "our diamonds."

The first thing done by the treasure, Mr. Tapps on the new page being respectfully presented to him by his mistress in my presence, was to alter his cognomen to that of James. He could not be expected to call him any other. Of course not. Names were the proper name for a page, and had been ever since his own mind, in general—when Mrs. M. was not by.

"Sir, I wouldn't have a son of John Bentmore's in my shop, not if he were to pay me all his own and fifty pounds more to the back of that. I've had enough of the father; I don't want no more of the lot. That boy's like his father—he's as cross as bad as the rest. John Bentmore used me ill, Sir. I trusted him, and he deceived me. He deceived me."

"Not wilfully," I interrupted. "When he borrowed that money he intended to repay it."

"I mean him, and he knows it very well," Mr. Moreen resumed, not condescending to notice my interruption. "He promised in black and white that he would pay back that money before the year were out, and he never paid me a shilling of it—no, nor meant to it. There's no honesty in the blood that's where it comes from, and there's no luck in it. Eighty-seven pounds nine shillings and threepence that man owed me, and I shall never see a farthing of it. No, Sir, I thank you; but I'll have nothing to do with his boy!"

"Father would have tried to pay you if he had lived, Sir," Arthur's young voice was heard to say; "I know he would have done his best to pay you."

I glanced at the boy. He was pale, and the perspiration stood in beads upon his forehead. His eyes, full of an eager and painful interest, were fixed intently on the upholsterer. My heart bled for him. It was cruel to speak thus of his dead father in his presence.

"Not he!" Mr. Moreen replied, putting his hands into his waistcoat-pockets and jingling his loose silver, with a dogged kind of contentment. "Not he! 'twasn't in him. 'Twasn't in him, no more than 'twas in his brother Charles, who died some eight or nine years ago, deep in debt. He was another of the same sort—always borrowing, never paying nobody again—always in trouble and difficulties—and proves it when he's dead and buried. It's in the blood. There's no backbone among them. And the boy's one of them."

He spoke with a bitterness that had strong contempt, making short pauses between each, that seemed to add tenfold weight to his words.

I felt indignant at the cruelty of such remarks, before a lad whose parent was scarcely yet cold in his grave. "Mr. Moreen," I said, "you have a perfect right to refuse to employ the boy; you have no right to wound him, by casting bitter reflections on the memory of his father."

"Sir," said Mr. Moreen, laying one square brawny hand out of his pocket, and stretching it toward me with a gesture of power, "I speak as I find. You forget as I've boy myself—and a handful he is."

He heaved a sigh, that seemed to come from some cavernous depths, and made a kind of draught in the shop. "I've no less than five boys—two and Mrs. M. expecting again in October. Sir, them boys look to me to be fed and clothed, and put in the way of feeding and clothing themselves; they'll be enough to do for them. They're brought up strict, and honest, and hard, they are—not taught to give themselves airs—not dressed like gentlefolks. Now What they weare is paid for, honest and regular. I should seem to have committ a sin to—You see, Sir, I've had little comfort since the day when that money was borrowed. Mrs. M., she'll never overlook it. Never overlook it. It's like the lives to a hundred. She has her ideas, has Mrs. M., and her opinions. Strong. She was always against lending of it. She was right. She says to me, says she, 'Mark my words, M. Don't you trust that Bentmore—he's a slippery fellow.' If you please, Sir," said Mr. Moreen, suddenly, with his hands from his pockets, and changing his tone to one of uncommon business, by way of changing the subject, "if you please, Sir, we'll say no more about it. Only I won't have nothing to do with his lad."

And so we parted.

III.

A page's place was soon found for Arthur Bentmore; and a good one. One of my patients willingly engaged him, his experience as to was, after the particular fashion of his years, very small. My friend and Mr. Sullivan were kindly, liberal people, living alone, spoiling their servants, as they would have spoiled their children if they had any, and any, laying themselves out to be imposed upon in a hundred ways, even by all other, the butler, Mr. Tapps, having decanted their wine, and imbibed the greater part of it, for two-and-twenty years, was looked upon by them as a privileged person. Their coachman, a corpulent but lenient man, allowed them the use of their horses for an hour or two occasionally, when his wife thought it good for the quality of his master's horses, and was looked upon by that lady with a truly filial respect. The cook had grown fat on the proceeds of that which she sold out of her luxurious kitchen. The housemaid and scullery-maid might as yet be considered babies in the service, having been only three and four years in the family; but, influenced by the general tone of the establishment, they were of course prepared to remain there (if spared, and not taken possession of by the baker or the green-grocer) half a century at least. Every one of the domestics spoke of the house, and all it contained, as theirs. It was "our plate," "our carriage," "our dinner-parties," "our uniforms," "our court-dresses," and "our diamonds."

The first thing done by the treasure, Mr. Tapps, on the new page being respectfully presented to him by his mistress in my presence, was to alter his cognomen to that of James. He could not be expected to call him any other. Of course not. James

He had mentioned to him that he did not wish to have this spoken of, as it might occasion unpleasantness; and he should be sorry to lose the convenience.

Was he aware of Mr. Jacobs's practice of betting? He was. Had he ever been induced himself to do like? No answer; and the question was, after a little discussion, withdrawn. Had he had any suspicion of the butler's losses at Epsom? He had not.

But in spite of the quiet and self-possessed manner in which Arthur had given his evidence, and its undoubted truthfulness, there was yet something about him which (although I should have been at a loss to define it) occasioned in my mind not only an uncomfortable impression that he knew much more than he chose to divulge of the butler's affairs, but that he was also, to a certain extent, a participator in the practice that had led to so fearful a result. I could hardly explain, even to myself, why I was convinced of this; but my impression grew in strength the more I saw of, and conversed with him. He did not indeed deny, though he never positively admitted, that he had betted; but many little circumstances that I not only observed now, but remembered to have noticed since his removal to Lady Fetherstone's (among others, a remarkable shabbiness in such articles of his attire as he had to purchase himself), tended to confirm me in what he had been led to indulge in this dangerous practice, and was greatly straitened in means in consequence.

I had much serious talk with him at that time, speaking with an earnest authority which I felt my mutual relations not only warranted but called for. But although he listened with respectful attention, and an appearance of being impressed by what I said; and although he once voluntarily promised me never to bet in future (he did not say again); he was still silent and uncommunicative, and therefore, to a certain degree, unsatisfactory.

I was much pressed for time at this period, and preoccupied with anxious and difficult cases; but the thought of Arthur Bentmore was seldom long absent from my mind. His pale, miserable face actually haunted me. His father had confided him to my care, and I trembled for his future. I saw him on the brink of ruin—perilous of destruction—yet I was powerless to avert either. Moreover, a change took place in his position and circumstances which tended rather to increase than to diminish my anxiety on his account. He obtained the late butler's place.

V.

ONE fine, clear winter's day, some fourteen months after the death of Mr. Jacobs, as I was standing with my back to the fire in my consulting-room, Arthur Bentmore, dressed in neat plain clothes, entered, hat in hand.

He had grown very much during the last twelve month, but he was thinner and paler than I had ever before seen him. He was literally cadaverous.

Our first mutual greetings over, he informed me that he had come for two purposes—the first, to announce that he was about to leave Lady Fetherstone's.

I started. About to leave Lady Fetherstone's! So good a service? so generous a mistress? who valued him, as I had reason to know, very highly! Something of undefined apprehension shot through my mind.

But he went on to explain that he had not left well for weeks; had been decidedly worse quite lately; and he was conscious that he required rest—rest, entire and complete. He was sorry, very sorry to leave Lady Fetherstone's, she had been most kind to him; but he should be laid up if he remained. He had told her how it was, and she had quite acquiesced. He was to leave in a month, if her ladyship could suit herself. He required, as it were, to—to take breath. He drew—not without a visible effort—a long breath as he spoke; and I mentally resolved that as soon as his time was up he should come to my house and submit to regular professional treatment from me.

But what was the other purpose for which he had come?

He put his hat down on the floor. "You have by you, Sir," he answered, "some money of mine."

"Money of yours?"

"Some silver, Sir; only a trifle; nine shillings. I brought it, if you remember, when I was a lad, one morning in summer, and you put it in your desk to keep for me."

I remembered perfectly now the secret drawer in which I had placed it. Yes; there was the silver, almost black from age; three half-crowns, five shillings, and a sixpence, with the threepence wrapped up in a paper by themselves. As I glanced the little heap toward him I said, with a certain archness, "Arthur, my good Arthur, you don't need such a sum as this."

He met my gaze without flinching; yet a slight tinge of color rose to his cheek. I added, more gravely, "or do you want it, if you please, Sir. You remember my father's debt to Mr. Moreen?"

"Certainly. Full well."

"I wish to pay it; and I make bold to ask you to go with me when I pay it, Sir."

He made a step forward, and laying an envelope on the table, "There," said he, "are eighty-seven pounds, which, with the silver and coppers you have there, makes up the sum owing."

I was so much astonished as to be for the moment incapable of professional action. But soon, to amazement, succeeded another feeling. The old pain, fear shot through me. I fixed my eyes steadily on his.

"Arthur, how came you by all this money?"

He put his hand in his pocket and laid before me a paper containing an exact account of every shilling he had ever saved in service, and how he had saved it.

This paper recorded a daily, hourly series of sacrifices throughout the long course of four years; began at the age when self-conquest is the hardest, self-indulgence the most natural—continued with unchanging resolution in spite of every trial, every temptation; persisted in to the very end.

He spoke only once, as I was approaching the end of his extraordinary memorandum; but it was simply to explain that Mr. Gillies, the schoolmaster, had put this money, at various times, into his savings-bank for him, and had thus realized a small increase, which, with the fourteen shillings over-plus in the account—the master's wages and some money that would be due to him next month—and a few shillings of presents he had accumulated, would go to maintain him while he should continue out of service. He might, he observed, have paid off this debt a little sooner, as I could see, but he considered that he should do wrong to leave himself entirely without money.

I heard him as he spoke, but I scarcely heeded him. My mind, my heart were too full. I was thinking of the suspicions I had harbored against him—of the wrongs I had done him in my own thoughts; and he, all the while, biding his time, leading a life of such unexampled self-denial! To pay his debt, however, had not been his sole aim than was natural to be done in similar circumstances.

"You know Mr. Moreen said, Sir, that there was no honesty in the blood! no honesty in the blood! He said father was not honest; that he was all a lie. I knew that father was honest. The debt had been his greatest distress in his last hours. I had reason to know that; for many and many a time he charged me to pay it, and so to clear his memory. How, then, could I do other than pay it?"

VI.

MR. MOREEN had risen materially in the world. He had invested in large bodily and mental substance. But though a man, solid in every sense of the word, and with—will! we will say—some money in his pocket, he knew more than the old shop.

In the doorway of this old shop stood Mr. Moreen now, as Arthur and I drove up in the modest broughham, which, in those days, I hired for my professional visits. He was respectfully seeing a great lady out: he flourished his rule by way of saluting me, and added his usual respectful bow and smile. Then he went on with his conversation at range with its high-stepping bays had dashed from the door. "That's the countess—that is," he said, as we entered, "the dowager countess—Lord Asstays—well! I suppose she stays an hour or more, choosing, and changing, and ordering of the carriage for the old cats' Majesties, and the rest of it together. It'll be a splendid side-board when done. A surprise, too, for his lordship. But, dear me, she gives nearly as much trouble now as she used to! She will have this, and she won't have the other! It would be better left to me, I should think. But these great ladies, d'ye see, they're—they're willful (with a strong emphasis on the word); I suppose they've got nothing else to do."

He winked at me with that clear, honest, blue eye of his, and laughed with the low, lazy, internal chuckle common to such fat men; and as well I observed that it was not your great ladies only that were willful, he laughed still more. "Ah!" he said, "all women are willful, not a doubt about it."

A half-lantering, half-serious conversation followed, with much good-humor on the old fellow's part, and so forth; then there was a pause, and, for the first time, he looked at my companion. But his glance was momentary, and had nothing of recognition in it.

"I see you don't remember this young man," I said, "yet he is an old acquaintance of yours, Arthur Bentmore."

"Indeed?"

He turned and surveyed him with an easy, good-natured glance. "Young Bentmore! Indeed! He have grown precious tall—a good bit taller than I do, and they've been the same age. I think. But he don't look strong. I'm afraid you don't have your health, young man? Let me see." Mr. Moreen put his rule mechanically to his mouth during them up as though about to whistle. "Didn't I see something in the papers about young Bentmore, a year or a year and a half ago? A inquest, or something? Ah! true! I recollect. Better by your looks by twenty pound, I'll be—true! Yes, I remember. And you give your evidence very proper. Mrs. M., she read it all out loud to us at tea; and we was very much pleased with your conner said and all. But I hope," added the upholsterer, suddenly changing the expression of his good-humored face into one of stern severity, and laying a long, square, powerful forefinger upon Arthur's coat; "excuse me, young man, but I hope you don't bet by yourself? Nothing will never come to no good, be it at luck or skill."

"No, no!" I said, interposing, "Arthur has come to-day about a little matter of business with you, Mr. Moreen, if you have leisure to attend to it."

"With me?"

Again the upholsterer looked at the young man. This time more attentively; and in one moment he was a different person himself. His whole aspect, good-humored, friendly chat, between us hitherto; now it was changed.

"I suppose it's the old story," he said, laying down his rule, and putting his hands in his pockets, as if to guard what he could against the worst. "The old story! Wants employment! But—"

He shook his head. It was a most expressive shake.

"I am not come to ask for any thing," Arthur Bentmore said, quietly. "You remember the debt my father owed you, Mr. Moreen?"

"I—should—think—I—did!" the upholsterer answered, very slowly, laying marked emphasis on each separate word. "I'm more likely to remember that debt than I am ever to get a farthing of it, by a precious deal! Eighty-seven pounds nine shillings and threepence, it was the amount, Mrs. M. and I had more words concerning of that debt than we ever had 'bout any thing; I think she's never forgotten it. Nor she's never discontinued throwing of it in my teeth. She were against my lending of it from the first; and that (turning to me), that give her a handle, d'ye see, against me. Of course. She'd no opinion of John Bentmore. Never had."

He had become confidential again. He never could help it, when he spoke of his wife. And he always jumbled out his sentences, and made long pauses between, when that dreaded individual was in question. It was like an occasional brief letting off of steam that the engine should burst.

Arthur waited patiently, without attempting to interrupt him.

"Well!" said Mr. Moreen, at last, jingling his silver with both hands: "what of that debt? You're now in a position, I suppose, to discharge it, eh, Arthur Bentmore?"

"You're not—come to—to pay it? Are you, young man?"

He turned to me, his blue eyes swimming in tears of rapture at the extravagance of his own humor, and laughed till his face grew purple.

"I am, certainly, Sir," said Arthur Bentmore replied, slowly; and, opening the parcel he had all along held tightly in one hand, spread out on a bubble that stood near the fruits of four years' self-denial.

There was a dead silence.

"And for a trifling interest—not for a lifetime—of fees—would I have lost that scene.

Mr. Moreen's laugh had stopped. He stood silent, vacantly looking at the money.

At last he turned to me.

"Of course, Doctor, you lent him this?" he said, gravely, and with a long pause, as though reflecting; "but I couldn't think of it. Cert'ny not. On no account. I couldn't think of taking such money from you."

"No one has lent me this money," Arthur said; "I have earned it myself. Doctor Peregrine knows it; Doctor Peregrine will tell you how it was earned. Sir, when I was a little lad, you told me here—in this very room—that heroes were no use unless that my father—God bless him!—was not an honest man. You said there was no honesty in the blood. You said I should be like him. You said so! and it was but young then—only thirteen. When you said those cruel words of my dead father, I resolved that I would never rest I had paid his debt, and proved them false. It has been hard to do; so hard that it has changed my whole nature, I often think. But you know, Sir, that I have gone through it; I am living creature but myself! but I would have gone through fifty times as much to pay that debt! I knew that God had given me to pay it, and to clear my father's memory."

He spoke this now; I write the words I heard him speak, but I can give no more give a notion of their effect than could if I had never heard them. He, at all times so subdued, so self-possessed, so impassible to rouse, was suddenly transformed into another creature. Form, voice, countenance—all changed. His whole frame was filled with the keen-cut emotions of those four toiling, self-denying years found a vent at last.

"Well, you have," Arthur cried, raising his chin and hand with a gesture that thrilled through my very heart. "I believe me, who have never willfully told one false word here for many years past—who am that cruel wrong—my father was an honest man. I say it in my Maker's presence. Perhaps in his!"

He suddenly ceased. He found himself confounded, seized by the powerful grasp of Mr. Moreen, and whirled, rather than drawn, to the window.

"Well, you know," said the upholsterer, drawing him nearer, and then holding him further off, as you would a picture you were examining in different lights, "I must allow myself to say that in his tremendous hand as in a vice. "You're a grand fellow, you are! You pay your father's debts, do you? You're a honest man, Arthur Bentmore! I'm laid by to pay me, did ye? all these years! Why! you are a grand fellow! You did it, did ye? And I'm a old fool—and I will be a old fool! I believe I wish my tongue had been cut out before I said it. But you know you are honest. You! a old fool as you was, Arthur Bentmore! and many debt. Yes! you have—you have paid it. Oh! but you're a grand fellow!"

Ringing the changes on these words—unable to express the feelings that were bursting his heart—drawing his hand across his trembling voice—the rears rained down the honest man's cheeks, and he knew it no more than did Mrs. Moreen, sitting at tea with her work in the parlor behind.

Mr. Moreen's emotion had the natural effect of calming Arthur's. The poor lad was passive in his hands. He stood in a perfect upholsterer's attitude, as I began to return as it were to himself. He relaxed his hold; and taking out his pocket-handkerchief, wiped his eyes and face.

"I ask pardon, Sir," he said, turning to me, and speaking in a low and apologetic tone; "I ask pardon, Mr. Moreen. But I have been never so—I never see such a thing as this before. It took me unprepared, you see, Sir. I hope you'll excuse me. Not all at. And to think—to think that them words of mine should have cut so deep—a poor young lad like that—that I should ha' said 'em. Then, turning to Arthur, "You're a grand fellow, Sir!"

Strange—the effect of that "Sir" in Mr. Moreen's mouth, as addressed to Arthur Bentmore. Somehow, well I understood it: better than he did himself. It was the involuntary, unconscious homage paid to the honest man by the knave. It was the tradesman who valued honesty above all earthly treasures.

"But you know I can't take it, Sir!" Mr. Moreen suddenly exclaimed, when he had become more cool; recalled to the consideration of the money by the sight of it spread out on the table. "I can't take them earnings and savings of that lad's. It can't be. The thing ain't in nature. Mrs. M. herself, she wouldn't hear of it."

This was the signal for fresh excitement. A keen dispute followed this declaration, during which it was difficult to say which showed the most determined spirit, Mr. Moreen or Arthur. But it was clear to me that the latter must in the end prevail.

VII.

As soon as his month's notice to leave Lady Fetherstone's service had expired, Arthur Bentmore came to my house to be attended professionally, and, if need be, nursed. It was high time he should do so. He had fasted his constitution too severely. He had grown too fast, worked too hard, and slept too little. Now that the excitement was over which had hitherto borne him up under every trial, he collapsed. There was a reaction.

When at last I had the happiness of seeing him really restored to health, I proposed to him to remain with me as my servant. The plan was precisely what he wished. But after six months' trial of him, I made up my mind that I must give him notice. It went against my conscience to keep him. As a servant, Arthur Bentmore was entirely thrown away. He had talents of a higher things. He had a mind capable of mastering almost any subject, and would do honor to any position. Ever since the day of that last memorable visit to my consulting-room his reserve with me had entirely disappeared. His confidence had been indeed hard to gain, but once gained, it was given wholly, and forever. He felt toward me now as toward a father. I had entered into, and sympathized with, the strongest feeling of his nature; I had rejoiced for, and in him, on the one great occasion of his life; and from that hour he was bound to me by the strongest of all ties.

I had mentioned his touching story to persons who had it in their power effectually to befriend him; and the result was that he obtained a situation connected with one of our most important railways. He continued there years and years, rising, in the fourth he was promoted to a more responsible post on the same railway. From this time his rise was singularly rapid. He made money. Being in the way of hearing of good investments, his keen sense and excellent judgment enabled him to avail himself of them. He bought land in the outskirts of a great manufacturing town, built good houses on it, and sold them at an enormous profit. With this money he invested in still larger speculations (invariably judicious and safe), and in a short time realized a considerable capital. At thirty, Arthur Bentmore was the owner of the new, handsome town whose word carried the most weight with it. He remained single till he was five-and-thirty, and then brought to presides over his comfortable home one of the three daughters of his own parish clergyman: a pretty, unpretending, affectionate girl, who had been brought up in a pious and provident household, and was sure to make him a good and grateful wife. As far as he was concerned, I left them, two sons and three daughters, promising and healthy.

During all these years he and I have kept up a constant and friendly correspondence. He is now a director of more than one railway, and he comes frequently to London, sometimes alone—brought down by business—sometimes with his wife. On these occasions he always dines with Gillies—whom he has made comfortable for life—or with me. And during these visits we are three happy schoolboys.

"It all seems as though it were but yesterday," he would say, as we sat together over our dessert, and he looked round with his kind eyes. Those large, wonderful eyes of his, that seemed gazing far back into the past; "I often think I am a page again, and dream it has, sometimes. My wife says I still add up shillings and sixpences in my sleep."

Mr. Moreen, grown very old and infirm, lived and retired from business (though he still lives in the old shop), Arthur Bentmore has kept up not only an acquaintance, but a steady friendship since those early days.

Arthur had not long quitted my service when the upholsterer's wife was laid up with an attack of severe attack of bronchitis. He was always very hippish when ill, as many such strong giants are. And his visits, at this period, materially altered the state of his body, was full of Arthur Bentmore, toward whom he reproached himself with having behaved with a lack of brute. When I advised him to me as long as my visit lasted, and shed tears when he returned to the lad's early abstinence from beef. "It was the meat made me so strong, all."

"Yes!" he would exclaim, "I don't know as I ever said words I've repeated to him since that dreadful day. Bitter. They'll sound to me when I'm a-dying—I know that. And he gave me deeper pain than I can find drop o' beer—a crowing chap like that, that wanted it."

In the course of this liberes he confided to me that although Mr. M. had been struck with admiration at the noble conduct of the boy, she yet had not at all agreed with him as to the propriety of his proceedings. She took a more worldly business-like view of the transaction. The debt was a debt, she considered, and ought to be discharged. They had more than enough for their own wants; and the money than they had to deprive the lad himself of the satisfaction to his feelings of paying it. "I wouldn't be no hard one, in—what he done if he was to set it back again," said Mrs. M.

"I don't agree with her there Sir," said Mr. Moreen, speaking low and confidentially, as though to differ from Mrs. M. even in the expression of an opinion were to incur danger—a matter of life and heard; "the merit's the same in what he done, any how, it seems to me. But Mrs. M., she's so first-rate, Sir, you see! Upright as a church, and forehead, "and she judges of things more by the headpiece than she do by the feelin's. I've not equal to her in that—Sir."

When he heard that Arthur was about to set up a house of his own, he ordered him to bring his wife to see him, and took living rooms gratis; and never was man more thoroughly happy than Mr. Moreen was during the mysterious consultations and arrangements necessary to effect this object. I persuaded Arthur to visit me in London while he went down to the manufacturing town in question to superintend every detail. He spared neither trouble nor expense. Nothing was, nothing could be, too good for that great fellow! And the way in which he reveled in Arthur's astonishment and admiration, when on his return he discovered what had been done, was worth going miles to see.

SCENES CONNECTED WITH GENERAL CUSTER'S LATE

MOVEMENT ACROSS THE RAPIDAN.—[See Page 193.]

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

☞ Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER VII.

WHEN WILLIAM THE FOURTH WAS KING.

THE epoch, there was no denying it, was a wild and dissolute one. The imprint of the Regent's clown foot had not yet worn away. A man was still on the throne. He made a decorous king enough in his old age, mainly through the influence of a pious and comfortable wife; but his youth had been the converse of reputable. The sons of George the Third had not contributed in any great degree to the elevation of the moral tone of the country. The trial of Queen Caroline, and, the private life of George the Fourth, had done a good deal towards depressing the national manners. There were no young princesses save one, the Hope of England, whom her good mother kept modestly aloof from the polluting atmosphere of the age. The Duchess of Kent and her daughter went tranquilly about from watering-place to watering-place, and gathered shells and weeds upon the sands, and visited poor people in their cottages, and sat under evangelical ministers, and allowed the age to go by, and to be as wild and dissolute as it chose. They hoped and waited for better times, and the better times came at last, and have continued, and will endure, we trust.

Some of the profligate young princes of the last reign were dead, and those who remained, being gray and worn out, shut themselves up and did not exhibit their excesses in public. But they had left behind them their mistresses and their parasites, the nobles who emulated them in their vices. Though there were some related the nobles, the snobs who emulated the roturiers, and a crowd besides of adventurers, sharpers, and all the riff-raff of continental men. There was in London a populous colony of Anglo-Greeks, who had never, indeed, seen Athens or Byzantium, but who nevertheless,—Greeks of the lower Empire—the very lowest of all—being affiliated to the dominions of the devil. The young generation was rising, as their fathers had been vicious before them. Party-spirit ran high. We had been on the verge of a revolution about Catholic Emancipation, and another about Parliamentary Reform. Every thing was disorganized. The practicability of seizing the property of the church, and applying the holdings was openly discussed by politicians, who have now subsided into moderate men of Conservative tendencies. There were conversations sitting upon every thing, with a view to the abrogation of most things. Barristers of seven years' standing fattened upon the treasons wrong from the miscreants, and the pension-holders of the old Black Book. Commissioners and inspectors became as great a nuisance and burden to the country as the clerks of the Pipe or the Tellers of the Exchequer had been. Brougham and Birkbeck had lectured on the branches of the tree of knowledge within the reach of poor men, who for centuries had been permitted to dabble in ignorance, and there were greedily gorging themselves with the unaccustomed food, and so fell into surfeits, and had malignant dizziness, leading them to break spinning-jennies, burn down hayricks, and congregate with black flags and death's-head and cross-bones over their riotous mobs, demanding "bread or blood." Upon which, the Whigs, their political preceptors, who had taught them to talk about bread, and also claim the principle of free meeting and speaking, sent down special commissions, headed by Whig judges, into the provinces to try the newly-manufactured serfs for sedition, combination, unlawfully assembling, and other misdeeds, of which they, the Whigs, in time gone by, had humorously taught them the trick.

I say that every thing was disorderly and disorganized. Every body had his theory for regenerating society, but lacked sincere faith in his own theories, and so after a while deserted them. It was a reign of terror without much blood. The Whigs had to hang some of their deluded disciples at Bristol, and to transport some more at Dorchester and elsewhere; and in Ireland there was, as there always is, a good deal of unnecessary but beyond bills, and a few private duels, the warfare was mostly one of words and principles. Abusive language was in vogue. Blackwood's Magazine had Tories bespattered the Whigs and Radicals with foul words, such as beggars in their drink would not lay upon their mules. In the Quarterly a writer, styled "Right Honorable," who had been in Parliament, Secretary at the Admiralty, Lord, was best known as the pander to a depraved nobleman, devoted his energies to the gallant and graceful task of throwing mud at ladies who were tutored to write books, and presumed to hold libel-cal politics. In Fraser, the witty Doctor Maginn used to fast from public houses—never twice from the same gin-shop—the rackest, most scurrilous Billingsgate, against the Whig nobility, and the Radical rabbidcon. In the same high Tory magazine a great Scotchman was writing philosophical Chartism. Nothing was settled. Some people screamed the eternal Yes; to which others responded by howling the everlasting No. No negotiations were with; no principles were held sacred. Reverence, gratitude, decency, had gone to sleep for a while. O'Connell called Wellington a "stunted corporal," and Wellington called Alvanley a "bloated buffoon," and Disraeli the younger "a lineal descendant of the impenitent thief." That now staid county member, lord of a manor, leader of the Tory party, and flying buttress of the church, was then wearing long ringlets and black velvet pantaloons, and writing revolutionary epics, and wondrous tales of Asiatic love. Nothing was sacred. Some set forth the gnaw of crazy hope, while others intoned the liturgy of despair. Some drowned themselves in the Serpentine, while others of them jumped into the Slough of Puseyism. The Roman Catholics alone were steadfast and active and wide awake, and made the most of every thing. The drama was in a seemingly hopeless state of decline. Charles Kean had appeared, and Tragedy gave up, for a time, the ghost. Grimaldi was paralyzed. Sontag and Pasta had gone away. Malibran was not to be heard of. Mesmerism was in its infancy. Painters but Haydon, whose Entry into Jerusalem was in pawn for a milk-score. Hydropathists and physicians had begun to be the heroes of romances. Cocking had cast himself into space in a parachute, and coming into contact with the earth was smashed to death. A crafty Frenchman lured many hundreds of simpletons into taking tickets for a passage in his captive balloon or aerial ship. Then, timeously he ran away, and left them with their tickets, and an empty bag of cold air. Those were days when all lost their wits in steam. There were others who did believe in it, but held that locomotives and public steamers were only the precursors of the air-ship world. Meanwhile, Chat Moss had been drained by Stephenson, and Brunel was piercing the Thames with a tunnel, and was stalled. Nobody knew where any thing was to end. Steam and skepticism and tractarianism and Murphy's revivalism, and the abolition of slavery and the labor of children in factories, Warren's blacking and Rowland's Macassar, lions and tigers at Exeter 'Change, and giants taken away therefrom, and from Convent Garden, too; a commutation of tithes and reform of municipal corporations, and a general embarrassing relations with foreign powers (order reigned in Warsaw, and "reigned" is the word, for it meant the erection of barricades and a truce between the houses and the soldiery), made up a chaotic whirl which set all the brains of the period spinning. There were some of a desponding turn of mind, who said, "ærum est de republicâ," and went off to New York. For nothing was settled.

It is to be wonder'd at, then, that the morals of the people were shocked? Political immorality was at a discount; private morality fell likewise below par. Reckless demonstrativeness only was at a premium. The Tory party, of true aristocratic Chivalry. From 1832 to 1837 muscular docility was in the ascendant. There was politeness, no longer all about the knees of the period. The young bloods were well-nigh as cantied in their overt acts as Selby and Hall's haunt and Jonathan Wild's and Jack Sheppard's days. The three dukes, by-blows of one king, who slew the watchman in Whetstone Park, were of the true Mohawk and Hounslow who, however, held at their hands at knocking down policemen—always provided that the policeman did not knock down the gentleman instead. The Mohawks had arisen again. The young patricians were behaving themselves very much like the young men of the backgrounds, and the blackguards had no option but to behave themselves like the patricians.

Francis Blunt, the young Irish gentleman, had left Stockwell shortly after eleven o'clock. The hackney coachman had been well paid, and remembered to have had a fare, but the rain and rapid Hansoms was yet to come, and it was nearly midnight when the two jaded horses that drew the vehicle stopped at the Hungerford Bridge. Mr. Blunt felt so exhausted that he was compelled to descend at a tavern on the Surrey side of the river, and refresh himself with a small glass of brandy. He re-entered the coach, making wry faces, and declaring the liquor to be abominable. Whereupon the hackney coachman to a glass of ale, but did not presume to accompany his master in the like. He ventured to say, however, outside, of a moderate sip from a small pocket-flask:

"Why didn't you tell me you had something to drink with you?" said the dandy, pettishly, as he saw his companion replace the flask in a side-pocket.

"I could not venture to ask monsieur—" began the valet, gravely.

"I dare say you couldn't, Constant. You're a sly fox, and always keep the best of the game to yourself. Here, give me the bottle. I have need of a little fortifying now to-night."

Mr. Blunt took a pretty heavy draught of the Dutch courage, which was, indeed, the very best Nantz cognac. He took a deep draught of it for a man of such delicately-strung nerves.

"Capital brandy," he murmured, smacking his lips. "You have a talent for buying the best of every thing for yourself. Why on earth did you allow me to go into that atrocious gin-palace?"

"It is for monsieur to lead the way."

"And for you constantly and carefully to avoid following me, and to allow me to fall into the lions' den. Constant, do you know what I have to do to-night?"

"To be bold and to win."

"You have taught me how to manage the one. I think I can depend on my own presence of mind for the other. But do you know how much I want?"

"Monsieur's wants are extensive."

"And so are yours, monsieur the sleeping partner. Eight hundred a rise from the table a winner of five thousand pounds I am a ruined man."

"Monsieur's creditors indeed are pressing."

"The creditors be hanged," Francis Blunt, Esq., retorted, with much equanimity. "It isn't for them I shall have to sit up till five o'clock this morning. But there are debts of honor, Constant, that must be paid. I owe Carleton fifteen hundred. I owe the Italian prince, what's his name? Marigliano, a monkey. I must send that wolf of mine a hundred pounds before to-morrow afternoon, or she will be crawling after me as usual. And then my ready money is all gone, or nearly so. I don't think I've got fifty pounds in my pocket. I've dropped over sixty pounds at that school at Chapham, Black-something House, to pay for that little brat:—that was by your advice, Monsieur Jean Baptiste. I tell you that I must have five thousand pounds out of Debonnair before sunrise or I am done. I must have ready money to go abroad with, and you know the most of my valuables are with them there are your wages, Constant."

"And my commission, if monsieur pleases."

"Ah! your commission, most immaculate of commercial agents. Five per cent., is it not? You go abroad with me, Constant, so that you know I am perfectly safe. By-the-way, you couldn't manage to take the hundred to the she-wolf's lodgings, could you?"

"Ready money is not very plentiful," returned the valet, after some consideration; "but I think that monsieur could manage by a little dressing to monsieur's demand. Might I, however, ask him to promise me one little thing?"

"What is it, you sly rogue? Rise in your wages?"

"Monsieur's service is sufficiently remunerative," answered the valet, and I believe he spoke with perfect sincerity. "It is not that."

"What then?"

"Not to touch the dice to-night. As my amour-propre is concerned, as a commercial operation they are destructive."

"Confound the bones, I know they are," Mr. Blunt, with a slight oath, answered, acknowledged. "If I had stuck to the coups you taught me at Vaujon I should have made ten thousand this season about. I've got a pretty inferno box in my hand without coming to grief in some way or another. And yet what money I have won—"

"And what is monsieur's luck?"

"Your answer is unanswerable. Yes; I will promise you. I'll keep my head cool, and won't touch ivory to-night."

"You are going to Crockford's."

"And go there. Sir. Sha'n't stop an hour. The only way of luring my pigeon out."

"And then?"

"Other barrelfuls-shep, of course. The worthy Count Cubford will expect his commission, of course, on the transaction, for permission to play Vaughn in the house. Every body wants his commission nowadays. I wonder Langhorne, of the Guards, doesn't ask for fifteen per cent. for having introduced me to Debonnair."

"You will be able to afford it if you only follow the instructions which I have given. I mean monsieur—must keep his head very cool, and, as much as possible, his eyes fixed on his opponent. Monsieur must never lose his temper, and never grow tired. Then, if he takes care, and Debonnair is grie enough, he will win his five thousand pounds before morning."

"I believe I shall. Five thousand pounds are more than five thousand louis, most unsophisticated Constant. Where are we? Oh, Charing Cross. Well get rid of this ramshackle old tub here. I shall go to the club and have a bath, and then—"

"To St. James's Street?"

"No, Constant, I don't fear that the business of the evening will commence. The night is young yet. It isn't a quarter past twelve."

"What shall therefore have the honor to leave monsieur?"

"Exactly, you will have that honor, most conscientious of valets. You will also have the honor of staying out as late as you like on this side of six: for I can't expect to be home before that time, but you will be up, and you must know the results of the campaign. It may be an Austerlitz, you know, but it may turn out a Waterloo, Constant. In the latter case I warn you against, for you don't seem to be troubled with any, or else you are up to them in the art of concealment, for which—"

"For which monsieur has the honor to leave monsieur?"

And so saying, Mr. Blunt waved his hand to his body-servant, and strode away in the direction of St. Paul's.

The valet paid the coachman five shillings in excess of his fare, at which jarvey drove away rejoicing. His master had flung him his cloak before leaving, saying that he would put on an overcoat, which he possessed at the club. Jean Baptiste Constant enveloped himself in this garment, but did not throw it into any melodramatic fold. He passed to be the mantle of a Byronic-looking patrician. It was now merely the cloak of a highly-accomplished gentleman's valet, who knew his cloak and kept it.

"Yes," murmured Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant, very softly, to himself, as he walked round the hoarding of those old mews once occupying the area of Trafalgar Square, but then just in process of demolition, "it may be Austerlitz, and it may be Waterloo—more than Waterloo—it may end in St. Helena and captivity, and death. Or, it may be Tenfant. Ah, the dear old sabob at Catchapore who writes such pretty letters about his little niece! Ah! le beau jeu que le vingt et un. Allons voir la Louve."

It was rather late at night to pay a visit to a she-wolf; but Monsieur Constant seemed bent on the enterprise, and diving into St. Martin's Lane, and through the mazes of Cranbourn Alley, was very soon in Leicester Place, Leicester Square.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE HOTEL RATAPLAN.

I DON'T know what has become of the Hotel Rataplan in these days. The neighborhood of Leicestersers Square's no more accustomed from mutability than its Anglo-Saxon vicinage; and Rataplan may have faded into decadence, or undergone an aristocratic change of name—even as Bug has been lately transmuted into Norfolk Howard—or have been swept away altogether. It is not a matter of much consequence. It is no part of my business here, at least, to follow the vicissitudes of every house in London town.

In the treating of the year '36; and in '36 the Rataplan flourished exceedingly, and was very much the Hotel Rataplan indeed.

Désiré Rataplan kept it. He was a gross, fat Frenchman. He looked not only like a landlord but a cook; and a capital cook he was. Who lards fat pullets should himself be fat, and Rataplan was larded all over. He was the most unctuous looking man it is possible to conceive, and his face, like that of many other fat men, was perfectly pale and colorless. The great art of figure-painters is, I have been desirous to represent flesh that has not an adventitious teint baséné in immediate juxtaposition with white linen. For this reason the clumsy painters, when they give us a man or woman dressed in white, usually make the flesh swarthy, or sallow, or melancholic. Rubens is accustomed to have been the only painter who really triumphed over the difficulties of chair embroidery. His sexagenarian should have come to the Hotel Rataplan and studied its proprietor. Rataplan was head cook in his own hotel, and wore the orthodox costume of chef. His jacket, his nightcap, his long apron, his duck trousers, his slippers, were all of the purest white, and his fine fat hands were dirty white too, and yet the contrast between his linaments and his habiliments was rather a pleasing than satisfactory one. It was the texture, perhaps, that did it. Otherwise, face and garments were identical. He looked like a cook who had a thin gold ring on his left hand to tongue; and, strange to tell, Rataplan wore over his hearth a discolored red ribbon—not on the breast of his jacket, and which he declared to be that of the French Légion of Honor.

"Recollect, I pray you," the Emperor himself on the field of Arcis-sur-Aube," he was accustomed so say. "C'est la quo nous avons gagné la victoire à ces canaillas d'Autrichiens. Et les Cossaques! bein! c'est Désiré Rataplan qui leur donna a boire et a manger en 1813. Ma foi, ces Cossaques, je les ai accoutumés a toutes sauces ces Cossaques."

He declared that he had the cross of the Légion of honor in a box. He had not always been a cook. Désiré Rataplan had served in the Grand Army. He had fought at Jena, Eylau, Essling, Wagram, at Leipsic. He only missed Waterloo because the regiment to which he belonged had been stationed at Saint Denis. "Et si on n'a pas été brigand de la Loire, moi qui vous parle," he would say.

The regiment, he stated, was the Trente-septième Ligne; but this he hearers would ultimately refuse to believe. That a soldier of the Grand Army should become a sleeper or a cook was no such very astonishing thing; but that so corpulent a man should have served in the light infantry exceeded reason and probability. He endeavored to reconcile assertion with fact by stating that he had been drum-major to the Thirty-seventh. But his scepticism remained obstinately incredulous. As a sapper and miner, as a heavy cuirassier, as a Grenadier of the Old Guard even, they were willing to accept him; but they declined all credence to his ever having been a "light bob."

He supplied us his wife. "Madame Rataplan was my comrade," he would say. "She was cantinière to the Trente-septième. She gave her own blankets once to the Emperor, when he was out of sanit. Davout has taken la goutte from her many and over again. Mon-sieur Le Prince d'Eckmuhl was very partial to Madame Rataplan."

Madame Rataplan, who was a meek, brown little woman, usually habited in a chintz bedjacket and a petticoat of blue serge, so much the worse for wear that time thoroughly to equip herself in feminine attire after resigning the tunic and pantaloons of a cantinière, would reply: "Tais raison mon homme. C'est y moi-z-aussi qu'a servi le Grand Homme."

They were all frantic in their fanaticism for the memory of the great man. In a dozen rooms of the Hotel Rataplan his portrait was hung. There was a plaster statue of him in the hall. There was a bust over a clock in the coffee-room. Rataplan would have called his hostelry the Hotel Napoleon but for the entreaties of his wife, who represented that the establishment was of so humble a character that to affix the name of the Great Man to it would be desecration. He did a very comfortable business at the Hotel Rataplan, however.

M. Rataplan had two children. Désiré, his son and heir, was away in France, head-waiter at Calais, till in the fullness of time it should be his lot to assume the direction of the establishment in Leicester Place. "I should have placed him sous les drapeaux, to serve his country as a soldier," said the paternal Rataplan; "but what is that flag, what is that caricature of the tricolor I see now:

Hélas maudite événement il s'écrie
C'est un drapeau que je ne connais pas.
Ah! si jamais mon fils il paîtra,
Dieu, mes enfants, vous donne sa bean tripas."

He was very fond of quoting Béranger's Vieux Sergent, although he certainly looked much more like the foolish fat scallion in Tristram Shandy than a relic of the Empire. He had a daughter, Adèle, aged seventeen, whose only duties until she was old enough to be married were, as her parents understood those duties, to keep her eyes cast down, and to divide her time between needle-work and the piano-forte. She had a tambour-frame in the office of the hotel, and a pretty little cottage piano in her own little sitting-room; and she played, and sewed, and kept her eyes cast down with exemplary assiduity.

Stay! The list of the family is not quite complete. There was a very large poodle dog by the name of Azor, who in youth had been a sprightly rogue, capable of going through the martial exercise and performing numerous other tricks, but whose infirmities had made him the won fame and fortune for their masters on the public stage. But Azor had grown lazy from long possession of the run of his teeth, in such a land of honey as the kitchen of a hotel. Formerly he used to be shaved, but was now allowed to wear the totality of his shaggy coat, so that he resembled a small polar bear quite as much as he did a large poodle.

Finally, there was at the Hotel Rataplan a prodigious old woman, who was called La Mère Thomas. Nobody could tell with precision who she was. Some said she was Rataplan's grandmother. Others that she was madame's aunt. She was evidently a kinswoman, for she tutoyed the whole family, called Rataplan mon frichon, and his wife mahèche, and occasionally boxed the ears of Adèle, apostrophizing her as "et toi Jeanneton, que ça pousse! comme ça pousse!" when she ventured to raise her eyes to glance at a passing stranger. La Mère Thomas was of immense, but uncertain age. Her complexion was of a fine mahogany color, and she wore a muslin cap which might have been envied by many a sabaltern in the Life Guards. On her chin, too, there sprouted sundry hairs, which, but for her previous jovial appearance, would have given her an uncomfortable family likeness to one of the witches in Macbeth. La Mère Thomas wore a crimson and yellow pocket-handkerchief bound lightly round her head and tied in a bow in front, another silk handkerchief crossed over her ample bosom and tied behind her, very much in the style adopted by the engaging damsels resident in the neighborhood of Ratcliff Highway. A large gold cross at her neck, a skirt of some indescribable fabric and of no color at all—people said it had originally been a flannel petticoat pieced with a sock—and carpet slippers, like an upholsterer's assistant. She trotted continually from one of those little tin boxes with a perforated top, like these which are used to keep gentles for fishing in. She was in the night-porter at the Hotel Rataplan, and travelers, whom she had let in very late, declared that she habitually smoked a short pipe after one in the morning. Her conversation was not copious. To the majority of questions addressed to her, her ordinary and expressive, but unintelligible reply was Fichtre! Sacre Fichtre! She was monosyllable, and not abundant, although she had been at least ten years in this country. She was a hearty old soul, however, and very fond of beer, which she drank by the quart.

Such was the Rataplan family. They were a good-natured group, all very fond of one another, and quarreling very seldom, as is the foolish manner of the French people.

The hotel was conducted without the slightest ostentation, but was, nevertheless, a sufficiently generous speculation. It was entirely used by French. Turning from Leicester Place into the hotel parlor, you might have fancied yourself at once in France—not necessarily in Paris, but in some provincial town. The hall was flagged with the usual gray marble, decorated with the same sham bronzes, and hung with the same array of shrill tinkling bells. The walls were gay with the usual highly decorated placards relating to chocolate, corn plasters, bills, elastic corsets, and hotels at Geneva, Lille, Dunkirk—or, say Calais and Dieppe—la- Guildarde. There was a little poky office, with pigeon holes for the lodgers' candlesticks, and numbered plates and books of keys, a green-shaded lamp on the secretaire, limp, green, shagreen-covered volumes, to keep the accounts in, a long, low arm-chair covered with Utrecht velvet for Mademoiselle Adèle, another higher and black leather one-sacred to La Mère Thomas. Madame Rataplan was seldom seen in the upper regions. She was, in fact, head chambermaid, her assistant being a dirty Irish girl, with a face like a kidney potato, and many chilblains, who got on very well with the Rataplans, principally for the reason that they were Roman Catholics. The salle à manger was a long, low room, uncarpeted, and the floor boxwaxed, furnished with the usual array of rush-bottomed chairs, the usual litter of half-emptied wine bottles, dingy napkins in dingier horn rings, knives that wouldn't cut, forks lacking their proper complement of prongs, copies of the Siècle and the Charivari seven days old, and a big mezzotint engraving after the Horace Vernet, representing Napoleon rising from the Tomb. Every thing was very French indeed. Every thing was very dear indeed. There was a table d'hôte every day at half-past six, at which the cookery was admirable and the wines were detestable. The latter were generally full of foreigners. The Rataplan clientèle abroad was extensive; and foreign visitors to England were accustomed to declare that, although the hotel accommodation of perfidious Albion was in general execrable, that offered by the Hotel Rataplan was passable and moderately cheap. They did not seem to be aware of the possibility of any hotels existing any where in London out of Leicester Place, or at least "Leycesterre Square."

Rataplan, then, prospered. He only kept one waiter, a young man from Alencon, named Antoine, with a red head and a face like a fox. This serviteur appeared by day in a waistcoat with black calico sleeves and baggy pantaloons of blue canvas terminating in stocking feet. He was accustomed to shout "Vous etesservi," or "Voicy z'eau," from the kitchen regions, but never to come down till he had been rung for at least a dozen times. At table d'hôte time he appeared in the black tail coat and white cravat de rigueur, and carried a servicette in lieu of a feather broom under his arm. He was very good-natured, and was in the question of the reckoning, passably honest. He had taught the Irish servant girl to play piquet with him, and was very fond of the game. A little quiet gambling Antoine was always ready with a portable roulette box with an ivory ball. He did not appear to cheat until he was found out.

I have forgotten to state that from basement to roof the Hotel Rataplan was thoroughly strewed of tobacco-smoke.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

Upon thy banks once more I sit,
Oh! river of my happy days,
Where memories on my heart are writ
In lines which time can not erase;
The tuneful water ripples by
A shore of sapphire and green,
And on the grass I sit and sigh,
"What might have been! what might have been!"

Flow on, flow on, my happy stream,
With gentle murmur day and night,
And never wan a sunny beam,
And be thy waters ever bright;
My life might once have flowed as well,
In peaceful calm, for what I yearned,
But its wild waters would rebel,
And to another channel turned.

Flow on, oh! river of my life,
Where flowers are ever in bud,
Flow on, mad stream that chose the strife,
And now no more repent the choice;
I wandered from my mother's arms,
My better angel from me passed,
I overlooked the truest charms,
And lost the world that might have been.

"MY LITTLE SISTER."

"WARNER'S Knight? Has any body seen Knighty?" asked the Colonel, suddenly, and with anxious solicitude, of a visitor who had called to see Captain Knighty to answer the question by bodily presence.

"Captain Knighty—who has seen him?" he demanded in a louder tone. A sergeant stepped forward, touching his cap.

"Captain Knighty is in the tint under—sconced, yur Honor."

"Badly?"

"I think he was, Sur. I caught him when he fell, and the blood was spurting from his side," answered Sergeant Murphy.

The face of the Colonel, that a moment since had been bright with triumph, now took on a sad, foreboding look.

"It was a famous victory," and Colonel Decker had distinguished himself, but if Jim Knighty was killed how much heart had he for success? He has looked mournfully into his tent as he uttered the "tint yonder" that Sergeant Murphy pointed out.

There he lay, who had been the foremost in the fight, his stalwart figure helpless, his ardent face ghastly with approaching dissolution. Decker saw it all at once as he entered. He could have cried out with sorrow, for almost as men love a woman had Decker loved Miss Knighty.

The hollow, dying eyes grew brighter at sight of the Colonel. Decker himself could not speak. A man of singular powers of command was speechless, he was dumb now. So it was Knighty who spoke first.

He smiled—the old gay smile; it wrung Decker's heart to see it—and said, faintly,

"We've won, Colonel!"

How the gay smile ran through the faint voice, and made it jubilant!

"Yes, Jim, we've won."

What was the utterly simple words that conveyed another assurance than of victory to Captain Knighty? He had scarcely thought of himself. They had carried him in here after he was wounded, and he had thought only of the "famous victory." What else? His wound was not painful. He did not even feel any weakness. He was very faint to be sure. What else, then, but the famous victory should fill his mind? But when Decker's dejected tones answered him; when, looking up radiant, he met Decker's grief-stricken face, his mind took in another idea. "It was a famous victory," but he was drifting away from it.

He turned his head and saw the sad looks of the two or three fellow-officers. Then back again to Decker.

"I believe I am going, Tom—is it so?"

There was no military etiquette between them now, and Decker's silence was the only response to these words. The two grasped hands. A moment more, then a spasm of anguish contracted Jim Knighty's face.

"What is it, Jim?"

"My little sister. I leave her all alone in the world. There is nobody—to look—out—" The voice was breaking off forever.

"I will look out for her, Jim. You leave her to me, old friend. To me, Jim—to Tom Decker—you'll trust me, dear old fellow;" and Decker's voice broke off too, but for sorrow.

How the dusky, dying eyes lit here.

"To Tom Decker! Yes—yes—I trust him. Tell her—good-by—Tom. Dear little Elly. To —Tom Decker!" The dying eyes opened once more, there was a movement of the lips—no words. The arms stretched out with their last strength, and those two men embraced each other.

"It was a famous victory." But Jim Knighty lay dead. That was the price that Tom Decker paid. For two or three years these two had been such friends as friendship sometimes points out, or that sometimes discovers its splendid rarity to you in the modern days of life. Men who loved one another like brothers, or like David and Jonathan, whose natures can understand such a friendship between man and man can understand all the desolation that Decker felt at Knighty with this fact. Desolate, though covered with honor for his gallantry upon this field of battle, he went home on the transport ship. He had no family. There was only one tie to call him from his soldier's post. That was Elly.

As he walked the deck of the steamer the was bearing him on his way he thought perpetually of Elly and her brother.

"What a wonderful fellow he was—so true, so generous, so simple and brave! Then: was not another like him.

And he thought of the brief time that seemed so long, because so full, since their companionship. Business had brought him to New York. As soon as they knew each other more, friends and lovers for life—say, and for death! Noble souls both of them, each loved the nobility in the other.

And he thought of this little sister. Honest Jim Knighty was not a man given to talking much of himself and commercially Decker knew that Knighty, sole relative, a sister, was somewhere up in Vermont, with old friends of the family. And now and then Jim would burst out with a little joy, and now and then he would speak of "my little sister."

Thinking of all this, and in view of her loss, his heart ached for the little lonely thing. He had a firm fancy that she was like her brother. She would carried her a doll for a gift. He didn't know much about children, especially little girls; but wouldn't it be a great deal for him to open her heart to him early as he had ever turned over some weighty question of war or business. And when he started from New York he purchased every toy in the shops that was the most wonderful doll he could find in all New York. But in spite of this Parisian dress knocks to the ground, I don't think that Colonel Decker ever contemplated a military step, or found himself in any situation, civil, social, or military, which embarrassed him like the thought of the coming interview with Jim Knighty's little sister. He wasn't used to children, and, to tell the truth, was a little afraid of them, regarding them with that mixture of gentleness and distrust which persons who have no children and men who have never been much associated with children. He also had expected them to cry at any moment; and in anticipation of this catastrophe he was rather shy of making advances. With these ancient feelings, revived and exaggerated by the peculiarity of his circumstances, Decker arrived in the great old-fashioned parlor at High Mount, the place of the Westerlyns, just outside of Montpelier, the present home of Elly Knighty.

He heard a voice calling "Elly! Elly!" and to fortify himself he glanced nervously at the oblong looking-glass over the fire. "Elly! Elly!" and then some murmured words of explanation; and then a hush; and then the light fall of little feet. He looked anxiously toward the door; but it was a young lady who entered. So Elly wouldn't come. He was very sorry—it was a mercy.

"I am Colonel Decker, Captain Knighty's friend. I was with him when he died. He gave his little sister to my charge—a welcome charge to me, you will understand, for Captain Knighty was my dear friend. Do you think the child will see me?"

He paused for an answer, looking still anxiously toward the door. There was so long his eyes came back more observantly to her whom he questioned. The standing before him with a forbidding look on her face—a young pale face, full of the self-absorption of some great sorrow. So absorbed was she in her own sense of her own painful consciousness. And when she raised her head at last and said, so simply, "I am Captain Knighty's sister," Decker was in the most peculiar position, and lost any embarrassment he might have felt in the pity and sympathy that overwhelmed him at sight of that utterly stricken face and the dejected tones.

She sat down by him, and with a quiet gravity that was more heart-breaking than sobs and tears, questioned him in the spirit of the dead. She looked so like Jim, as she listened there, with her patient, melancholy face—so like Jim, and yet so unlike him in the sombre brightness of her youth and sex—and her calm was so eloquent of the desolateness that had come to her, that altogether it was almost more than brave Tom Decker could bear. It was not until he had left her presence, and was driving back to town, that he realized what his mistake involved.

So this was Elly, the little sister whom he had received in charge from dying Jim Knighty. The consolation that he had anticipated was entirely out of place. A doll would not console this Elly Knighty whom he had seen. And then he remembered, with a half smile, that he had left the oblong box, with its Parisian treasure, upon the parlor-table at High Mount. But how could he console her? How could he be of service to his chance without wounding her delicacy? She had seemed a child to her brother—"My little sister." "Well, she can not be more than twenty," reasoned Colonel Decker. "She is a child to me, as she was to Jim: fifteen years makes some difference. I hope she'll see it so."

But the reasoning and the perplexed questioning proved that he feared she would'n't.

He went to see her again the next day, and the next, and the next, until the days ran into weeks.

"She has such simplicity and fresh-heartedness, and she loved Jim so deeply that by-and-by she will understand me, and tell him that she will let me take his place as far as I can."

This was what the Colonel had meant to bring about by lingering and waiting so long. To take Jim's place to her as brother and guardian. She needed such a protector sorely enough, for with Jim Knighty's brave life had departed the sole support of hers. And to have her go out teaching, or anything of that kind, this young, gently-nurtured, delicate creature, why it would break Captain Jim Knighty's heart. He had taken steps, too, to prevent any such necessity. There had been an investment which promised ample support in two or three months ago, what had seemed so safe to Captain Knighty proved rotten to the core, and thus Captain Knighty was pretty near poor, at the saddest time of her existence. So it was that Colonel Decker staid to let time and association teach Elly Knighty to regard him as the brother in Jim's stead. And waiting for this teaching he found himself taught quite another lesson.

There came a day—or when something must be said; for the furlough was nearly out. He began to her when she also was thinking that morning:

"Elly, in two weeks I must go to my regiment."

Elly. He could call her Elly now for Jim's sake. He thought she loved now for Jim's sake.

"Elly, in two weeks I must go back to my regiment."

Not a word did she answer him. He waited, looking down at her. Such a pretty pale face, noble and sad, full of girlish freshness. By-and-by it lifted to him.

"I want to ask your advice about something before you go. Captain Jim was fond of you, and he would like to have had me appeal to you first for advice."

Yes, as Jim's friend. He had taught her the lesson. Well?

"Had a blockhead have been!" he murmured inwardly.

"I have had an invitation from the principal of the High School here to become a teacher there, but Mrs. Westerlyn thinks I had better take a situation as governess. The Gaylords need a governess in Boston, Mrs. Gaylord and Mrs. Westerlyn thinks I might get the post."

She went on to tell him of the advantages and disadvantages of each place, that he might give her a clear judgment, but he hardly heard a word of what she said, his thoughts were in such a tumult.

"He must not be, it must not be!" he broke out at last.

She looked at him astonished.

"Elly, let me tell you how I came here." And he told her of his mistake in supposing she was a child; of his perplexity and doubt as he thought of Jim's sister; and of the toll he had left pressed on the way, to open her heart to him. "I had adopted you there at Jim's death-bed, Elly, for—your little sister." With a feeling that he repeated every word that passed between her brother and himself on that bed. He had never told her all before: he could not.

"He gave you to me, Elly; his last words were: 'To Tom Decker.' You shall live here, or where you like; but you must let me do for you as Jim did. I have nothing else to do with what I have. Elly, the world has been the bitterest foe to Jim to have had you wearing your life away in teaching. And, Elly, think—I am fifteen years your senior, but I am a little old for my age. And think too, Elly, that I loved him, and he loved me. He trusted you to me, Elly."

"Yes, Colonel Decker, I think—that is the only way now, and I will make it easy to her." But all the time he was groaning at "the way." While he was talking to Elly, the room grew dim and pale by turns, and the tears ran down her cheeks.

"No, no. I can't, I can't" she presently faltered, pushing him away, but trembling visibly in her effort at control.

"Elly, are you so proud? He was my only friend. I had given him almost like a woman. He left you to me as a legacy. It was my conclusion."

"No, it is not because I am proud; but I can not, I can not."

"Why, Elly?"

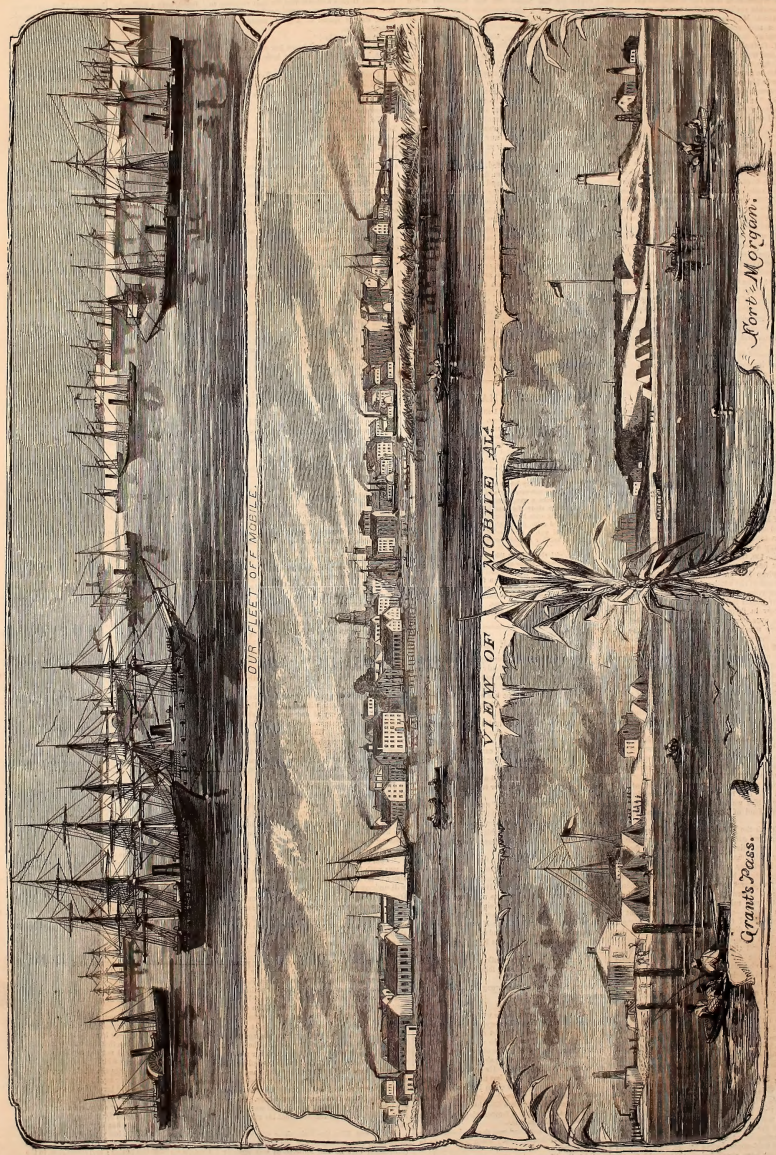
She looked up for an instant at that appealing voice. Her secret was in her eyes, but she did not know it.

"Elly!" There was a new tone in the voice. Every thing had changed at once to him as he met her eyes.

"Elly, will you bear another story? Will you let me plead a different cause? If you had listened to the other I should never have told this, because I should have known then that that was your choice. But now—Elly, you will not be 'my little sister.' Oh, Elly, can you be my wife?"

And in this last sentence the whole story of love was told. What did Elly say? What could Elly say, with all this time had loved him too well to be his "little sister?"

And this is the end of my story, but not of theirs. God grant it may not end for a long, long time to them. Colonel Decker has been on other battlefields since then, and he has won other laurels, but he can be hardly more sacred of any: than where Captain Knighty lies buried; and sometimes, in the silence of his tent at night, he seems to hear again those last words—"To Tom Decker."



OUR FLEET OFF MOBILE.
VIEW OF MOBILE Alt.
Fort Morgan.
Grant's Pass.

MOBILE AND ITS DEFENSES.

WE give on page 204 an illustration showing the position of the Federal fleet off the harbor of Mobile, together with the defenses of the harbor. At last accounts (25th ult.) Admiral FARRAGUT was bombarding Fort Powell, which commands Grant's Pass, on the left of the picture. This fort is bomb-proof, but, under the vigorous fire directed against it, could not, it was believed at the date of the latest advices, long hold out. The reduction of this fort is necessary to enable FARRAGUT to send his mosquito fleet through the Pass into the harbor of Mobile, by which he will cut off forts Gaines and Morgan. The distance from Fort Powell is thirty miles, nine of which are through a narrow channel, with its banks fortified the entire distance. Fort Morgan is a very strong work, protected on the sea front by a strong water-battery of masonry and turf. The fort and battery, with their full battery, mount forty-five guns, mostly Columbiads of heavy calibre. Fort Gaines is situated on Dauphin's Island Point, three miles and one fourth from and nearly opposite Fort Morgan, and is heavily mounted. Vessels drawing more than seven and a half feet are compelled to pass between these forts; and obstructions placed in the channel will make the passage for FARRAGUT still more difficult.

Mobile is one of the largest cities on the Gulf, and is fairly environed by defenses thrown up during the last two years. The authorities, however, do not appear to feel secure against assault; for on the 25th ult. the Mayor of the city issued a proclamation requesting all non-combatants to leave the city, intimating that its capture was not impossible, and that in any case, if the city should be besieged, suffering might result from the want of supplies.

HONORABLE MICHAEL HAHN,
GOVERNOR OF LOUISIANA.

THE 4th of March was the beginning of a new era in the history of Louisiana. Not only was the Federal authority on that day formally re-established, but a State Administration fully in accord with the liberal spirit of the times was installed amidst the rejoicings of thousands of citizens. The inauguration of MICHAEL HAHN, the Governor elect, whose portrait we here give, was attended by a grand and imposing display—all the school-children of the city, all the veteran and volunteer soldiers, all the Federal and city officials participating in the demonstration. The inauguration ceremonies took place in Lafayette Square, which was densely crowded with people. Mr. HAHN, when formally installed, delivered his Inaugural Address, pledging himself to an unconditionally loyal policy, and taking high ground in favor of the extinction of Slavery, which he denominated the cause of all our present troubles.

HON. MICHAEL HAHN, GOVERNOR OF LOUISIANA.—[PHOT. BY THEO. LILIENTHAL, NEW ORLEANS.]

Governor HAHN was born in Bavaria, Germany, in the year 1830, and is consequently in the thirty-fourth year of his age. He came to this country when a mere child, his mother settling in New York city. When ten years of age, he went with his mother and sisters to TEXAS, whence, some time after, they removed to New Orleans, where Mr. HAHN has ever since resided. In 1840 his mother died of yellow fever. At the age of 18 he commenced the study of the law, and at 20 graduated with honor at the Louisiana University, at once taking a prominent position in the community.

In politics Mr. HAHN was always a Democrat, and in the last Presidential campaign was a member of the DOUGLAS Executive Committee. When secession was first proposed in the spring of 1861, he took strong ground against it, and during all the time the rebels ruled in New Orleans refused to fall in with the prevailing madness. Upon the occupation of New Orleans by our forces he was among the first to step forward to the help of General BUTLER. In December, 1862, Mr. HAHN was elected to Congress, where he soon became recognized as a man of undoubted patriotism and ability. He was elected Governor in February last by a majority of 986 over both competitors, in a total vote of 11,846, every loyal paper in the State supporting his claims for the exalted and responsible position.

BY THE RIVER.

THE sunshine quivered on the quivering poplars
That grow beside the stream;
And o'er the distant hills there seemed a glory,
A gold and purple gleam;
And I know
That even in the March wind there was music,
And in the river's flow.

I loved to hear the sighing of the water,
To mark its green depths shine;
But more I loved two brown eyes, calm and tender,
A hand clasped in mine;
For I know
I thought that love would last forever, changeless,
Though rivers ceased to flow.

Gone is the sunshine from the quivering poplars,
The glory from the head;
Gone, the brown eyes that made the sunshine brighter,
And gone the clasping hand;
But I know
My tears are like the river—ah, the river!
That can not cease to flow.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

THE Fashions for March are very much modified by the Siberian state of the temperature during the latter part of February. An exaggeration has been developed in the head-dress, which has become an amphitheatre composed of flowers, feathers, ribbons, velvet, and precious stones. On account of the space taken up in this manner, polite husbands mount the box by the side of the coachman. The more permanent bonnet, however, it is officially announced, is to lose in the coming Spring all that the head-dress has gained.

The chapeaux are no longer to be high floral expositions, but almost flat over the forehead, close-fitting to the outline of the face, and small in proportion every way; thus returning to the style so long adopted in England, which often indicated in Paris the nationality of the pretty British tourist contrasted with the Parisian belles, who now affect the black silk or velvet bonnet, ornamented with jet, par preference. Other colors, mostly in velvet, are admissible, but neutral shades are the most distingués.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Evening Dress.—Lilac and taffety robe, with open corsage. The lapels are in red, blue, and green plaid velvet, buttoning over the waist by a double row of buttons. The watched and cuffs are likewise in velvet plaid; but from the former depends a long and wide silk lacing streamer. The chemisette is embroidered and provided with a small upright collar, fastened with a narrow light blue cravat.

Fig. 2. Ball Dress.—White tulle robe, trimmed with six flounces of bullion plaits. Over the robe are placed three lapes of plain tulle, forming a tunic, and drawn up at the side by a bouquet of flowers to which they are attached. Pointed corsage, provided with drapery, fastened at the shoulders and in the centre with small roses. The coiffure is of the latest mode, the hair being raised in front and ornamented with an abundance of flowers.

Fig. 3. Carriage Dress.—Light green velvet robe of the style known as the style Princesse, trimmed above the seam, round the pockets, and on the sleeves with rolls of fur. The front of the skirt and of the corsage is closed with black velvet buttons. Brown velvet bonnet of the modified form, decorated with a feather fastened to the top of the crown by a large rose, similar to that ornamenting the front of the chapeau.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH, 1864.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, small as he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, without the risk of your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

Millinery and Dressmaking Announcement.

MADAME BENEDICT invites the LADIES of New York for her OPENING DAY, TUESDAY, the 22D of MARCH, to inspect her NOVELTIES in MILLINERY and DRESSMAKING. Milliners not admitted.
12 WAVERLY PLACE.

Life and Anecdotes of Thackeray.

D. APPLETON & CO., 443 and 445 Broadway, N. Y.,
NOW READY.
THE ONLY AUTHENTIC EDITION.
THACKERAY;
THE
Humorist and Man of Letters.

The Story of his Life, with Particulars of his Early Career never before made public. By ECKHARD LOBE. Esq. Illustrated with a Portrait, one of the latest taken from life; View of Thackeray's House; Fac-simile of his Hand-writing; Humorous Illustrations by George Cruikshank; and other Pictures and Sketches.
1 Vol. 12mo, Price $1.25.
Sent free by mail on receipt of price.

American Needle Co. 442 Broadway, New York.

J. W. BARTLETT,
Needle Manufacturer for all the Sewing Machines.
BARTLETT'S BERKSHIRE HAND NEEDLE: any quantity, any size, by mail or express. "We find them a wonderful improvement. Try 250 for 50c."—Mme. Demorest.

FLORIMEL.

BURNETT'S FLORIMEL is an exquisite handkerchief perfume.

Burnett's Cocoaine.

WHATEVER DR. BURNETT makes is the best of its kind. His famous COCOAINE, for the hair, and Flavoring Extracts sustain that reputation. For sale by druggists, grocers, and country dealers.

The Printer's Devil, a handsome illustrated family paper, will be sent six months on trial for 25 cents. Terms and Prizes in every number. Address
"PRINTER'S DEVIL," 113 Fulton Street, N. Y.
Sold by all Newsdealers.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE.

Major-General Burnside

Writes, Jan. 29th, 1864, after thanks for what he is pleased to call our "useful and beautiful present" of a "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case:" "It is the most complete thing for a Smoking Apparatus that I have ever seen, and is entirely within the reach of the General's pay." Price, that it will certainly work itself into general use!

Gen'l Thomas' Female Miracle Worker!

Feb. 5th, 1864.

To the Ridgewood Manufacturing Co.

Gentlemen:—I feel great pleasure in acknowledging, with many thanks, your present of the "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case," and beg sincerely to assure you of my belief that your ingenious and beautiful little invention will prove most convenient and useful to every Officer and Soldier, who can stand Smoke as well as Joe.

And remain, faithfully yours, &c.

Compact and portable, as a Cigar Case, this Case contains styles at $1.50, $2.00, $2.25, $2.50, $3.00, $3.75 and $4.00, in variety richly gilded and engraved.

Pipes and Cases sent by mail, free to the Army, and everywhere, on receipt of price and 25 cents. A liberal Discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Also the of superior flavor and flavor, put up in Packages to fill the Case, and in various sizes for the General Trade. Also the 5 pound package of this FINE TOBACCO, (smoking and chewing cut) put up mail, free, on receipt of $1.25. All Goods promptly filled.

Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

OFFICE RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
459 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, New York.

SOMETHING NEW
IN PLAYING CARDS.
LOVE SCENES.
Designed from French Artists.

The above new Card has fifty-two beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can also be used the same as ordinary playing cards, thus combining pleasure with amusement. Packed 56 cards and two red stamps, and send for sample pack. $5 per dozen. Liberal discount by gross to dealers. H. A. CASWELL, 60 NASSAU St., New York.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Onguent before them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 NASSAU STREET, N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."
THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

SUITABLE PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Superior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in sizes to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION HOLDERS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1.25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1.50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Pens of the first-rate wood-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridomia Points, the average wear of every one of which for our future a genre of the Standard Pens is calculated they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. MORTON," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for one month, unless accidented.

The Numbers indicate size only. No. 1 being the smallest, No. 10 the largest, adapted for the pocket. No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the Gold Pens.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 25, a No 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION HOLDERS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50 a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, AT FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 00 a No. 7 Pen.

For $3 50 a No. 8 Pen; for $4 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridosmine Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection, and none but the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1860.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true considerations) any Gold Pens made heretofore.

Particular ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to give the kind they prefer—whether six or fourth, coarse or fine.

All applications sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering) in addition to the price of gods ordered, I will guaranty their safe delivery.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $12, of 15 per cent. on $24, and of 20 per cent. on $40, if sent to one address at one time.

A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

Albums for the Army.

Our New Pocket Album,

holding sixteen pictures, and sold at

Seventy-five Cents,

is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.

Sent by mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of Seventy-five Cents.

SAMUEL BOWLES & COMPANY,

Photograph Album Manufacturers,
Springfield, Mass.

"TIP TOP."

THE JAN., FEB., AND MARCH PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBERS PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL
Are the best ever issued. They contain more than 100 Portraits and other Engravings, including Major-Gen. Meade, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Elgin, Gen. Thomas, Bishop Hughes, Captain Ericsson, Spirit and Grain, Wind, Music, Biography, also Beautiful Women. Only 45 cents for the three; $1 50 a year. New Vol. Address
FOWLER & WELLS, No. 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Opera and Field-Glasses

Can see a man distance of 3 to 4 miles. Spectacles and Eye-Glasses with French flint glass. Microscopes of every description, from $1 to $50. R. & J. BECK, No. 6 Fulton Street, Philadelphia, and 110 Nassau-way, cor. Fulton St., up stairs. Wholesale and Retail. Send for Circular.

Brandreth's Pills

PURIFY THE BLOOD.

It is not pretended that a single life, or even an extended experience of one hundred and twelve years with a medicine, however successful, is sufficient to establish a theory of cure. But if ages of experience since, and during the life of Hippocrates, have confirmed the utility of Purging in all cases of sickness, then it would have weight with the medical profession, as it has with that portion of the public at large, whose attention has been directed to the subject, and who have seen the wonderful curative effects of Brandreth's Pills.

I have also, WITH MY PILLS, "The Literary Curiosities from the History of The Doctrine of Purgation," being selections from the writings of physicians, beginning with Hippocrates, 460 B. C., and ending with Rudolph Virchow, in 1860.

It will be this men that the advantages of Purging, when all important effective agent is used, have been appreciated by more than one thousand medical men whose testimony is now preparing, and within a few weeks will be presented to the public. I think it will settle the propriety of the use of Brandreth's Pills theoretically. Their practical utility has already been tested for

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELVE YEARS.

B. T. Babbitt's Articles of Every-day Use.

PURE MEDICINAL YEAST,

Manufactured from common Salt and Pure Cream Tartar. When used in Bread, Cake, or Biscuit, it turns to gas twice the Leavening Quality of Soda Water, and remains dormant in the dough until it is set in the oven, when it will then rise, same as the gas to escape through the dough in the baking. Is Sold by Grocers, and, like Biscuit is not only very light, but perfectly wholesome. Directions for using, with each yeas will require about one-quarter the quantity of Saleratus, mixed with cold water. Yeast. It may also be used for Buckwheat Cakes, Griddle Cakes, and all kinds of Pastry. This Yeast is put up in one-pound packages, handsomely done, with checkered label. Red, White, and Blue, and will keep in any climate for two institutions.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP with B. T. Babbitt's Pure Concentrated Potash, Warranted double strength, Chemically Prepared, and superior to any other Saponifier or lay in Stock. Put up in cans of 1 lb., 2 lbs., 3 lbs., 6 lbs., and 12 lbs., with full directions, in English and Germen, for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make Fifteen pounds of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market.

B. T. Babbitt's Medicinal Saleratus. A perfectly pure and wholesome article, free from all deleterious matter; so prepared that, as the popular consumer of the Saleratus of the shop, nothing remains in the bread when baked, but nutritious Bran, Shorts, and Flour.—Put up neatly in papers, 1 lb., 8 lb., and 1 lb.

B. T. Babbitt's Concentrated Soft Soap. One box costing One Dollar, will make 60 gallons of handsome Soft Soap, by simply adding boiling water.

B. T. Babbitt's Soap for Family Use. One pound of this Soap is equal to three pounds of ordinary Family Soap. One pound will make 5 gallons of handsome Soft Soap—and it will remove paint, grease, tar, and stains of all kinds. It will not injure the hands; on the contrary, it preserves it. It will wash in hard or salt water. Not a little labor is required where this Soap is used. Machinists and Printers will find this Soap superior to anything in market. If your Storekeeper does not keep the above goods, send $5 by mail, and I will send a package of either article or an assorted box containing a part of each article, as you may desire. Send the name of your post-office, also the State and County in which you reside, with directions for shipping.

Address,

B. T. BABBITT,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington Street, N. Y.

A liberal discount to Storekeepers.

Best Thing Out!

The "Patent Pocket Army Pipe," just out, is decidedly the most practical article for soldiers in the market. It is of fine aparance, SELF-CLEANING, will not rust and BURN OUT. It is a perfect smoker, and compact, is not easily stopped up, as it can be taken into FOUR PARTS immediately. The fire can not be seen, neither can it drop out. By a very ingenious arrangement the smoke is cooled and thoroughly separated from the moisture, making it the cleanest, most economical, and delightful smoking pipe in the world. One month's use will pay the price of $2 25. We also manufacture the famous Magic Cork-Screw, Pocket Corkscrew, Union Cap Compound, Prize Packages, Match safes, &c., and we will send 12 different samples of our different articles, nicely packed, free, on receipt of $4 00. Circulars and free per mail. Address in full RICHARDS, CO., 17 and 19 Nassau St., Box 2131, New York.

P. S. Money and its registered letters is at our risk.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner.

For Kerosene Oil. Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light free from smoke and odor, and needs no chimney. We have now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which everywhere gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 25 cts. Agents wanted. Address E. ESSIG & CO., MANUFACTURERS, 2 Pitch Street, New York.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 32x51. Price $1,000.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

MANTILLAS.
BRODIE'S
SPRING OPENING
Took place on
Tuesday, 8th March.
BRODIE,
The Leader of Fashions,
Will make an early Spring Opening of
Ladies' Garments.

For novelty of style, for richness of material, and for endless variety of colors, coupled with moderate prices, the ladies of America never had such inducements to call on the

"Leader of Fashions."

No. 300 Canal Street,

Near Broadway.

LATEST INVENTION IN GOLD PENS.
JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with an Iridium or Diamond Point, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest price pen made, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an elastic and diamond pointed pen at a low figure, and, until now, all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising low-priced pens and calling them gold. We know that ours is the only solid gold and genuine diamond pointed and elastic pen in the market that can be sold anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices by the Dozen.

No. 1. Medium Engraving	$3 50.
No. 2. Smaller Engraving	$3 75.
No. 3. Large Engraving	$4 50.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders in Morocco Case, extra	$4 00.

A Discount of 10 per cent. made on all orders of $250 and upward.

Sample Pens.

No. 1. Medium Pen	40 cents.
No. 2. Medium Engraving	50 cents.
No. 3. Large Engraving	60 cents.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders in Morocco Case, extra	50 cents.

Warrantee.

We warrant every pen for one year, and to be solid gold, genuine diamond and iridium pointed, and to possess all the elasticity of the most expensive gold pen made.

We send these pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price. Money properly registered and sealed comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 181 Broadway, New York.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect ourselves and purchasers from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

The manufacture four styles of Watches:

The FIRST has the name

"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The SECOND has the name

"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The THIRD has the name

"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The FOURTH has the name

"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the Ellery Watch Co."

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually known by the name most nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH CO." Others have no name on the movement. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold at our FOURTH or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as THE "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others are named the "AMERICAN WATCH CO.," others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from great imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Enameled Chamber
FURNITURE.

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, walnut and chestnut, plain and ornamental, in sets, wholesale and retail. Also Bedsteads and Feathers. WARREN WARD, 377 Canal St., N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $125 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 70 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches.. 18 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 " " " ..... 3 00 to 5 00 each.
4000 Cameo Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 8 00 each.
3500 Gent's Breast Pins..... 3 50 to 8 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys..... 3 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Fob and Ribbon Slides..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sets of Bosom Studs..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
6000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'ted Holders 4 00 to 8 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Gases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those setting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

208 Broadway, New York.

New Cavalry Badge, in Solid Silver, $1 50.
New Artillery and Battery Pin, in fine Gold Plate, $1 50.
New Battle Pin, with the likeness of either General, in fine Gold Plate, $1.
New Naval Pin, fine Gold Plate, $1 50.
New Postmaster's Pin, do., $1 50.
New Engineer's Pin, do., $1 50.
Also a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Div., or Co. Pin, with your Name, Reg., and Co. lettered on, and engraved thereon, for $1.
Liberal commission and premiums allowed to agents.
J. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. They are an INFALLIBLE REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. Sold at No. 619 Broadway, N. Y.
Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1.50 each. Sent by mail for 20 cents additional.

$100 a Month made by discharged Soldiers, and sixteen other articles. Don't fail to send for a free Catalogue, containing full particulars. Address
MILLIKEN & SPENCER, Vermont Secret Office, Brandon, Vermont.

Something New in the Card World.

A COMPLETE REVOLUTION.
TIME FOR A CHANGE.
FOREIGN EMBLEMS USED
LONG ENOUGH.
NATIONALITY EVERYTHING.
THE AMERICAN CARD COMPANY.
NOW
conceiving that the introduction of

National Emblems

in the place of Foreign, in Playing Cards, would be hailed with delight by the people of the American republic, produced the UNION PLAYING CARDS, NATIONAL EMBLEMS,
(the first and only genuine American Cards ever made), and they now take pleasure in being able to announce that they are rapidly becoming the
LEADING CARDS IN THE AMERICAN MARKET.
The Suits are
EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, AND FLAGS.
Colonel in place of King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Knave.
As these emblems are as familiar as household words everywhere among the people of the American republic, so the games can be played as readily with the Union Cards as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Independent of the popular idea of national emblems, they are the prettiest cards ever made. They are handsomely executed, pleasing to the eye, and each pack is put up in an elegant card case, and tied in three for the trade.
For sale by the trade everywhere.
To ensure prompt packs, in case, send post-paid on receipt of $1. Address
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
165 William Street or 14 Chambers Street, New York.

Deafness Overcome BY DR. HASLAM'S SOUND MAGNIFYING TUBES. They can be examined. Send for a descriptive pamphlet to
E. HASLAM, 23 John Street, New York.

To Consumptives.

Consumptive sufferers will receive a valuable prescription for the cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung affections (free of charge), by sending their address to
Rev. E. A. WILSON,
Williamsburgh, Kings Co., New York.

Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition.
This arm is now offered to the public as superior to any other ever offered to the public. The great advantages of loading with either of loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others.
We also offer to the public our Sniper Plate & Reynolds Cartridge and loose ammunition loading receiver. This arm may be used as a rifle or breech loading gun.
For further particulars send for descriptive circular.
P. S. Do not forget that both Rifle and Gun may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.
MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
292 Broadway, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GROUPS of eminent actors and actresses, costumed for the stage, by the new ambrotype process. Size 25 cents each; 5 for $1; 13 for $3. Sent, post-paid, by RICHARD PARKER & CO., cor. Ann and Nassau Streets, New York.

DR. B. C. PERRY,
DERMATOLOGIST,
49 Bond Street, New York,

Formerly of 20 Winter Street, Boston, treats successfully all Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair, and Premature Baldness. Also, removes Moth Freckles, and other Discolorations from the face, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultations free.
For particulars enclose stamp for Circular.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy
Read Bros. Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular and Price Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., six cents. Address Read Bros. Co., No. 70 Ann St., N. Y., and 25 Lincoln St., Boston.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, Expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 circulars free. Address JOHN F. LIRD, Biddeford, Maine.

We are now offering our Celebrated Gold Pens and Extension Silver Plated Holders at the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1 Ladies' Gold Pens and Holders, per doz. $5 00
No. 2 " " " " 7 00
No. 3 Ladies' or Gents' Gold Pens and Holders, per doz. 9 00
No. 2 " " " " 8 00
No. 3 Extra Heavy " " " 11 00
No. 2 " " " " 10 00
Gold Pens and Holders are all warranted, and will retail from $2 to $5 each.
A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $50 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have nice fancy boxes, costing one dozen each, and are not sold in less quantities. Send by mail or express pre-paid.
Address SALISBURY BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

BAKER'S RHEUMATIC BALM,
BAKER'S FEVER COOLER,
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE,
BAKER'S CHOLIC ALLEVIATOR,
are four remedies which no family should ever be without. Price $1 per bottle each.
Also,
BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $5.
Principal Depot: No. 154 Tenth Street, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists.
Remedies sent to any address upon receipt of price.

CARPET WARP.
WOOL TWINE.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, New York.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to Mr. MORRIS, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, Franklin Square.

GOLD AND SILVER JEWELRY.

Fine gold hunting case cylinder escapement Watches for ladies, forty, forty-five, fifty to sixty-five dollars each. Fine gold hunting case detached Levers for ladies and gentlemen, forty-five, fifty, fifty-five, sixty, sixty-five, seventy-five, one hundred, two, and three hundred dollars each. Gold hunting enameled Watches for ladies, fifty, sixty, seventy, eighty, ninety, one hundred to three hundred dollars each, some with diamonds outside. Gold Watches for ladies as low as twenty-eight, thirty, and thirty-five dollars each. Fine gold hunting case English Patent Levers for gentlemen, eighty-five, ninety, one hundred, one hundred and twenty-five, to two hundred dollars each. Gold hunting case American Watches, eighty-five, ninety, one hundred, to one hundred and twenty-five dollars each.

SILVER WATCHES.

Silver hunting case Lepine, 16, 18, and $20 00 each. Silver detached Levers, 18, 20, 22, 25, to $35 00 each. Silver English Patent Levers, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50, to $75 00 each. Silver American Watches, 20, 30, 35, 40, to $60 00 each. All Watches warranted to keep correct time, and sent by mail or express to all parts of the United States and Canadas without risk. Watches cleaned and warranted repaired in the best manner, by the finest London and German workmen.

EARRINGS AND PINS, NEW STYLES.

Two, three, four, five, six, eight, ten, twelve, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, thirty-five, forty, fifty, to seventy-five dollars a set.

WATCH CHAINS, NEW STYLES.

Two, three, five, six, eight, ten, twelve, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five, forty, fifty to one hundred dollars each.

Sleeve Buttons and Studs, New Styles.

One, two, three, four, five, six, eight, ten, twelve, fifteen, twenty, to thirty dollars a set.

Ladies' Bracelets.

Two, three, four, five, six, eight, ten, twelve, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, thirty, to seventy-five dollars each.
For sale by GEO. C. ALLEN, 415 Broadway, New York, one door below Canal Street, formerly and for twenty-two years in business in Wall Street.

Gilt Combs, New Styles.

Two, three, five, six, eight, ten, and fifteen dollars each.

Gilt Dress Combs.

Two, three, four, five, six, eight, ten, twelve, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, to thirty dollars each.

Gent's Dress Glasses.

Five, six, eight, ten, twelve, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, and thirty dollars each.
For sale by GEO. C. ALLEN, 415 Broadway, N. Y., one door below Canal Street.

Cavalry Badges.

Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest style Cavalry Badge, sent free to any address on receipt of Sixteen, with Name, No. of Regiment handsomely engraved thereon.
Solid Silver..... $3 00
Solid Silver, letters in gold relief..... 5 00
Solid gold..... 8 00
Solid gold enameled.. 9 00
Also new style Artillery Badges, and every style Cavalry Corps and Corps Badge worn by the Army. Send for our Illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

50 DRUMS FOR VIOLIN AND PIANO, 50c. "Bugle Call," 50 Patriotic Songs and Quartettes, 25c. "Tunes of the World," Accordion, Flute, Violin, or Fingerlet, 50c. Violin and Silk Violin Strings, 25c., mailed. Descriptive price list musical instruments sent on receipt of poststamp. FREDERICK BLUME, 703 Bowery, N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry
Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

Solid Silver, $1 50.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.
We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Pins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field, at $1 50 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one, 100, or 1000.
Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for circular. Address
DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers, 209 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Military and Naval
COLLECTOR AND DRAWING OFFICE.—SOLDS, BROWN & CO., No. 2 Park Row, New York, adjust and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

POLLAK & SON.
MERCHANT MANUFACTURERS, 257 Broadway, N. Y., near Bowery, N. Y., sell wholesale and retail. Will send, for a charge, a genuine Pipe for $5 Dollars. Pipes cut to order and repaired.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts. Call and examine, or 10c. sample and 25c. book mailed for 30c. Retails for $2, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

The Army Lantern.
The Convex Reflector Lantern.
(PATENTED APRIL, 1863.)
For burning Gold Oil or Kerosene Mineral Chimney. GIVES A PURE WHITE LIGHT without Chimney.
PRICE REDUCED BOTTOM OF ALL DESCRIPTION.
FLAME IS REGULATED from the outside.
IS VERY STRONG AND HARD, AND CONVENIENT IN SIZE AND SHAPE.
Sample sent on receipt of $1.
ARCHER & PANCOAST, Manufacturers of Gas Fixtures, Coal Oil Lamps, Chandeliers, &c., 9, 11 and 13 Mercer Street, New York.
N. B. Liberal discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Circulars with particulars sent free.

New Army Watches.
ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 212 Broadway, New York, want Agents in every county and every regiment, for the sale of our new Army Watches. Liberal and exceptional terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chronometers.—N. Y. Weekly Ledger, Feb. 21.
Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Boston Ledger, Feb. 21.
Prettiest, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 10

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting Case Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.
A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest watches for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery its own self-winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer or one being the 18 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted for seven years. Sizes, Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Sample watches in best cases, $35. Sent, if not sent by mail, the postage is 25 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.
FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS
WATCHES HERE UNEQUALED.
UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!
An imitation so fruitless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of the metals, the outer one the finest quality of Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it to any thing in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Gold or Silver in existence.
The sale of these watches in the army is a source of great satisfaction to soldiers, as they are selling from $5 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day—See the letter of a delighted soldier to us!
AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In every location, soon, beautifully engraved, without enamel slot, and Name and Address, in good remaining order, by the half dozen, $72; postage, $1 38; registering, 20 cts. Sent only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.
GOLD PENS, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If not sent to you by express or mail as represented, return it at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.
HUBBARD BROS, Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

ONE CENT.

AS the warm weather approaches prepare to reduce your household expenses by getting

FISH'S KEROSENE LAMP COOKING APPARATUS,

with which you may prepare a meal for FIVE PERSONS at a cost of

One Cent.

Price, from $2 to $6. Also, the Kitchen Attachment,

to be used on a common lamp to heat water, cook food, or support a shade. Price 50 cents. No family can afford to be without one of these articles. For sale at Lamp and Stove Stores. Trade supplied by WM. D. RUSSELL, Agent, 100 FRONT St., N. Y. Send for Circulars.

MOSKWA,

For Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism, Sip Complaint, Paralysis, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Neuralgia, Cramp, Spine Disease, Pain in the Breast, Side or Loins, &c., &c. The most valuable agent ever of the kind ever established the proprietor to cure not only his thousands, but his tens of thousands within the last few years of his practice, and he challenges the world to produce an article of superior merit, as the innumerable testimonials in possession of the highest order. Try it afflicted sufferer. Price $1; 6 bottles $5. Send for circular.
DR. CLINTON KUYPERS,
Office 36 Beekman Street, New York.

World's Conqueror.

For Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, &c., &c. No sick person need despair while a bottle of this medicine is left. Read the circular and pamphlet of testimonials, and you will be convinced. It has no equal. Price $1; 6 bottles for $5.
DR. CLINTON KUYPERS,
Office 36 Beekman Street, New York.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
TERMS.
One Copy for one Year..... $2 00
Two Copies for One Year..... 3 50
An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five.
Subscriptions at $2 75 each, or 11 Copies for $27 50.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 50.
HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
TERMS.
One Copy for Four Months..... $1 00
One Copy for One Year..... 4 00
One Copy for Two Years..... 7 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $3 75 each, or 11 Copies for $37 50. Payment invariably in advance.
TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements, each insertion.
Bound Volumes of HARPER'S WEEKLY for the Years 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1863 of "HALF-PRICE WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, $3 00 per volume, by mail, free.
HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

GENTLEMEN OPPOSED TO THE SOLDIERS' VOTING.

FIRST GENTLEMAN. "I'll tell yer what it is, Old Feller! New York is gittin' about played out. Unly last July you and me got a hundred fellers in this 'ere room to jamm the sogers; and we done it. Don't you reck'lect how we smashed O'Brien's head? An' now where are they? Some on 'em's in prison; an' some keep shady; an' half of the rest of the crowd has turned patriotic, an' gone an' voted to let the sogers vote! I tell yer, 4, 11, 44, an' 'lasses and whisky is 'bout played out; an' you'n me had better make tracks."

SECOND GENTLEMAN. "Yaas, I think so too."

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities, AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our NEW NOVELTY STATIONERY FREE PACKET. Only $15 capital required to obtain A WATCH, FREE, with first order. We also offer SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered.

Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 50 Beekman Street, N. Y.,

The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. JNO W. WHEELER, of Cleveland, Ohio, and John C. Leffert, of New York. PUTNAM MFG. CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I know from practical experience that you well galvanized with zinc will not oxidize and rust one particle. I can safely say, after several years experience in the manufacture of chain, for chain-pump and waterdrawers, in which I have tested the efficacy of that galvanize, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect weld of the two.

Nearly one year ago my family commenced using one of your Wringers. It now performs all of its functions as well as it did the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article in our home. I have closely examined several other kinds of clothes-wringers, the modus operandi being different, tending to produce the same results as the Putnam Wringer, but in my judgment they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is the most perfect as possible, and a can cheerfully recommend it to be the best in use.

Respectfully yours, JOHN W. WHEELER.

Many years' experience in the galvanizing business enables me to indorse the above test, most in all particulars.

JOHN C. LEFFERTS, No. 102 Beekman Street.

New York, January, 1864.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.

No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. 4, $6.

Manufactured and for sale, wholesale and retail, by

THE PUTNAM Manufacturing Co.,

No. 15 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.

S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

F. GROTE, Manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 11 Union St., New York, cor. Gold. Billiard, Bagatelle, Pool Balls, Ten Pin Balls and Pins, Checks in great variety, Match Vignette and Napkin Rings, and all other kind of Ivory Goods, wholesale and retail. Also Manufacturer and Importer of Combs, Brushes, Canes, Chalk, &c. The only place to get a good set of seasoned Billiard Balls at reduced prices. All Orders by mail promptly attended to.

IVORY JEWELRY.

A fine assortment white and imitation of CORAL and JET DESCRIBED $1 50. BALL EARRINGS, $1 50 pair. IVORY INITIAL BUTTONS, 25c. pair. NEW PATTERNS Pearl $1 00 pair. Sent free on receipt of the price. For sale at WELLING'S, 397 CANTRE St., N. Y., Sign of the GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot, No. 397 Canter St., New York, second floor. Sent free by mail for 60 cents.

A Bad Breath—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is a delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 160 and 167 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metal. Send 81 cents for "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Duke," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

TROPICAL BALSAM

Prepared by Carreno Brothers & Co.

This celebrated and unparalleled medicine, composed only of simpleforces and purifying vegetables, has been for many years past the great popular remedy of South America, and is an infallible remedy for the speedy cure of phthisis, croups, and all other diseases of the chest and throat; affections resulting from falls, blows, or bruises, however severe; hemorrhages, wounds, contusions, ulcers, felons, burns, piles, headache, toothache, and other diseases. (See Directions around the bottles.)

Ever since this valuable medicine has been introduced in this country, its immediate and extraordinary effects have failed to produce the most wonderfully successful results.

Heads of families are cautioned to beware the Balsam by them, in order to use it in time in cases of wounds, hemorrhages, burns, bruises, &c., and those who are devoted to such occupations as expose them to danger, or require the use of instruments whereby they may be injured in any way. For valuable testimonial letters, see the Tropical and the Courrier des Etats-Unis.

Price of bottles, $1 each, $3.

General Depot at WM. E. SIBELL'S, No. 7 Nassau St., near Wall, New York. Retailed at the drug stores generally in New York and Brooklyn.

[A CARD.]

TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS.

The Rev. CHARLES B. KING, formerly Secretary to the London Evangelical Alliance, and recently appointed President Minister and Physician, with the Venezuelan Mission, will send FREE of charge the Recipe and Prescription with which he successfully treated, while in charge of the large Mission Hospital, upward of one hundred cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.

The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Coughs, and all affections of the Lungs, Throat, and Air-Passages; while it speedily invigorates the enfeebled Nervous System, and energizes the deranged Digestive Organs, Stomach, Liver and Bowels. Address, with stamp,

Rev. CHARLES B. KING,

Station D, Bible House, N. Y.

P. S.—I wish publicly to acknowledge the generosity of those publishers who, from a sense of humanity, have given me this advertisement gratuitous therefore. Religious papers are earnestly requested to copy.

P. S.—RELIGIOUS PAPERS ARE EARNESTLY REQUESTED TO COPY.

Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

LANDS.—TO ALL WANTING FARMS.—Large and healthy, productive and cheap Lands for sale in Northern Illinois south of Prideholden by railroad. Rich soil, prairies and timber, which can now be seen growing. Twenty to fifty acre tracts, at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business opening for MANUFACTURERS and others, churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, National Post Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.

From Letter of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune:—It is one of the most extensive bodies of land in the State, and in a very favorable condition for tillage. Persons forming that vicinity will find one of the best markets.

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day made.

By selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" RICKARDS' PRIZE AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "many real valuable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Mate-rials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Jewelry, Knives, Notions, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, &c. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price only 25c. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and camp. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Huntingcase Watch, genuine English movements, perfect time-keeper, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL RICKARDS PRIZE PACKAGES, each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. For an expose of the swindling operations as practised by other parties, see editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing "extra premium inducements, free."

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 NASSAU St., N. Y. Original, Largest, and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen.—Send for a circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 25 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Soldiers of the Union!!!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD-KNOWN AND WORLD-TRIED REMEDIES

KNOWN AS

Professor Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay.

Your Life is Valuable!!

Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives, and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health!

For 35 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the greatest and rarest old age.

The following are genuine letters, on file for inspection at this office,

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT, }
20th Illinois Volunteers, }

FOLLY ISLAND, S. C., November 26, 1863.

Prof. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

SIR: Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the same. Respectfully yours,

Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
20th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BEAUFORT STATION, VA., }
January 7, 1864. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in need of them until now, I want to try them, as Diarrhœa is very prevalent at the present time: send me the worth of the enclosed.

Yours, &c.,
JOSEPH WALSH,
Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

PULASKI, TENNESSEE, }
December 30, 1863. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: I have this day sent you one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dyspepsia, and seek cure.

Yours, &c.,
THOMAS F. TURNER,
Co. I, 2d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., }
January 31, 1864. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find 50 cents; for which I beg you to send me some of your valuable Pills; send them by mail. I enclose 50 cents. Direct to

Address. ISRAEL C. HALL,
Co. B, 54th N. Y. Vols.,
Port Royal, S. C.

CAMP OF 5TH EXCELSIOR BRIGADE, }
January 25, 1864. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

SIR: Please send me for the enclosed 50 cents the worth of it in Pills; enclosed find 15 cents to pay postage, and you will oblige. Address

Yours, &c.,
Serg't WM. GROVERS,
Co. E, 5th Regt. Excelsior Brigade,
Washington, D. C.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C. }
January 31, 1864. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills.

Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Ohio Vols.,
Morris Island, S. C.

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER!!!

In Coin Silver:! For $1 50. Including the engraving of the Name, &c., BADGE. Also the Patented Relief Pin, Cavalry and Artillery Pin, Monitor, Engineer, and Signal Corps Pins.

LOUIS PHILLIP & CO.,
No. 8 Murray Street, New York.

Attention, Company!—Volunteers who expect to retain their health unimpaired during the campaign must see to it themselves. Do not trust to the sutler's promises. Supply yourselves with HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. Every English soldier's knapsack contains them. Only 35 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 per box or pot.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it, by using Ives's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Stores.

Shuits' Ongunent, warranted to produce a full set of whiskers in six weeks. Every package guaranteed. Sent by mail, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address C. F SHUITS, Troy, N. Y.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVER WATCHES.

Trade Mark. P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the army must be post-paid, or the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on delivery.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,

208 Broadway New York.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA

HAIR RESTORATIVE.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair and whiskers to their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading of one hair with another, and thus gives a life-like appearance instead of the dull dead black of dyes, so that the most critical observer can not detect its use. It does not require previous combing and washing, and hours for its application, nor does it stain the skin; but is as readily applied and easily wiped from the skin as any hair-dressing. It does not claim to make the hair come in when it has once fallen out; nothing will do that, whatever may be advertised to the contrary; but it will prevent it from falling out, make it soft and silky, and cleanse it and the scalp from all impurities and humors, and entirely overcome the bad effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c.

Hoyt's Imperial Coloring Cream.

An appropriate accompaniment to the Hiwatha; oils and colors the hair at the same time, and changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black. Sold everywhere.

N.B.—Ladies' French hair-dresser in attendance to apply the Hiawatha.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 16 University Place, N. Y.

Get the Best.

☞ TEN FOR ONE DOLLAR. ☜

Card Photographs

(5000 Different Subjects)

OF ALL

Prominent and Noted Persons,

LIVING AND DEAD,

All the Major-Generals, the President and Cabinet,

AND ALL THE

Prominent Officers of the Army and Navy.

ACTORS, ACTRESSES, FANCY AND MISCELLANEOUS PICTURES, &c.

☞ 10 for One Dollar, or 15 Cts. Single Picture. Sent free to any address. Enclose Stamp, and send for List of Albums and Card Photographs.

To insure prompt and honorable dealings, SEND YOUR ORDERS TO

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

N. B. A Classified Catalogue of over 16,000 different books in every department of literature sent to any address on receipt of 5 cents. Freedom Certificates of new Watch and Jewelry Enterprise sent on receipt of 10 cents.

$27 ARMY $27 WATCH.

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Jewelled, Stem-wind, Stem-set (Ball), cut in hole, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, sent free by mail, with Chain and Key complete, only $27.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the Army.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

OR, COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved or engine turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Compensation Balance," "Jewelled at Nine Important Points," Independent Action, Self Balance, and has a NEAT MINIATURE COMPASS set in the seven-jewelled, timekeeping 18 k "Gilded Dyalo" to the Solider or Traveler. Perfect timekeeper, "warranted one year." Sent by mail, Secure Agts., and Safe.

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch,

Used by the British Army Officers,

Sent free by mail, the elegant Moresque Watch, for only $15.

THE CELEBRATED ENGLISH COURSE WATCH, for ladies. "Elite escutcheon dial," "Jewelled timekeeper," &c., &c.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Cases, "Jewelled timekeeper," warranted, $15.

Genuine American Levers, full jeweled, and in massive Sterling Silver Hunting Cases, only $20.

Rent English Dyalos Gold Watches. Fine article, from $6 to $10.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above celebrated Watches, &c. Catalogue of trade sent mailed free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and a remarkable cheap timekeeper. It is extensively sold in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Courier of Notre says, "Correct timepieces; and for beauty and fine finish they are placed in appearance $100 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers, 25 & 40, Ann Street, New York.

GUNS, PISTOLS,

Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street, N. Y.,

31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.

Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

IVORY BROOCHES

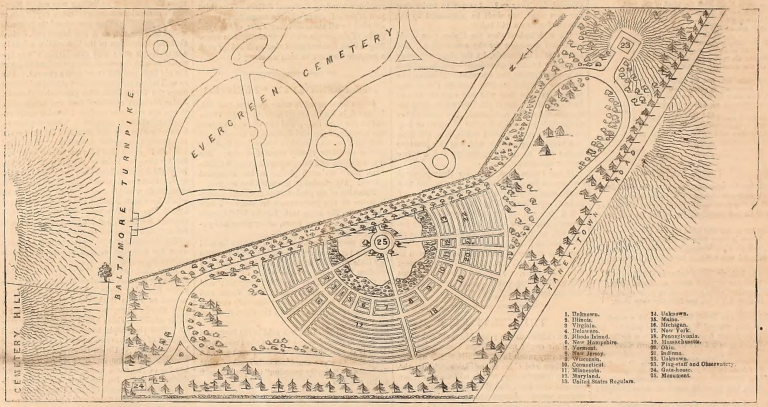
and GOLD MOUNTED EAR DROPS (corrected Solid Gold), $3 per set. Sent by mail on receipt of price. WM. BRUNS, Manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 403 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 379.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.



THE SOLDIERS' CEMETERY AT GETTYSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.—[SEE PAGE 214.]

GENERAL WILLIAM F. SMITH.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 214.]

BRIGADIER-GENERAL HENRY E. DAVIES.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 214.]

BY THE CAMP-FIRE.

Tuis night was dark, and the fire-fly's spark
Glowed red in the reeds by the river,
And the fitful breeze in the veiled pine-trees
Made their dusky branches shiver.

By the ruddy light of our camp-fire bright,
Which blazed in the trench before us,
We sat and sang till the wild words rang
With the echo of our chorus.

Beyond the stream we could see the gleam
Of the fires that the foe had lighted,
And here and there in the flickering glare
Their forms we dimly sighted.

The night wind sighed as our chorus died,
And we thought of the coming morrow,
When the morn should wake, and the gray dawn break,
With its awful weight of sorrow.

* * * * * * *

I sit to-night by the camp-fire's light,
While the dismal rain is falling,
And in my breast beats a heart oppressed
By a sense of gloom appalling.

The river flows, and the firelight glows
On our sad and pallid faces,
And over the ground, with a weary sound,
The sentinel slowly paces.

The earth is red with the blood of the dead,
Which to-day flowed free as water,
Till the night came down with a sullen frown
And put an end to the slaughter.

By the turnpike wide, on the stony hill-side,
In field and wood they are lying;
And the air is worn with the feeble moan
Of the wounded and the dying.

And seated here on this night so drear,
As I gaze on the embers burning,
To that other night by the camp-fire's light
My thoughts are forever turning.

I think of one, now the fight is done,
Whom death from my side has parted,
I know that for him rest eyes will be dim,
And a maiden broken-hearted.

PAST HELP.

Let her lie upon your breast while she faints,
Where she slept such a short time ago.
O! she's young to be crowned with the saints:
Hold her fast, mother; do not let her go!

The roses are not dead on her cheeks—
There is but a passing chill on their bloom;
It will go when she smiles—when she speaks—
Hush! was not that her voice in the room?

She is looking like a babe, as she lies
With her ringlets swept aside and apart;
Ah, mother, keep the tears in your eyes—
If they fall upon her face she may start.

Dil some one break her heart with a word,
Having grasped it at first as a prize?
Did she flutter from his hand like a bird,
Which gave a little way and then dies?

He remembers the joy of her face,
The love in her smile and the light,
When, shrinking, she met his embrace—
Bring him here; let him look at her to-night!

O! first came the wonder and the doubt,
And the pale hope fading day by day;
So wistfully she wandered about,
Like a lost child asking its way.

And then came the silence and despair,
And the sighing after wings like a dove,
And the proud heart bleeding into prayer,
But hiding all its wounds from our love.

It is over, and the tale is all told,
And the white lamb lies dead in the frost:
We may cover up its limbs from the cold,
But we can not find a life that is lost.

Yet we thought that she moved; but her cheek
Was but moved by the breast where it lay
Heaving a little, while we speak,
With the mute sobs forcing their way.

Let them come, poor mother! let them come;
You must turn, when your tears are all done,
To a blank in the sweet talk at home,
And a name on a little gray stone.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1864.

UNION.

GENERAL FRÉMONT has been formally presented as a Union candidate for the Presidency, upon a platform which describes him as "the true representative of the instincts of the hour," and characterizes the policy of the Administration as "irresolute and feeble." The resolutions of the meeting declare that FRÉMONT is nominated as its candidate, but no reference was made to the action of a National Convention.

Mr. GREELEY, who was present, corrected this omission in his remarks. He did not say for whose nomination he should work, except so far as his adherence to the one-term tenure implied that it would not be for Mr. LINCOLN. But he said frankly that he intended to give his enthusiastic and hearty support to the candidate of the Convention. That was an honorable and timely assertion.

With him we are the friends of all the gentlemen named for the Union candidacy. But we have a preference among them, which does not in the least involve our personal respect and regard for them. We are very profoundly convinced that it is better for the good cause that Mr. LINCOLN be retained. But should the people in their Convention decide otherwise, we shall, with all loyal men, acquiesce.

All that we ask of those who favor General FRÉMONT, or General BUTLER, or General GRANT, or any other candidate, is that they shall openly declare their submission to the final verdict of the people in the National Convention; and we complain that many of the friends of General FRÉMONT present his name as a candidate in any case, and that they wage war upon the Administration which they helped to bring into power, and which has carried out their own general policy—not always, indeed, in the precise way nor exactly at the time they sketched—with a ferocity which no Copperhead surpasses. They speak of Mr. LINCOLN very much as they spoke of Mr. BUCHANAN. Is such conduct fair, or is it wise? Does any sane Union man propose, by an exasperating quarrel in our own camp, to give the Presidency of the United States to Mr. AMOS KENDALL, Judge WOODWARD, and the SEYMOURS, in the person of General MCCLELLAN? Are we to insist that our own candidate shall be nominated by the Convention or we will bolt?

We wish indeed that the Union men could be spared a contest for the nomination. But since that is impossible, the claims of every candidate be fully considered—but considered as among friends, not enemies. There can be no more conspicuous folly than for Union men to declare that they will not vote for this or that candidate; for if the one whom they renounce should be nominated, they must either eat humble pie, which is never pleasant, or they must, by running a third ticket, give the election to the Copperheads, which at this juncture is the ruin of the Government and a crime against mankind.

If the Union men, whatever their personal preferences for the nomination may be, are true to the country and the cause, the candidate of their Convention will be the next President. But if they are untrue—if the conflict of preference shall throw them out of power, the result will be not only the practical success of the rebellion; it will be much worse than that; it will be the proof that the Republic, even in the agony of civil war, party-spirit is stronger than patriotism. Not only our Government will be destroyed, but its principle will be discredited forever.

THE GREAT FAIR.

THE visitors to the great Metropolitan Sanitary Fair ought not to forget that its interest will be very much in the details, which will require time and close examination. Thus the foreign contributions, which will be many, are often of this kind, and they are already beginning to arrive. Indeed the foreign interest in the Fair is very marked and active. In Liverpool a meeting has been held for the purpose of organizing the details of collecting and forwarding. From Paris and Switzerland photographs and various fancy articles have just been received. Mr. JAMES FRALEN sends a copy of a true portrait of OLIVER CROMWELL. From Frankfort-on-the-Main Germany sends money and boxes of books.

From Switzerland also considerable contributions are promised. In the Canton district of Zurich the money subscriptions have already reached the sum of four thousand francs, and were still pouring in at the last accounts. The monks of Einsiedeln have sent a large and superb volumes of the choicest engravings. Mrs. MARY-GESSNER FAH, the grand-daughter of LAVATER, has given the first grandfather's manuscript sermons in LAVATER's own handwriting. The sermon was preached in Zurich, November, 1782, and closes with a short original hymn. The sermon has never been published. Mr. FAH GESSNER has contributed some original water-colored flower pictures; and several authors have given copies of their works. Many of the ladies of Zurich are still at work preparing fancy articles for the Fair. Among the minor gifts received by the Committee is a bead purse from a little girl who has a brother in the Union army, and whose young heart, no doubt, has found a deep joy in contributing her mite to the great Fund out of which her absent brother, and all absent brothers, are cared for and relieved in the sad days of hospital and corpse suffering.

Italy organizes by a meeting in Rome, at which Rev. Dr. MCCLINTOCK, who from the beginning has done the good cause such valuable service in Europe, made an eloquent address. Two thousand scudi, or dollars, were subscribed for the Roman table at the Fair, which will be under the superintendence of Mrs. HILLARD, wife of our late Minister to Rome. The money will be expended in characteristic Roman articles. Mr. TYLER, the painter, gives his picture of Torcello, near Venice. Mr. IVES, the sculptor, gives his bust of Secretary SEWARD at cost price to the Committee; and other sculptors are forwarding their gifts.

Among the foreign contributions we notice especially a noble one of coffee from Costa Rica, the new flourishing of all the States of Central America.

The "Old Curiosity Shop" will contain not a few interesting things, prominent among which will be a small collection of some relics from the Sir JOHN FRANKLIN expedition, exhibited by Captain PARKER SNOW, himself an Arctic explorer. They are mostly taken from the boat found on the west coast of King William's Island in May, 1859. In the boat were two skeletons. One was found with the head leaning upon the hand, and in the hand a prayer-book open to the service for the burial of the dead at sea. The stained pages of that service are in this collection. There are also a rusty razor, a bit of Windsor soap, shreds of cloth and buttons, parts of a stocking, a knot of rope, an Esquimaux pipe, etc. They are all very small, and the collection is in a case which can be easily lifted. There is also some sugar in a glass vial from the "Jury" bench stores, left in 1853, and some sugar packed for the sledges of traveling parties. A profoundly sad interest invests all of them.

At home, too, the interest in the Fair grows with every day, and the amount of money subscribed by the dry-goods dealers alone already reaches a hundred thousand dollars. The third year of the war opens with the magnificent proof, afforded by all these Sanitary Fairs, of the sympathy of the people with their brothers in arms. May the President's call meet such aid for such a purpose may not be long necessary!

THE PRESIDENT'S "PLEDGE."

IT has been stated in party quarters that Mr. LINCOLN, in his inaugural address, pledged himself to one term only; and one of the orators at the meeting of General FRÉMONT's friends, said that the President ought to understand that this pledge would be rigidly exacted of him. But it is a curious and interesting fact that Mr. LINCOLN made no pledge in his inaugural speech. He alluded to the point but twice.

Speaking of his predecessors and their administration of the government he said: "I now enter upon the same task, for the brief Constitutional term of four years, under great and peculiar difficulties."

And toward the close of the address he said that the people had given their public servants but little power for mischief, and had with equal wisdom "provided for the return of that little to their own hands at short intervals;" and that while the people retain their virtue and vigilance no administration "can very seriously injure the Government in the short space of four years."

This is all Mr. LINCOLN said in his inaugural address in regard to the term of the Presidency. How is it possible to deduce from such words a "pledge" to serve one term only? And what is meant by "rigidly exacting" the performance of his pledge?

MR. AMOS KENDALL.

On the 29th July, 1855, a mob broke into the Post-office in Charleston, South Carolina, and destroyed some anti-slavery publications which they found in the mails. Mr. AMOS KENDALL, Postmaster-General, was asked by the Post-officers in Charleston for instructions. He replied that he "had no legal authority to exclude newspapers from the mail, nor to prohibit their carriage or delivery because of their character or tendency, real or supposed." We should rather think he had not. "But," says this faithful tool of Democracy, "I am not prepared to direct you to forward or deliver the papers of which you speak!" In other words, I have no authority to rob the mails, but I authorize you to rob them. And why? What is the reason which this present stickler for Constitutional rights alleges for the crime at which he winks? "We owe an obligation to the South," says the Presidential sponsor of General MCCLELLAN, "but a higher one to the communities in which we live; and if the former be permitted to destroy the latter, it is patriotism to disregard them."

In those dark days the higher law might be invoked to help slavery, but when it was called to aid liberty it was only infamy, and Mr. AMOS KENDALL and his kind held up pious hands of horror.

To secure the unquestioned domination of slavery in this country, by destroying the very cardinal principle of our Government, the right of free debate, Mr. AMOS KENDALL connived at the robbery of the United States mails. That is his sole claim to the remembrance of the American people. And when that despotism, strengthened by the acts of Mr. KENDALL and his associates, springs at the throat of the nation, and the Government is struggling for its life uses its vast power corruptly and oppressively than any Government ever before used them, Mr. AMOS KENDALL cries out—Heaven save the mark!—against violations of personal rights, and hopes we shall be very "kind" to his old masters, who are stabbing the Government whose powers he prostituted and whose name he disgraced.

This is the man who offers General MCCLELLAN to the people of this country as a candidate for the Presidency. General MCCLELLAN must not complain if he is judged by his sponsors and his correspondents. The man whom AMOS KENDALL nominates, and who wrote a letter in favor of the election of Judge WOODWARD in Pennsylvania, can not be the chief magistrate of a people fighting for their lives and liberties against a despotism which AMOS KENDALL and Judge WOODWARD have always faithfully served.

GOVERNOR ISAAC MURPHY, OF ARKANSAS.

THE case of ISAAC MURPHY, who, by the verdict of the people, is now Governor of Arkansas, affords another illustration of the maxim that time brings its rewards as well as its revenges. No man's course has in it more of romantic interest than his. In the State Convention which voted Arkansas out of the Union Mr. MURPHY's voice was the only voice raised boldly in denunciation of the final and decisive vote. Others had passed secession down to that critical moment, but one by one they had yielded to the pressure, and given in their adhesion to the madness of the hour; so that when the final vote upon the secession ordinance was called MURPHY's name alone was registered in opposition to it. The presiding officer announced that the vote should be repeated, as it was hoped and desired that the declaration of the Convention might be a unanimous one; and Mr. MURPHY was appealed to with the strongest persuasions to desert the old flag, and fall in with the current. But as well might the traitors have attempted to beat down the White Hills with persuasive rhetoric. Judge MURPHY remained firm and irreconcilable. When the vote was retaken his voice again uttered an indignant negative. The conspirators, stunned perhaps by his steadfast loyalty, could not brook this added defiance. "Kill him! kill him!" came from all parts of the hall; and but for the grey hairs of the brave old patriot, the wonted deadliness have been sacrificed upon the spot. Perhaps his own firmness also had something to do with his escape. The violence with which he was threatened did not for a moment appall him. "You may run the cold steel through my heart, but I will never, never vote away the noble work of secession!" were his still unflinching words, as he turned his back upon the Convention, and walked away with unfaltering steps.

From that day until the occupation of Arkansas by our forces Judge MURPHY was a fugitive from his home. When our army galloped to Little Rock, the State Convention, held shortly after, out of appreciation of his noble qualities, chose him Provisional Governor. Now the people have at the polls ratified that act of the Convention, and ISAAC MURPHY becomes the first Union Governor of Arkansas after her restoration, and the purging away from her life of the cause which was corrupting and destroying her. So, doubtless, out of the tribulations and distresses of these times, some just compensation shall flow for all who suffer for the nation's sake!

PRIVATE EXTRAVAGANCE.

WE hope that Congress will very seriously revise the Revenue Act, and by a more direct, copious, and skilful taxation compel private economy. Let us have the money for the Government and the war that is now paid for French wines and foreign luxuries. We spend money more freely while we are wasting it beyond precedent. The extravagance of living is a menacing sign of the times. The war is proving what I. T. is trying our equality. If we are not individually brave enough to retrench, we are not collectively heroic enough to endure the war and fight it to the end. The women of the rebel States, the deluded and betrayed men who are struggling against their own liberties and interests, or in behalf of slavery, endure extreme privation. Their women and children share the sacrifice. For the fight is more earnest and real to them than to us they will surely win. And if we idly squander the money, without which the war can not continue, what right have we to support ourselves equal to the task we have undertaken?

Let every man and woman take home the appeal. In the thousand expenses expenses of every day let the check be applied. Every thing costs immensely more than it did, and the national expenses are infinitely increased, and yet there is a vast deal more money than there was. Let us bear these facts in mind; hold it to be a duty to waste as little money as we can, and the day of settlement will be a day to be dreaded.

PARSEE GENEROSITY.

SOME two or three years ago two Parsee merchants came to this country and traveled through a large part of the Mississippi River, carefully informing themselves of our character and condition. They were very accomplished and charming men, and presented in all its purity the Parsee devotion to their land and faith. Temperate, truthful, and charitable, the Parsees are also among the most peaceful of men; and the agreeable impression made by these two merchants has been lately deepened by an evidence of their interest and sympathy in our country and its struggles.

Mr. RUSSELL STURGIS, of Baring Brothers & Co., London, writes to his brother, Mr. H. P. STURGIS, of Boston, that five of the Parsee firms in London have contributed five hundred pounds sterling "for the support," as Mr. H. C. CHOLMELEY, one of the Parsees, expresses it, "of the poor negroes who are emancipated in America from bondage by the bo-nign Government of the United States of America." In accordance with the generous intention Mr. P. STORIS has paid $1312.96 each to Governor ANDREW, STEPHEN COLWELL, and F. G. SHAW, Esquires, respectively Presidents of the Boston, Philadelphia, and New York Freedmen's Relief Associations.

It is one of the pleasant incidents of the time; for the Parsees, although the shrewdest and most successful merchants of the East, are still exiles for centuries from their native land of Persia on account of their religion. They know by sad traditional experience the bitterness of all kinds of persecution, and their charity in America instinctively turns to the most hapless and persecuted people among us.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—March 16. Mr. HOWARD offered a resolution, which was agreed to, directing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the expediency of authorizing associations organized under the National Currency act to enter into contracts, to take and receive interest on loans and discounts.—Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill concerning the disposition of convicts in the courts of the United States, for the subsisting of persons confined in jail charged with violating the laws of the United States, and for diminishing the expenses in relation thereto. The bill authorizes contracts to be made for the labor of all convicts of offenses.—Mr. HOWARD introduced a bill to organize the Invalid Corps of the army on an infantry basis, the pay and allowance of four brigades of six regiments each, made up of men in the military service who are unfit for active duty, and of such soldiers as have been honorably discharged or whose service is ended.—Mr. WILSON introduced a joint resolution to deserters from the military service, disqualifying all deserters who may depart the limits of the United States for voting or holding office, but authorizing the President to issue a proclamation of amnesty and restoration on their return to the service, with no punishment but loss of pay during the time of absence, or their re-enlistment in regiments; deserters hereafter, however, are to be deprived of the rights of citizenship.—The Committee on Finance reported the bill was passed.—Mr. SUMNER moved to amend the bill to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia by inserting a provision that there shall be no exclusion from any car on account of color, upon which debate ensued without any final result.

March 17. A bill to carry into effect the convention of Brussels was reported.—The bill to provide for the summary trial of military offenses was passed.—The bill to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia was taken up and discussed at great length, Messrs. JOHNSON, Saulsbury, and Doolittle opposing Mr. SUMNER'S amendment, that no person shall be excluded from the cars of the road on account of color. Finally the amendment was rejected—yeas 12, nays 24.—The bill defining the pay and emoluments of chaplains, after the withdrawal of an amendment allowing them a ration when absent on leave, or on account of disability from service, to be paid by the quarter.—March 18. A bill was introduced by Mr. CLARK to provide for carrying the mails to foreign ports, and for other purposes.—It was passed.—A bill to amend the act to authorize the construction of certain railroads and telegraphs.—The bill to promote enlistments in the army, and for other purposes, was taken up. Mr. WILSON withdrew that part of his amendment providing compensation to loyal owners of slaves who may enlist. Mr. DAVIS offered an amendment providing that the United States District Courts shall at each joint three commissioners to make a just valuation to be awarded to loyal owners for slaves set free under the bill. He spoke at length on the amendment. Mr. WILKINSON argued in favor of the bill, and supplying the aid of money that can be mustered into our armies.—March 22. The Senate bill amendatory of the act to regulate the value of the coinage of cents at the United States Mint, was passed. The bill provides that the standard weight of a dime shall be 48 grains, or 2-10ths of an ounce Troy, and shall be composed of 90 per centum of copper and 10 per centum of nickel, and that there shall be from time to time struck at the mint of the United States coins of the weight of 96 grains. The bill makes one-cent pieces legal tender to the amount of fifty dollars, and two-cent pieces to the amount of 20 cents.—Mr. SUMNER introduced a bill to carry into effect the treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the final settlement of the claims of the Puget Sound and Hudson's Bay Agricultural Companies. The resolution was adopted calling for information as to the number and treatment of fugitives' mails.—Mr. FESSENDEN offered a joint resolution declaring against the interference of France in Mexico. A bill was reported for the reorganization of the Marine Corps.—A bill was reported to prohibit traffic in or transfer of the title to persons claimed to be held as slaves in any way by land or sea, under the authority of the United States.—The bill to promote enlistments in the army was taken up, and Mr. WILSON spoke at length in opposition to Mr. WILKINSON'S amendment.

HOUSE.—March 16. The House concurred in the Senate's amendments to the Post-Office Appropriation bill, appropriating $960,000 for the payment of letter-carriers, and $1,500,000 for any deficiency which may occur in the Post-office revenue.—The consideration of the Gold Bill was resumed. Mr. HOLBROOK'S amendment providing that the obligation to create the Sinking Fund according to the act of 1862 shall not be impaired by the issue and sale of gold, was agreed to. Mr. HIGBY opposed the bill as the greatest swindle ever proposed to enable the purchase of gamble in gold, which he held to be undignified and unpatriotic.—Mr. SCHENCK defended the measure as the best to restrain speculation. Mr. STEVENS also favored the measure, which he said was intended to put down the system which has $50,000,000 in gold on hand, and have a surplus with which to make disposition.—The previous question was ordered, and the bill was passed, 83 yeas to 57 nays. A bill to drop from the rolls the names of all persons in arms was taken up. Mr. COX offered a proviso that "whenever any officer comprehended in the bill shall demand a trial by Court of Inquiry, and shall be willing to serve, him compulsorily summoned, and if shall before such Court be found innocent of the rank in which he is entitled, he shall be at once restored to active service." Mr. STEVENS opposed the proviso. Mr. COX further, that all officers who have been dismissed by Courts of Inquiry, and who have not been restored, shall have the question of the act."—Mr. COX supported this amendment at some length, stating that it would be unjust to Major-General MCCLELLAN and other officers to dismiss them as originally proposed. In the case of his remarks, referring to the report that General McClellan had an interview with General Lee after the battle on Antietam, Mr. COX said Mr. WILSON had not seen her since 1855. Mr. FARNSWORTH said that he had stated at any political officer. It was simply designed to drop a large number of Major and Brigadier-Generals who were drawing pay without performing service.—A proposition which was offered without the knowledge of the vast legitimate resources of the Government. Mr. KERNAN opposed the bill at length. He, if passed, to produce irritation, and instill grievous wrong on many of our best officers. Mr. GARFIELD said that we ought by some means to provide a way for relieving the Treasury, which was paying officers who were rendering no service. Besides, it is simple justice to officers in the field that the bill should pass. The road to promotion should not be blocked up by those who were performing no duties. As to a Board for the examination of those officers, he considered it impracticable, as doubtless on their qualifications might be prompted by political or personal considerations.—March 17. A bill was introduced to fill and complete the southwest branch of the Pacific Railroad from Glenwood to Springfield.—The Union Pacific was passed for three weeks, on motion of Mr. Ashley, the joint resolution to drop from the pay-rolls the names of absent officers.—The bill declaring the Camden and Atlantic and Delaware and Raritan Canal companies consolidated, was debated, but no vote reached.—A bill to carry into effect the convention with Brussels, for the amicable settlement of claims, was passed.—The House passed the bills to enable Nebraska, Colorado, and Nevada to form State Governments preparatory to admission to the Union. On a motion to strike out the clause limiting the number in the Colorado bill there were 18 yeas and 87 nays. An effort was then made to amend the bill by adding a provision which shall submit a Constitution agreed upon to the people for their ratification or rejection, to be held on the second Tuesday of October. The Constitution shall be republican, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. Slavery shall be prohibited forever by any ordinance forever irrevocable without consent of Congress. When the Constitution is ratified by the people the President is to declare by Proclamation the admission of these States on an equal footing with the original States, and, if such is to entitled to one member of the House, under the apportionment of 1860, until the next census.—The Congress of the United States.—A bill was passed creating the Territory of Montana, out of the southwestern portion of Idaho.—March 18. Mr. JULIAN introduced a resolution for the repeal of the bill relating to the draft. He stated late to persons in the naval and military service on condemned and forfeited property, and to hold on said lands should be divided into farms, and settled by emigrants from the South. Mr. ARNOLD introduced a bill licensing, under the direction of the Treasury Department and the Governors of the States, the sale of the gold, silver, and copper mines of the United States.—The House bill to facilitate the collection of claims under the Internal law of 1862, enabling them to take the oath before a military officer instead of a civil magistrate, was passed.—Mr. Smith made a favorable report on paying to John de Sobrino, the attorney for Commissioner Rhodes and Debates, claimed to be delivered before the resolution authorizing the payment.—March 19. The Gold bill subject was tabled, 67 against 80.—March 19. The day was occupied in discussing the bill to "Mr. Ashley and Miller speaking on the state of the country.—March 21. A resolution was introduced to inquire into the Central Railroad Company, the Burlington and Missouri, and the Missouri and Mississippi Railroad Companies, and certain moneys paid to them for the transportation of troops, stores, and mails.—Mr. Ashley introduced a bill to trade on condition that the road transport the mails and troops without charge.—Mr. Ashley introduced a bill providing that all bonds, obligations, and undertakings, whether made in gold or currency, payable to the States, to secure the loyalty or good behavior and fidelity of public officers, or to secure the performance of any duty or to secure them release, shall be declared valid and binding, and that the same may be prosecuted to final satisfaction, the penalties to be enforced in any circuit or district court of the United States.—Mr. Ashley introduced a bill offered a resolution, which was laid over, calling on the President, Secretary of War, and Secretary of State to furnish the names of all persons arrested and held as prisoners for political reasons, and the charges against them.—The Committee on Public Lands was directed to ascertain what lands are subject to the bill granting the benefits of the gold-bearing region of the public domain.—The House concurred in the Senate amendments to the West Point Academy bill increasing the pay of cadets to $30 per month.—The House passed the Senate bill to amend the act of the French bark La Manche, illegally seized by our privateer Sumter, and condemned by the Admiralty Courts and naval contractors at the Naval Academy was confirmed by Mr. Ashley.—March 22. A resolution declaring the Committee on Invalid Pensions to inquire into the expediency of increasing the pensions of widows of army and naval persons.—The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Army Appropriation bill.—Mr. ELIOT offered an amendment providing that no part of the money appropriated by this bill shall be expended in the payment for the transportation of civilities employed in the departments of the United States, or of persons not in the public expense. Mr. KERNAN states as a reason for the change, that contracts for the carriage of troops and thousands had been transported over the railroads to vote at the Presidential election, and that the amendment offered by Messrs. STEVENS and Kelley, who called for the proof of the change, was not necessary. The vote was taken and been sent by the Government into Pennsylvania; the people so authorized to vote at the election. The amendment excluded the disloyal party. Mr. Kelley, in the course of his remarks denounced the Democratic party as a Copperhead clique, an assertion, made before the consummation of secession, to which it appeared that the same charge could be drawn north of Pennsylvania. The House rejected Mr. Eliot's amendment—yeas 57, nays 72. Mr. COX, of Ohio, of Pennsylvania, providing that none of the money should be paid to any one from the Treasury, and that it be ready as it was reported.—March 22. A bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue duplicate notes for the mutilated or other pieces of property stolen by the United States Government to make arrangements to use the property it has captured.—The House rejected the Senate bill to amend the bill authorizing the President to negotiate a treaty with Great Britain for the final settlement of the claims of the Puget Sound and Hudson's Bay Agricultural Companies.—The Army Appropriation bill was taken up, and Mr. WILSON spoke at length in opposition to Mr. WILKINSON'S amendment.

GOVERNOR BROWN OF THE SITUATION.

Governor Brown, of Georgia, has sent a Message to the Legislature of that State recommending a vigorous "State Rights" policy, and denouncing the finances, the conscription or the rebel Congress as "consulting regulation and law." The Governor says that the conscription of that body and the suspension of the habeas corpus as mischievous, and declares that they will be unconstitutional, and remonstrated with upon the unchristian character of the war. He calls upon the Legislature to relieve the despotic course of Davis and his Congress, and urges that the State maintain sovereignty in the Confederate Congress, "keeping before the Northern people the idea that they accept to negotiate when they are ready and will recognize our right to self-government and the sovereignty of the States." The Governor illustrates unmistakably that the confidence of the rebel leaders in their ability to hold out against the North is rapidly waning.

ELECTION IN ARKANSAS.

The State election in Arkansas resulted in the adoption of a Free State Constitution by 12,000 majority. Gen. Murphy as Governor, with the rest of the Free State ticket, by about the same majority. The number of votes registered was about fifteen thousand, and the number polled about ten thousand. The enthusiasm grew more votes than the whole number required by the President's proclamation to constitute the State in the Union.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN ON THE RIGHTS OF LABOR.

A Committee of the New York Working-men's Democratic Republican Association waited upon the President a few days since, to inform him that their Association had decided that no person should be a candidate except upon the honor with thanks, and said the Association entirely disapproved of the course existing politicians were pursuing, and tended to harm, than the perpetuation of African slavery. Mr. LINCOLN replied to the address of working people. In concluding, Mr. Lincoln said:

"The existing rebellion shows more clearly than ever how necessary it is that the principle of some working people may be understood and practically applied. The strongest bond of human sympathy outside of the family relation should be one uniting all working people of all nations, tongues, and kindreds; nor should this tend to a war upon property, or the owners of property. Property is the fruit of labor. Property is desirable—is a positive good in the world. That some should labor who have no property may become rich, and hence is just encouragement to industrial enterprise and economy. That some should pull down the house of another, but let him labor diligently and build one for himself, thereby secure property to himself is only a shame, but a good one. And it is so plain that there is no just reason why any one should be deprived of the benefits of the gold-bearing region of the public domain. The Homestead law, which has been enacted by the present Congress, and which secures homesteads to actual settlers and naval contractors at the Naval Academy was confirmed by Mr. Ashley.—March 23. A resolution declaring the Committee on Invalid Pensions to inquire into the expediency of increasing the pensions of widows of army and naval persons.—The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Army Appropriation bill.—Mr. ELIOT offered an amendment providing that no part of the money appropriated by this bill shall be expended in the payment for the transportation of civilities employed in the departments of the United States, or of persons not in the public expense. Mr. KERNAN states as a reason for the change, that contracts for the carriage of troops and thousands had been transported over the railroads to vote at the Presidential election, and that the amendment offered by Messrs. STEVENS and Kelley, who called for the proof of the change, was not necessary. The vote was taken and been sent by the Government into Pennsylvania; the people so authorized to vote at the election. The amendment excluded the disloyal party. Mr. Kelley, in the course of his remarks denounced the Democratic party as a Copperhead clique, an assertion, made before the consummation of secession, to which it appeared that the same charge could be drawn north of Pennsylvania. The House rejected Mr. Eliot's amendment—yeas 57, nays 72. Mr. COX, of Ohio, of Pennsylvania, providing that none of the money should be paid to any one from the Treasury, and that it be ready as it was reported.—March 22. A bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue duplicate notes for the mutilated or other pieces of property stolen by the United States Government to make arrangements to use the property it has captured.—The House rejected the Senate bill to amend the bill authorizing the President to negotiate a treaty with Great Britain for the final settlement of the claims of the Puget Sound and Hudson's Bay Agricultural Companies.—The Army Appropriation bill was taken up, and Mr. WILSON spoke at length in opposition to Mr. WILKINSON'S amendment.

FOREIGN NEWS.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

DISPATCHES received from Mexico, dated from Seattle, February 5, show that the reports circulated by the French, which ended in the capture of Generals Governor Vidaurri of New Leon, and the Mexican Governor, Vidaurri of Coahuila, are false. Both are still at the head of affairs. On the contrary, they had fallen into deep trouble with the French Government, and Gen. Gonzalez Ortega would be obliged to return to the City of Mexico to settle the affairs of Zacatecas, which, by the recent victory, acquire the rank of some of the Bishops. Urrea, Commander-in-Chief of the Mexican army, was about entering Guadalajara with 10,000 men. General Diez was on the way of attacking Tamaulipas with 8000 men on the road from Vera Cruz to Mexico.

AFFAIRS IN JAPAN.

Letters from Japan to the 23d of January & report that a grand council of Daimios was to be held at Yedo, the capital, on the 25th of January, which would be the adoption of an enlightened foreign policy. The popular sentiment appears to be in favor of opening ports of the realm, and assassination, palace-burnings, and the murder of the Emperor's father-in-law appear. The Japanese Government has decided to send another embassy to Europe, and to ratify the treaties. A portion of the treaty powers from Yedds and Kanagwa, and the limitation of foreign trade and intercourse to the ports of Nagasaki and Hakodadi. The embassy was to leave Kanagawa early in February.—A great fire had occurred at Osaca, destroying 30,000 houses and 150 warehouses.

THE RAMS IN PARLIAMENT.

In the House of Commons, March 4th, Mr. Shaw Lefevre denounced in strong language the fitting out of rebel vessels in British ports. He insisted that the Alabama now afloat were British vessels, and it was folly to call them Confederate. He thought the Government ought to have been seized, and contended that all such vessels should be prohibited entering British ports, and if they did British cruisers should seize them. The Attorney-General admitted the privateers might be prohibited entering British ports, and said the Government was considering the subject of excluding them. The appeal of the House of Lords in the Alexandra case had been entered for hearing.

THE WAR IN SCHLESWIG.

The Austrian troops have arrived before Diippel, and an attack was shortly expected. Three Prussian men-of-war have proceeded immediately from the French port of Brest to the north. The Prussian troops are to be employed as a reserve to the Danish Foldtaking (Hoss's of Representatives), on March 21st. France as well as England has remonstrated with Prussia against the invasion of Prussian troops into Jutland.

THE ARCHDUKE MAXIMILIAN.

The Archduke and the Archduchess Maximilian were entertained by the Emperor of France on the 5th of March. They were to remain in Paris for three or five days, and the departure of the Archduke from Trieste were to be completed on March 15. Immediately upon his return to Miramar he was officially informed of the Emperor's acceptance of the crown of Mexican notables, and formally to accept the crown.

EMANCIPATION IN POLAND.

The Emperor of Russia has issued a decree proclaiming the emancipation of the peasants in Poland. Another decree treats of the organization of the communal administrations on the principle of self-government.

ARMY AND NAVY ITEMS.

THE President has prescribed the necessary regulations for enlisting seamen from the army into the navy, and the number which may be discharged on any occasion is not exceeding 15,000, which it is desirable to have at each time. The number of men raised upon by States is: Maine, 1900; Boston, 3900; New York, 6900; Philadelphia, 3900; Maryland, 1900.

Commodore WILKES, who is now tried by court-martial at Washington, has finally resigned, while suffering the Alabama to escape. The specifications set forth that the rebel vessel Florida was allowed to escape the Alabama, contrary to orders, and afterward wrote an insolent letter to the Secretary of the Navy from the New York station to the affair.

An order has been issued from the Army of the Potomac that all soldiers within the lines shall leave as early as practicable, and that no more passes are to be granted to such visitors.

All efforts to get the five war vessels sunk at Norfolk have ceased, rumor says, not to be resumed again. The rebel Government has found it was strudy by the water to be raised under any circumstances. Three or four of the small vessels have been raised, and the machinery saved of the large ones. About $18,000 have been realized from the sale of timber and iron taken from the hulls.

Our losses at the battle of Chattanooga, Florida, were as follows:

7th New Hampshire.—Killed, 17; wounded, 67; missing, 12; total, 96.

8th United States (colored).—Killed, 49; wounded, 103; missing, 46; total, 198.

7th Connecticut.—Killed, 6; wounded, 38; missing 27; total, 71.

54th Massachusetts (colored).—Killed, 9; wounded, 65; missing, 30; total, 104.

110th New York.—Killed, 34; wounded, 102; missing, 46; total, 182.

1st North Carolina (colored).—Killed, 38; wounded, 141; missing, 63; total, 242.

65th New York.—Killed, 17; wounded, 155; missing, 42; total, 214.

47th New York.—Killed, 16; wounded, 199; missing, 34; total, 249.

Artillery.—Killed, 16; wounded, 52; missing, 12; total, 80.

1st Massachusetts Cavalry.—Killed, wounded, and missing, 8.

30th Massachusetts (Mounted Infantry).—Killed, wounded, and missing, 4.

Total killed, 202; total wounded, 1142; total missing, 397. Grand total, 1801.

Thirty-two vessels are now ready for sea, but are waiting for crews. The transfer of sailors from the army will, it is supposed, supply the demand.

Lieutenant-Colonel SARMIENTO, who was arrested on charge preferred by Colonel CHANDLER, of the Bureau of Colored Troops, has been released from arrest.

There are running at large at least 80,000 deserters. The whole number who have deserted since the war began is stated to be 127,107.

It is officially known that the statement that the Rappahannock has left the coast of Africa is premature. She was still detained at Cadiz on the 9th of February, and not case can be expected before the 1st of March.

Admiral DAHLGREN has transferred his flag from the steamer Harvest Moon to the steamer Baltimore for the purpose of visiting the different vessels under the command of his son. Colonel DAHLGREN, expected to arrive there by the 1st of April, with his regiment.

It is announced that Minister DAYTON has served a written notification upon the French Government that the rebel cruiser Rappahannock, now at Cadiz, is allowed to proceed to sea. She is a formidable vessel, and will be available for all the damage she may do to American commerce.

It is understood that General WADSWORTH is to be appointed to the command of a division in the army of the Potomac.

A letter received at the Indian Office, from St. Louis, says that General SIBLEY, who is there, states that a large number of Sioux are willing to fight, and will soon come into Fort St. Pierre to lay down their arms.

The United States steam-frigate Powhatan, Admiral PORTER, commanding, arrived at Hampton Roads on the 8th of March.

The Ninth Army Corps (General BURNSIDE) has been ordered to rendezvous at Annapolis, Maryland. It is thought it will be sent to North Carolina.

General PRICE has resumed command of the rebel troops in Arkansas, and has issued an address to the people, promising to retrieve their former disasters.

The steamer Georgiana from Nassau has been delivered by the Halifax authorities into the possession of the Federal authorities.

General ROSECRANS has issued an order rendering all newspapers, whether loyal or disloyal, liable to seizure for distribution of any newspaper or periodical within his department.

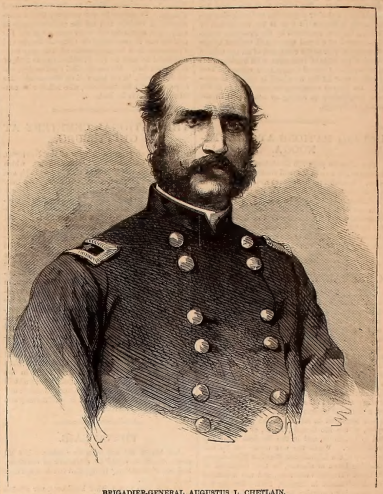
Major-General GORDON GRANGER is not sick in New York as reported. He is in command of the Fourth Army Corps, head-quarters at London, Tennessee, and is in excellent health.

General DOW arrived in Portland, Maine, on the 23d inst., and was received by the city authorities and a detachment of troops. He was escorted by Berry, by the way escorted through the principal streets to his residence. All the bells were rung in honor.

The Senate has confirmed the nomination of Harry H. SMART, of Minnesota, as a Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

GENERAL SHERMAN'S BEAR-GUARD.

MAJOR-GENERAL JAMES M'ALISTER SCHOFIELD.



BRIGADIER-GENERAL AUGUSTUS L. CHETLAIN.

GENERAL JAMES M'ALLISTER SCHOFIELD.

GENERAL JAMES M'ALLISTER SCHOFIELD, whose portrait we give on this page, was born in Chautauque County, New York, in 1831. He graduated at West Point in 1851, and his present rank in the regular army is Captain of Artillery. He has been connected with operations in Missouri from the commencement of the war until a recent date, when he was transferred to the Department of East Tennessee in place of General FOSTER. He was with General LYON at Wilson's Creek, where the latter was killed; commanded the Missouri Department temporarily when General HALLECK took the field in person in the Corinth campaign; commanded the Army of the Frontier, and fought the battle against HINDMAN and other rebel leaders near Boston Mountains, in Arkansas, in the summer of 1862; and subsequently, upon the removal of General CURTIS, was placed in full command of the Department of Missouri. His administration of affairs was not in all respects satisfactory to a large body of the people of the Department, and his transfer to another field was probably in obedience to the demand of those who regarded him as not fully in accord with the progress of opinion in that Department. General SCHOFIELD is claimed to be an officer of ability, and in his present field will have an excellent opportunity to vindicate his reputation as a commander in active service, free from the impediments which lately embarrassed his career.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL AUGUSTUS L. CHETLAIN.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL CHETLAIN, whose portrait we give on this page, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, December 26, 1824, of French-Swiss parents who emigrated to America in 1823. He received his education at Galena, Illinois, where he afterwurt embarked in mercantile pursuits. In 1850 he visited Europe and spent a year on the Continent, visiting the battle-fields of Magenta and Solferino, and interesting himself in military matters. On returning to this country he took an active part in the political campaign of 1860, and on the bombardment of Fort Sumter enlisted as a private, being the first man in Northwestern Illinois to respond to the nation's call. Five days after the bombardment he was joined by one hundred of his fellow-citizens of Galena, elected Captain, and marched his company directly to Springfield, being accompanied and assisted by Captain GRANT, now Lieutenant-General U. S. GRANT, commanding the armies of the United States. CHETLAIN'S company joined the Twelfth Illinois Infantry, he receiving the Lieutenant-Colonelcy on the consolidation. At the battle of Donaldson he was in command of the regiment, and received a promotion from General YATES for gallantry in the field. Colonel CHETLAIN led the Twelfth Illinois in the subsequent battles of Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, at Iuka, and at Corinth. After the battle of Corinth he took command of the Corinth post, and there, in the month of December, 1862, raised the first colored troops of the present war. His efforts were successful beyond hope; and after organizing and equipping two regiments of blacks, he was, at the solicitation of General GRANT, appointed by the President Brigadier-General of colored troops, and ordered by the Secretary of War to the command of all the colored troops of the State of Tennessee, with head-quarters at Memphis. General CHETLAIN's command now numbers over 12,000 men, and is rapidly increasing. He designs recruiting his command to 18,000 men, preparatory to taking an active part in the coming campaign.

SUPPLYING RATIONS TO THE DESTITUTE ABOUT CHATTANOOGA.—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

ISSUING RATIONS AT CHATTANOOGA.

THE view on page 213 illustrates an interesting feature of the war in General GRANT's late department. Government rations are now issued daily to over five thousand inhabitants of the country about Chattanooga, hundreds of citizens who were formerly in comfortable circumstances being now wholly dependent upon the bounty of the Government. Our sketch shows the office of the Provost Marshal, where orders are given to the hungry applicants for such army rations as can be conveniently dispensed.

GENERAL WILLIAM F. SMITH.

GENERAL WILLIAM FARRAR SMITH (familiarly known throughout the army as "Baldy Smith"), whose portrait we give on page 209, was born in Vermont, February 27, 1824. He entered West Point Academy in 1841, graduating with distinguished honors in 1845, being fourth in a class containing JESSE L. FOSTER, CHARLES P. STONE, and JOHN W. DAVIDSON. He was assigned to the Topographical Engineers as brevet Second-Lieutenant, and for nearly two years, from November 1845 to August 1848, acted as Assistant Professor of Mathematics at the Military Academy. In 1853 he was promoted to the full grade of First-Lieutenant, and in 1859 became Captain. At various times he was employed on surveys of the Lake Superior region, of the Lake-Bonds, Texas, of the Missouri road to California, and in the Mexican Boundary Commission. When the war broke out he was Secretary of the Light-house Board at Washington. Obtaining leave of absence, he took command of the Third Vermont Volunteers, and was appointed Brigadier-General in August, 1861. Here, the Chickahominy campaign he commanded a division in General FRANKLIN'S corps, distinguishing himself greatly by bravery and skill. For his services in that campaign he was promoted to Major-General of Volunteers in July, 1862, which was confirmed by the Senate. He participated in the battle of Antietam in September of that year, and commanded the Sixth Corps in BURNSIDE'S campaign against on Fredericksburg, December 13. He was subsequently transferred with General HOOKER to GRANT'S department, then under ROSECRANS, he planned the campaign which resulted in the capture of Lookout Mountain, personally directing some of the important preliminary movements. On the 16th ult. he was a second time nominated as Major-General by the President, to take the place of General GRANT in the regular army.

General SMITH's abilities as an officer are of the very highest order, and it is hoped that his late unfortunate circumstances he would have been placed a year ago in command of the Army of the Potomac. He possesses considerable amenity of character, and is popular to the last degree in the army, both with officers and men. It is said that the expedition now preparing to operate in the River country will be under General SMITH's command.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL HENRY E. DAVIES.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL HENRY E. DAVIES, JUN., whose portrait we give on page 209, was born in this city, July 2, 1836. In July, 1857, he graduated at Columbia College, and in the same year was admitted to the Bar. He was acquiring reputation as a lawyer and a successful business when the call of the President summoned the true friends of the Union to rally, to avenge the insult to our flag at Fort Sumter. On the 19th of April, 1861, he united with others in this city in the organization of the Duryea Zouaves, and on the 24th of April marched as Lieutenant of Company C with 800 men to Relay, Schuyler. While there the movement was fully organized, and he was promoted to the Captaincy of the Company. The Zouaves left for Fortress Monroe on the 24th of May, and was in the fight at Great Bethel, Captain Davies receiving the commendation of his superior officers for his coolness and bravery under fire. Immediately after the battle of Bull Run the regiment was ordered to Baltimore. On the 19th of July, 1861, the Secretary of War gave a written authorization to J. Mansfield Davies, then Major, to Judson Kilpatrick, then Captain, in the Zouaves, and to Captain Davies, to raise a regiment of Cavalry, to be called the Harris Light Cavalry. The President immediately commissioned the former as Colonel, Kilpatrick as Lieutenant-Colonel, and Captain Davies as Major of the new regiment.

The Harris Light Cavalry formed General M'Clellan's body-guard in the advance on Manassas, and led the attack on the enemy at Falmouth, under General M'Dowell. On the 9th of May, 1862, Major Davies, as Provost Marshal, took possession of Fredericksburg, and raised the Stars and Stripes over the town. The regiment was actively employed during the summer and in Pope's campaign, and added to its reputation for dash and bravery. On the resignation of Colonel Davies, in December, Kilpatrick was commissioned a Colonel, and Major Davies a Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment. This regiment was selected to make the raid to Richmond in May, 1863, which it did under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Davies. In June, 1863, on Colonel Kilpatrick's promotion to a Brigadier-General, Lieutenant-Colonel Davies was appointed Colonel. In August he was assigned to the command of a Brigade, and led the gallant charge at Culpepper, capturing two of the enemy's guns. For this he was recommended by Generals Meade and Pleasanton as a Brigadier-General, and was commissioned as such by the President on the 16th of September last. He commanded the Cavalry, under Kilpatrick, in the late raid on Richmond. He is popular with his command, who follow with confidence wherever he leads.

THE NATIONAL CEMETERY AT GETTYSBURG.

WE give on page 209 a view of the NATIONAL SOLDIERS' CEMETERY AT GETTYSBURG, which marks at once the terrors of that bloody field, and a nation's gratitude to those who sacrificed their lives to its defense. This Cemetery is pleasantly situated on the north and west sides of the gentlysloping Cemetery Hill, and commands a part of the field over which the battle so fearfully raged. It contains in all an area of seventeen and one-fourth acres. It was purchased by the State of Pennsylvania, which presented each State the lot occupied by its dead. Arrangements are making to inclose the ground with suitable and substantial iron fence and a stone wall. A general commemorative monument will be erected in the centre of the design, in which the fallen heroes are buried. In an observatory, placed on the knoll in the back part of the Cemetery, will give a very extended and comprehensive view of the whole battle-field. The Governor Cemetery adjoining will be long remembered by our soldiers who fought so gallantly on the memorable first days of July, as dilapidated fences, shattered head-stones, and broken grounds still tell of the fearful conflict. About 100 bodies have been raised from the field and reinterred in the Cemetery. Each grave (known and unknown) will be marked by a stone, and the names, regiment, and regiment of the recognized will be substantially and neatly engraved thereon.

TIPPOO SAIB.

ALL heroes are not héros de roman. Not all preux chevaliers wield the sword, and embroider not one admires many things that one does not care to appropriate.

Tippoo Saib was neither handsome, nor accomplished, nor gently bred. He was a middle-aged negro of Congo descent, and formed after the ultra type of his race, with misshapen skull, immense lips, close-curled wool, and a skin as nearly black as human skin was ever tinted. He was heavy both of stature and intellect, entirely ignorant of almost every thing a man should know. But at the end of my story (by, if you dare, that he was a hero, a preux chevalier, a man to be admired and revered.

When North Carolina joined the rebellion and began to raise troops, Mr. John Fernald got himself transformed into Captain John Fernald. When, furthermore, he was requested to furnish one or more negroes to labor upon the fortifications of Roanoke Island, he magnificently replied, "Certainly," and went home to consider how he was to do one. For John Fernald, the seedy heir of a penniless sire and grandsire, owned no lands save his heavily-mortgaged plantation, and negroes in stock save the fine horse who was destined to bear his master to the wars, a few cows and pigs, Tippoo Saib, his wife Marcy, and their little pickaninny (Mr. Fernald had a fine taste in nomeaclature), and Aphrodite, commonly called Frite, a girl upon whom devolved the house-labor while Marcy waited on her husband in the fields, except in some great domestic emergency, when she was summoned to the assistance of Frite.

The household was a meagre one, and its affairs administered in a spirit of strict economy, localized upon Frite by her master with a severity that mistress with pevish complaints as to its necessity.

Such comfy residence as the latter still yielded was to be credited to Tippoo, who, with Marcy and the occasional help of hired service, both directed and executed all its operations.

This trusty auxiliary was not then to be lightly parted with, and yet he was the only chattel in Captain Fernald's possession available for the subscription of the contribution he was called upon to make; nor had he funds or available property of any kind for the purchase of a substitute. The course was left, and but one. Marcy and Sciple Africanus must be bartered for a laborer; and Frite, who was of middling price, could be spared on a piece of merchandise, and more so as household drudge, than she urged on household questions in her own province, as Tippoo in his, to make good her place.

The plan, once resolved on, was soon executed. And Marcy and her child were attached to a coffle of slaves traveling south.

And what did Tippoo feel or say at being thus in a day bereft of wife and child, and such poor tie to home and love as a slave may know?

What he felt the God who made him only knows. What he said was this:

"Mas'r, you loves lilly Missy?"

"Of course I do, Tip."

"An' what way would you fix it to 'pear de right ting, Mas'r, dat lilly Missy should be toted off 'mong strange niggers 'ceptin' me for nuss?"

"Oh well, Tip—I know, of course. But then you see, boy, it is different. You know such things are a matter of course. My child—why it is altogether another thing."

"Don' see it, Mas'r," replied Tippoo, with a slow shake of his poor, bewildered head. "Sciple buck; I know, and lilly Missy she white as an egg; but now I's buck myself, an' don' tink de wuss of my chile for look like his dad. Don' see it nohow, Mas'r."

He stood leaning on his hoe and looking gloomily at the ground, not sullen or vindictive, only sorrowfully seeking a solution to the terrible injustice of his lot, dimly felt.

Captain Fernald, confusedly switching the weeds and the flowers about him, found no reply to make; and after standing for a few moments, presenting a remarkable contrast by his nervous irritability of manner to the solemn calm of Tippoo's mood, he muttered some incoherent words of vague consolation, and sauntered away.

Nothing more was ever said between them on the subject; but in the week intervening between that day and the one when the volunteer Captain joined his regiment he treated his silent slave with not only unwonted kindness, but in a certain apologetic and deprecatory manner, inexplicable on his part, and unperceived by Tippoo's dim and preoccupied mind, but yet not without its effect on each.

The Captain joined his regiment. Tippoo Saib toiled early and late at his thankless tasks. Frite groaned and drudged unaided. And poor feeble Mrs. Fernald took to her bed, with a complication of nervous disorders and diseases.

Only bright little Alice remained untouched by sorrow or wrong, to illuminate with the sunshine of her three summers some portion of the gloom of that dreary household.

"How's Mist's?" asked Tippoo Saib, one evening, about a month after his master's departure, as he entered the kitchen for his milking-pail.

"Wuss," responded Frite, sulkily; and after an embarrassed pause, added, "Tee comin' out to help me milk, Tip, quick's I get lilly Missy to bed."

"You don't need to, Frite. T'd as good be doin' as restin'," said Tippoo, brusquely, as he went out.

But Alice's petulant and fear-ever prepossess to further, soon followed him, and after a little preliminary complaint of the hardships she endured, said, suddenly:

"I's gwine off, Tip."

"Off! Where you gwine, Frite?"

"Why to de Norf, or somewhere 'bout dere. You see, old Tip, Mist's she gettin' wuss berry fas,' an' 'skeight she not see you nor de doctor."

"What's he?"

"Dere ain't none short o' Weston, an' Mist's said we you was not to go till her brudder Tom's folks how she sick and not spectin' to get well no more."

"Hobbeny Marster! Am she dat bad, Frite?"

"I reckon she am," returned Aphrodite, stoically; and immediately added, "So I's gwine to cut my own fortin' 'mong de Yanks. I reckon he look sharp 'nough arter us, Tip, wedder he sister lib or die. I know what dere's some called folks in de swamp—contrabands, I 'se 'gin 'em Norf."

"Has you seen Pete?" asked Tip, referring to a brother of Frite's, who had disappeared from a neighboring plantation some weeks previously.

"Nebber you min' 'bout dat, ole man," returned Frite, indifferently. "I 'spects I'll see him by'm by. I like to git your freedom easy, you com' 'long o' me to-night to de Big Swamp."

"But by-an'-by, when I leave Mist's an' lilly Missy all 'lone," asked Tippoo, incredulously, "an' she so sick as you tell for?"

She ain't no sicker dan I be, o' slavin' here for nuffin," returned Frite, angrily. "An' to-night's de las' chance for jinin' dem folks. They spec's to move 'fore mornin'. I tole Pete I's be dar 'fore midnight."

"Be what 'fore midnight?"

"What I 'gin you de way I plan," retorted Frite, dryly. "If you's a min' ter go 'long, yer'll find out all bout it; an' of you ain't agwine, w'y takin' no matter."

"Wouldn' it do to-morrer mornin' arter T's ben an' say de darkey's run off?"

"Till ye no, nigger, 'twon't. Dey's gwine to start dis berry night arter mournine, an' I ain't gwine to go 'long wid 'em, 'cause dey 'gwine heider. Pete didn' want I should even say wot I has, but I wont 'agwine to cut 'thout gibin you a chance for to go 'long o' me. So now say, ole Tip, right smart, wot'll ye do?"

"Tank ye kin'ly, Frite," replied Tippoo, after a long pause, during which he softly mumbled and patted the head of Snowdrop, his favorite heifer. "Tank ye kin'ly, but I reckin I'll stop."

"Den all I 'gin ye de slip, de more fool you," responded Frite, venomously, as she lifted the full pail and turned toward the house.

"Stop a minute, Frite. Don' yer tink dat I's ongrateful for de chance, nor yet dat I desex' keer for freedom. But I's got a way to get to 'em, an' I can look fore mornin', an' dat you see is too late. Den dere ain't no house 'tween here an' dar, an' dere ain't none on de road 'cept de one Mas'r gone, and poor Mist's most dis an' lilly Missy too, for any one 'd know on't."

"Mas'r 'gone, Tippoo? o' your ole woman an' pickaninny," retorted the disappointed Frite.

The thrust was unexpected, and the great, loving, ignorant heart was pierced through. Unthoughtingly hope, any faith that what seemed so wrong must yet be right. Tippoo abruptly hid his face in the white hide of his cow, and great heaving sobs began to shake his brawny frame, and the hot tears rolled down wondering Snowdrop's neck and mingled with the milk.

"I didn' mean to make you feel so bad, Tip," said Frite, at last, in an apologetic voice; "only I's dink see as you hadn't no more 'casion for Mas'r 'gone by you. Look arter yerself an' nebber min' what come to side of you."

Tippoo stood up, wiping his eyes on the sleeve of his coarse shirt, and looked at the girl with a puzzled smile as he replied:

"Fears like, Frite, I'd rather die de way dat I'd be 'liked Mas'r to be' done by me."

But he did think that Tippoo Saib, thus speaking, echoed mechanically, as so many of his white brethren do, that Golden Rule which is in all our mouths, and so few of our hearts. He had never heard of it—in fact, his religious education had progressed very little beyond the Genesis of Jumbo faith, in the odor of whose sanctity his ancestors had lived and died.

He did but speak out of the fullness of that child's heart of his, which overflowed the human wretch's frame that held it, but found no other expression than the tears that had rolled down Snowdrop's neck.

Frite lingered a moment or two, but not finding any better argument than these she had already used, and feeling also a little injured by Tip's superiority, she finally went into the house and slammed the door violently, after which demonstration her mind relapsed into its former placidity.

Tippoo Saib went to his lonely cabin, cooked his scanty supper, and then rolled up in a woollen blanket and lay down on the floor, to sleep as he had never may be his mental disquietude.

Early in the morning he went up to the house to receive his directions for Weston from his mistress, and not without curiosity as to Frite's movements. The kitchen door stood open, and the autumn sunshine streamed merrily in, but, except the cat purring in the ashes, no crew was visible, nor any preparations for breakfast going on.

"She's cut and lef' pore Mist's all 'lone," soliloquized Tip; and his grave mind began a process of inquiry as to his own first duty in the case.

While he still stood pondering and scratching his woolly head the quick patter of small bare feet was heard along the passage, and on the door doorway stood a rosy little maid, her trailing night-dress deftly gathered in one hand, while the other "shed by the yellow hair" from her sweet but troubled face.

"Uncle Tip, go call Frite," began she, eagerly. "Baby wants her supper, and Frite all gone. Uncle Tip make Frite come dress baby, and get baby's supper."

"Poor lilly Missy!" was all Tip found to say, but his voice was rich with love as a woman's.

Lilly Missy came forward and put her morsel of a hand into its black pay, and when he knelt upon one knee and drew the head her upon the other threw both arms round his neck and nestled close to his broad breast.

"Uncle Tip's good. Baby loves Uncle Tip; but baby wants her supper," remarked she, persistently.

"Lilly Missy shall have supper, an' Tip'll go an' Tip'll go an' git her some nice warm milk from the mooly cow, will she?"

"And give milk to poor mamma, too; nice warm milk, for mamma all cold, and don't want to talk to baby. Mamma don't wake up at all, when baby calls she 'se wake up."

A sudden horror woke in Tippo's bewildered mind.

"Lilly Missy, show Tip where her mammy is, an' he'll ask if she have some milk," asserted he; and Alice, sliding from his knee, seized his finger and led him on through the passage to the door of a large bedroom, where Mrs. Fernald had retired to die, after she was confined to her bed.

Standing at the door, with head reverently bared and breath suspended, Tip looked earnestly at the pale, pretty face turned toward him on the pillow. He needed no approach. Death had an unerring sense, keener than sight, keener than touch, that unerringly warns living man of his neighborhood to death—a sense, a repugnance which desire to flee. Such it was that now crept through Tippoo's blood, and turned the rich brown of his honest skin to a muddy yellow. Such it was that, laying its chill hand even upon the innocent heart of the child, made her cling closer to the side of her strange comrade, murmuring:

"Baby's cold. Baby don't want stay here."

Releasing himself from her grasp, Tippoo Saib took on tip-toe across the room, and peered forth over the fair linen sheet over that face as white as cold; then drew down the blinds and left the room, closing the door behind him.

"Come, lilly Missy," said he, soothingly, to the child, who now sat on the lowest step of the staircase, with her little trembling lip and grieved eyes, showing that the tears were close at hand.

"Come, show Tip where Frite is, little closes, an' he'll try to dress you. Den you'll go 'long wid him, milkin' de cows, an' den he'll gib you some breakuse."

"And give mamma some nice warm milk, so she feel all well again, and talk to baby?" asked the little maid.

"Mammy don' want for nothin', lilly Missy, an' she 'se can eat no drinks while her sister her on a visit. Mammy gib her, an' Tip'll gib you a plain upon the other, he went out to milk.

This process completed, they returned to the house, and Tippoo, having set bread in a cupboard, prepared bread and milk for a family of perhaps six hungry boys, and entertained little lilly Missy, who had forgotten all her troubles in a frolic with the cat, he bade her "eat it all up, like a blessed little child, and she should have some more."

Then seating himself upon the door-step, with his elbows upon his knees, and his chin in the palms of his hands, Tippoo Saib unconsciously entered upon the crisis of his life.

Before him lay two courses. The one led to freedom—and remember that this word to a slave carries the same illimitable blessing that the word Heaven does to a freeman—the other to continual, nay, aggravated misery, for Mr. Fernald, on his brother of Mrs. Fernald, was well known as a hard master, and to him, should Captain Fernald never return from the war, Tip would become thrall.

Tip raised his head and looked steadfastly Northward, until in his dull eyes began to glow a fire, a manhood they never knew before. Then suddenly turning his head, he fixed them upon the little child, who, chattering gayly to the kitten as she fed her with the remnant of her breakfast, did not know that her own life hung in the balance, and that the untaught mind of the father had so bitterly wronged was its arbiter.

Tippoo knew the forest paths for miles about his home. He knew the course the party of fugitives would necessarily travel. He did not doubt that by arduous exertion he could overtake them, or failing in that, make his own way to the North and to Freedom. But he knew, too, that for weeks no visitor might seek the lonely plantation house, that the child was entirely incapable of providing her own subsistence even for a day, or of making her own way to those who might care for her. Slow visions of the bright-haired child moaning for food, pining from weary day to day, until, lying exhausted in the lonely night, she should call her little life away, or perhaps wandering to the forest perish miserably there; visions of the dead woman, who had been a kind mistress to him and his, lying unburied in that darkened room, until she who had been so beautiful became a thing of summon horror: violent even of poor Snowdrop and her mates calling vainly to him for help, and suffering miserably for its want, passed in slow succession through his unconcerned mind, and burying his face in his broad hands, Tippoo made his decision, chose his course, and with a deep groan closed his mental eyes upon those alluring dreams of liberty and manhood that had for one brief moment seemed within his grasp.

Rising heavily he went and took the child in his arms.

"Will Milly miss kin Uncle Tip jes' once?" asked he, humbly.

The white little arms closed about his neck in an instant, and the rose-bud mouth was pressed to his swarthy cheek in a merry shower of kisses.

"Baby love Uncle Tip ever so much. He very good," said she, as he replaced her on the floor, and with his large heart full of love and peace, the man who had freedom within his grasp elected slavery instead.

The only bore remaining on the place was lame, and it was on his own feet that Tippoo had carried the twelve miles to Weston, carrying little Alice in his arms, besides a bundle containing some clothes for her and food should she need it on the road.

Reaching Mr. Bennett's house in the middle of the afternoon, he asked for the master, and telling his simple story, delivered up his charge, and waited to hear what should be his own fate.

"Dead? Your mistress dead? It is very sudden. Sit here, boy, till I carry the child to her aunt," said Mr. Bennett.

"Hear work go. Baby like Uncle Tip, and stay with him," declared the little lady, quietly, but so resolutely that she could only be presented to the listening room in the arms of her colored nurse. Here, however, the affectionate caresses of her aunt, and the attractions of a kitten even prettier than she who had left at home, soon won her some her shyness, and she at last consented that Tip should withdraw to the kitchen, where he vainly tried to eat the dainties set before him by the table aunty there presiding.

The next day Mr. Bennett, accompanied by Tip, upon whose movements he kept a sharp eye, called two assistants and a clergyman, sought the lonely house; and after conferring upon his sister's remains the rites of Christian sepulture, the disposition of such valuables as remained in the house, and closing the doors and windows, abandoned it to the desolation that already had laid its hand upon the whole scene.

A letter, informing Captain Fernald of his bereavement, returned, after many weeks, unopened to Weston, with the brief notice indorsed upon the back that Captain Fernald was severely wounded in the head, was perfectly unconscious, and could not probably survive many days. Under these circumstances Mr. Bennett considered himself justified in taking possession of such part of his niece's inheritance as could be made available, and converting it either into cash or to his own use.

Tippoo was no favorite with his new master, nor did he find his life so comfortable as it had been under his former more independent circumstances. He did not complain in any manner, however, but his silent resolution to escape became more and more confirmed in his mind.

A suspicion of this determination in the mind of his master increased the disfavor he already entertained for his new chattel, and he resolved to forestall its execution by presenting him to Government in compliance with a new requisition for laborers on the fortifications.

The transfer was accordingly made, and at the same time Mr. Bennett applied for and received a commission as captain of a volunteer company just raised in Weston, and already under marching orders.

Tip made no remark on being informed of his new destiny, but his dark face darkened with a gleam of satisfaction. Any change was to him a welcome one.

"Please, Mas'r, I'd like to be good-by to Milly Missy 'fore I go."

"Nonsense, boy, what should she care for you? She's something else to do, and I've no time to wait; follow me right along."

Tip patiently turned to do as he was ordered, but his mind went back to the memorable conversation on the sunny door-step, he had given up his own cherished hope for the sake of that little child, and now he might not even hear her voice once more.

But of a sudden came the rush of little feet behind them, and a sweet voice crying, breathlessly, "I will, I will, I will see Uncle Tip again." "I will no go, old Crissy. I will speak to dear old Tip!"

Master and slave turned to see the cause of this tiny clamor. It was Alice, who, escaping from her nurse, came flying down the street, her golden curls streaming in the air, one little foot unshod, and her face all aglow with rebellious love and determination.

Tippoo stooped, and catching her in his arms, raised her to his breast, where she clung and kissed him as she had done once before in the sunny kitchen of the old home.

"Tank you, Milly Missy," said Tip, solemnly, as he set her down. "Feared like Uncle Tip couldn't ha' gone way without dat. He know you love him you, Milly Missy; an' of you don' neuber see Tip no more, you'll 'member onst in a wile how he tetsy ye from de ole home down here, an' how he'd ha' ben glad to lay down his life, of so he 'twould ha' done Milly Missy any good."

"I love Uncle Tip—Uncle Tip is good. Why is he sorry?" asked the child, with a perplexed cloud upon her sunny face.

"Good-by, Milly Missy." And Tippoo, with no word more, hurried after his master, who had walked on impatiently.

Roanoke Island was in possession of the Federal forces, and its rebel defenders had made a retreat more rapid than dignified to the main land.

In the camp of the conquerors all was exultation, mirth, and proud anticipation of future successes. In that of the vanquished reigned chagrin, wrath, and the desire of vengeance. Plans for a counter-surprise, for a sudden dash, that should sweep away the invaders as by a single blow of destruction, were loudly canvassed among the knot of officers, who had not lost heart and hope in the defeat of that dark night; but as a preliminary to any action it was necessary to learn accurately the position and force of the enemy; for of these particulars as many varying estimates were held as there were tongues to announce them.

A reconnoissance was obviously necessary, and several volunteers for this delicate and dangerous service Captain Bennett and Lieutenant Fosdick were selected; and as soon as night again fell to favor their movements they prepared to set about it. A light canoe was provided with muffled oars, but two officers seated themselves in the stern, and Tippoo Sash was elected to the onerous duty of oarsman, with a stern injunction from his former master to beware of any species of treachery, as himself should be its first victim.

To this intimation Tip meekly responded, "Yis, Mas'r," and seating himself in the canoe, placed his little craft close under the lee of the island.

The night was intensely dark, with occasional showers of rain, and this circumstance, while favoring the movement of the spies in some respects, rendered them more difficult in others, especially as the main channel, through which, for security's sake, was necessary to avoid the observation of the sentinels, who would, of course, be posted at every point they might approach.

Finally, however, the Lieutenant was set ashore at the point of land nearest the main, and in connection with the island was near enough to the camp fires to enable him to make a fair survey of its position without danger of being discovered. Captain Bennett meantime was, according to previous agreement, to be rowed some distance further north with a view of reconnoitring the fleet in the position and apparent numbers of the Federal forces in that quarter.

Arrived at a suitable point for landing, Bennett, with a whispered word, ordered Tip to guide the canoe inshore, and it soon grounded noiselessly upon the sandy beach.

After waiting a few moments to make sure that his approach was undiscovered, the Captain rose cautiously to his feet, and, with the aid of a branch over the bows of the boat, when, with a sudden motion, a noose of small rope slipping over his head, he settled down to his middle and was then drawn tight, effectually pinioning his arms to his side. With cool effect and self-possession he looked coolly about his lower limbs, his body, and one turn laid with grim pleasantry about his neck.

The sudden and effectual capture, and so perfectly taken by surprise was the Captain, that he was already securely bound before he succeeded in ejaculating,

"You scoundrel! what devil's trick is this?"

"Sh', Mas'r," returned Tip, with an affectation of great caution—"don't be so loud; you 'll wake dem dam Yankee somewhar about, an' oberhear us."

A tremendous oath expressed Captain Bennett's appreciation of his delicate hint, but suddenly remembering that his only hope of escape lay in the patient and amicable temper of his captor, he succeeded in smothering his wrath, and said, in a tone where forced friendliness and vehement passion struggled strangely for the mastery,

"Come, Tip, you don't mean to hurt me, you know. You wouldn't give me up to these —— Yankees. Think of my wife and children. Remember Alice—"

"An' 'member you, Mas'r, how you 'tought it couldn't be done to take Tippoo Sash? Tip goodeby, now you allus grudged de poty corn-cake saying a word to de poor nigger dat lubbed her so. Tain't no use, though, Mas'r, dat's gone by. Tip 'member you ideas 'bout de Yankees all wrong, an' 'a gwine to gib you de chance to git 'em straightened out. Don't you 'member, Mas'r, how you 'tought, when Mas'r. Now s'pose we go up an' look at dis yur fort together, Mas'r? Spec's de Yankees will show de inside's well's de out, an' dat's more nor you bargained for, Mas'r."

So saying, Tip raised his captive in his arms and carried him ashore as easily as if he had been a child.

"Now, Mas'r," said he, placing him carefully on the beach, "you's got yo choice. Will you be toted up yander like an armful o' cornshucks, or will you walk?"

"How can I walk, you black scoundrel, with my legs tied?" sullenly demanded the captive.

"I 'll untie 'em, Mas'r, an' again I 'll say you'll walk right 'long straight widout a fuss."

"Untie them, then, you—"

"Now, Mas'r, you 'buse me unmerely no how. Spec's I'd better tote ye," said Tip, in a tone of grave rebuke; and he was again about to raise the helpless form of his late master, when the latter, fearful lest by alive to the ridicule of appearing before his enemies in such a position, hastened to make the required promise in more civil terms. Tippoo, signifying his satisfaction at the concession, proceeded immediately to loosen the bonds of his captive sufficiently to allow him to walk with some degree of ease, but not to run or to use his arms at all. Then inserting the loose end of the rope through that in the rope about the Captain's neck, he called his attention to the fact that a slight movement would be sufficient to tighten it to a very unpleasant extent, and that such movement would be the result of any attempt of escape or resistance on his part.

This intimation the Captain received in sullen silence, but showed his appreciation of its intent by following, or rather preceding, his captor (who guided him by the rope about his neck much as he would have done a refractory steer) to the neighborhood of the earth-works dignified by the name of fort, where they encountered a sentinel, to whom Tip briefly made known who and was entered to proceed to head-quarters, where he was relieved of his charge, amidst the wonder and merriment of a good-ly crowd of spectators.

Tip, on leaving the boat, had taken the precaution of leaving the oars, to prevent the escape of Lieutenant Fosdick, and that officer was captured in the course of the next day, and soon after accompanied Captain Bennett and numerous other of his countrymen on a voyage Northward, and a prolonged residence in one of Uncle Samuel's Marine Villas.

Tippoo Sash also traveled North, although not as a prisoner. For the first time in a life of forty years, and with a heart long light as no man who has never been a slave may appreciate, he now found himself free to move in whatever direction or to whatever distance he might find most to his own advantage, and his first impulse was to breathe the air of a free North.

For something more than a year he supported himself in Massachusetts by such labor as he could find to do, but as soon as the enlistment of colored troops was permitted by Government, Tippoo hastened to enroll himself among the first of the noble volunteers; nor among the hundreds of thousands of brave men who have fought beneath the Federal banners in this great war, has one soldier, black or white, given more ample earnest of his devotion, more purely, more entirely than this poor untaught African.

His uniform courage and good conduct slowly won him such advancement as is at present possible to a man of his color, and on the tenth day of April, 1863, he received his captain's bar as sergeant of Fort Wagner with the stripes of a sergeant upon his arm.

We all know who led that assault. A nation mourns, a nation glories, over the hero who there won himself a name that will not be forgotten while his country holds a memory, a tongue, a pen; who, yet in brilliant youth, closed a career all glorious promise in the most glorious fulfillment of duties where he fell, "buried with his niggers," more proudly, more honored than a prince or conqueror beneath an ebon pall of state.

But no nation mourns, no poet sings, no history, save this rude tale, will chronicle the closing scene of another hero, as devoted, as noble, as great, as beautiful to those who have eyes to read the hearts of men as that of his hero-leader.

Foremost in the fight, foremost, dauntless in the front of that dauntless band, rushed Tippoo Sash upon the enemy, and fighting as he fights who feels that freedom or death is the prize of the struggle, the contest. He had with as many blows sent three of his opponents to their doom, when he caught the glance of one descending with deadly aim a rate force upon the head of the Colonel, who stood beside him encouraging his rapidly men.

Quick as light Tippoo's bayonet was interposed and caught the blow, delivered with such force as had soon died the weapon from the hilt. Wrenching it from the hand of the disarmed officer, when, glancing up, he recognized, with astonishment Captain Fernald, his former master.

It was but an instant that he hesitated, but who shall blame humanity for it? In that instant the man remembered the wife of his youth, torn from his arms, sold to a slavery so barbarous that she had soon died from the severity; he remembered his merry boy, his one child, whom he had loved with all his loving heart, and of whose life or death not one echo had reached him in all these years; he remembered his own enslaved youth and manhood, and the bitter memories of his wrongs rushed back within him, and tightened with savage vigor the hand that still held uplifted the gleaming bayonet.

But before the blow fell, before the humanities of Captain Fernald could be upraised in defense of the life that in one anguished pang resigned it-self at last, another adversary shot athwart the vengeance of Tippoo's mood.

It was the vision of a little maid, all aglow with young energy and life, who came flowing back as she ran, with white arms uplifted to his embrace, with rosy lips that asked no better than to press themselves again upon his cheek.

The vision flashed and passed, but it had wrought its work. Dropping his arm with its deadly weapon, Tippoo faltered out,

"Go 'long, Mas'r, I won't kill Milly Missy's father!" With a wild shout he was bounding forward to seek another antagonist, the white man with the death drew the revolver from his belt, and with deliberate aim discharged its contents full into the generous heart that so faithfully garnered and so well repaid the one love that had illumined his weary life.

The fierce battle-cry ended in a wild shriek upon the negro's lips, and he fell forward upon his face dead, just as the ball from him, the noble life he had shielded a moment since was smitten down by the blow that gave a hero to deathless glory.

Tippoo Sash was one of the honored dead that the fierce victors upon that bloody field laid down to their eternal rest in the same grave with their young champion, leaving them to do honor to his remains, but in reality surrounding him with a guard of honor that, when the last trumpet shall sound reveille, shall arise with him; the corruptible body exchanged for the incorruptible, the faithful and noble spirit giving form and color to its new tabernacle.

And in this glorious hope rest peacefully and well, even Tippoo Sash himself that if the Lord, in lowly and thy death unsung, nor less hath the Eternal Judge knowledge of thy temptations and thy triumph, thy loving heart and earnest soul.

"A roo," says Professor Bump, "is an amphibious animal what lickers on cold water and consequently invented the scotoid society. He always walks with a jump, i-deer; and when he sits down has to stand up. Being a lover of native noticities, he gives free concerts every night, to dear himself. He perwides music for the multitude, which has been so called because it mostly is heard in a solitude. He is a warmint what ain't so bad when boiled on a gridiron."

Bread is the staff of life, and liquor the stiffs—the former sustaining a man, and the latter elevating him for a fall.

If some of our very conservative men had been present at the creation, they would have said, "Good Lawzus! what is to become of the fishes?"

Advice to smokers.—Cut Cavendish.

When is a baby not a baby?—When it's a-teething (sea thing).

A Yankee made a bet with a Dutchman that he could outdraw him. The Dutchman lay down upon the table, and the Yankee, taking his big jug in his hands, sipped it very coolly. "Oh, you are hitting me!" roared the Dutchman. "Why, you old fool!" replied the Yankee, "did you think I was going to swallow you whole?"

The Levees Il.—There is something profoundly humorous in the conversations of a Cockney. An exchange puts down the following as the direction of an English father to his son: "Arry, 'op and get down to Mr. 'Arris', and hask 'im 'ow 'e's at 'is bed or bush to make a manner 'andle." We can respectfully suggest "about as good, and quite true. An English actor was playing Harry the William Tell. Upon the following speech, "Heavenly! most beautiful! To save his own and Albert's life, will has consented to shoot an apple off his own son's head." The actor knocked about his b'ar thus: "Orrible! 'orrible! 'orrible! To save 'is own and Albert's life, 'e 'as consented to shoot hon happle hoff 'is hown son's 'ead."

Coryle, listening to a party conversing upon Goethe—"Do you think Goethe was a great philosopher?" he interrogated—said: "Gentlemen, did you never hear of the man who refilled the pipe because it would not light the first time?"

"His year son Timothy filled I" inquired Gobbins of Stubbins the other day. "Oh, not at all; he has only whipped over the pantry, and fallen back to take a better position," was the reply.

Either there is a great deal of man's nature in a monkey, or a great deal of monkey's nature in a man.

What military order is like a lady crossing the street on wet day? "Attention, company! Eyes right! Dress!"

"This is what they call a 'fellow feeling' for a man," as the thief said when the policeman was groping after him in the dark.

The finest ship in the world—Friend-ship.

People choose their opposites. Just so—the Goose and the Sage are generally associated.

He who has plenty of brass can generally get it off for gold.

"I am astonished, my dear young lady, at your sentiments; you make me start." "Well, Sir, I've been wanting you to start for the last hour."

Mr. Snooks was advised to get his life insured. "Won't do it," said he; "it would be my luck to live forever if I should."

An Irish guide told Dr. James Johnson, who wished for a reason why Echo was always of the feminine gender, that "Maybe it was because she always had the last word."

An Irishman, illustrating the horrors of solitary confinement, stated that most of our hardened criminals would use this punishment for life, only fifteen survived it!

A brisbane young barrister says that any lady who possesses one thousand acres of land presents sufficient ground for an attachment.

The geological character of the rock on which drunkards built is said to be sand-stone.

Generally, as soon as a man is supposed to have a little money, his wife gets too lame to walk, and must have a carriage.

Men are born with two eyes, but with one tongue, in order that they should see twice as much as they say.

"Do you know the prisoner, Mr. Jones?" "Yes, to the cane." "How long have you known him?" "Didn't know as he had any." "Does he live near you?" "So near that he has only spent five shillings for fire-wood in eight years."

PROVERBS FROM THE OLDEN TIME.

Think of ease, and you will never have it.

Manners often makes fortunes.

Forgive and forget is the sign of a noble mind.

The table robs more than the thief.

Better go about than fall into the ditch.

Youth and white paper take any impression.

Who looks for faults finds them.

A man of gladness seldom falls into madness.

Children and fools must have their will.

Husbands are in because when wives chide and, Better be out than in when they scold.

The mill can not grind with the water that is past.

They must learn that learn that will not learn to heed.

He that hath love in his heart hath pears in his shoe.

He who would well send his child to ask his wages.

Marry your sons when you will, your daughters when you can.

When the tree is fallen, every man goeth to it with his hatchet.

He may well be contented who needs neither borrow nor beg.

The best physicians are Dr. Diet, Dr. Quiet, and Dr. Merryman.

All women are good; i. e., good for something, or good for nothing.

He who hath but one bag must have his fat; and he who hath but one son must have a foal.

Why is a table like a flea?—Because, if you have any fun in you, you can "eat it in a race."

Men are born with two eyes and one tongue, in order that they may see much and say little.

The coldest seat in an omnibus—the one nearest the Pole.

Some tourists, being exceedingly thirsty, stopped for drinks at a house by the roadside; they emptied every cup that was offered them, and still wanted more. The woman of the house at length brought out an enormous bowl of milk, and, setting it down on the table, said, "One would think, gentlemen, you had never been weaned."

While recently engaged in splitting wood Jones struck his axe into, instead of a stick to fly up. It struck him on the jaw, and knocked a tooth out. Jones, in a rage, on his meeting him soon after, "you've had a dental operation performed, I see." "Yes," replied the sufferer, "and Mentals."

"WHERE IS THE ENEMY?"
Mr. SHODDY.
"GOOD EVENING SIR!"

"THERE COMES THE ALABAMA."
MR FOGEY.
"GIVE THE COUNTERSIGN."
IN SCHOOL.

APRIL, 1864.

ESCAPED FROM LIBBY.

THE thermometer was somewhere in the region of zero.

Not that it was so very cold in the keen glitter of the February sunshine, but there was such a temperatious, turbulent, shrieking wind — a wind that had been playing with the great green billows of light that tumble along the shore at Staten Island, and bringing briny whiffs from the salt marshes of New Jersey, and howling through the solemn old forests that hang over the Palisades! When this a wind to be intimidated by the brown-stone palaces and plate-glass facades of Murray Hill? Not it; and in token of its lawful nobility at the contained casements, and tossed whirls of choking dust into the tessellated marble of stately vestibules without number, to the manifest discomposure of people who didn't understand its boisterous jokes.

It was a very warm, bright breakfast-room, with walls hung with crimson-velvet paper veined with wavy lines of gold, which made you think of tropic sunsets bathed in flaming glow-and-red curtains, and a superb silver breakfast-service set out in front of a blazing Liverpool-coal fire. And Mrs. Vess was pouring fragrant amber-coffee into a cabaret of painted Sèvres cups in a most becoming breakfast-cap of lace and ribbon, and a sixty-dollar cashmere wrapper.

"What horrid weather!" she sighed, elevating her shoulders as the windows rattled ominously. "We never have such dreadful winds in the sweet South!"

Mr. Vess made no answer; he was reading the paper with a very expressive wrinkle between his dove-like brows, and little Kitty Colvin was conveying surreptitious bits of broiled partridge into the jaws of a spectacled black-and-tan terrier that sat beside her chair.

A dark-eyed, tiger thing with the shadows of Louisianian summer-groves on her cheeks, and Louisianian sunshine swimming in the yellow brightness of her hair. Not that the latter seemed out of place under the bleak skies of the frozen North. And yet Kitty had secretly made up her mind never, never to like that same frozen North, whose winds and icicles to the contrary notwithstanding!

"If I could only go back again; this climate is killing me!" plained Mrs. Vess, drawing a lace shawl around her. "Gerald, how long shall we be wretched exiles in this ungenial North? Is there any thing new in the papers this morning; you never tell me a word of politics!"

"Hold your tongue, Sallie!" growled her morose better-half. "Women are born to drive men mad, I believe. Give me another cup of coffee, and don't talk about things you don't understand!"

"Then marry another Union victory or something," sighed Mrs. Vess, scraping her husband's "snub" as a matter of course. "And that reminds me, pal Kitty is actually looking pleased! Well, the treachery there is in this world, to be sure!"

Indeed, aunt," said Kitty, demurely, "I should fancy the treachery lay in seeking refuge and shelter in a country whose downfall you are secretly wishing for—in living at the North, while you are a blister secessionist at heart!

Mr. Vess laid down his paper and looked his niece in the face. Kitty's slender-shadowy gray deeper, and her eyes fell. She was not aware that her uncle had been an auditor to that fierce little Union speech, but she was determined to stand to her gun nevertheless.

"Indeed!" was his dry comment. "Very fine, to be sure! In the second-hand sentiments, I suppose, of Lieutenant Roy. A pity that Libby Prison should afford so poor a field for his talents!"

Kitty colored, for she really thought Gerald Roy had pin quivered, but she did not answer.

"Now look here, my young lady," he resumed, his tone a little more than changing to an almost savage ring—"I will have no more of this absurd folly. Mr. Roy is coming here this evening to have a definite answer; he shall have it, or I'll know the reason why!"

"The answer is ready," said Kitty, defiantly. "I'm engaged to Lieutenant Roy!"

"This from you—a Southern girl, born and brought up under the shadow of the palmetto! Well, it is as I expected, you are thoroughly infected with the venom of that Yankee hireling. But his forcible training shall avail him nothing. Lamar's creed and country are identical with ours, and he shall be your husband!"

"Shall he, indeed!" said Kitty, defiantly.

"Shall be, Miss Colvin. The odds are ten to one that your precious Yankee never comes back alive; and if he does, he may select himself another wife. Now you have heard my decision on the subject; you may go!"

Kitty Colvin never lifted her eyes from the floor; she knew how votive than useless it was to attempt any opposition to her uncle's iron will. But there was a stronger determination in that fragile frame than Gerald Vess had any idea of.

"Now, Sallie," he sensible," drawled her aunt, when Mr. Vess had taken himself and his lowering brows out of the room. "Fernando Lamar is very handsome, I'll grant you, and it's quite true what your uncle says. Lieutenant Roy will most likely die down in Libby, or be shot, or something—"

Kitty put up her hand pleadingly, as the thoughtless words jarred on her sick brain.

"It will make no difference to me, aunt," she said, calmly. "Dead or alive I am his, and his only!"

Gerald and Fernando Lamar will 'settle that," thought Mrs. Vess, arranging her pink cap strings. "It would be dreadful for Arnold Colvin's daughter to marry a Yankee, whose father might have been a carpenter for any thing one knows to the contrary!"

Kitty Colvin went quietly up to her own room and stood before the fire a moment, her lovely liquid eyes gazing far out into the unseen future, and her hand mechanically smoothing the golden braids that hung from an onyx comb. Then she changed her crimson silk wrapper for a sober gray dress, and put on a bonnet edged with gray fur, and hidden by a thick blue veil. And then she took a little basket in her hand and went out.

Went out a homeless fugitive with nothing but the bright rings on her fingers, and a bold, brave heart in her bosom—went out to seek her fortune in the wide, cold world, rather than accept the lot which her uncle had portioned out to her.

"Sit down, Miss," said the red-armed Biddy, pushing a chair nearer to the stove. "Mrs. Clarke will be down d'rectly."

Kitty waited, in the plainly furnished parlor of the second-rate house, with her heart beating as though a frightened bird were fluttering at her throat. She had been very pale all day, but when the step of a stranger sounded on the stairs the color rushed in hot, scarlet waves over her face.

"Mrs. Clarke?" she faltered.

"Yes, my dear," said the fat, cozy little matron. "What can I do for you?"

"I advertised for a seamstress in to-day's paper, ma'am; I should be very glad to obtain the situation. I am new very badly, ma'am!"

"How much do you expect by the day?"

"Nothing, ma'am," said Kitty, suddenly plucking up courage. "I only want a home, for that, and that alone, my services will be given."

Mrs. Clarke eyed the young girl very sharply and suspiciously, while a cold shadow of distrust crept over her plump features.

"Your references, of course, will be unexceptionable?"

"I have no references," said Kitty, almost inaudibly.

"Then, of course, it will be impossible for me to entertain your propositions," said Mrs. Clarke, turning away. But Kitty caught her dress, with a low, imploring cry.

"Don't send me away, Mrs. Clarke! I have tried very hard to get employment, and I am willing, if you refuse me I shall despair! Believe me, I could refer you to well-known names, only—"

"Well, but why don't you?" questioned Mrs. Clarke, half relenting.

"I can not; it is impossible!" wailed Kitty. "Let me work for you, and I will be true to the shelter of your home, and you will never have cause to repent it. You have daughters of your own, perhaps; think of them, and be kind to me!"

Mrs. Clarke bit her lip, meditatively. Reason and Caution said "Beware!" but Memory brought back the vision of her own daughter sleeping quietly under the February snows—a daughter, whom, if she had lived, would have been about the age of this fair-haired girl. And so she ended this scene with a singular, yearning thrill, as she looked searchingly in Kitty's pleading eyes.

"Child, you are keeping some little thing," she said, laying her hand not unkindly on Kitty's shoulder. "But you're young, and I suppose you mean to be true. So come up stairs and take off your things, and I'll find you something to do."

And Kitty's heart gave a thankful sigh of inward relief, followed the portly lady up stairs. Providence had given the lonely wanderer a home at last.

"What do you think, Mrs. Clarke?" said Miss Diana Steers, who had come in from the corner grocery, partly to bring half a pound of cheese and two sperm candles, and partly to indulge in a little friendly gossip. "Is you pretty young woman, the 'ci housekeeper for them rich Southerners on Fifth Avenue, and their niece, the heiress, has run away."

"Run away! you don't tell me so?" ejaculated Mrs. Clarke. "Here's the books and eyes for that mending, Miss Robinson. What was that for?"

Kitty took the books and eyes in a hand that shook like a little autumn leaf; but Mrs. Clarke unfortunately was not looking at her face.

"Some says one thing, some says another," answered Miss Diana, with an oracular nod. "The kinsfolk certainly say she has had words with her guardeen and left the house in a towering passion, and has been gone two days and nights. People used to treat them folks with considerable small glasses to hear him brag of his exploits during his captivity, and how he shivered Yank and his colleguy with the Emperor at Montereau; although there were those of a malevolent turn of mind who declared that he had never been near at the Berezina or at Montereau at all; but that happening to keep a wine-shop at the corner of a street in Paris during the three glorious days of July, 1830, a barricade had been erected close to his door, and at a critical moment he had rushed out, and, calling out, 'Vive la Charte!' had struck down a corporal of grenadiers with a sous-fusile, whereupon he had become a décoré de Juillet.

It was half past twelve on a summer night—not Northern winter phenomena it, for I have not yet passed the limits of the four-and-twenty hours in the course of which all the events hitherto recorded have transpired—when Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant, in his master's Spanish cloak, entered the marble hall of the Hotel Rastaplan, and gave the valet de salle à manger, as one well accustomed to the locality.

Rataplan was alone, smoking and sipping his cognac, for he was accustomed to call a very little brandy with a great deal of sugar and lukewarm water, and endeavoring to spell through one of the seven days' old Siecles. The gallant warrior-cook's education was defective. His woman-kind kept his books and wrote his letters for him.

"How goes it, mon vieux? Touches-là!" said the valet, and he extended his palm, and Rataplan smote his own palm thereupon and went on reading.

"Will you smoke?" asked Rataplan, after a moment.

"Business to attend to"—the two men spoke French, "else I would first have presented my homages to the ladies. Is the countess at home?"

"Half an hour ago. Is having her supper now."

"And her little temper?"

"Oui! j'en vois pas. C'est une bête faive. The whole menagerie of the Jardin des Plantes does not contain such a wild animal. L'ours Martin, when the bonne refused to throw him the second of her babies—vu qu'il s'était permis la mauvaise plaisanterie de manger le premier, was never in such a temper. Temper! It is a maniac! a delirium; an ecstasy of spasmodic and anarchical passions. That woman is all the furies rolled into one, plus Prédigestée, Clytemnestra, and Madame Croquemitoine."

Rataplan had been a great carpenter of the boulevard du ennui in his youth, and piqued himself on his familiarity with dramatic literature. He was given, besides quoting Bérenger, to spouting long harangues from tragedies, both in prose and verse, which he called "Belles tirades." Sometimes if leur en flanquait du vieux, as he phrased it, and recited long passages from the vieille et noble drama.

"What is the matter with the countess?"

"Ah Master! what else but diabolical, sulphurous, Mount Etna of a temper can be the matter with her? They are not words, but redhot lava streams that flow from her lips. You are Herculaneum and Pompeii before her, and she engulfs you. But, pardon, she is not the Countess de Lamar. She has a tongue as long as a discbus académique. There is no stopping, no satisfying, no pacifying her. She is implacable in her rage. She comes in here, passe musiut; and, without the slightest salutation, says, 'Papa Rataplan, is my supper ready?' I make her a reverence. I say, taking off my bonnet de cuisine—an act of homage I would not render to Louis Philippe, roi des Français et des zebins, 'Madame there is one on going out she would take no supper.' 'What?' responds she. 'Papa Rataplan, you are a ganache!' Bien que ce merci. She is insulant as the waters of Colchesterre, a trust fried, tout ce que vous avez de fait de colettes, a sweet omelette, a Charlotte aux pommes, a salade de matelots, some Champagne, Burgundy, Bordeaux, and so forth. And all this on Friday! Madame, Monsieur, my resent, 'there are no oysters fit for the palate of any one but a fort de la halle. There is no salade de matelots, for Covent Garden is dead as huit heures très precises. Quant aux côtelettes vous y êtes.' Par rapport à l'omelette je suis à vos pieds. The Charlotte is an impromptu, vu que les pommes me manquent, à moins que vous ne désiriez que ça soit necessité avec des pommes de terre. As for the wines, gentlemen who bring them with you yourself, paying me a shilling a cork, and saying that mine are not fit to drink, or not for you. Even as I can not pay as you desire; but if you would like a mayonnaise de homard or some pickelle sammonge de chez ce bon Monsieur Quin in the Ammerlette, in ten minutes vous serez à votre aise.'"

"And what does she reply?"

"She tells me to go to the five hundred devils. She outrages Mère Thomas. She tells Antoine that he is a botor, a cancre, a Fesse-Matthieu. That woman's language is remelle of the stable in which she passes her time. 'Oui, Rataplan!' she says to me, 'je vous prendrai pour me le dernier des derniers.' And then, forsooth, she must insult my sleeping cherub, and say that your little Adolphe's bran-fore pastice has attacked his nerfs, and that if I do not put a stop to it she must find another hotel. It is likely, eh? when I pay Jacques Thirpin half a guinea a lesson for her instruction, and know that with two years' more practice elle sera la première plaisirie du monde, and cause Theberg and Chopin to hang themselves in envious despair."

"Why don't you give her her cong?"

Rataplan shrugged his shoulders. "Elle est farcie de truffes. Elle est cousine d'or pour nous. One does not like to lose so excellent a pratique. I am not mal au, she is worth ten guineas a week to us whenever she comes to stay at the Hotel Rataplan. I will not lui lâcher pied devant, Grossou, at the Hotel Belgicoo, to get hold of her. That pied plat, Tripefourie, of the Hotel de Belvédère, and le Sobo, his cousin, are endeavored to seduce her away from us. And even the wild animal has her moments of amiability. Elle est assez bonne enfant de temps en temps. She gave only last week to Adèle a brooch qui ressemble à de la chicorée au gras—malachites et lilah you call it. I saw a scroll-frame of it, which the Cossack Alexander gave to the Empereur at Tilsit—dans le temps que les rois et les empereurs nous faisaient les bottes à Paris. Only yesterday she threw her a cashmere, un vrai cachemire de Perse, dans lequel elle avait fait une aire with a red-hot poker, in a rage because milord did not come. Adèle will soon darn up the holes. Les femmes sont enchantantes. Elle seems to that woman an eternal vale of Cashmere—en fait de chèles."

Lord Arthur Hilford did not come, and milady was in a rage. Perhaps she expected him to supper to-night, and his failure was the secret of her sunsuine fits."

"Tiens, je n'y pensais pas. To be sure she sent the commissionaire this morning to the Opera Comique for a box, and he was out, and to and behold, when she made her appearance this night, there was a note waiting for her—a little pink note, qui sentait diablement bon, un vrai poulet aux roses, and having read it, she ordered the carriage at once!"

"Then milord may be coming."

"Du tout, un petit jockey, avec la coiffure rouge et jaune, has brought a reverse with breeches of leather and top boots—was here not five minutes before your arrival. By word of mouth he delivered the message that his master was very sorry, but could not come. No poulet.this time. Antoine went up and told her. She flew into one of her sulphurous ecstasies, and nearly strangled him."

"It is now half past twelve. Is she gone to bed?"

"To bed! She won't seek her couch till three. I would not have unhappy Babette, her femme de chambre, till past two. Then she

QUITE ALONG

BY GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

CHAPTER IX.

INTRODUCTORY TO A WILD ANIMAL.

RATAPLAN was entirely deficient in the Rhododendron characteristic. It was a very late house. Nobody dreamt of going to bed till one or two o'clock in the morning, save Mademoiselle Adèle, who retired at eleven, comme il convenait à une jeune personne. The French are accustomed to treat their daughters like children till they are twenty years of age, and their sons like grown up persons when they are ten. The normal Rataplan came in from the regions of the kitchen toward eleven, and played cards or smoked a cigar with the Cossack guests for a couple of hours. People used to treat him to innumerable small glasses to hear him brag of his exploits during his captivity, and how he shivered Yank and his colleguy with the Emperor at Montereau; although there were those of a malevolent turn of mind who declared that he had never been near at the Berezina or at Montereau at all; but that happening to keep a wine-shop at the corner of a street in Paris during the three glorious days of July, 1830, a barricade had been erected close to his door, and at a critical moment he had rushed out, and, calling out, 'Vive la Charte!' had struck down a corporal of grenadiers with a sous-fusile, whereupon he had become a décoré de Juillet.

It was half past twelve on a summer night—not Northern winter phenomena it, for I have not yet passed the limits of the four-and-twenty hours in the course of which all the events hitherto recorded have transpired—when Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant, in his master's Spanish cloak, entered the marble hall of the Hotel Rastaplan, and gave the valet de salle à manger, as one well accustomed to the locality.

Rataplan was alone, smoking and sipping his cognac, for he was accustomed to call a very little brandy with a great deal of sugar and lukewarm water, and endeavoring to spell through one of the seven days' old Siecles. The gallant warrior-cook's education was defective. His woman-kind kept his books and wrote his letters for him.

"How goes it, mon vieux? Touches-là!" said the valet, and he extended his palm, and Rataplan smote his own palm thereupon and went on reading.

"Will you smoke?" asked Rataplan, after a moment.

"Business to attend to"—the two men spoke French, "else I would first have presented my homages to the ladies. Is the countess at home?"

"Half an hour ago. Is having her supper now."

"And her little temper?"

"Oui! j'en vois pas. C'est une bête faive. The whole menagerie of the Jardin des Plantes does not contain such a wild animal. L'ours Martin, when the bonne refused to throw him the second of her babies—vu qu'il s'était permis la mauvaise plaisanterie de manger le premier, was never in such a temper. Temper! It is a maniac! a delirium; an ecstasy of spasmodic and anarchical passions. That woman is all the furies rolled into one, plus Prédigestée, Clytemnestra, and Madame Croquemitoine."

"What is the matter with the countess?"

"Ah Master! what else but diabolical, sulphurous, Mount Etna of a temper can be the matter with her? They are not words, but red-hot lava streams that flow from her lips. You are Herculaneum and Pompeii before her, and she engulfs you. But, pardon, she is not the Countess de Lamar. She has a tongue as long as a discbus académique. There is no stopping, no satisfying, no pacifying her. She is implacable in her rage. She comes in here, passe musiut; and, without the slightest salutation, says, 'Papa Rataplan, is my supper ready?' I make her a reverence. I say, taking off my bonnet de cuisine—an act of homage I would not render to Louis Philippe, roi des Français et des zebins, 'Madame there is one on going out she would take no supper.' 'What?' responds she. 'Papa Rataplan, you are a ganache!' Bien que ce merci. She is insulant as the waters of Colchesterre, a trust fried, tout ce que vous avez de fait de côtelettes, a sweet omelette, a Charlotte aux pommes, a salade de matelots, some Champagne, Burgundy, Bordeaux, and so forth. And all this on Friday! Madame, Monsieur, my resent, 'there are no oysters fit for the palate of any one but a fort de la halle. There is no salade de matelots, for Covent Garden is dead as huit heures très precises. Quant aux côtelettes vous y êtes.' Par rapport à l'omelette je suis à vos pieds. The Charlotte is an impromptu, vu que les pommes me manquent, à moins que vous ne désiriez que ça soit necessité avec des pommes de terre. As for the wines, gentlemen who bring them with you yourself, paying me a shilling a cork, and saying that mine are not fit to drink, or not for you. Even as I can not pay as you desire; but if you would like a mayonnaise de homard or some pickelle sammonge de chez ce bon Monsieur Quin in the Ammerlette, in ten minutes vous serez à votre aise.'"

"And what does she reply?"

"She tells me to go to the five hundred devils. She outrages Mère Thomas. She tells Antoine that he is a botor, a cancre, a Fesse-Matthieu. That woman's language is remelle of the stable in which she passes her time. 'Oui, Rataplan!' she says to me, 'je vous prendrai pour me le dernier des derniers.' And then, forsooth, she must insult my sleeping cherub, and say that your little Adolphe's bran-fore pastice has attacked his nerfs, and that if I do not put a stop to it she must find another hotel. It is likely, eh? when I pay Jacques Thirpin half a guinea a lesson for her instruction, and know that with two years' more practice elle sera la première plaisirie du monde, and cause Theberg and Chopin to hang themselves in envious despair."

"Why don't you give her her cong?"

Rataplan shrugged his shoulders. "Elle est farcie de truffes. Elle est cousine d'or pour nous. One does not like to lose so excellent a pratique. I am not mal au, she is worth ten guineas a week to us whenever she comes to stay at the Hotel Rataplan. I will not lui lâcher pied devant, Grossou, at the Hotel Belgicoo, to get hold of her. That pied plat, Tripefourie, of the Hotel de Belvédère, and le Sobo, his cousin, are endeavored to seduce her away from us. And even the wild animal has her moments of amiability. Elle est assez bonne enfant de temps en temps. She gave only last week to Adèle a brooch qui ressemble à de la chicorée au gras—malachites et lilah you call it. I saw a scroll-frame of it, which the Cossack Alexander gave to the Empereur at Tilsit—dans le temps que les rois et les empereurs nous faisaient les bottes à Paris. Only yesterday she threw her a cashmere, un vrai cachemire de Perse, dans lequel elle avait fait une aire with a red-hot poker, in a rage because milord did not come. Adèle will soon darn up the holes. Les femmes sont enchantantes. Elle seems to that woman an eternal vale of Cashmere—en fait de chèles."

Lord Arthur Hilford did not come, and milady was in a rage. Perhaps she expected him to supper to-night, and his failure was the secret of her sunsuine fits."

"Tiens, je n'y pensais pas. To be sure she sent the commissionaire this morning to the Opera Comique for a box, and he was out, and to and behold, when she made her appearance this night, there was a note waiting for her—a little pink note, qui sentait diablement bon, un vrai poulet aux roses, and having read it, she ordered the carriage at once!"

"Then milord may be coming."

"Du tout, un petit jockey, avec la coiffure rouge et jaune, has brought a reverse with breeches of leather and top boots—was here not five minutes before your arrival. By word of mouth he delivered the message that his master was very sorry, but could not come. No poulet.this time. Antoine went up and told her. She flew into one of her sulphureous ecstasies, and nearly strangled him."

"It is now half past twelve. Is she gone to bed?"

"To bed! She won't seek her couch till three. I would not have unhappy Babette, her femme de chambre, till past two. Then she will walk about the room, and smoke like a sapper, and swear like a cuirassier, for another hour. To bed! It is lucky for her bed that she goes to it so late. She must quarrel with the bolster, and kick the counterpane all night.

"I think you had better announce me."

"I warn you that she is exceedingly ferocious to-night, and that grave results may follow even my intrusion to announce you."

"Have no fear. She may bite, but I don't fear her hard teeth. I have been a gardien in the Jardin des Plantes, and am not afraid of wild animals. Allons, mon bon. Fais comme je te le dis."

Rataplan rose with any thing but a good grace, and murmuring something about the incogenidency of hoarding tigresses in their den. He shuffled up stairs. Constant heard him timorously tap at a door. Then there was a sentence of words audible—confined, however, to a single voice: and after a while the host descended to the salle à manger again, with something positively approaching a faint violet flush on his pale face.

"I told you so," he said. "She is a panther of the Island of Java. A beautiful jaguar. Quelle avec! Comme elle rugit! Comme elle bondit! Cest une folle de Bicêtre dans un cabanon. However, if you are fond of bêtes fauves, there she is. Go, my friend, and be devoured. La Lune l'attend." And he sat down, drew the candle closer to him, mixed himself a fresh tumbler of "grog," rollumated the last end of his cigar—a Frenchman never desists until the weed begins to burn the tip of his nose, and then he sticks the stump on the point of a penknife—and so resumed his perusal of the Siècle seven days old.

Monsieur Constant went quietly up stairs, and softly laid his hand upon the handle of the door of the front drawing-room. I must keep Monsieur Constant with his hand upon the door for the space of two chapters, while I cross the water on an excursion very necessary to this narrative.

CHAPTER X.

AN IDYL.

In the department of the Bouches du Rhône, and in the neighborhood of Avignon, there are few prettier villages than Marouille-le-Gency, in the con-spirit-ion of Nougat.

There are not ten houses of more than one story, and not above a hundred cottages; but they are all pretty. They are built mostly of stone, or of sunburnt bricks whitened over, and roofed in with those convex tiles, laid on loose and secured by pegs, such as we see in the Italian villages. White as are their fronts they were half-hidden by clustering vines. A vine-yard itself is not ordinarily inviting to the artistic eye in its picturesque aspect it exists only in the imagination of scene-painters, in the engravings of alabaster landscape annuals, and in fancy performances, in oil and water colors, sent every year to exhibitions. For real vines you will match a Kentish hop garden, or a Twickenham orchard, against the most luxuriant vineyard in the sunny south. We say little about the south being chronically stormy as well as sunny. It is only on the banks of the Rhône, where the grapes grow in terraces, one above the other, to the very tops of the hills, that a wine-bearing district assumes a romantic look. It is the same with olive-trees. Olives in their native solution, popularly, but erroneously, supposed to be sea-water, are very nice to eat with your claret, and very nice to talk or sing about in ballad poetry; but a plantation of olive-trees is next to a field of mangel-wurzel about the ugliest object in Nature you can come across. Hemp beats it. Flax beats it. Clover demolishes it utterly, in an artistic sense. The vine, however, that cluster beneath the cottage roof, and the olives that grow in the front garden, are certainly charming, and Marouille-le-Gency had an abundance of both.

The little river Bièvre, one of the tributaries of the Rhône, ran right across the village street, and the villagers were great people for clean linen. They were even given to washing themselves as well as their clothes, a strange trait in the south. The village was girt about with real orange groves. There was an abundance of myrtles. The appearance to the hamlet was made with gigantic plants of the cactus tribe. The rarest and most beautiful flowers grew nearly all the year round in the open air. Perfection proceed from the tiles. Thickets of the maritime stone pine covered the hills behind Marouille, over which frowned the gray medieval Château of Ocques, once a baronial residence, then a fortress, then a barrack, now a penitentiary.

The "correctionaires," or inmates of this house of penance, did not trouble the inhabitants much. They were kept with commendable stringency behind the strong stone-walls of the Castle of Ocques, where they worked for their sins at sabbioti weaving, rope-making, and mat-plaiting. Once in six months or so one of their number escaped, but Marouille-le-Gency had a breed of swaggy dogs, and a sub-aquatic reward being offered for the capture of fugitives, the refugee was soon hunted down. The house of correction was principally useful to the villagers as a bogbear, or bête noire, to scare their refractory children withal, who, refusing to eat or behave themselves, were threatened with being sent là-haut, up there, to the big old castle.

The inhabitants were mostly small proprietors, each cultivating his own particular patch of vineyard or olive garden, and contriving to make both ends meet in a scrambling kind of manner at the end of the year. The necessaries of life were cheap. Bread was coarse but plentiful. Meat was seldom eaten, but as seldom asked for. Beyond a few river trout and some salt fish in Lent there was no consumption of piscine delicacies. Oranges and grapes cost nothing at all. The vin du pays cost only four sous the litre, and for luxuries the denizens of Marouille-le-Gency had a most profound disregard.

They did not occupy themselves much with contemporary politics. Theoretically they were legitimists, and kept as a fete the anniversary of the grand day A.D. 1815, when Monsieigneur Louis Antoine, Fils de France and Duke of Angoulême had passed through Marouille-le-Gency on his way to unfurl the white flag at Bordeaux. By the same token their usual mild natures had undergone an eclipse of ferocity, and they mobbed and nearly murdered Napoleon on his way to Elba after his first abdication at Fontainebleau. The ex-imperial carriage halted to change horses at the village post-house: the mouldy occupant was dragged, hooted, insulted, stoned; knives were brandished at the windows; indignant faces with fiery eyes glared in upon him; and but for the presence of mind of the mayor, who was known to be a Bourbonist, and who, barring his breast, waved the French door pointing to his breast and crying, "C'est un tyran, mais vous me tuerez le premier!" they would have dragged him from his vehicle and flung him under the wheels. It is said that Napoleon shed tears of rage and shame at this unexpected reception; and that as soon as he was clear of Marouille he changed clothes with one of his postilions, and in jackboots, a red waistcoat, and a cocked hat with ribbons, cracked his whip, and bestrode the leader, in order to avoid similar insults at the next village. It must be remembered, although intolerate against him in adversity, the Marouillais had never farmed upon him in his prosperity. They had invariably called him "Le Petit Tyran," and their sword-sheath-makers and cutlers had consistently and continually. The flower of their youth had been taken from their vineyards to shed their blood in his incessant battles. When had Jean-Pierre or Jean-Marie Aleide de Sa with his quarrels with the Austrian Kaiser or the Russian Czar; and why should their scanty brains have been blown out because he was ambitious and wanted more kingdoms for playthings of? When he was finally consigned to his dolorous captivity, the villagers sang the vindictive old complainte:

Napoléonne
Napoléonne à Pran-ce
Napoléonne! Napoléonne!
Jeun-nee gé-mi-ra
Restera dans ses fumigates
Dans son île de Sainte-Hélène
La con-ce-ntre-tionne.

And "Napoléon! Napoléon!" Nevertheless for seven after 1821, they continued to refuse to believe in his death, holding that he was still secured by the English with a strong chain riveted to the wall of a subterranean dungeon in the Island of Helena; and as a "hopy" for naughty children he divided popularity with the Château d'Ocques. In expo. For the rest they were very pious, and the most docile of parishioners to their curé, believing implicitly in the miracles, especially the modern miracles, and the direct intervention of the saints in curing the diseases of cattle, and in watching the vineyards by night. They had incantations, second-sight, and the evil-eye, were in high repute among the Marouillais. They were grossly ignorant and superstitious.

In the year 1825, Charles the Tenth being King of France and Navarre, there came to live in the Marouille-le-Gency aforesaid, at the principal auberge and post-house, a long low tenement, by the sign of The Lilies of France, a young Swiss called Jean Baptiste Constant.

He had been, according to his own account, in domestic service, and had saved some money. There was no vacancy in the town. The appointance harmonized with the signalement on his passport, and his papers were perfectly en règle. He had bought the good-will of the "Lys de France" out of a notary's étude at Avignon, where it had been established for a year by the executors of Madame Veuve Barrichon, who had been its hostess ever since the days of the Great Revolution. Current report said that Barrichon, in her back yard, and decapitated half a score of "aristos" there. The villagers declared that ever since that hideous deed she had worn a cap on the back yard had worn a purple tinge. The incoming tenant of the auberge had paid a handsome price for it—more than the Marouillais, who go the gossips of the village said, half down and half at mortgage on the security of the premises, considered a substantial sum for a man who could command such an amount of capital was looked upon as a personage, and the villagers determined to be very civil to him. The mayor called on him the day after his arrival at Marouille. M. Charles Constant was on the point of future corporation of the fatrigue. Fortunately for his peace of mind at Marouille, he was, although a Swiss, a Swiss who had taken service as canton on the Italian frontier. This was fortunate, because the Marouillais dislike heretics, shaking them with pitchforks and consigning them to correctionnaires. He was, likewise, a bachelor, and, although somewhat swarthy and down-looking, athletic, vivacious, and possessed of a very personable fellow. He brought neither kith nor kin with him to his new abiding-place, and the members of the village who had marriageable daughters looked upon him favorably from a matrimonial point of view. Ellse le regardaient avec des yeux de convoitise. Jean Baptiste was a bien well enough, with his great bushy head of black hair and large white teeth; only they said his eyebrows were so thick as to give him a fierce and scowling expression, and complained that he never looked one in the face. Such was Jean Baptiste Constant. Soisse de naissance eligible, and, apparently, not more than twenty-eight years of age.

He was a good man of business, and looked keenly after the main chance, but was no niggard. He was willing to be trusted, but could treat, too, in his turn, upon occasion. He soon drove a very prosperous trade at the "Lilies of France," and, being prosperous, made a good deal out of the rich English travelers on their way to Nice. He engaged as housekeeper a strong old woman called La Benglèse. She was not handsome, and far from amiable, and had a desperate tyranny of harsh lungs, whence her name; but she was a very strong one, and a match for hard work. She kept the stable-boys and postilions sober, and up to their duties, and looked after the lodgers while Constant carried in the bills or waited on the customers in the billiard-room. Moreover, she brought a pair of hands with her in addition to her own. These belonged to a domestic who belonged to her niece Valérie, who, in 1825, was a slut of a girl not more than fifteen years of age. She was an overgrown, loutish kind of a lass, and yet, for all her long limbs, seemed dwarfed and stunted about the head and shoulders. Her skin was coarse; her teeth tanned with hard labor, her voice harsh and strident, her manners uncouth and foolish. She had magnificent brown hair, which hung about her head and neck in a tangled mass, and big blue eyes at which few people cared to look attentively, for what they were enshrined in a sunburnt, dirty face. She was an incorrigible slattern, and her temper was abominable. She was a peasant girl, born in France; it is looked upon as a cruel and dastardly thing even to box a girl's ears; but no one blamed La Benglèse when she thrashed her refractory niece with a knotted rope or a leathern brace, or tied her up to one of the mangers in the stable. It must be added that Marion-Valérie should be treated like a stubborn horse or mule. The oldsters shook their heads, and said, "C'est l'ete: car elle est bête comme ces vaches ces faire avec une fille comme cela?" She was held up as a warning and example to the insubordinate juveniles of the village. "If you don't mind what's said to you, and give way to your temper, you will come to Valérie," and tied up in a stable like Valérie à la Benglèse. Nobody cured to inquire what her patronymic was, so they gave her the name of her aunt's nickname.

Perhaps the education she had received was not very conducive to the development of feminine manners, or the cultivation of delicate manners. Her mother had died in bearing her. Her father had run away from his employment as a postilion, after having a bad number in the conscription, and had then sold himself as a substitute in the army. It was in 1815, when the Emperor was recruiting in need of men, and pressing questions were not asked. The substitute was three times promoted, through sheer desperate valor in the field of battle, to the rank of sergeant; and was as many times reduced to the ranks for flagrant misconduct. He didn't drink, he didn't gamble, he was honest, but incurably insubordinate. His colonel used to say, "If I shall be obliged to recommend a galopin de for the epaulet, you will be forced to cross a mariat and have him shot." Il est moitié Bayard et moitié Lapierre." He got a little grave, but the cross of the Legion had been given to him one day, he would have, within twenty-four hours, three months' arrears of pay and decoration from the order. Fortunately for the glory of France, and the interests of society, Valérie's father got himself killed at the battle of Waterloo, where he was found by a party of Prussian foragers under a heap of slain, riddled with bullets and sabre-cuts, but still firmly locked round those of an English dragoon, whom he had dragged off his horse and killed by tearing his throat in a single bite, like a dog. It is the decade of heroism which have been performed by incorrigible blackguards could be all published, the government would be obliged to organize battalions of garcetons and galley-slaves. For heading a forlorn hope Marley, who was hanged, would have been immortalized.

La Benglèse took care, after a fashion, of the little orphan. She gave her in her cradle bawled more than fifty ordinary babies. The adoption was not a very moving one. La Benglèse was miserably poor. As the child remained neglected, her aunt had earned her daily bread by working in the fields as a day-laborer. When Valérie was old enough—that is to say, when she was seven—she too went aux champs to scare the birds away. La Benglèse sent her to the village school, but she would learn nothing there. They put her on the fool's cap, or bonnet d'âne; they made her kneel across sharp rulers, but it was the same back, her hands and arms black and blue from the strips of the martinet; and frustrated in her punishment, she remained away, among the thickets on the hill, for days together. The cure preached against her truancy, but Valérie absented herself profoundly, and was the only black sheep among the snowy little flock whom he prepared for their first communion. When she was ten she might have earned ten sous a day by picking up stones in the vineyards, but she destroyed more vines than she picked up stones. The curé advised La Benglèse to send her to Avignon to a convent, where the good sisters received such undisciplined cubs and whelps and broke them in with mingled kindness and severity; but Valérie coolly announced her determination of setting fire to the convent and murdering all of the sisters the first night she passed under a monastic roof. And all who knew Valérie felt to be perfectly capable of deeds quite as desperate. She was now between thirteen and fourteen, and about this time Jean Baptiste Constant came to Marouille and enter into possession of the "Lilies of France." La Benglèse took service with him, and Valérie accompanied her. The vaurien soon became familiar with the stable, and on most friendly terms with the horses and mules; would lead them to be watered to water, would litter and ... them down, feed them, and, indeed, was in short time quite as useful about the establishment as an hostler. Partly from compassion, and partly from an idea that the girl could be overcome by other means than violence, Jean Baptiste persuaded the housekeeper, in her management of Valérie, to abandon her formerly unvaried specific of flogging. For a time the girl went on worse, and was intolerably riotous and rebellious; but after a while she came to show, toward Jean Baptiste at least, a strange surly docility which seemed to be in some degree a return for the kind treatment she experienced. She came at his call, and almost at his whistle, like a dog. She obeyed all his orders without a murmur. A stern word or a stern look from Jean Baptiste was sufficient to render her quiet and submissive whenever she showed a disposition to defy her aunt. The mayor, M. le Curé, all the villagers, marveled at the phenomenon. Valérie was wholly changed.

But a stranger phenomenon was seen to take place. When the girl came to be sixteen she grew with astounding rapidity—perfectly beautiful. Like Peau d'âne in the fairy tale, she seemed, all at once, to have changed from a gobby little ragamuffin, a squalid beggar's brat, into a lovely and elegant princess. A princess every one she might have remained, certainly; but that the latter part of the "Lys de France" brought her back after one of his visits to Avignon enough cotton print of those manufactured for workaday frocks, and a piece of mingled silk and wool for a Sunday dress. Valérie, who had hitherto been modest as a violet and also the lowest of the low, was now envied. She went through her long-deferred first communion with unexceptionable decorum. She combed out her tangled brown hair, and arranged it in sumptuous plaits beneath a natty little lace cap. She washed her face and her leg like a princess, and from the cleared surface like stars. A film seemed to have been removed from her voice, even as it seemed to be removed by a skillful operator from a diseased eye. The voice was harsh and strident no longer, but full of deep rich tones and low whispers that thrilled to the very marrow of the listener. When she was in a passion now she was sublime, not repulsive. The angular movements of her limbs were replaced by an indescribable suppleness and grace. She began to dance without ever having learned. She began to sing without ever having been taught. She was evidently one of those raw creatures who "pick up" perfection as birds build nests and wild them naturally. Her capacity had flowered late, but the product was marvelous in exuberant bloom. The sun had ripened her as one of the other sex, who can rattle forth voluntaries on the piano and drive tandem without the slightest apparent training for either. So you will find a journeyman carpenter who is a born mathematician; a consumptive tailor more logical in his speculations than Aristotle. Whately in his study; more eloquent than Derby; more conspicuous than Hill. So on orange-wench, who needs no guardian's admonitions to doors, slur sik dresses and credit at the bonnet builders, to courtesy and flirt and fascinate like a duchess.

Her extraordinary loveliness made Jean Baptiste Constant endured during a transitory period. His own beauty was distinctly of a man, first the shickles, as well as the dirt and the coarseness and the clumsiness, fell from her limbs. She became a treasure. The servant sharply round on the strong old woman who used to flog and tie her up to the manger, and in a moment, literally, trampled her under her heel. La Benglèse was dazed and bewildered by this radiant serpent, so suddenly emergent from the cocoon of ugly. She gave in at once, and became Valérie's very humble and obedient servant. Her master, Jean Baptiste, held out a little longer, and once or twice essayed to scold the girl; but she soon determined the relations that were in future to exist between them. "Il n'y qu'une personne qui dera 'je veux' ici; et ce sera Moi." Thus she said, stamping her foot, and the inn-keeper his pipe, and, looking at her coolly from under his drooping eyelids, said "I will" no more, so far at least as she was concerned, at the "Lilies of France."

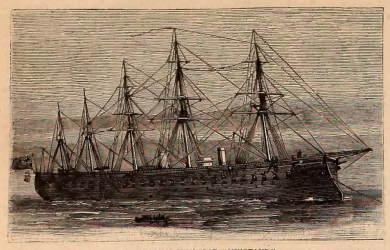
WAITING FOR THE SPRING.

As breezes stir the morning,
A silence reigns in air;
And blue the heavens above me,
Moveless the trees and bare;
Yet unto me the stillness
This thought seems to bring—
"Patience! the earth is waiting,
Waiting for the Spring."

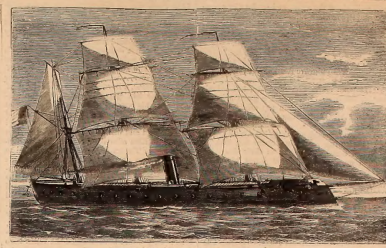
Strong ash, and sturdy chestnut,
Rough oak, and beech so high,
Stretch out their nailess branches
Against the wintry sky.
Even the gloomy pine
Hath ceas'd her quivering,
As though she too were waiting,
Waiting for the Spring.

I strain mine ears to listen,
If haply where I stand
But one stray note of music
May sound in all the land.
"Why art thou mute, O blackbird?
O thrush, why not thy song?"
Ah! surely they are waiting,
Waiting for the Spring.

O heart! thy days are darksome;
O heart! thy nights are drear;
But soon shall streams of sunshine
Proclaim the turning year.
Soon shall the trees be leafy,
Soon every bird shall sing;
Like them, be silent, waiting,
Waiting for the Spring.



THE ENGLISH IRON-CLAD "MINOTAUR"



THE FRENCH IRON-CLAD "LA COURONNE."

EUROPEAN IRON-CLADS.

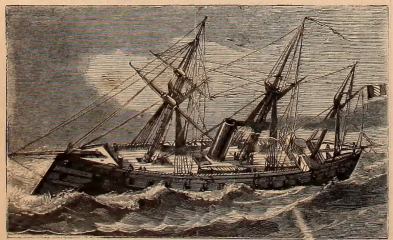
THE illustrations here given are types of the style of iron-clad steamers which have been finally adopted by the French and English Governments. They are based upon the general idea of plating men-of-war of the old models with iron of sufficient thickness to resist the shot from guns which they think can be advantageously worked on ship-board. From 4 to 5½ inches of solid plates is the thickness fixed upon. The ponderous old three and four deckers are, with the exception of the French Solferino and Magenta—which have two decks, and are only plated in the middle—cut down to one. Otherwise the armament is disposed of, as in the old men-of-war, in broadside. Thus the English Minotaur, of 10,000 tons, has 50 guns; the French La Couronne, 6000 tons, has 40 guns. The Invincible is of nearly the same tonnage and armament. The floating-battery Le Tonnant is designed solely for harbor defense.

The first French and English iron-clads are now conceded to be failures. Of these a competent English writer says: "The mere multiplication of men and guns in great ships is, as Raleigh urged almost three centuries ago, not only a waste of means but a diminution of efficiency, as huge floating castles were slow in maneuvring, and limited in their movements by the depth of water which they drew. Whenever we have the misfortune to be engaged in a maritime war such will be found to be the case of our great show ships Warrior, Black Prince, and the like." The trial-trips of these vessels were wholly unsatisfactory. They were even less seaworthy than our own "Monitors," which were never designed for sea-going vessels.

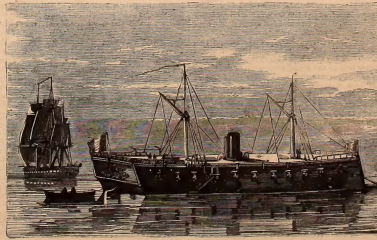
If, however, we can judge from the reports of the trial-trip made last October of the new French iron-clads, of which the Magenta and Invincible are types, their performances at sea were wholly satisfactory, and the French have practically solved the problem of building armored vessels of fair speed which may safely be dispatched upon distant service. They are, however, simply ships of war plated with four or five inches of iron, with a great amount of exposed surface, capable of fighting only broadside on, and thus in their numerous port-holes presenting many especially vulnerable points. If mere target experiments prove any thing, we may be assured that four or five inches of iron are no match for the heaviest modern artillery. But European constructors appear to go on the assumption that these heavy guns can not be used on shipboard, and hence the armament of these vessels is formidable rather from the number of pieces than from the power of any one singly.

Our own iron-clads, with the exception of the Ironsides and the Roanoke, are constructed on a wholly different theory. We believe that the ship which can deliver the hardest blows will, other things considered, be most effective. We therefore construct our ships so as to leave the least possible surface exposed to the fire of the enemy, and to offer the fewest possible vulnerable points, concentrating their main offensive power into two or four guns mounted in revolving turrets. The exposed surface, being smaller, can be more heavily armored, with no increase of aggregate weight. Instead of the four or six inches of plating on the European vessels, our turrets have from nine to thirteen—a thickness which, as far as is shown by any experiments hitherto made, is not penetrable by any artillery yet constructed. While, as we think, our iron-clads are thus safe from any fire which could be brought to bear upon them from a hostile vessel, they are furnished with a pair of guns, one or two shots from which, fairly delivered, would destroy any French or English iron-clad. We think that no European vessel could deliver as heavy a fire as that which our "Monitors" have undergone before Fort Sumter with no essential damage, while we think that the fire which they delivered upon that mass of masonry would have sunk any European vessel which had received it.

TRIAL TRIP OF THE FRENCH IRON-CLAD FLEET.—THE "MAGENTA" IN THE FORE-GROUND.



THE FRENCH IRON-CLAD "L'INVINCIBLE."



THE FRENCH FLOATING BATTERY "LE SAIGON."

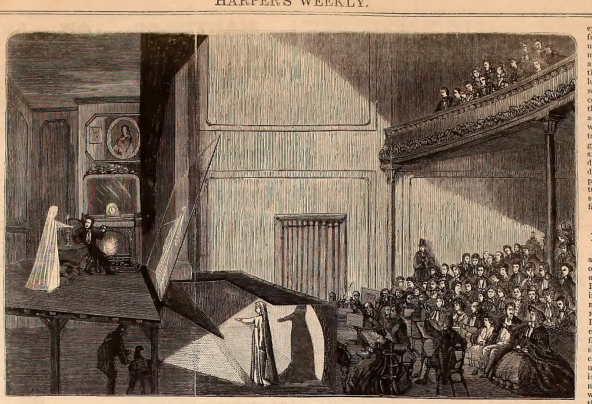
In some of the vessels now constructing, of which the Dunderberg may be taken as a type, there is a partial compromise between the two systems. She will have half a dozen of casemate guns, besides those in her turrets: but still the American idea of diminished surface and fire concentrated in a few large pieces predominates.

The great defects in our "Monitors" lie in their unseaworthiness, their want of speed, and in the uncertainty of the aim of their guns fired from turrets in motion. None of these defects seem to us irremediable. A turret with its two or four guns must be of less weight than an armament of forty guns, with its necessary ammunition. There can therefore be no insuperable obstacle in the way of placing a turret upon a sea-worthy hull, and providing him with engines capable of giving full speed. The uncertainty of aim may be fully obviated by the automatic mode of sighting and discharge, as proposed by the inventor of the Revolving Turrets, which was fully explained in our Number of April 18, 1863.

The European theory of iron-clads seems to have been practically carried to its ultimate point of perfection. Vessels have been constructed clad with 4 or 6 inches of iron, carrying 50 guns, fairly managable, and apparently sea-worthy. That the British authorities are satisfied is shown by the construction of the Minotaur, the largest war vessel afloat, and one of three of the same class now building. The French Normande, just launched, is of quite equal rate.

The American theory yet awaits full practical development. Still we believe that we have in construction iron-clads which would be an over-match for any of those of France or England. The only point upon which we are doubtful is the essential one of speed. If the Dunderberg, for example, attains the speed anticipated for her, we are confident that, with her two turret, two pivot, and six broadside guns, she will be able to cope with any European antagonist. Three things are now required of an iron-clad: Speed, to find or elude an antagonist; Force to assail; and Strength to resist. We believe that the worst of our vessels combine more of these than the best of their European rivals.



GHOSTS ON THE STAGE.

GHOSTS ON THE STAGE.

THE "Ghosts" which have within a few weeks figured so largely in all the European and American theatres are produced in accordance with well-known optical laws, and by a very simple apparatus, although considerable dexterity and practice are required to make the whole work satisfactorily. Let any one in a dimly-lighted chamber stand in front of a large vertical pane of glass, like that which is often placed in the sliding-doors between the front and back parlors, and he will see his own image as though reflected in a mirror, only it will appear to be behind the glass. The reason is, that more light is reflected from the glass than passes through it. Now behind the glass let other persons be placed, just as for behind it as the person whose image is to appear is in front, and the reflected figure will appear to be right among the real persons. Our illustration shows precisely how this law is made use of in producing "ghosts" on the stage. A plate of glass is placed at a proper inclination just back of the first "trap," the cover of which is lowered. The stage being dimly lighted the transparent glass is wholly invisible to the spectator. In front of this, under the stage, and concealed from the sight of the spectators, is the actor whose ghost is to appear. A strong illumination is thrown upon her, usually by means of an electric light, and in obedience to the optical law which we have mentioned, her image appears upon the stage apparently among the real actors. To the eye of the spectator she is as real as any one of them. If the electric light is shut off, the image of course disappears at once; if it is gradually lowered, the figure grows dimmer and appears to vanish slowly; if the light is increased, the figure becomes more distinct, and appears to the spectator to advance toward him. This augmentation and diminution of light is best effected by a proper arrangement of movable screens to be interposed or removed as the action of the play requires the figure to advance, recede, or disappear altogether. The whole principle of the exhibition is simple enough; but to make it "work" satisfactorily demands a vast deal of care and attention, and can be attained only by frequent and laborious rehearsals. This arises mainly from the fact that the spectral figure is not seen by the real actors on the stage, and yet they must "play to" it. They must kneel to it, cower before it, run from it, stab or shoot it, as the action of the play demands. The actors must, therefore, remember precisely where the spectre, invisible to them, appears to be to the eye of the spectators in front. The mistake of a moment in time may make the whole performance ridiculous. If every thing works well the illusion is complete. The senses of the spectator are completely cheated; even though he may know exactly how it is done. It would be well worth while to investigate how far the ghostly apparitions, which are recorded from the days of the Witch of Endor downward, have been produced by the thaumaturgists availing themselves of one of the most familiar laws in optics.

FORT POWELL.

WE give on this page a view, supplementary to our sketches of last week, of the attack upon FORT POWELL, at Grant's Pass, in Mobile Bay, by the mortar fleet under FARRAGUT, on the 24th of February last, as sketched during the engagement from the deck of the flag-ship Calhoun. Fort Powell is a sand battery commanding the Pass, which is a shallow strait connecting Mississippi Sound with Mobile Bay, along the northern side of Dauphin Island. The fort mounts eight or nine guns of long range, and is so situated in relation to the shallow water that vessels of ordinary draught can not get within two and a half or three miles of it.

The bombardment of the fort was under the personal supervision of Admiral FARRAGUT, who directed movements from the deck of the Calhoun, and was principally maintained by the mortar schooners, or "Bummers," as they are facetiously called by the marines. Four gun-boats were in the action, namely, the flag-ship Calhoun, Port Royal, Octorara, and the Jackson. The method of attack was to tow the schooners up through and into the mud, to a position as near to the fort as possible, and leave them to pound away as best they could, the gun-boats taking post near by to render assistance in case the mortars were disabled.

After the bombardment was well opened the firing was vigorously sustained until it became apparent that the distance was too great to effect a reduction of the fort. The fleet accordingly hauled off to await reinforcements of light draught vessels from New Orleans. Of the shells thrown probably not more than a fifth part took effect; and the rebels repaired at night what damage was done during the day. The casualties of the fleet were unimportant.

BOMBARDMENT OF FORT POWELL BY ADMIRAL FARRAGUT'S FLEET, ON FEBRUARY 24, 1864.—SKETCHED DURING THE ENGAGEMENT.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, Salesmen was done on Credit and strictly with The Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the present rates on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pens can be obtained by any one, in any part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Premium Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Thirty years' uninterrupted use of BRANDRETH'S PILLS in the United States, their introduction to the people of Mexico, Central and South America, the Australias, the Canadas and Australia, having been the means of saving from death and restoring to health thousands who have suffered from every form of disease, we may justly proclaim them the best purgative medicine the world has ever known.

Purgation is Nature's method of curing disease, and if any one doubts the fact, let him go to the Bible where the doctrine is taught. The horse, the dog and ox, when sick, resort to those grasses which open their bowels; even birds, who digest by muscular force alone, swallow stones to assist their evacuative powers. In a family as well as reason and the Bible, all teach that purgation is the natural law governing health.

Physicians have been the most successful have invariably adhered to this natural law, though always with purgatives inferior to Brandreth's Pills.

To possess the secret of compounding the best purgative known to medical science is no slight responsibility. My chief object in life is to make the Brandreth Pills so they shall retain their high character, and hope that what is manufactured may be inferred to by their merits and so be restored to health. The BRANDRETH PILLS have on the life to principle of which the death principle. If you ask how this is done, I reply: They cleanse the blood, correct and regulate all the secretions, and by purgation discharge the whole mass of morbid matter from the body, without reducing the strength! Purgation, with the remedies in fashion with the "regular profession," prostrate our strength to such a degree, in many cases, that so much injury to our general health is often produced; whereas BRANDRETH'S PILLS, while they cleanse the body by purgation, add strength to the vital powers.

B. BRANDRETH.

Principal Office, BRANDRETH BUILDING.

See B. Brandreth is on the Government stamp.

Standard Extracts.

The Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, and all other popular hotels use BENEDICT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS. Sold by druggists and grocers everywhere.

New Cavalry Badge, in Solid Silver, $1.00.
New Artillery and Battery, in fine Gold Plate, $1.25.
New Battle Flag, with the Crowns of either General, fine Gold Plate, $1.
New Naval Pin, fine Gold plate, $1.50.
New Commander's Pin, do., $1.00.
New Engineer's Pin, do., $1.00.
Union Solid Silver Shield, to either Army Corps, Div., or Co. Pins, with Name, Number, or Letter engraved thereon, for $1. Liberal discount and premium allowed to Sutlers.
B. F. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 203 Broadway, N. Y.

World's Conqueror.

For Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, &c., &c. No sick person need despair while a bottle of this medicine is left. Send for circular and see testimonials of testimonials, and you will be convinced. It has no equal. Price $1 a bottle for $6.
DR. CLINTON KUYPERS,
Office 56 Beekman Street, New York.

POLLAK & SON.

MERSCHAUM MANUFACTURERS, 593 BROOME ST., NEAR BOWERY, N. Y., sell wholesale and retail. Will send, free of charge, a genuine Pipe for 4 Dollars. Pipes cut to order and repaired.

New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 211 Broadway, New York, would inform every country and every regiment in the sale of their new styles of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

Solid Silver $1.00.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Fine Gilt Badge Buttons and Corps Devices in Silver, at $1.50 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one, 100, or 1000.

Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for circular. Address
HOWARD M. MOORE,
Manufacturing Jeweler,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

SOMETHING NEW IN PLAYING CARDS. LOVE SCENES. Designs from French Artists.

The above new Card has fifty-five beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can be used the same as any ordinary playing cards, thus combining pleasure with amusement. Sent free to any address on receipt of stamp, and send for sample pack. $5 per dozen. Liberal discount by great to dealers. H. A. CASWELL, 60 Nassau St., New York.

MOSKWA.

For Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism, Hip Complaint, Paralyzed Limbs, White Swellings, Neuralgia, Cramp, Spine Disease, Pain in the Breast, Side or Loins, &c., &c. The almost magical effect of this remedy has enabled the proprietor to cure not only his thousands, but his tens of thousands within the last 40 years of his practice, and he challenges the world to produce an article of superior merit, or its ingredients combined possess virtues of the highest order. Try it afflicted sufferer. Price $1; 6 bottles $5. Send for circular.
DR. CLINTON KUYPERS,
Office 56 Beekman Street,
New York.

All interested in Shorthand should send for the PHONOGRAPHIC WORLD and PHONETIC JOURNAL, and Catalogue of Phonographic Books. No. 2 explains the Phonographic Alphabet. No. 3 explains Dr. Dewey's explanation of all the more general principles of the Art. Single No. 3 cents. Nos. 2, 3, and 4, 11 cents.
Address A. J. GRAHAM, No. 461 Broadway, N. Y.

Just what every Family wants. Serve a Cup of Coffee Hot for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene Oil with a brilliant light without chimney, smoke, or odor. Saves 25 per cent. Office 218 Fulton St., N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for circular. Sample sent free for 50 cts. American Institute awarded 1st Premium and Medal, 1863.

CARPET WARP

WOOL TWINE.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HALVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, New York.

MANTILLAS. BRODIE'S SPRING OPENING

Took place on

Tuesday, 8th March. BRODIE,

The Leader of Fashions,

Will make an early Spring Opening of

Ladies' Garments.

For novelty of style, for richness of material, and for endless variety of colors, coupled with moderate prices, the ladies of America never had such inducements to call on the

"Leader of Fashions."

No. 300 Canal Street,

Near Broadway.

Caution

FROM

The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The name "AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The name in full on the movement

"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The name in full on the movement

"E. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The fourth has the name

"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH Co., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold at our FOURTH OF MAY. Others are named the "APPLETON WATCH CO.;" others the "P. S. BARLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many falsified names in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,

Agents for the American Watch Company,

182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Enameled Chamber FURNITURE

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, warranted not to crack, chip, and manufactured in suite, wholesale and retail. Also Mattresses and Pallasses. WARREN WARD, 377 Canal St., N. Y.

To Consumptives.

Consumptive sufferers will receive a valuable prescription for the cure of Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung affections (free of charge), by sending their address to

REV. E. A. WILSON,
Williamsburgh, Kings Co.,
New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Ballou's, Washington Building, Chicago supplied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Military and Naval

COLLENDER and DARLING'S Patent Gymnasium. BROWN & CO., No. 3 Park Place, New York, adjust and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner.

For KEROSENE OIL LAMPS and LANTERNS, gives a brilliant light, entirely free from smoke or smell, and needs no chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which everywhere gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid for 30 cts. Agents wanted.
P. EBBIG & CO., MANUFACTURERS, 2 Platt Street, New York.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 30x35. Price $3500.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, enameled dial, cut hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, sent free by mail in neat case, only
A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the Army.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

OR, COMPASS WATCH.

A STERLING "Double Gold Plate" engraved or engine turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine Patent Jewels of Ne-del Movements," "A 1" Quality," Independent Action, Self Balance, and has a NEAT MINIATURE COMPASS set in the surrounding reading it a "Correct Guide" to the Sutler or Traveler. Perfect time. "Universal one year." WILL STAND ANON, and is an Exact Imitation of $100 Watch.

Send for British Army Officers' Orders.

Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.
Kingston Sterling Silver Lever Watches, engraved Hunting Case, full jeweled movements, warranted, $18.

$30 AMERICAN LEVERS. $30

Full Ruby Jeweled, 4 oz. Coin Silver Hunting Case, Gold Joints, with Magic Spring, FULL GUARANTEE, only $30

Real English Duplex Stop Watch.

In Massive Silver Hunting Case, full Jeweled, Sweep Seconds, for Artillerists or timing horses, with $50 Chronometer, only $30.
Good Watches for a large one, at $20, $25, $30, $35.
We can supply Watches of the above styles of European Watches. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.
The London Leader of December 26th, and subsequent issues of the European Timekeeper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper" that it is "a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and calculated to meet the wants of the soldiers in the field." Illustrated Price sents. Correct timepieces; also Watches and Jewelry sent by mail on approval to persons at $160 watches.
Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers, 59 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

Albums for the Army.

Our New Pocket Album,

holding sixteen pictures, and sold at

Seventy-five Cents,

is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.

Sent by mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of Seventy-five Cents.

SAMUEL BOWLES & COMPANY,

Photograph Album Manufacturers,
Springfield, Mass.

"TIP TOP."

THE JAN., FEB., AND MARCH PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBERS PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL are the best ever issued. They contain more than 100 Portraits and other Engravings, including Major-Gen. Butler, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Gen. Cowley, Bishop Hughes, Captains Speke and Grant, with Characters and Biographies; also Beautiful Women. Only 25 cents for the three, or $1 a year. New Vol. Address
FOWLER & WELLS, No. 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Opera and Field-Glasses

Can run a man distance of 3 to 4 miles. Spectacles and Eyeglasses with Rock Crystal Shot glass. Also Microscopes of every description. Sent to you by U. H. HOHN, Optician, 212 Broadway, New York. Send for wholesale and retail. Send for Circular.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW

a little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, exercise, &c., read the new and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Throat Affections, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver, and Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Affections of the Kidneys, Organs, Barrenness, Rupture, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Pimples, Humors of the Heart, Nervousness, How to Recover the Sight and throw aside Spectacles, Marriage, the Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Ill-openness, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand items of value to ourselves and single persons. Price of making, altogether, a curious book for curious people, and a good book for all people. 400 pages. 100 illustrations. Contents tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price, $1.50. Address S. B. FOOTE, M.D., No. 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Madame Benedict's MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING Establishment is now REPLETE with every IMPORTED NOVELTY of the season.

19 Waverly Place, N. Y.

50 DIGITS FOR VIOLIN AND PIANO, 50c. "Bogle Call," 50 Patriotic Songs and Quartettes, 50c. "Words of the World," Complete Guide to Correct Letter Writing, 50c. Indian and Silk Violin Strings, 25c., mailed. Descriptive price list musical instruments sent on receipt of postage stamp. FREDERICK BLUME, 289 Bowery, N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry

Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

All kinds of Sewing Machine Needles. J. W. BATTLEFT, Manufacturer, 440 Broadway, N. Y.
Wholesale or Retail. Mail or Express.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Case Watches	$125 00 each.
100 Gold Watches	70 00 each.
500 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches	15 00 each.
3000 Vest and Neck Chains	5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " " "	3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00 each.
5100 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00 each.
2000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00 each.
2050 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00 each.
6500 Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 8 00 each.
6500 Lockets	3 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00 each.
20000 Gold Pens, Silver M'ed Holders	4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, well sealed, up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, TOWN, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper waterproof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. This arm is now adopted by all can confidence to be acquired by any other over effected to the public. The great advantages of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others.

We also offer to the public our new Plant & Reynolds Cartridge and loose ammunition loading reviver. This arm has no equal as a hot or pocket weapon.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. R. & Co. have always had their Rifles and Pistols used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & HRAY, Sole Agents,
991 Broadway, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. They are an infallible REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. Sent by CAPTAIN & CO., No. 629 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 50 cents additional.

ACROSTIC.

Lines suggested by using the SOAP, SALERATUS, and CONCENTRATED POTASH, manufactured by
B. T. BABBITT, New York.

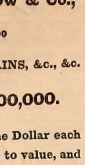
By the cares of a family, made weary and sad,
The return of wash-day almost drives my wife mad;
By the bother with servants who are stubborn and mope;
And the impossibility of getting good soap;
But now all her troubles from that cause are o'er,
Babbitt's Soap is procured; they grumble no more.
It is true, as I know, and have often been told,
That naught saves the housewife like heavy, sour bread:
There are mistakes often made in all the bakes,
Sour biscuits, hard crackers, and sour buckwheat cakes;
But in but some Soda, with Babbitt's name on it, Do,
Oh, what a great change! It is hardly safe not done it?
Then to the "office" where types are ne'er clean,
And the paper that's printed is not fit to be seen,
Send off at once, for there's no time to be lost!
Have the Concentrated Potash Babbitt sent at the cost.
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y.

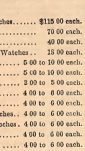
NATIONAL BATTLE PRINS.



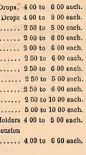
McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Banks, Meade, Gillmore, Burnside, Hooker, Sigel, and Foster. All are the same features as the cut, only differing in battle-grounds and dates. Perfect photograph likeness in each pin, gilded with fine gold. By enclosing One Dollar a sample will be sent by mail.

AGENTS WANTED IN AND OUT THE ARMY. Sales unprecedented; has the exclusive right of manufacture, and the inventor of this beautiful keepsake and record of gallant acts. Also,

Cavalry and Artillery Pins.



The above cuts represent perfectly the Cavalry and Artillery Pins we have been getting up for Soldiers, to answer the urgent inquiries of the boys from that important branch of the service so long neglected in upplying them with the Cavalry and Artillery Pins now adopted for the Divisions in



Red, White and Blue,

The outer rim highly polished as Silver can be had with Co., and Regiment. These Pins are Silver Metal, and cost One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents. If with the Name, Co., and Regiment engraved upon them, or One Dollar without engraving. If any engraving is required beyond the Name, "Co." and Regiment, Three Letters or Figure will be charged.

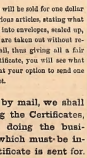
AGENTS will be furnished at $6 per dozen without engraving, and $9 per dozen with the Name, Regiment and Co. lettered. The emblems are raised, and the Pin about the thickness of a two shilling piece.

UNITED STATES NAVY



Monitor Pins.

The cut is a correct copy of the Monitor Pins got up in Silver Metal. The name of the Monitor and gunboat "Pin will be engraved upon the same, and furnished for $1 50 each. The Pins are very beautiful, and go up expressly by desire of many officers of the Navy. Same Pins got up in Solid Gold.

Agents wanted, and supplied at $9 per dozen, without engraving, and $12 per dozen, engraved as above.
Every Monitor in the Navy represented.
LOUIS PHILIP & CO., No. 3 MURRAY ST., N. Y.

Best Thing Out!

The "Patent Pocket Army Pipe," just out, is decidedly the most convenient article for soldiers in the market. It is of fine specimen, and durable, will burn out all the tobacco, CAN BE CARRIED IN THE VEST POCKET, is not easily stopped up, or it can be taken into FOUR PARTS immediately. The fire can not be seen, neither can it drop out. By a very ingenious arrangement the smoke is cooled and cleaned before entering the mouth, making it the cleanest, most economical, and delightful smoking pipe in the world. ONE SENT SAFELY FREE for 50 cents or 2 for 25c. We also manufacture the famous Magic Tobacco-Stops, Thermometers, Union Crystal Cement, Pipe Packages, Match safes, &c., and we will send 13 different articles of our choicest styles, nicely packed, free, on receipt of $4 00. Circulars and Price list sent. Address in full RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 NASSAU ST., Box 5181, New York.

P. S. Money sent in registered letters is at our risk.

ONE CENT.

AS the warm weather approaches prepare to reduce your household expenses by getting

FISH'S KEROSENE LAMP COOKING APPARATUS,

with which you may prepare a meal for FIVE PERSONS at a cost of ONE CENT. PRICE, FROM $2 TO $6.

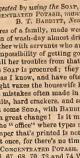
Also the "Union Attachment," to be used on a common lamp, which will roast, cook food, or support a shade. Price 50 cents. No family can afford to be without one of these articles. For sale at the Lamp and Stove Stores. Trade supplied by WM. D. RUSSELL, Agent, 289 Pearl St., New York. Send for Circulars.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Oregonian will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face) with perfect safety. Delivery to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

WATCHES

FOR

THE ARMY.



Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chronometer.—N. Y. Weekly, July 18.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 27.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-piece ever offered.—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 30.

Magic Time Observers,

The Perfection of Mechanism!

Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-Winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepieces for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it inclosed, concealed with its machinery to own winding attachment of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the important ruby action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Sample watches in neat morocco boxes, $35. If sent by mail, 50 cents postage to be extra; registering, 25 cents.

Silver Watches!

First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES STAND UNRIVALED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, can not be recognized by soldering or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in reality, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver to existence.

The size of these watches for the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day-pay by any one of ordinary business tact!

AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel ring, and fancy cut hands, in good reasonable order, by the half dozen, $17; quarter, $1 38; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; I never treat dealings directly with consumer is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
Eroadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GROUPS of eminent actors and actresses, each group containing from five to nine portraits. Price per group, 75 cents; 12 for $8. Sent, post-paid, by RICHARD PARKER & CO., cor. ANN and NASSAU STREETS, New York.

Fresh from Abraham's Bosom.

Comprising all his loved excepting the "Green Bucks." IN PRESS. Mailed, post-paid (or sent to ready), 50 cts. T. R. DAWLEY, Publisher, 18 Park Row, N. Y. A very liberal discount to the trade. Call and see, his friend, or any other man, will please send along Father Abraham's Jokes for Publication.

Cavalry Badges.

Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest style Cavalry Badge. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co., and Regiment handsomely engraved thereon.

Solid Silver $3 00
Solid Silver, letters in gold relief 3 50
Solid gold 8 00
Solid gold relief 9 00

Also new style Artillery Badge, and every style Cap, Pin and Corps Badge worn by the Army. Send for our illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALDWIN & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices,

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to do quickly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular, with Specimen Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., all sent free. Address COLTON & Co., No. 76 Ann St., N. Y., or 58 Lombard St., Baltimore, Md.

BAKER'S RHEUMATIC BALM.
BAKER'S KIDNEY COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE.
BAKER'S BODY ALLEVIATOR,

are four remedies which no family should ever be without. Price $1 per bottle each.

Sold by druggists.

BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $5.

PRINCIPAL DEPOT No. 154 Tenth Street, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists.

Remedies sent to any address upon receipt of price.

To Composers.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositions, used to Book-work. Apply to Mr. MORRIS, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

12th Regiment Ball.

IN AID OF THE Widows and Orphans
OF
Deceased New York Soldiers.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, April 25, 1864.

LATEST INVENTION
IN GOLD PENS.
JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with an Iridium or Diamond Point, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest price pen made, can be produced at little further outlay than of the kind hitherto offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an elastic and diamond pointed pen at a low figure, and, until now, all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against pens combining low price and good name and calling them gold. We know that ours is the only gold gold and genuine diamond pointed and elastic pen in the market that can be sold anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices by the Dozen.

No. 2. MEDIUM PEN,	$5 50.
No. 3. LARGE PEN,	7 75.
No. 4. ENGRAVING PEN,	8 50.
SILVER MOUNTED EBONY HOLDERS IN MOROCCO CASE, EXTRA, PER DOZEN,	84 00.

Sample Pens.

No. 2. MEDIUM PEN,	60 cents.
No. 3. LARGE PEN,	75 cents.
No. 4. ENGRAVING PEN,	85 cents.
SILVER MOUNTED EBONY HOLDERS IN MOROCCO CASE, EXTRA,	50 cents.

Warrantee.

WE WARRANT every pen one year, and to be solid gold, genuine Iridium or Diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity of the most expensive gold pen made.

We send these pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price. Money promptly returned and sealed comes at us.

GEORGE MUNSON & CO., 21 William Street, N. Y.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications.

Novel No. 8.—THE INDIAN HAVELI.

Nothing can surpass this inimitable Indian Tale. It is full of adventures of the most startling nature, intermingled with the most romantic incidents. For sale, postpaid, on receipt of price, 10 cents

GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 17 William Street, N. Y.

Two Dollars made from twenty ets. Call and examine, or ten samples sent free by mail for 50c. Retails for $3, by J. S. WOLCOTT, 117 Nassau street, New York.

Thackeray's "Last and Greatest Story."

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
For April, 1864.

CONTENTS:

JOURNEY TO THE SOURCE OF THE NILE.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Removing an African Village.—"The Stream" the Nile Having Left Its Low Waters.—Speke's Faithful.—A Jolly Time.—Brewing Pombe.—A Nagbian at Work.—Grand Dancing with Ghastly Bugs, Cabbalah, or Goody-Limbed Trees.—Camp in the Uhunga Valley.—The Weeds Bridging Rivulets for Safe, Pressing Spoils to Runnakiva.—Rumbaiva's New Mode of Love.—Queen Mother Presented to Education.—King of Uganda Hunting.—Speke hits down Grant to the Queen-Dowager of Ugonda.—Mutesa's Drum.—Midsummer's Party on the March.

THE TIMBER FISHERS.—(With Illustration.)

SCENES IN THE WAR OF 1812.—IX. WAR WITH THE CREEK INDIANS.

ILLUSTRATION.—Weatherford in Jackson's Tent.—Fort of Mims.—General and Staff in Action.—General John Coffee.—Plan of Battle of Talladega.

EVEA.

THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON.

CHAPTER LII. The Most Welcome to the Goostwick Bridge.

CHAPTER LIII. Lovely Lucy Harpleben.

CHAPTER LIV. The Second Visit to the Goostwick Bridge.

ILLUSTRATION.—The Cottage.—"She has refused me, and is all over."

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

THE BLACKSMITH'S OF HOLSBY.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Finding the Treasure.—Annie's Return.

MY ESCAPE FROM RICHMOND.

THE AVENGER.

DENIS DUVAL. By WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

CHAPTER I. The Family Tree.

CHAPTER II. The Dance of Lorraine.

CHAPTER III. The Travelers.

HOW EMPIRE COMES TO THE BLIND.

THE TORTURES OF THE INNOCENTS.

ESCAPE FROM FORT WARREN.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

DOBBS ON DISEASE.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Bilious.—Nervous.—Rapture.—Chills.—Fractured Skull.—Fever.—Toothing.—Gunnel Decline.—Pills.—Apoplexy.—Gout.

FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Evening Parisienne.—Dinner Toilet.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year	$3 00
Two Copies for One Year	5 00

An Extra Copy gratis, for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 75 each, or 11 Copies for $27 50. HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 50.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months	$1 00
One Copy for One Year	3 00
One Copy for Two Years	5 00

And one Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 75 each, or 11 Copies for $27 50. Payment invariably in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863, of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

OUR BIG GUNS.

INQUIRING BRITISH CAPTAIN. "It must take a deuce of a time, though, to cast a gun like that—eh?"

COMMUNICATIVE AMERICAN CAPTAIN. "Well, it does. That one took twenty-two minutes; but we shall do better by-and-by!"—(See Account of Casting Great Gun at Fort Pitt.)

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Watches Given Away.

AGENTS and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we are now engaging in the sale of our NEW NOVELTY SUBSCRIPTION PRICE PACKET. Only $15 capital required to obtain WATCH, PIANO, with first order. We also offer SPLENDID SINGLE ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered.

Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.,

The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

Silver Rings for the Million.

Every thing in the line, from a plain Silver Ring, at 10 cents, to an elaborately engraved Locket-Ring, inlaid with Gold, at $20 00.

See Advertisement on page 223.

Sickness on the Peninsula.

Our army before Richmond have suffered greatly from Chills and Fever, as well as Bowel Complaints. Some regiments have made a free use of PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER and have consequently suffered much less than those who have depended entirely upon the surgeons. A few doses of the Pain Killer taken in the early stages of the Diarrhœa have often prevented a long illness. Those are soon dosed to see a little to water, preventing any injurious effects from its too frequent use during the hot weather.

The Beard &c.

IN the course of twenty, extended growth, where the person is over 18, by its remarkable nourishing and stimulating power, the TOILET-DE SOUMY SHRUB BOHAN has been found infallible, in exciting the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent circular, on receipt of return postage.

JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N. Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, pre-paid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
310 Broadway, New York.

Also, his well paid, pre-paid, the Bijouvan, or Portrait STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all sizes, for $3 00; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment are twin curatives, derived from one origin, the vegetable productions of the soil. They act in unison on the system, the one internally upon the secretions of the body, and the other externally through the countless orifices of the skin, cleansing and reinvigorating the vital organization. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 25c., 63c., and $1 44 per box or pot.

Sewing Machines.—Wonderful Improvements.—The Weed Lock-stitch Machines sew from lace to heavy leather. We advise our readers to buy them.

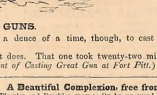
WEED S. MACHINE CO.,
500 Broadway, N. Y.

Card Photographs.

A splendid assortment. Catalogues sent free. Address B. W. HITCHCOCK, Manufacturer, 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

A Beautiful Complexion, free from Tan. Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For shaving it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey, and other valuable articles highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 199 and 201 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.



The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a sample, or 75 cents for a "Chokter," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS.

Ready made or to measure, at $33, $39, and $45 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3 00, $3 75, and $4 50 each; all cut one yard long. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 64 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cts. each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 88 cts.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 367 Broadway, N. Y.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. (New Edition of) descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address H. C. L. BATES, 217 W. 23d St., N. Y.

Don't buy your Gaiters or Shoes without Fogg's Patent Lever Buckle.

They are self-adjusting, and require no holes punched in the strap. Dealers or manufacturers can secure The Cents Currency, and I will mail sample of two patterns.

FUDDICK & STAVIS,
215 Pearl Street, New York,

and
63 Kilby Street, Boston, MASS.

A Great Success.

The New Novel, Cudjo's Cave, is not a sensation book for the hour only. It is a story, as the New York Tribune remarks, that will retain a durable hold on public interest by means of its earnestness, vitality, and truth to nature. It is for sale by all principal booksellers and newsmen, and sent, post-paid, by the publishers,

J. E. TILTON & CO., Boston. (Price $1 50.)

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day made Easy.

By selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" RICKARDS' PRIZE AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "more real saleable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Mat-rials, Engravings, Jewellery, Rich Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, &c. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price only 25c. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and county. $75 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting-case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect time-keeper, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL RICKARDS PRIZE PACKAGES, each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. For an exposé of the swindling operations as practised by other parties, see editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our great new Circular, free for 1864, containing "extra premiums inducements, &c."

S. S. RICKARDS & CO., 162 NASSAU ST., N. Y.
Original, Largest, and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 25 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER!!!

In Coin Silver $1 or $2 00. Including the engraving of the Name, Co., and Regiment. Also the National Badge, Pin, Cavalry and Artillery Pin, Musician, Engineer, and Signal Corps Pins.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO.,
No. 2 Murray Street, New York.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it, by using Lyle's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Stores.

Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

LANDS.—TO ALL WANTING FARMS.—Large and thriving settlement, on the Prairie, Winnebago County, 90 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, prodigious crops, excellent water, in sure growing. Twenty and fifty acre tracts, at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business opening for all varieties and others, churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most important place East of West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address JAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune:—It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position, and unthinkable condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

TROPICAL BALSAM

Prepared by Carreno Brothers & Co.

This celebrated and unparalleled medicine, composed entry of substances in purifying vegetables, has been for many years past the great popular remedy of South America, and is now offered to the world as the surest cure of phthisis, croupe, and all other diseases of the chest and throat, differing entirely from the relling, blow, or brandy, however severe: hemorrhages, wounds, contusions, ulcers, felons, burns, spitting, headache, toothache, and all diseases. (See Directions around the bottles.)

Ever since this valuable medicine has been introduced in this country, its internal and external use has never failed to produce the most wonderful, unexpected results.

Heads of families are advised to keep always this Balsam by them, in order to use it in time in cases of wounds, hemorrhages, burns, bruises, &c.; also those who are devoted to such occupations as expose them to danger, or require the use of instruments wherewith they may be injured in any way. For valuable testimonial letters, see the Tribune and the Courrier des Etats-Unis.

Price of bottles, 12½ cts. and 25 cts.

General Depot at WM. E. SIBELL'S, No. 7 NASSAU St., near Wall, New York. Retailed at the drug stores generally in NEW YORK and BROOKLYN.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. JNO. W. WHEELER, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Alfred G. Lefferts, of New York.

PUTNAM MFG. CO.

GENTLEMEN: I know from practical experience that iron well galvanized with zinc will not oxidize and rust one particle. I can also say, after several years experience in the manufacture of chain, for chain-pump and waterscrews, in which I have had the rubility of iron and zinc, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect weld of the two metals.

Nearly one year ago my family commenced using one of your Wringers, and have to-day as fine a machine as well as it did the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article in the house. I have also observed several other kinds of clothes-wringers, the modus operandi being different, trying to produce the same results as the Putnam Wringer, but in my judgment they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is the only one I have examined, and I can cheerfully recommend it to be the best in use.

Respectfully yours, JOHN W. WHEELER.

Many years' experience in the galvanizing business enables me to speak with confidence as to its particulars.

ALFRED G. LEFFERTS, No. 100 Beekman Street, New York, January 18th, 1864.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.

No. 2, $5 50; No. 3, $6 00; No. 4, $8.

Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 13 Park Street, Troy, New York.

S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

IVORY JEWELRY.

A fine assortment white and imitation of CORAL and TURTLE SHELL JEWELRY, at moderate, $1 50 pair. IVORY INITIAL BUTTONS, 75c. pair. New Patterns Pearl $1 00 pair. Sent free on receipt of the price. For sale at WELLING'S, 307 Centre St., N. Y., Sign of the GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 307 Centre St., New York, second floor. Sent by mail for 60 cents.

American Silver Chains
For American Silver Watches.
See Advertisement on page 223.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVER WATCHES.

Trade Mark. P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches.
208 Broadway New York.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications.

NOVEL OF THE BATTLE-FIELD CATCHER;
OR, THE TIGER OF THE OCEAN.
By ELLEN COMFORTLAND.

This is one of the oldest and most interesting productions of this highly popular author, who writes exclusively for us. It is full of marvelous exploits on the ocean. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, 10 cents.

GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 157 William St., N. Y.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair and whiskers to their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading to one half with another, and thus gives a life appearance instead of the dull dead look of dyes, so that the most critical observer can not detect its use. It does not require previous soaping and washing, and hours for its application, but rubs it into the skin; but is as readily applied and easily wiped from the skin or any hair dressing. It does not stain the skin, but cures it when it has once faded and is nothing else. Use it, whatever may be advertised to the contrary, but it will require a little rubbing on, make it soft and silky, and cleanse it from scurf, from all dandruff and humors, and entirely overcome the bad effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c.

Hoyt's Imperial Coloring Cream.

An appropriate accompaniment to the Hiawatha; oils and colors the hair at the same time, and changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black. Sold everywhere.

N.B.—Ladies' French hair-dresser in attendance to apply the Hiawatha.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 19 University Pises, N. Y.

Get the Best.

☞ TEN FOR ONE DOLLAR. ☜

Card Photographs

(5000 Different Subjects)

FOR AN

Prominent and Noted Persons, LIVING AND DEAD,

All the Major-Generals, the President and Cabinet,

AND ALL THE

Prominent Officers of the Army and Navy.

ACTORS, ACTRESSES, FANCY AND MISCELLANEOUS PICTURES, &c., &c.

☞ 10 for One Dollar, or 12 for 10 cts. Single Picture. Sent free to any address. Enclose Stamp, and send for List of Pictures and Card Photographs.

To insure prompt and honorable dealing, SEND YOUR ORDERS TO

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,
439 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

N. B. A Classified Catalogue of over 10 000 different books in every department of literature sent to any address on receipt of 3 cents. Premium Certificates of new Watch and Jewelry Enterprise sent on receipt of 10 cents.

IVORY BROOCHES

and GOLD MOUNTED LEAF DROPS (warranted Solid Gold) by set or single, by mail on receipt of $1 00. AGENTS WANTED. Manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 403 Broadway, N.Y.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

FENCE AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

Call, or send for a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Maiden Lane & 23 John Street. N. Y.,
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands & St., Birmingham, Eng.

Chemicals, Soda Ash.

The following brands: Johnson's, Kurtz, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Garrett's, Marseilles, for Soap, Glass, or Woollen Mills, constantly on hand. Address

THOS. ANDREWS & CO.,
Importers, 104 and 106 Cedar Street, New York.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 500 TIMES. MAILED FREE everywhere for 75 CENTS. Fine for children. Sent free for $1 00. Address P. C. BOWEN, Box 239, Boston, MASS.

Sundries.

Leading articles: SODA ASH, PALM OIL, COCOA NUT OIL, CAUSTIC SODA, BI CARB. SODA, Newcastle and "Pyle's Crown" SOAP, Glycerine, Soda and Cream Tartar, Pittsburgh make, Cayenne Pepper, Spices, Various Gums, Mustard, FLOUR, RICE, BORAX, CREAM TARTAR, perfectly pure or crystals; TALLOW, CANDLES, powdered or crystallized. Address, SAMUEL SCHOONMAKER' YEAST POWDERS. Buy of one who first made them. THOMAS ANDREWS & CO.

Importers, 104 and 106 Cedar Street, New York.

Established Seventeen Years!

250 Rare Receipts.

17 Superb Electrotype Engravings!
TELLS WELL! WHAT TO DO, AND HOW TO DO IT.
A Book that should be in every family.
Sent free by mail for 25 cents.
Address, HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
442 Broadway, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. VIII.—No. 380.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE METROPOLITAN FAIR BUILDINGS.

WE give on this page views of the buildings on Fourteenth Street, and on page 228 those on Union Square, which have been erected and adapted for the uses of the Metropolitan Fair. The buildings on Fourteenth Street are appropiated to the exhibition and sale of the many varieties of goods contributed—the main building of the group, that with a cupola, forming a great bazar, with departments adjoining for the exhibition of pictures, for restaurant purposes, etc. The Book Department is in this building. These are the main buildings of the Fair, and to the majority of visitors will form the principal point of interest. The building erected over the sidewalk, and extending beyond it into the street, is occupied in part by the Indian Wigwam of Mr. Bierstadt, the artist, in which Indian dresses and curiosities are exhibited; and during the Fair a band of the "Red Men" will perform some of their dances, and give other illustrations of Indian life. Another part of this building will be occupied by the Ordnance Department, which will give to our peaceful citizens a glimpse of the field and garrison appointments with which our brave defenders have lately become as familiar as they were heretofore with the plow and plane, or any other implement of industry. The Firemen's display in these buildings is creditable at once to the generosity and taste of this important branch of the public service.

The building on Union Square is appropriated, among other things, to a Children's Department, which will be remembered as one of the pleasantest features of the Fair. In this department daily entertainments will be furnished, during the Fair, by some thousands of children. There are ten booths, one containing a miniature skating-pond; another embracing contributions from the public schools; a third gifts from benevolent societies, etc. Another feature of the Union Square buildings is the Knickerbocker Kitchen, in which New York, as it was long years ago, is reproduced for the gratification of the Young New York of to-day. Here, too, as the Fair goes on, our friends from the country, whose ancestors used to make pilgrimages to New York once a year, half a century or so ago, will be able to see illustrated precisely the manners, customs, and life which their fathers looked upon, and can thus determine, from personal examination, in how far the new life is an improvement upon the old. Probably, however, some may conclude that the old life was better, more practical and full of soul, than the new, in whose responsibilities we all are sharing.

THE METROPOLITAN FAIR BUILDINGS ON FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK.

THE TORN BATTLE-FLAG.

OVERHEAD are the milk-white clouds,
And the liquid blue of the April sky;
On either side are the jubilant crowds,
And the sunrise buildings towering high,
As up the street the veterans come
With screaming fife and rattling drum.

In front, by the color-sergeant borne,
Is the battle-flag that each lover will,
Grimy with battle smoke, and torn
By the whistling bullet and bursting shell;
And long and loud the people cheer
At sight of the flag that each holds dear.

Its stars were once like a glittering gold
On a field of glorious azure bright,
Of newest silk was each shining fold,
With stripe of crimson and pearl white,
And delicate hands of women made
The woven tassel and corded braid.

As the drums beat loud and the people cheer
Each veteran there remembers the day
When, parting with wives and weeping hearts dear,
From their peaceful homes they came away,
And bade farewell to their native hills,
To the verdant meadows and sweet-voiced rills.

Ah, through what scenes of strife since then
Has that tattered battle-flag been borne!
What memories it bears to these waiting men
In each shattering remnant stained and torn!
And proudly they follow it up the street
While the people this scream and the loud drums beat.

It tells of marches through wind and rain,
In the summer heat and the solemn night!
It tells of a gallant comrade slain
Who here is safely in many a fight—
Of the sudden skirmish where brave men bled,
Of the battle-field with its gory dead.

It tells of capture by traitorous foe,
Of rescue again by the hand of friend;
It tells of the enemy's overthrow,
Which must and shall be the glorious end,
When their fitful, ill-begotten rag
No more shall insult the dear old flag.

At sunset and at earliest morn,
At noon beneath the scorching heat,
On Southern slope 'mid the tasseled corn,
In battle's flash of rye and wheat,
Up the rocky pathway, strewn with dead,
That banner the advance has led.

And now they have brought it home at last,
Through blue and white the battle's smoke and torn—
What tales it will tell of the stirring Past
In future years, to the child unborn!
When gazing, mute, at the arsenal wall,
His eye on that tattered flag shall fall!

Beat, beat, ye drums, still louder beat!
Play fifes, with shriller, merrier sound!
Roll out, oh drums, along the street,
Till trembles all the solid ground!
And cheer, ye people, long and louder cheer,
For the brave old flag that your hearts hold dear!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1864.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

HAS the Union Convention been called to meet at too early a day? There are some loyal journals which warmly insist that it has, and that it should be postponed until the first of September. Their chief argument seems to be that we have a momentous campaign before us, which requires the hearty and united support of all good citizens, while the discussion of the claims of the candidates will certainly distract us, and consequently weaken our efforts. One journal, indeed, goes so far as to suggest that the coming campaign is in some sense final, and that if we do not crush the rebellion this summer we shall relinquish the struggle—a view which seems to us simply incomprehensible. But all the advocates of postponing the nomination are agreed that the failure of the campaign will be the virtual defeat of Mr. LINCOLN.

Now, since there is a President to be elected in November, and since he ought certainly, in order to secure a full and fair canvass, to be nominated at least two or three months before the election, it is clear that the argument for postponement drawn from the campaign is very incon sistent, because it can not be assumed that the campaign will end before the fine weather is passed. The battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chicamauga, and Lookout Mountain were all fought in the autumn or winter; and because we may be unfortunate in the campaign, it does not follow that we may not be victorious at the close of the campaign. If it be asked whether great reverses during the summer would not be the proof of an incompetency in the conduct of the war which ought to be rebuked rather than rewarded? the reply is in the other question whether the best soldiers known to the country, and most cordially approved by loyal men, are not now in the chief military positions, and vested with all necessary discretion? If they are, and—after doing their best—fail, do these journals propose to erect at the "interference" and "mismanagement" in Washington? Lieutenant-General GRANT, with a practically supreme military command, directs the pending operations. Even the stoutest advocates of postponing the nomination profess full faith in his ability to annihilate or disperse the rebel armies, but if he does not—woe to the President! is their remarkable conclusion. That he will be held responsible is very possible. That disappointment will produce a reaction which may lead to unhappy results, as it did in New York two years ago, when Mr. SEYMOUR was elected Governor, is very likely; but we are now considering what is wisest—what really thoughtful and loyal men and journals ought to advise.

And that brings us to the fundamental weakness of this whole policy of delay. It is simply an assumption that the candidacy of Mr. LINCOLN is to depend not upon the whole course of his administration for three years in the midst of frightful and unprecedented perils and disasters, but simply upon the issue of one campaign, which, by the admission of the objectors, is in the best hands to which it could be confided. Now to this reasoning we utterly object. These objections admit that the present Administration has been, upon the whole, so "successful and fair," that it inspires more confidence than any untried Administration is likely to do. Why, then, we ask, should it be condemned by one detail? Upon what reasonable grounds is it maintained that the general success of three years is to be outweighed by the issue of a single campaign? If we have expressed an earnest preference for the re-election of the President, it is exactly because his course has been "upon the whole, so successful and fair." It is because, in the extraordinary exigencies of these three years, he has shown such capacity and fidelity, because he has so truly represented the great public opinion of that very heterogeneous mass, the American people, and has brought them so surely forward toward victory, that we can not agree that it is a wise thing to set him aside, even if General GRANT does not annihilate or disperse the rebel armies before the first of September, or even if he should suffer a reverse.

Indeed, whatever the event of the coming campaign may be, we think his re-election the best thing for the cause. If the campaign be fortunate, the journals of which we have been speaking concede his nomination. If it be unfortunate, it seems to us that the country will need more than ever a President whom it thoroughly knows. If we fail, an entire change of the executive department, except upon the evidence of its culpability, would be as unwise as it would have been in the anguish and dismay of the first battle of Bull Run. Such moments are the very emergencies in which nations need tried, and not untried, magistrates. The sacrifice of leaders to the rage and chagrin of momentary disappointment is the very action of an intelligent people, nor will it be the counsel of truly wise and patient men. For, let us suppose the campaign successful, the President re-elected, and the following winter and spring operations unfortunate. He will then be the President for four more years, and yet by the argument the event of the campaign will show that he ought not to have been elected.

Inasmuch, then, as we support Mr. LINCOLN for what he has done, and for what General GRANT is or is not going to do, we wish that the nomination could be made by May-day. Then, if, as we hope, Mr. LINCOLN were the nominee, all differences among the loyal Union would cease, and their undivided interest, sympathy, and energy would be given to the prosecution of the war. If, on the contrary, the nomination be deferred until September, the whole summer will ring with the preliminary contest. To be exposed to such a debate for five months more, than to be involved suddenly in disaster, and obliged, in the midst of the universal tumult and disappointment, to select a candidate for the Presidency, does not seem to us to promise a very desirable result. How the Union men are to gain in unity, peace, and concord by such a course we do not see. Indeed, the collective wisdom of Mr. BELMONT'S Chicago Convention would undoubtedly advise us to do that very thing. Fas est ab hoste doceri. Find out what the enemy proposes to do, and then with all your might don't do it, was NAPOLEON'S advice.

But it is said that the war Democrats will wish to join in the nomination. Certainly they will. And what prevents them? They and we are equally devoted to the cause, and the names of GRANT, SHERMAN, THOMAS, SHERIDAN, FOOTE, LOGAN, and WALLACE, now in the highest and most important commands, show that there is no partisan flaw in the selection of the Administration, while its policy has no more faithful friends than they. Into what convention could these gentlemen and their companions-in-arms go but a Union convention? And in what other assembly would their position and claims be so honored and acknowledged? It is, we presume, a matter of course that the list of the names presented by that convention will be that of an old Democrat who has proved his democracy by his unconditional fidelity to the Union and Government. What PATRICK HENRY said of the Colonies is now true of old party lines: "Where are your landmarks, your boundaries of Colonies? There are none. All are Americans." The distinctions between Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers, and New Englanders are no more. I am not a Virginian, but an American." So say we all. The boundaries of party are thrown down. We are not Democrats or Republicans, but loyal American citizens.

In this spirit, and at a time when our view of the requirements of the Presidency may be unclouded by temporary excitement, let us name the man, whoever he may be, whose career certifies the fidelity, the patience, and the sagacity that we need, and God defend him and the right!

MR. "TEAREM" IN PARLIAMENT AND IN CONGRESS.

MR. ROEBUCK, in the British Parliament, has been throwing dirt at our Government with amusing ferocity, and Mr. Senator SAULSBURY, and gentlemen who sympathize with him, have been doing the same thing in Congress. This is perfectly intelligible. Mr. ROEBUCK is the representative in Parliament of the hate with which a privileged class regards a government of the people; just as Mr. SAULSBURY and his friends represent in this country the class and the policy which have always trampled upon the equal rights of men, which is the fundamental principle of our system. So long as the express and essential Constitutional guarantees of personal liberty and the right of speech for all citizens of the United States were openly scorned and lawlessly smothered in blood, throughout all the slave States, and in time of perfect peace, those language-patriots could see no danger to the Union or to the Government. They voted and acted in perfect accord with the despotism which left the country no alternative but the subversion of the Government or civil war. And now that the country has elected the latter they devote all their energies to perplexing and thwarting its efforts to secure the total restoration of that despotism in all its fatal supremacy.

The epithets of scorn and contempt which Mr. Senator SAULSBURY has spent upon the Administration, the official representative of the American people, are re-echoed across the water by the bitter British Tory. It is not surprising. His instantaneous cry for the fierce absolutism of the rebels, which is straining every nerve to destroy equal rights and to bring the name of Republic to a mockery, is a confession of the people exasperate the British Tory as they disheartn the American Copperhead. If GRANT should be defeated Mr. ROEBUCK would cry, Thank God! and the Copperhead would whisper in his heart, Amen!

The Tories in England and the Copperheads in this country talk of the war in exactly the same strain. It is "horrid," "fratricidal," "wicked," "infamous." Well, these gentlemen differ from the mass of their countrymen in each case. Mr. GLADSTONE and Lord CLARENDON, replying to Mr. ROEBUCK, said that he did not speak for the English people, more than half of whom, as Earl RUSSELL told us last session, most heartily sympathized with the cause of the American Government. So at home, as Senator SAULSBURY will remember, the sober people of Delaware will perhaps pardon (with the expression) differed last autumn from his friend VALLANDIGHAM by a hundred thousand majority, and did not have the least fear that their loyal States were in danger merely because Mr. VALLANDIGHAM was prevented from helping the rebels destroy them.

OWEN LOVEJOY.

IS OWEN LOVEJOY the cause of Democracy loses a noble champion. From the moment that he rose from the side of his brother, murdered by the foes of human equality principles, down to the last time that he opened his lips to speak, he was the cheerful, steady, fervent advocate of the great American principle. A characteristic and faithful American, whoever studies his character will see the kind of moral heroism and dignity produced by our distinctive principles.

In his earlier career he was a clergyman, and he did not leave his faith behind him, but took it with him into Congress as he carried thither his generous hopes and temper, and trenchant speech. His companions in Congress of every party-sympathy mingled their regrets over his death. When a meeting was held in his own neighborhood, in Brooklyn, Mr. LOVEJOY died, said that his efforts to suppress the rebellion were paramount to every other consideration. Mr. COVODE, of Ohio, said that what Mr. LOVEJOY believed he expressed, and was at all times prepared to defend his positions. Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, said that he was not afraid to vindicate the right any where. Mr. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, knew him as a good neighbor. Mr. ARNOLD, of Illinois, found him earnest pushing vigorously on to promote what he thought the interests of his country and race. Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, declared him wise, vigilant, and faithful.

They are noble words to be truly spoken of any man; nor will any one doubt that they were true of him. His name will be inscribed with Mr. LOVEJOY—but as much a martyr to liberty as NATHAN HALE—and for his own brave words and unspotted life, will be always noted in his country. The laborers are called away, but the work goes on. Devotion to the Democratic principle of equal liberty before the laws must be its own reward. With OWEN LOVEJOY it was so. His steady soul pursues its career; but wherever it may be, its faith in the love of God and the brotherhood of man is no surer than when his visible life illustrated it.

DOUGLAS AS A UNION MAN.

In his recent striking speech upon Reconstruction, Mr. ARNOLD of Illinois—who in the last Congress introduced the bill establishing the freedom of the Territories, and, during this session, the resolution for a constitutional amendment abolishing slavery—recounts in a graphic and picturesque manner many of the incidents in our recent history. The whole speech will be read with peculiar interest as a review and defense of the present Administration. We have room but for one or two passages which the friends of Mr. DOUGLAS will see with especial satisfaction:

"No so illogressive an inauguration as that of Mr. Lincoln has occurred since the inauguration of Washington. He had been threatened with assassination, and the rebels had intended his murder as he passed through Baltimore. On his arrival here he found the public offices filled with traitors. Snuggs as it may seem, the rebel generals LEE and JOE and HARDEE, Secretaries, and Evans and DIXIE, Stewart and Maguder, Pierrepont and Wickes, held in March and April, 1861, leading positions in our Army. Traitors were every where. The citizens of Washington were in a large portion of them sympathy with the rebels. Secession had been preceded by secret conspiracy, concealed by those holding the highest official trusts. It had been veiled by specious professions of loyalty. Mr. LINCOLN'S arrival here there were the men he found in all the departments of the land and he was surrounded by spies and traitors. None who witnessed it will ever forget the scene of that inauguration. Standing on the eastern front of the Capitol, the judges of the Supreme Court, the Senate and House of Representatives, the high officers of the army and navy arrayed in the full dress of their functions and patriots, with many an eye looking searchingly into his neighbor's face to learn whether he was a traitor or a friend; standing there amidst scowling enemies in arms and masked traitors, Mr. LINCOLN was perfectly cool and determined. He read his inaugural with a voice clear and distinct enough to be heard by twice ten thousand people. When with reverence he closed by the Eternal God that he would faithfully 'preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution, his record for firmness was stood, not by accident, at his side. Douglas knew, perhaps, better than the President elect the extent of the difficulties which surrounded him. He was observed to whisper in the ear of Mr. LINCOLN, and I believe said to the President the assurance that in the dark and difficult future he would stand by him and give him his utmost aid in defending the Constitution and crushing treason and rebellion. Nobly did Douglas redeem that pledge. His whole life, and death in short, he devoted to the well-known declaration that there could now be but two parties, patriots and traitors. Had he lived he would have sustained the President with all the vigor and energy peculiar to his character."

It will not be forgotten that at the Inauguration Mr. DOUGLAS entered with Mrs. LINCOLN upon his arm, and remained near her and the President during the evening. Indeed the relations of Mr. DOUGLAS and Mr. LINCOLN until his death, showed his sincerity in the following remark, which Mr. ARNOLD reports:

"Here I will pause a moment to state a most remarkable suggestion made by Douglas in January, 1861. The statement is furnished to me by General C. R. Stewart, New York, a gentleman of the highest respectability:

"Douglas was asked by Colonel Stewart (who was making a New Year's call on Mr. Douglas), What will be the result of the efforts of Jefferson Davis and his associates to divide the Union? Douglas replied, 'The Southern men are mistaken if they think that in the border States to their scheme of secession, and I am too fearful they will succeed. If they do succeed, there will be the most terrible civil war the world has ever seen, lasting for years. Virginia will become a charnel-house; but the end will be the triumph of the Union. And the loss of their first efforts will be to take possession of this capital to give them popular sanction. I will never consent to taking it; the North will rise en masse to defend it; but it will be necessary for hospitals; the Government will be used for the sick and wounded; and even this house and the Smithsonia block over the Douglas Hospital are to be devoted to that purpose before the end of the war.' General Stewart inquired 'What justification is there for all this?' Douglas replied, 'There is no justification, but my pretense of say. If they will remain in the Union, I will go as far as the Constitution will allow to maintain their rights, and I do not doubt but a majority of Congress will do the same. But,' said he, rising on his feet and accentuating the sentence, 'Any State attempt to secede from this Union without further cause, I am in favor of their having just so much land as will just cover their territory, as they can hold at the point of the bayonet, and no more.'"

UNDER WHICH?

ON the 28th day of March in this year, Mr. BRYANT, a Democratic member of the New York Legislature, supported in an able speech the resolution that a constitutional amendment abolishing slavery would be the truest conciliation, securing a peaceful and perpetual Union. Against the vote of the majority of the Democrats in the country, followed him, declaring that this atrocious rebellion of Aristocracy against the Democracy can be finally suppressed only by destroying slavery, and that Free Labor is the only corner-stone of an enduring Democratic government.

The same day Messrs. Chanler, Herrick, Ganson, Pruyn, Steele, and other Democratic representatives in Congress voted against a constitutional amendment abolishing slavery; and, of course, in favor of retaining the system which has brought the war upon the country, and which must always keep between the two sections who prevent a true and hearty and untroubled Union.

Between these gentlemen let the country and mankind judge. "We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal," said the father of Democracy in this country. Who are his true descendants? who are Democrats? the men who ask to abolish slavery constitutionally, or those who refuse to abolish it at all?

What a dreary and terrible record is the simple fact of the ayes and nays upon this resolution in Congress, for the children of those who shall hereafter see that their fathers voted for the continuance of a system which the human heart and the enlightened mind of mankind instinctively repudiates and scorns.

THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.

THE Metropolitan Sanitary Fair will be opened by the time this paper reaches many of our readers. It will be one of the great events in the history of New York, and we advise all who can easily come not to fail to spend at least a day at the Fair. We begin in this number of the paper a series of illustrations, with copious accounts of whatever is most remarkable and interesting among the wonders and charms of the exhibition. We are glad in this way to convey to our brethren in the field some adequate representation of a spectacle of which they will hear so much, and which is inspired by sympathy with them. They will see in this Fair, and in all that have been and will yet be held, an the great majority of the State of New York in favor of their voting while still on duty, that they are not forgotten by their friends at home; but that the good cause of the country is served by all its faithful children wherever they may be.

Besides the general contributions to the funds of the Fair, persons engaged in almost every department of business in New York and its environs have made special contributions. Below we present a list of those made up to March 25 by the "Book Trade." Hereafter, when the lists are made up, we propose to put on record the amounts of the contributions from other trades and professions.

WILLIAM K. CONNERY, (Cash).....	$100
D. APPLETON & CO.,.....	1000
HARPER & BROTHERS,.....	1000
IVISON, PHINNEY, BLAKEMAN, & CO.,.....	500
E. WALKER & SON,.....	400
SCRIBNER & CO.,.....	250
G. P. PUTNAM,.....	250
GEORGE W. CARLETON,.....	250
A. D. F. RANDOLPH,.....	250
AMERICAN NEWS CO.,.....	200
GEORGE B. LINCOLN,.....	200
OAKLEY & MASON,.....	200
D. VAN NOSTRAND,.....	200
COLLINS & BROTHER,.....	200
THOMAS NELSON & SON,.....	200
J. G. GOODENOW,.....	200
IRON & TREADWELL,.....	200
T. W. STRONG,.....	200
C. T. HOPKINS,.....	175
ROBERT CARTER & BROTHERS,.....	250
JAMES B. KIRKER,.....	150
SHELDON & CO.,.....	250
G. F. PETTENGILL,.....	150
FRANK HOLME],.....	300
HENRY HOLT,.....
JOHN WILEY,.....	100
HENRY FRANCIS,.....	100
F. A. BRADY,.....	100
JAMES O'KANE,.....	100
G. P. PUTNAM & CO.,.....	100
HOYT & BROWN,.....	100
A. S. BARNES & BURR,.....	100
MASON BROTHERS,.....	100
WALTER LOW,.....	175
MORTON, DILLARD, & HOUGH,.....
C. H. GREEN,.....	60
MILLER & RICHARD,.....	50
JAMES MILLER,.....	50
GEORGE W. ALEXANDER,.....	50
J. H. TINGLEY,.....	50
W. H. KERR & CO.,.....	50
T. H. PETLEY,.....	25
WILLIAM RADDE,.....	25
ANDREW HOWARD,.....	25
F. W. CHRISTERN,.....	25
S. N. PERRY,.....	20
M. A. MACFARLAND (Cash).....	10
E. GOODENOUGH,.....	10
THEO. BERNARD,.....	10
HILTS & ALEXANDER,.....	10
C. SHEPARD,.....	10
G. G. WYMAN,.....	20
JOHN PETRY,.....	10
DION THOMAS,.....	10
C. A. MILLER,.....	10
A. TURNBULL (Cash),.....	5
H. S. PERRINE,.....	5
R. J. RICHARDSON,.....	5

GENERAL BURNSIDE AND COLORED TROOPS.

MR. BURNS has sent off its second regiment of colored volunteers. On the morning of Easter Sunday, standing upon the deck of the ship in which they sailed, Mr. Burns made the speech in presenting the flags, and the brave men went to join the great army of the American Union and Liberty. They are to be under the General Burnside's Ninth Army Corps; and that officer, whose name is dear to every loyal heart in the land, wrote a letter of regret that his operative official engagements in New England prevented his being present at the presentation. In this letter, addressed to JONATHAN STEVENS, President of the Union League Club, he says:

"It may not be amiss for me to mention a remark made by me at a banquet given at the Astor House in November, 1861, to the officers of the Fifty Massachusetts Regiment, then on recruiting service, preparatory to their starting on our North Carolina expedition. It was on the morning that we received Mr. DIX's success on the coast of South Carolina. I said it should be a source of congratulation to the loyal press that the judgment has been made by Union troops upon that portion of the Southern coast where slavery existed to the maximum extent. Henceforth no assertion has been made by the traitors that there is a necessity for us to have slavery for its support. It is true that the institution can be used by them as a powerful auxiliary, and now we still have an element of doubt in determining whether or not this force can not be turned to the same account; and it is clearly the duty of every General in the field to neutralize or turn to his own account every force that he may find himself confronted with by the enemy, whether it be active or latent."

"And now, Sir, your committee have requested me to say to the same rudimentary regiment, a regiment, the rank and file of which are colored men, many of whom were, on November, 1861, subjected to labor tool for traitors in arms, or doing other work which could not be performed by them but for the purpose of striking at the Government that had done them naught but good."

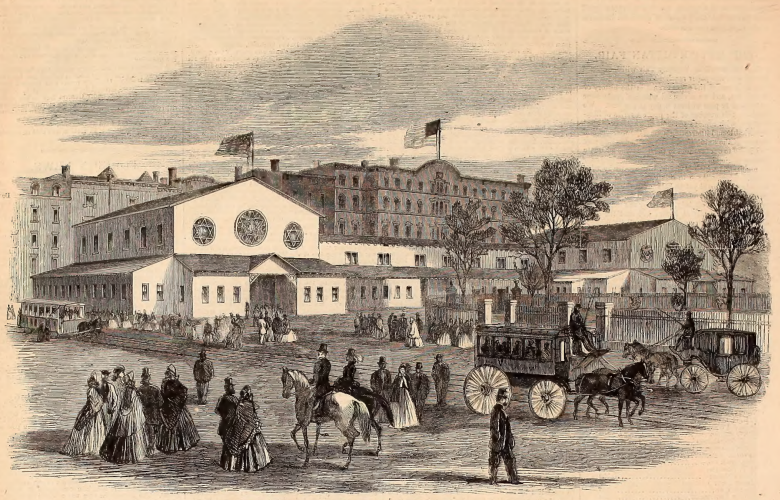
"I am sorry that I can not be with you to-morrow. Very sincerely your friend,

"A. E. BURNSIDE, Major-General."

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—March 23. A resolution was passed appropriating $20,000 for the expenses of the Committee on the Conduct of the War.——A bill to establish a dock and Navy Yard at Cairo, Illinois, was introduced.——The bill in relation to deserters, distranchising all those who may refuse to return to the service on a call of the President, was taken up. Mr. WILSON, in favoring the bill, said there were probably 40,000 deserters from the army, of whom 8000 or 10,000 were in Canada and the British Provinces. Some of these were said to be anxious to return, and he argued that opportunity should be given them by a call from the President. Senator HALE, of Maine, opposed promptly returning. No vote was taken.——Mr. Powell's bill to prevent military interfer. nce in State elections was taken up and Mr. Howard spoke at length against its passage. The bill, he asserted, was unnecessary, and was a violation of the Constitution, which gives to Congress no authority over the regulation of State elections except in the first fall to prevent military interference in elections came up as unfinished business. The bill was passed by a party vote, and was followed by Mr. Saulsbury, who insisted upon the necessity for a law of this nature in order to secure the rights of the citizen.——March 28. Mr. Trumbull introduced a bill to repeal a bill passed by the State of Michigan to the Municipal, for the passage of armed and well-equipped vessels. Also introduced a bill to enable the Indian refugees to return to their homes in the Indian Territory.——Mr. Harlan reported a bill to extend to him the benefit of the act to appropriate the proceeds of the public land to certain purposes—passed in 1862. The bill gives authority to devote the income accruing to the support of the Asylum connected with the University of Indiana. A bill authorizing the Postmaster-General to contract for carrying the mails overland from Atchison, in Kansas, to Pike's Peak, California, appropriating a million dollars annually. The limited time was fixed at ten days each month, and twenty days during four months. The Pacific Railroad, as fast as completed, will take the place of the overland mail service.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill to prevent military interference in elections. Mr. Saulsbury supported the bill in a speech of considerable length, and was followed by Mr. Sherman, who said he was in favor of the principle involved in the bill, but that he would not vote for it. Mr. Trumbull spoke in support of the bill, arguing that the prohibition of attempts to control elections is manifestly wise and proper, and that the amendment of the Constitution is explicitly given to Congress to enforce it



METROPOLITAN FAIR BUILDINGS, ON UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

THE UNITED STATES SANITARY COMMISSION.

THE United States Sanitary Commission, originated in that spirit of sympathy with the army which has so embellished with bright deeds the darkest pages of our civil conflict with rebellion, was never more necessary, as an ameliorating agency, than at this time, when all along the lines preparations are making for active hostilities, which will probably involve greater suffering and loss than any previous campaign. It is the appreciation, no doubt, of this possibility that is now impelling the people, every where, to unprecedented efforts in aid of its funds. The entire money receipts of the Commission, since its organization, probably exceed $2,000,000, while the money value of the supplies poured in by the women of the country can not be less than $9,000,000. The management of the Commission has been, from the start, most economical and efficient. Rev. Dr. BELLOWS, who is at its head, and whose portrait we give on this page, has given himself to this work with an industry and zealous self-sacrifice which the whole country will applaud long after the tumult and the sufferings of war have ceased from the land. Dr. BELLOWS is about to proceed to California for the purpose of laboring there in aid of the Commission, in place of the late Rev. THOMAS STARR KING, whose death left it without any special agent in that rich field.

THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.

The Metropolitan Fair, in aid of this Commission, will undoubtedly surpass, in the magnitude of its display and the aggregate of results, all previous efforts in a similar direction. The preparations for the Fair have been made on the most extended scale, exhibiting the most liberal purpose on the part of the managers, who manifestly feel that the people will equal, in their generous giving, the largest possible expectations. Contributions are still flowing in from all parts of the world, Americans every where seeming to rejoice at the opportunity to show their sympathy with the men who are defending the cause of liberty and good government. Nor are contributions from abroad confined to Americans away from home. Thousands of foreigners, who look to America as the beacon-light of the nations, are sending their offerings in most liberal profusion. The steamship Germania, which arrived from Hamburg on the 24th ult., brought many costly gifts from the citizens of Hamburg, who, notwithstanding the excitement consequent on the Schleswig-Holstein war, find time to give practical expression to their interest in our brave soldiers. From Italy, Switzerland, and other far lands, similar contributions have been received, and in the Fair will appear as so many testimonies of the sincerity of foreign sympathy with the loyal men of the nation in their struggle with barbarism.

General JOHN A. DIX, whose portrait we give on this page, is President of the Fair Association. It is fit that a soldier should thus head the movement of the great city of New York in behalf of the army upon which the future of the nation so largely depends. General DIX is now nearly sixty-six years of age, and during his life has filled many positions of honor and trust, but in none has he proved himself a sturdier patriot and truer man than in this contest, on the peace side of which he now appears as the head of our Fair.

MAJOR-GENERAL JOHN A. DIX, PRESIDENT OF THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

REV. HENRY W. BELLOWS, D.D., PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SANITARY COMMISSION.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

Our Heroines
IN THE PARLOR
ON THE BATTLE-FIELD
AT THE FAIR
IN THE HOSPITAL
SAVING THE FLAG

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER XI.

SENDS AN IDYL.

THE Marcouilles began to talk scandal about J. B. Constant and his too precocious stable-girl and chambermaid, for she now officiated in both capacities, still preserving her ascendency as mistress of the horse, but having a lad to assist her. The mayor warned the inn-keeper against the whispering tongues that speak truth." M. le Curé insisted that, for morality's sake, the girl should be sent away.

"She is fit for something better than a fille d'auberge," he represented.

"Granted, monsieur," returned Constant. "But how is her condition to be bettered?"

"The good sisters at Avignon," hinted the ecclesiastic.

Constant shook his head.

"The good sisters," he remarked, "would, I much fear, be powerless in turning Valérie into a Sister of Charity or a village schoolmistress, and what more could they do with her? It is a pity that she was not sent to them, my good sir. Then they might have had the credit of her sudden conversion. For the rest, it is no affair of mine—an inn-keeper may have a servant, maid. She is a capital servant, and her aunt is there to watch over her."

It was the curate's turn to shake his head. "Mon ami," he said, "that poor ignorant old woman is a mere baby in the hands of that girl. She can no longer be chastised. The time for the cord and the thong is past."

"I should like to see any one attempting to lay a hand on Valérie," exclaimed the inn-keeper, with a sudden start, and clenching his fists. "Ma parole d'honneur! I would exterminate him."

"There is no fear of such an eventuality," the cure returned; "nor," he continued, in gentle reproof, "is there any need for a fallible human creature to speak of 'extermination'—a terrible power, reserved for the Omnipotence."

"I ask your pardon, M. le Curé."

"To granted, my friend. But, nevertheless, get rid of this young creature; if you don't, malicious tongues will continue to wag, and evil will follow."

Constant was privately of the priest's opinion, but certain reasons, at which the intelligent reader may have already hazarded a surmise, rendered him reluctant to follow the friendly advice of his pastor. He passed several days in perplexity, anxiously revolving plans in his mind for modifying the condition of his too handsome servant, when Valérie brought the matter to a solution by a voluntary suggestion that she should be sent to school for a couple of years.

"I'm tired of tending horses," she said. "My hands are not yet quite spoiled, but six months more of stable-work will make them as hard as buffalo-skin. I am tired of being ignorant. It is as much as I can do to read the big printed letters under the four lilies on the sign-post. I can't write at all. I want to be able to read the Gazette de France, and to play the piano, to paint pictures, and write letters, and be a lady."

"Vastly well, mademoiselle," replied Constant, with subdued irony. "But who, pray, is to pay for your education?"

"That is your affair, not mine. If you choose to send me to school it will be better for you. If you won't, I will get a livret from M. le Maire, and seek a servant's place at Avignon. My aunt will give me permission, and you must give me a character."

The argument was unanswerable. Baptiste had prospered at the "Lily of France," and could well afford the outlay. For the sum of a thousand francs a-year, a boarding establishment for demoiselles at Lyons consented to receive Mademoiselle Valérie Simon—for that was the real name of her mother—for twelve months, and construct her in all the accomplishments. The girl had refused point-blank to enter a conventual school, and had selected Lyons in preference to Avignon, because, she said, she did not wish to meet any of those people of Marcouilles by chance in the streets in the town. J. B. Constant agreed that in this particular she was in the right; nor, when the left Marcouille-le-Gency, did he make trouble for her aunt. He was about to proceed to school to receive a polite education; he merely said that a married sister of his, who kept a hotel at Lyons, had agreed to receive Valérie, and to look after her morals, and make her useful. La Bergluse did not care to contradict this statement. Perhaps she was never enlightened as to the real state of the case. It truth she had rather been covered from the state of bewilderment into which the sudden metamorphosis of the little grubby good-for-nothing she had adopted had thrown her. So, when Valérie went away La Bergluse looked upon her withdrawal very much in the light of a relief from an embarrassing position.

But why this concealment on the part of Jean Baptiste? Why should the upright J. B. Constant think Lyons preferable to Avignon? Why should he have given an untruthful account of the girl's change of life? The always intelligent reader will have little difficulty in answering these questions.

You, the hearty-headed, down-looking innkeeper was savagely in love with Valérie. I say savagely, because there was something morose and ferocious in the passion that devoured him. He could not bear the girl to be out of his sight. He chafed at the necessity of parting with her, even for a time, and for her benefit. He went into silent rages at her caprice, her arrogance, her cool assumption of superiority over him—all ignorant as she was, and next door to a castaway. She loathed and longed to rend in pieces all whom she talked or laughed with. He was madly jealous of her, mere child as she was.

He had no bad designs toward Valérie. At this time he was an honest man, and there was not much harm about J. B. Constant. He had never lored till now. His only hope was that the girl would be grateful to him. His wish was that she should grow up a beautiful and accomplished woman, and become his wife.

"I will leave this wretched little hole of a village," he said to himself in his day dreams. "I have made some money and can borrow more. I will take a grand hotel in Paris—in the English quarter—in the Faubourg St. Honoré. Valérie will be my wife. She will sit in the bureau in a black satin robe, and with a gold chain round her neck, and keep the accounts. The waiters will bow, and call her Madame la Patronne. She will go to mass at St. Roch or the Madeleine. On Sundays we will dine here and there, go to St. Cloud, and to the opera, and the theatres. Jean Baptiste, my boy, you shall be envied; you shall be happy. So be thought, and so he dreamed. Poor fellow!

"If she should be ungrateful," he soon sometimes whispered. The fear of her ingratitude was a black phantom not to be contured away. "No, no," he said; "not," he would mutter. "If she refuses to love me I will kill her."

When Valérie had been six months at school, J. B. Constant undertook a journey to Lyons to see her. He found her more beautiful than before. In accomplishments, too, her progress was wonderful; that she had already distanced many girls who had been in the establishment a year with the advantages of previous education—three and four years, and that, if she were allowed to remain with her two years instead of one, she would answer to the call, and, fitted to move in the very highest circles. She did not know that J. B. Constant was a mere village inn-keeper. He had written to her as an served nobleman, and at Lyons he put on his best clothes and his best manners.

There was one touch of bitterness in the hurried account the governess gave of her pupil. Mademoiselle, she said, was a young person difficult to manage. She would not endure reproof. She would not hear reason. Her temper was terrible. She had, within a few months, twelve hundred francs a year instead of a thousand, and you must make allowances for Mademoiselle's temper. "Poor child!" said J. B. child! she never knew her mother, and in early years was unkindly treated." The schoolmistress was a sagacious woman, and comprehending instructress, and for the extra stipend agreed to say nothing more about Valérie's indisposition to hear reason.

When J. B. Constant had an interview with his protegee, the governess being present, she received him with a stately courtesy, and eyes decurely cast down; but when Madame du Verger discreetly left them together, she accosted the inn-keeper with a familiarity which even was half redolent of the old rough manners of the stable-girl, and the chambermaid.

"Ah, oh, mon homme!" she cried. "What do you think of me now? Am I grown? Are my hands coarse? Do I talk like a fishwife?"

As he was going away, full of love and hope, though slightly discomfited by this reception:

"And La Bergluse, the old hag who used to flog me—is she dead?"

Your aunt is alive, Valérie," Constant said, with a reproachful look.

"I am sorry for it. Such old witches ought to die. I hate her, and will pay her out for all the blows she has given me. Besides, when I go into the world she will disgrace me. To have an aunt who has worked in the fields! To have an aunt who was a servant! Mon Dieu! Quoi! Mon homme, you must take care that you never leave Marcouille." And so, with the stately courtesy, in accordance diamond with her hard and bitter talk, the girl left him.

She never saw him again. The old woman was by no means despondent under this neglect. She merely muttered that Valérie would be a proud-looking piece of goods presented to Mr. le Préfet, and then went on working harder than ever. To Jean Baptiste the exemplary pensioner at Madame du Verger's was a source of intolerable regularity once a month. Her letters always began "Mon bon ami," as if this young puss-cat had been an empress, and Monsieur the president of a republic. Madame du Verger had suggested "mon cher bienfaiteur," but Valérie had refused point-blank to be connected to Mr. le Préfet, and then went on working harder than ever. To Jean Baptiste the exemplary pensioner at Madame du Verger's was a source of intolerable regularity once a month. Her letters always began "Mon bon ami," as if this young puss-cat had been an empress, and Monsieur the president of a republic. Madame du Verger had suggested "mon cher bienfaiteur," but Valérie had refused point-blank to be connected to Mr. le Préfet, and then went on working harder than ever. She wrote in a bold flowing hand: her letters contained a few words of the conventional progressions—of the books she had read, and the accomplishments she had mastered—and ended, "Valérie Sabine." Madame du Verger's governess had hinted that "votre toujours reconnaissante Valérie," would be a slightly graceful acknowledgment of the kindness which Constant was paying for her education, but Mademoiselle Sabine very scornfully replied, "I shall do what I like, and I am not to be bribed."

She left Lyons when she was on the verge of eighteen. This was in 1828. Constant was fearful of her coming back to Marcouille yet a while. He wished her to return only once, as his wife, to astound those who had known her in her poverty and her degradation, and then quit the place forever. His plan was that she should enter as a pupil in Paris, remain for another year or fifteen months—not as a pupil, but as a boarder—and that she should then make him happy. He unfolded this scheme to her, in the parlor of the school, on the day when he went to fetch her away. He avowed his love, and said, with a smile, that it was pure and honorable.

The girl laughed at him. "What a fairy tale!" she cried. "Beauty and the Beast over again! Yes, monsieur, I am Beauty, and you are the Beast, with your sleepy eyes, and your great black head like a primeval forest. Ah! you thought a pretty grape-vine was growing for you. Ah! you thought you had but to shake the tree and the pear would fall into your mouth."

"Valérie," the inn-keeper humbly expostulated, "I implore you not to speak in that mocking spirit. Have you no heart, no love, no eyes."

"I know nothing about it," sneered Valérie. "What should I, a school-girl of eighteen, know about devotion? I have not taught in this school. It was forbidden."

Again, and with the eloquence which sincerity alone can give, Constant spoke, to the most tongue-tied man—he pressed his suit.

"Don't be absurd," was Valérie's reply. "You will bore me. I know nothing of love. I have only seen one stupid provincial town, an tired of schools, whether as pupil or boarder. I have lost sight of books, and want to see the world. I must be free and independent. I don't want to tie myself for life to a stupid old man with a head like a bear. Do you wish to ruin my career?"

"Your career," repeated Constant, in sorrowful surprise. "Valérie, what would your career have been but for me? Ah! do not be ungrateful!"

"Do not exaggerate your claims to my gratitude. It appears you had your own purpose to serve in educating me—you merely picked up what had been abandoned. The next passer-by might have done the same, and not have been a village publican. He does not so blind as you take them to be. Somebody would have been sure to have discovered the pearl on the dunghill, sooner or later."

So she reasoned with the pitiless logic of an ungrateful heart. There was no moving or softening her. She would not listen to reason, fitted to move in the very highest circles. She did not know that J. B. Constant was a mere village inn-keeper. She had written to him as a served noblemen, and at Lyons he put on his best clothes and his best manners.

There was one touch of bitterness in the hurried account the governess gave of her pupil. Mademoiselle, she said, was a young person difficult to manage. She would not endure reproof. She would not hear reason. Her temper was terrible. She had, within a few months, twelve hundred francs a year instead of a thousand, and you must make allowances for Mademoiselle's temper. "Poor child!" said J. B. child! she never knew her mother, and in early years was unkindly treated." The schoolmistress was a sagacious woman, and comprehending instructress, and for the extra stipend agreed to say nothing more about Valérie's indisposition to hear reason.

When J. B. Constant had an interview with his protegee, the governess being present, she received him with a stately courtesy, and eyes decurely cast down; but when Madame du Verger discreetly left them together, she accosted the inn-keeper with a familiarity which even was half redolent of the old rough manners of the stable-girl, and the chambermaid.

"Ah, oh, mon homme!" she cried. "What do you think of me now? Am I grown? Are my hands coarse? Do I talk like a fishwife?"

As he was going away, full of love and hope, though slightly discomfited by this reception:

"And La Bergluse, the old hag who used to flog me—is she dead?"

Your aunt is alive, Valérie," Constant said, with a reproachful look.

"I am sorry for it. Such old witches ought to die. I hate her, and will pay her out for all the blows she has given me. Besides, when I go into the world she will disgrace me. To have an aunt who has worked in the fields! To have an aunt who was a servant! Mon Dieu! Quoi! Mon homme, you must take care that you never leave Marcouille." And so, with the stately courtesy, in accordance diamond with her hard and bitter talk, the girl left him.

She never saw him again. The old woman was by no means despondent under this neglect. She merely muttered that Valérie would be a proud-looking piece of goods presented to Mr. le Préfet, and then went on working harder than ever. To Jean Baptiste the exemplary pensioner at Madame du Verger's was a source of intolerable regularity once a month. Her letters always began "Mon bon ami," as if this young puss-cat had been an empress, and Monsieur the president of a republic. Madame du Verger had suggested "mon cher bienfaiteur," but Valérie had refused point-blank to be connected to Mr. le Préfet, and then went on working harder than ever. She wrote in a bold flowing hand: her letters contained a few words of the conventional progressions—of the books she had read, and the accomplishments she had mastered—and ended, "Valérie Sabine." Madame du Verger's governess had hinted that "votre toujours reconnaissante Valérie," would be a slightly graceful acknowledgment of the kindness which Constant was paying for her education, but Mademoiselle Sabine very scornfully replied, "I shall do what I like, and I am not to be bribed."

She left Lyons when she was on the verge of eighteen. This was in 1828. Constant was fearful of her coming back to Marcouille yet a while. He wished her to return only once, as his wife, to astound those who had known her in her poverty and her degradation, and then quit the place forever. His plan was that she should enter as a pupil in Paris, remain for another year or fifteen months—not as a pupil, but as a boarder—and that she should then make those great eyes, monsieur! What large eyes you have, grandmamma!"

Constant abandoned farther conflict. "I am ready to accompany you to the coach-office," he said, with dolorous meekness.

"There is a good little wolf. You'll make Little Red Riding Hood quite fond of you if you go on in that way.

Je pourrais m'enseurcher,
Je pourrais m'enseurcher,
Je pourrais m'enseurcher.

Do you know the chanson? The master didn't teach it me. The girls used to sing it in the dormitory under the bed-clothes. Ah! we learn a great deal at school."

"I am ready, Valérie."

"And I too. It is agreed upon, n'est-ce pas, that you leave me in peace for six months?"

"For six months I will not trouble you. I will not even write to you if you are averse to receiving communications from me. What I have to say shall be said through my sister."

"No, that looks like surveillance. Write to me: I will answer you."

A gleam of passionate satisfaction shot across Constant's face.

"I will write," he said, his heart palpitating.

"But no long letters. No love, or nonsense of that kind. Does your son love me. Now I am ready. Nay, perhaps you would like to give me a hand."

She held out her hand to him as she spoke. She had never greeted him that slight favor before. It was not a small hand. She was a grandiose woman; but it was very white, and soft, and pretty. Who, to look upon it, could have thought that it had drawn country wine for bumpkins and stable-boys, or wielded a pitchfork to toss stable-litter about?

He accompanied her to the coach-office, put her in her seat, wrapped her up in warm shawls and rugs, placed a basket full of provisions at wine by her side, and would have pressed if not kissed her hand once more, even in the open coach-yard, but she waved him off already:

"Enough of that. You nearly bit my hand just now, besides all but wrenching it from the wrist. Au revoir, mon homme. Good-bye, mon Good-by, and go back as fast as ever you can to your stupid old Marcouille-le-Gency. Adieu! Love for you, life for me!" And the diligence clattered and rumbled away Parisward, and Jean Baptiste Constant was left disconsolate.

He could not make up his mind to return to the village. He wandered about Lyons for two whole days, and, at last, found Madame du Verger, asking her futile questions. The schoolmistress knew well enough what ailed him. He had been a regular customer, and had conversed with him. The girl had left some inconsiderable fal-lals behind her—a gauze scarf, a pair of pens of glasses, a volume of music. These were given up to him, and he treasured them with burning avidity. Then he went to the theatre, and tried to listen to an opera; but the voluptuous voice of Valérie rose high above the braying and tinkling of trumpet and cymbal, and the flourishes of the singers. He went from café to café, and drank deep—which was not his custom; but Valérie's scornful accents were audible, to him, above the clattering of the dominos, and the jangling of the coffee-cups, the cries of "Trois-six!" "A qui le point?" and the shrill "Vlà monsieur!" of the waiters. Valérie's face was in the air, and Valérie's form wreathed itself out from the thready vapor of the cigars. At last he went back to Marcouille, to see after the wants of the billiard players, and to scold the postillions and stable-boys. But, days after that, he went back to Avignon, and instructed the same notary of whom he had purchased the good-will of the "Lilies of France" to advertise the Lilies again for immediate disposal.

It was a month before any reasonable offer was made. A person in a customer was found, in the person of an Avignon linen-draper, who thought that country air would do him good. After much haggling, he agreed to give forty thousand francs for the premises and good-will—a considerable sum on the which Constant had paid for them; but, by his energy and perseverance, he had much improved the property. He had returned to his native town to inform the approaching departure, but begged her to keep it, for a while, a secret from Valérie. He wished to be in Paris without the girl's knowledge. The first assessor in the post-office promised, in case any letters arrived for him, with the Paris post-mark, to redirect them to him. They did arrive, plays in the diligence, and in two days' time found himself in the French capital.

When he got to Paris he wrote to his sister, telling her to meet him at an obscure furnished lodgings in the Marais. The Hôtel-Beaumarais lies in the Rue Sainte Saluze, in one of the noisest, liveliest quarters of the brawling capital. All night long, carriages come and brought her budget of news with her. Valérie was more beautiful than ever. She had engaged a music-master, and was delighted. She was passionately fond of the Opera and the theatres; but her temper was insupportable; and I for mes will not say upon "good wine" alone. Beaumelhausen. "Jean Baptiste, my brother, you are a simple. Turn this girl out of doors if she won't have you. Nothing but the meanness of some honest woman whose temper does not turn the world topsy-turvy, and who knows how to love and obey a good, kind man."

J. B. Constant was far too much in love to see the force of this argument. He implored his sister to wait until the expiration of the stipulated twelve months—or at least of six, when he would see Valérie, and come to some new understanding with her. Meanwhile, faithful to his promise of leaving Valérie in peace, he waited patiently for the letter from Avignon to bring him that long-expected re-directed letter with the Paris Post-mark. But it never came. At his instigation, Madame Hummelhausen gently hinted to Valérie that it might be as well to write a line to her brother.

"A quoi bon," retorted the girl, "that my letter should travel five hundred leagues backward and forward to no purpose? Do you think I am an idiot? The great dolt is here. Yes; Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant has been prowling about Paris these two months engaged in the highly dignified occupation of playing the spy over a young girl. Since when have you kept spies in your family, madame? Does Monsieur Constant belong to the Police? I have caught sight of him hundreds of times, on the Boulevards, in the Luxembourg and Tuileries gardens, at the theatres, at church even. What does he mean by this insolence, in dogging my footsteps? Why does he not come here, like an honest man, and tell me what he wants?"

"He promised to leave you in peace for six months," pleaded Madame Hummelhausen.

"Let him come now. I wish to see him. I have something to say to him."

He went to her, his heart bounding with the hope that she had relented; that she would say to him—"Constant, I have teased you long enough. I am changed. I am grateful. I am yours." But the nether mill-stone still held its place in her breast. She received him with the old mockery—the old disdain. Her imbecility had gotten a Parisian gloss upon it, and would have been horrible, had she not looked more beautiful than ever.

"I am sick of being a pensioner," she said; "of being told that I ought to be grateful for this and for that. I want to be free, and to earn my own livelihood."

She had the hardihood to tell Jean Baptiste that she wished to go on the stage. "I have a mission for the dramatic career," she said, with lofty conceit. "And you should rather see me a student of the Conservatory, as a singer, or a dancer, or an actress; but that I abhor discipline, and before a week was over I should be doubtedly box the ears of one of the professors. Imagine boxing the ears of Monsieur Cherubini! No; I must go where I can give complete vent of receiving them."

She unfolded her plans. She had made acquaintance, through the Hummelhausens, with one Duruflée, who had a kind of private theatre for dramatic aspirants at the Batignolles. She would pay him a premium—the funds, of course, to be furnished by M. Constant—and would practise among his pupils for a few months. Then Duruflée would get for her, for a commission, an engagement at one of the petty Boulevard theatres. Thence to the Gaîté, thence to the Porte St. Martin, thence to the Théâtre-Francaise.

J. B. Constant understood, and shuddered, but he did not demur.

"And after that?" he asked.

"After that we shall see," she replied; "after that, if you are very, very quiet, and well behaved, the ice may melt. How many years did he ton thumme Jacob work for Laban's daughter?"

Twas the first inkling of a promise she had ever given him. It threw him into an ecstasy of joy. He agreed to all she asked. Madame Hummelhausen was glad to be rid of her troublesome charge, but said little to encourage her brother's hopes. "She has no heart, not an atom," she persisted. J. B. Constant would not listen to his sister. He would not have lent an ear, where Valérie was concerned, to Solomon, or to Nathan the Wise, or to the seven sagest men of antiquity. What could those last-named wiseacres have done beyond advising him to go to sea in a bowl? —and was he not already launched upon the ocean in a skiff quite as frail?

Valérie chose to have apartments of her own at the Batignolles, close to M. Duruflée's private theatre. This worthy had been a chorister at the Académie till he lost his voice, when he hurdled de claque, or head of a band of hired applauders at the theatre. He lost his place through venality—for there is a code of honor even among claqueurs—being detected in taking money from two rival actresses who were to make their debut on the same night. The claque applauded both. The two affirmatives make a negative: neither triumphed. The rivals were furious; the direction scandalized, and Duruflée had his congé. After such a Fontainebleau (if to be kicked out can be considered an abdication) there was clearly no Elba for the unfortunate. Impotent of the claque but in the Rue de Jérusalem. He became affiliated to the police; then he served the Tribunal of Commerce as one of its bailiffs; then he went on the Bourse, and, by assiduous speculation for a fall, contrived to win some ten thousand francs in hard cash money in the world. His dramatic propensities were still strong within him, and he invested his gains in the organization of a theatre for young Eléves at the Batignolles. He was very fat, good-natured, clever, gross, humorous—vain, and a consummate blackguard. He still kept up his connection with the Préfecture. His instantaneous thirst for absinthe made him one of the rare monstrosities—a drunken Frenchman; but he was a better spy when intoxicated than when sober.

In the spring of 1831, Valérie, being then in her twenty-first year, made her first appearance, at the Folies Dramatiques. She came out in some sanguinolent drama of the then new romantic school. She represented some great wicked lady covered with gold and diamonds, and created a furore. The wickedness she was enabled to portray with rare fidelity from her accurate observation of human nature. It was J. B. Constant who found the diamonds. The money he had received from the sale of the estate at Marouile was all gone by this time. He was taking up money at a hundred per cent. from the usurers. He had borrowed from his sister all she could afford to lend, and more; but Valérie wanted diamonds, real diamonds—she laughed paste to scorn—and she had them. If she had ordered J. B. Constant to forge the name of M. Jacques Lafitte to bills to the extent of five hundred thousand francs with a certainty of the court of assizes, the pillory, and the galleys, in perpetuity, commencing from the very next day, he would have obeyed her.

She was soon engaged at a handsome salary at the Porte St. Martin. Her wish was attained. She was free and independent; but she did not offer to give back to J. B. Constant the money he had spent on her education, or the diamonds he had bought and paid for. On the contrary, she wanted more diamonds from him, and she had them. J. B. Constant was living, in usurers' clutches, at the rate of fifty thousand francs a year, and his clothes were growing shabby, and he dined every day at a restaurant for thirty-sous.

Valérie played in a piece in which she had to wear a robe of flame-colored satin, and to show a considerable amount of leg. Paris was entranced. A sculptor modeled the legs in wax, and they were exhibited, under a glass case, in the Galerie Colbert, for the public to marvel at. Her portrait was lithographed. Bérenger went to see her. His criticism was concise, but not complimentary. "Vous n'êtes pas Lisette," he murmured, and walked out of the box. The romancier, M. Honoré de Balzac, then beginning to make his way in literature, looked at her long and anxiously through his opera-glass. "She is a branch in petticoats," he said, "and will occupy Paris."

Up to this time she seemed impregnable. Diamonds, bouquets, and fascinating Jean Constant, were laid at her feet. She took them up and laughed in the face of the donors. She had no heart, and could not love. She took every thing—songs, dedications, money, jewels, bouquets, love-letters, compliments, and gave nothing in return but a smile, a bow, and sometimes a cold blood. She was Venus rising from the ice.

At this time there was a great English dandy in Paris by the name of Crosbie. This dandy had got it into their heads that he was "Sir Francois Blunt, Baronet;" but, titled or untitled, they persisted in thinking him to be the wealthiest and most sumptuous of nabobs. He lived in great state, on a first floor in the Rue de la Madeleine. He associated with all the English aristocracy resident in or visiting Paris. He played Écarté, at Frascati and elsewhere. He had his bagnionres at the little thentres. He gave his dinners at Véfour's, or the Rocher de Cancale; he had a box at every one of the Italian Opera. He drove a four-in-hand—a vehicle the Parisians had never set eyes upon before—a tilbricket, a phaeton, a barouche, every other thing you please. He was a capital French scholar, and a great favorite in women's society. He could give the best supper in Paris, and could hold the ace of hearts thrown up in the air with a pistol-shot at fifty paces.

He was a great admirer. He went to the Porte St. Martin to see the actress after whom all Paris was flocking. It is not very difficult for an Englishman, who is civilized and of comfortable, and is supposed to be rich, to procure an introduction to a French actress. He was in a short time permitted to make his obeisance to Valérie. There was a quiet mocking manner about him, a kind of impertinence which at first pleased her infinitely.

"At all events," she said, with an engaging candor to Constant, "this new admirer is amusing. He now granted him in the forenoon, and in her boudoir. "He is neither imbecile like the young Frenchmen who have been here, nor ridiculous like the English dandies. If he is insolent, he is witty. If he can give sharp strabs, he can take them. He pleases me. I like him."

She believed in the stories of his rank and wealth, although she often said that it mattered little to her whether he were a prince or a duke, or was a prince or a rag-picker. She determined, on New-Year's Day 1832, to give a grand supper in a garden on the new site of apartments she had taken in the Chaussée d'Antin. Half the fashionable roués and actresses in Paris were to be there. She was good enough to ask Constant to come, and also to condescend to borrow from him a thousand francs to defray the expenses of the entertainment. Constant gave her the money, and found himself at four in the afternoon of the day on which the party was to come off with exactly twenty-seven francs in his pocket. He was proceeding to dine at his usual thirty-two sous restaurant, when he met, in the Palais Comédie, when he was arrested on two bills of exchange for ten thousand francs each, held by one Rabal Escrivet, a Jew, and was carried off to a debtors' prison.

Soon other judgments crowded in upon him and he found himself responsible for a total of sixty thousand francs. As a foreigner he was liable to be in prison for a long term of years, his creditors being merely bound to pay a sum of ninepence halfpenny per diem for his maintenance. Most fortunately for him, Valérie incarcerated a month before he found succor. The Hummelhausens, who were worthy people, would gladly have "exercised hospitality" upon him, to say, would have sold their next stock, cock and barrel—to help their suffering kinsman, but there was no such thing. An uncle of the Constants happened to die at Ticino, leaving an inheritance of two hundred thousand francs. The use of this, for her life, he left to his wife, who was eighty-two years of age and bedridden. At her death a hundred thousand francs were to come to Jean Baptiste, and sixty thousand to the Hummelhausens. The prisoner found no difficulty in selling his reversion for a hundred and twenty thousand francs. He paid the usurers in full, and left the whitewashed walls comparatively a rich man.

On the day of his enlargement, and while he was treating to a vin d'honneur some of the gentleman captives in the establishment, one of the turnkeys brought him a copy of the National, asking him if he would like to look at it. The ex-inn-keeper's eye fell on a paragraph, in which it was stated among the Paris lions that one of the "illustrations dramatiques," or theatrical curiosities of the day, "is belle Madamoiselle Valérie," had suddenly broken her engagement with the direction of the Porte St. Martin, and winged her way to the "Vaudeville" land of Albion, where she was "incessantly" to be united in marriage to the Honorable Sir Francis Blunt, Baronet, and member of the Upper Chamber.

Jean Baptiste Constant rushed out of prison to his sister. He took places in a coach-and-four a dozen times since his arrest, not asking for money, but craving a word of sympathy. She had not cast him one. His devotion to her was as servile, so boundlike, that he had never murmured. Madame Hummelhausen had no good news to tell him. The paragraph in the National was true. At least she had Valérie's word for its genuineness. The girl had written her a cool letter from Dover, saying that she had been married there, and that she was now Mildi Blunt. "As for Constant," she went on, "you will say to him that I am very sorry for him, but that he bored me." This was his dismissal; but he could not go for all he had done to train and nurture this beautiful devil. She had studied another man. She was sorry for Constant; but he bored her. He was her yawn; she was her amusement, and the other man could amuse her. There was an end of the sky!

Constant came, trembling, to plead Madame Hummelhausen to give him the letter. "I shall go to England," he said.

"To kill Sir Blunt?" asked his sister, terrified.

"We are not in the Middle Ages. Lucrece Borgia is at home very well on the stage, but will not do in private life. I have been in England before. I have served in noble families. I have the most flattering testimonials. I will serve noble families again. Good-by, my good sister. Perhaps some day I shall have the high honor to send letters to Mildi Blunt's cook."

Mildi Blunt's honey-moon was soon over. The honey-moon of a young lady's speedily followed by the beswax-moon, and that by the gall-and-wormwood-moon. Valérie discovered that she had wedded a scoundrel with no means, and who was over head and ears in debt. Blunt sold her so plainly, and that it was useless to think of going to Paris, that she remained at Dover to Ostend, and thence went to Brussels, where, Valérie's Paris prestige being thick upon her, she again found an engagement. This resulted, outraged, beaten her. He had lived in luxury upon her earnings. She gave birth in Brussels, to a little daughter—in the very same year, to a child—a girl—who was christened Lily by the English chaplain resident in the Belgian capital. The day after the performance of the ceremony Blunt deserted his wife, but took his child and his child's nurse with him. He had come to the conclusion that in Brussels at this time, who lent him money, and talked to him of his brilliant prospects, but whose name was a secret from Mildi. The acquaintance accompanied him to England, and there became his valet de chambre, and his valet's name was Jean Baptiste Constant, Swiss by birth.

After her abandonment by her legitimate protector, the actress was more than ever Valérie. She was other more varied than reputable. She did not bewail the loss of her infant much. She was more in a state of infancy herself. She went back to Paris, and purged her contempt toward the direction of the Porte St. Martin by payment of a certain sum of money which everybody paid for her. Somebody had become necessary now; and when she grew tired of something, she could "abandonner." But, although her beauty was now in its zenith, her prestige as an actress was gone. Some other "illustration dramatique," who showed more of her legs, wore a grass-green tunic, and had more diamonds than she, was now holding Paris with admiration. "I will never sink to the secondhorses."

Madame Hummelhausen and her husband, going, one summer, from 1834, to Franconi's Circus, saw Valérie, in a riding-habit and a man's hat, cavorting on a beautiful brown mare of the Anglo-Norman unsurpassed ring. Stout Monsieur Adolphe Franconi followed her obsequiously, not so much as venturing to crack his whip. Mighty was the bow, supple were his jokes during her performance. She was doing the haute école, and the haute école was becoming a greater celebrity than Valérie of the Porte St. Martin. She was the rage. When she came to England in the summer of '35, and to Astley's Theatre, Mr. Ducrow gladly paid her thirty guineas a week salary. She came again in '37 at higher wages; but she always wanted money, and more money.

This was the lady who was good enough to patronize the Count Batiglione. Constant had found her there, and, walking straight up to her in the box, accosted her. She would have struck him, but there was something in his look that cowed her. He was no longer humble—no longer her slave.

He held out her hand.

"Let us sign a treaty. Allons! Let us be friends!"

So, without pens or paper, and on the basis of this protocol, the treaty was signed, and they were friends, after a fashion. And now that I have kept Monsieur J. B. Constant so long with his hand on the handle of the She-Wolf's door, he may surely turn it and go in.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

FIFE should be cultivated as a fine art, for it is altogether a fine thing. Who ever knew a funny man to be a bad one? On the contrary, is he not, nine times out of ten, generous, humane, social, and good? He may be ill—Punch is a great thing. It smooths the rough pieces of life; makes the disposition flow, and may as a maiden's kiss; scatters sunshine and flowers wherever it goes: gives the world a round, jolly countenance; makes all the girls as pretty as June roses, and mankind one of the best fellows out. We go in for fun. The man who won't cultivate it must keep a good half-rod between us.

In bull-fight days, a blacksmith who was rearing a bull pup handed his old father to get on all fours to imitate the bull. The cadaw pupil planted the old man by the nose. The son, disregarding parental snorting, exclaimed, "Hold it! Be the making of the pup!" Bosh! Bother, bear it; it'll be the making of the pup!"

A SINGULARLY FLORAL WHIM.

This world is full of whims and ways,
Without, there would be no music.
While love and virtue work for praise
From that blest woe called Wessus.
Men's hearts without will thus rejoice in,
The glass, no face look grim in,
Nor will the wise be wise, but for the good,
The whim of whims called WORDS.

PROVERBS FROM THE OLDEN TIME.

Wide ears and a short tongue.
Beauty dies and fashion flies.
The danger past, and God forgotten.
Riches are but the keepers of the wealth.
Withers are wrak, yes they bind other wrak.
Who spits against Heaven it falls in his face.
There are none poor but such as God disavows.
Who wrote on love he wrote all that he can be written.
Little chicks kindle the fire, but great ones put it out.
Use what you have, and you shall have more and more.
He that hath a head of wax must not walk in the sun.
He who hath but three spans to get warm in the grave.
Love of lads and fire of chats is soon in and soon out.
Put when the good man's out the house is more than the fire of another's.
The best remedy against ill is mad is much ground between both.
There is one good wife in the country, and every man thinks he hath her.
Put when he hath her he should shall not have it to spend when he would.
Wives should have an eagle's eye, a lion's heart, and a lady's hand.
Love is the cradle, and the hand on the distaff, is the sign of a good housewife.
Put when the good man's from home the good wife's table is soon spread.
Put a mutual connection between great wealth and happiness; but great poverty and misery are nearly related. Though wish work's enough, content won't withstand woe.

WEAR A SMILE.—You can, if you will, live among beautiful scenes and sparkling waters, or in the mire, surrounded by fogs and frogs. The amount of happiness which you may enjoy depends much upon your will. Wear a smiling face, a kind heart, and speak pleasant words. On the other hand, be your face ever so fair, if you wear a frown, a sneer, you can make hundreds unhappy almost beyond endurance. Which will you do? Wear pleasant countenances, let joy beam in your eyes, and love on your forehead. There is no place on earth where a pleasant face, a kind eye or a pleasant deed, and you may feel it at night when you rest, and in the morning when you rise, and through the day when about your daily business.

Some bugaboo, upon entering a house, blew out the lights. He was made sensible, in a different parte of the room. One took it to heart sadly, and exclaimed, "Oh, I'm undone—I'm undone!" Upon which the other replied, "Then come and undo me."

TO AGRICULTURISTS.—In consequence of 1864 being Leap-year, we may be sure it will go off with a good spring.

BOTH ARE RIGHT.—TOM Moore compared love to a potato, "because it shoots from the eyes," "or rather," exclaimed Byron, "because it becomes better by paring."

A STANZA FOR SPRING.

See, now reminded by the weather,
The birds work hard their nests to feather;
And thus, to make sweet music, they
Till thou hast feathered well thy nest.

A doctor in Scotland made a nerve and bone all-healing salve, and wrote to his friend and pupil Dr. Arnott a little with it. He first cut off his dog's tail and applied some of the salve to the stump. A new tail grew immediately. He then applied some to the piece of tail which he cut off, and a new dog grew out. He did not know which dog was which.

COVENTRY PATMORE'S WIFE (to Husband).—"Oh, Clever Coventry, I've been thinking—a quantity of money! What a fast piece of meat we had of you!"

CLEVER.—"Was there, Serena? I couldn't help that, you know, Mum; but, howsomever, the very first fat bullock I do kill without my bone I'll let you have the whole for nothing."

Some people are never contented. After having all their wishes for years made manifest, and their brains knocked out, they will actually go to law and try to get further damages.

What country of Europe should have the largest capital? Ireland; because its capital is always Dublin (doubling).

Why do the recriminations of married couples resemble the sound of waves on the shore?—Because they are murmurs of the tide.

The most laconic will on record is that of a man who died in 1791. It runs thus:—"I owe little, I give to a great deal—the rest I give to the poor."

If you would find a great many faults, be on the look out. If you would find them in still greater abundance, be on the look to.

A reservoir of water for the supply of a city is like a Christian—it never works without a pipe in its mouth.

An old gentleman of great experience says he is never satisfied—that a lady understands a kiss unless he has it from her own mouth.

The young lady who gives herself away loses her self-possession.

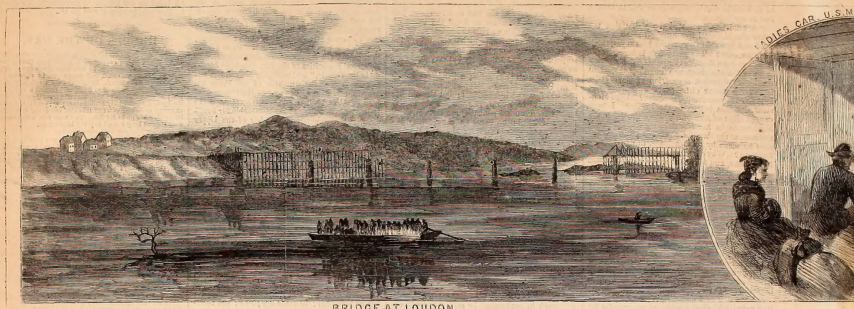
Is a person apt to warmth," as the red-hot poker said to the clown when he inadvertently put it in his pocket.

A new tenor is engaged to appear with the promising name of Heller.

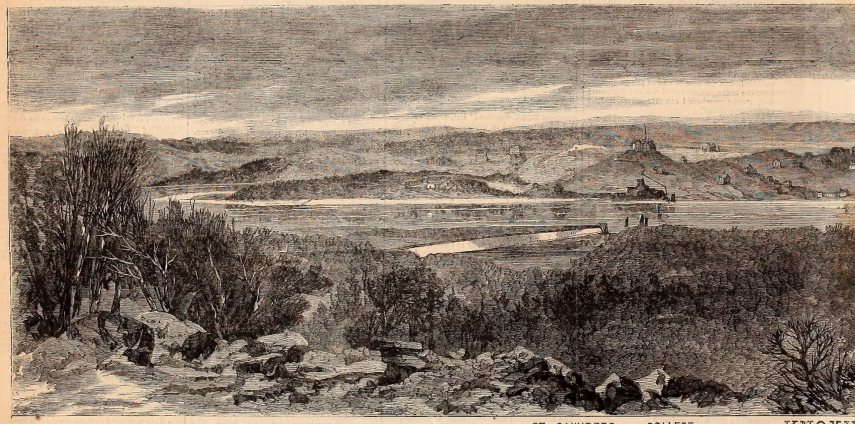
Which of the feathered tribe lifts the heaviest weight? The crane.

The best preventive of fie is to buy your clothing at a slop-shop.

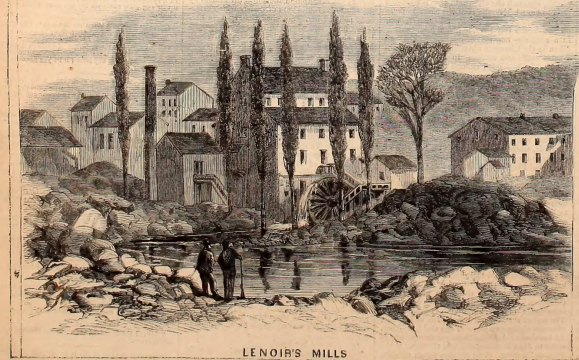
The young lady that kept her word has found it very useful.



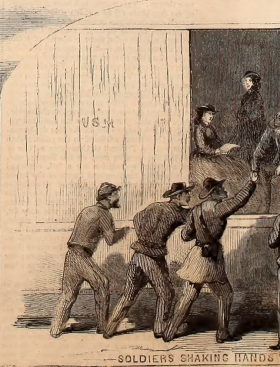
BRIDGE AT LOUDON



FT. SAUNDERS. COLLEGE. KNOXV



LENOIR'S MILLS



—SOLDIERS SHAKING HANDS

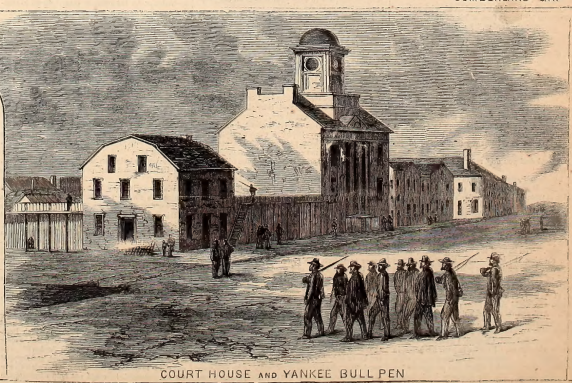
THE WAR IN TENNESSEE—VIEWS AT K

OFFICE BROWNLOWS KNOXVILLE WHIG

ILLE, FROM KEITH'S HEIGHTS.

CUMBERLAND GAP

WITH PARSON BROWNLOW.



COURT HOUSE AND YANKEE BULL PEN

KNOXVILLE AND VICINITY.—[SEE PAGE 234.]

VIEWS ABOUT KNOXVILLE.

THE sketches of KNOXVILLE AND VICINITY given on pages 232 and 233, obtained during a recent visit by our artist, T. R. DAVIS, will give an idea of the place and some of its surroundings. Sketching from the fortifications on Keith's Hill, or, as the places is known to the inhabitants, Big Bluff, the country seems a vast map, upon which a pretty little city is prominent, environed by rifle-pits, which at each knoll and hill become fortifications of size and strength. Far in the distance, to the right, the Cumberland Gap is just distinguishable. In the town the Union office and the "Yankee Bull Pen" (which is the name of the prison known as the seem objects of interest. The prison known as the "Yankee Bull Pen" was for a long time the abode of the brave East Tennessean who by some unfortunate enough to stray into the hands of the rebels. Now it is used as a residence, kept entirely for the accommodation of the old proprietors.

Near the prison is the Court-house, now a hospital, over which DR. BARRETT has control.

Near Knoxville is a picturesque place known as Lenoir's Mills, looking almost New England-like, so neat and thrifty it is, with quiet cottages and busy mills. The place has its local interest, having been the scene of frequent skirmishes between the loyal and rebel inhabitants of the country about.

From another illustration it will be seen that the military roads are not provided with special accommodations for ladies. As a consequence, ladies in that country generally stay at home.

In illustration of another of our views, MR. DAVIS writes: "Returning from Chattanooga, Parson BROWNLOW was on the train on his way to the 'land of plenty.' The soldiers at the different stopping-places crowded around the cars, generally introducing themselves with, 'Parson, I'm an Indiana boy, or 'I'm from Illinois,' or whatever other State might be represented in the ranks.' They had all heard of him, and were glad to see the leading Union man of East Tennessee."

The railroad bridge over the Tennessee River at London is rapidly rebuilding. This will complete the line of road between Knoxville and Chattanooga. At the present time passengers and stores are ferried over, and so the former have a quiet walk of a mile or more.

OUR LITTLE FRIEND.

OUR little friend is in this grave;
The sod is green with April rain.
We weep for him. What would we have?
To him at least our loss is gain.

We lose the hope of future years—
Our child, our gallant little man;
But he, the future's pain and fears,
We will be happy if we can.

Or, if not happy, still, content
His peace should solace our despair.
God takes away the gem He lent
To set it with the star-beams fair.

AT THE FAIR.

I.

"WELL, Jordan!"

"Well, Charley!"

"Ain't you going?"

"Going where?"

"Going to the Fair," laughing at the chime of words.

Jordan settled himself comfortably in his seat again.

"No, Charley, my boy, I'm not going to the Fair. But you are, I perceive. How you are got up though! I should never dare to travel in such brilliant company."

"Oh, bother!" and Charley glanced, with an honest blush on his honest face, at his dandy clothes.

"I say, Charley, Jordan," he quickly resumed, "you ought to go."

"Oh, hang fairs, Charley. I hate 'em. A fellow's driven to the death to buy a lot of rubbish. I'd rather by half contribute at the beginning what I can afford. That's my way. The buying is yours. So I'll be a young swell there, Charley. I can fancy you beset by sixteen of those girls at once, with sixteen different propositions to buy. But you'll think it fine fun. They'll delude you into buying any thing; dolls, and pin-cushions, and prayer-books. It will be all the same to you; and you'll bestow them with the grace and discretion of a young prince. I really envy that way of yours, Charley."

"A good deal you do," returned Charley, disheartenedly.

"I do though, really. I'm in earnest, Charley."

Charley Duganne looked in surprise at his companion at this; but Ellery Jordan's face was serious. There was a sarcastic play of the lips, no laughing twinkle to the eyes, of which honest Charley Duganne was always somewhat in dread.

"Yes, I really do envy you, Charley. You come to the pleasant turns as easily as I do the disagreeable ones." You extract the sweet from life, while I am chewing the bitter cud. Every body likes you, every body smiles upon you; and all from that 'way' of yours, and it's the way of good heart, Charley, so I can't learn it. And all the time you look at me and think 'In such a smart fellow—that I know the world and a heap of things that you don't. And you think I look down from my wise height sometimes and laugh at you when you come in with your Fair-pleasures, and in a stunning new suit. Instead of that, Charley, I look at you with genuine admiration. I rejoice in your freshness, in your capacity for enjoyment of all sweet and simple pleasure. Don't think I regard you as any the less of a man for it. It's the generous boy's heart, Charley, that's in it all, and that makes me like the man who owns it. I am sure for me, Charley, I am a great hulking fellow," whom nobody cares very much about. I never carry sunshine with me, I never win hearts or smiles. I'm a gloomy, sullen, surly wretch, who perpetually gets the wrong side of things, and blunders at every step. There, Charley, go your ways, go your ways, and don't mistake me any more."

He turned with his old laugh to his book, a little disconcerted at the earnestness into which he had been betrayed; but Charley, touched and bewildered out of his sensee, stammered thanks and praises and deprecation in a breath. But Ellery Jordan had had enough of the topic.

"Go your ways, Charley, go your ways," was all he said to him now; and at last Charley was wise enough to go. Jordan heard him whistling Il se-gerie par ecser fikes, as he ran down the stairs.

"That's the last you'll ever see of Charley," and Jordan smiled, then looked thoughtful and a little sad, then lost himself in his book. What do you think could interest him, this cynic this "gloomy, sullen, surly fellow?" A child's voice, crying. He had been conscious of it a good while before he felt called upon to look for the cause. He knew very well who it was. His landlady's little boy, Bobby Greene. But the grieved sobs continued so long he flung down his book and opened the door.

"Bobby!"

Bobby, surprised, held his peace for a moment.

"What's the matter, Bobby?"

The little figure, sitting on the first stair discolate, burst out afresh at this sign of interest. Resolute, burst out afresh and sobs his questioner discovered that somebody, some nefarious uncle Dick or other, had failed to carry out a promise to take Bobby to the Fair. It was a heart-breaking thing to Bobby. In vain Jordan, moved to pity, took the urchin and his woes into the little room with treasures that would at another time have made him hilarious. The boy hushed his crying, indeed he mastered it after a brave efforts under his amusement, but, as Jordan thought, "it was no go." Bobby had set his mind upon the Fair, the Fair, of which wonderful stories had fired his youthful imagination. Jordan looked at the small face, expressing the depth of childish melancholy.

"So our uncle this child can be happy, because of some hungering after what is denied," he mused. "But it is easy to keep one's self unhappy, and that is pity." He mused a moment longer, scowling over a new thought. Presently he gave a sigh that was nearly a groan.

"Bobby, go and ask your mother to wash off these tears, and tell her I take you to the Fair."

The reformation of the boy's face was not into a bevy of smiles was a very swift one. Bobby ran off shouting with delight, while Jordan rose to effect some changes in his toilet. His face was set with the so full of delightful anticipation as Bobby's. He elevated his eyebrows and shrugged his shoulders as he thought of what he was about to inflict upon himself, for he hated Fairs, you know.

And this was a Soldiers' Fair. "How selfish of him!" you exclaim. Wait. He acknowledged that he preferred contributing what he could afford. And he did. But he has confessed to take that place. United States bills to the country. Long ago he gave himself. This is Captain Jordan, of the Hundred and something New York Volunteers. He is home on a furlough, not of simple ease and relaxation, but of necessity. Waiting for that right arm to get strength enough to wield a weapon. And leaving him here dressing for the Fair, let the story of the Fair run backward for a little in part.

II.

"SOPHY, you must help us in the post-office. We have counted upon you. Tell her it's her duty, MRS. Hamlyn, to do the work that lies nearest. And what lies nearer, for nobody's at home but you, and writes so beautifully as Sophy. Oh, Sophy, how can you refuse? Yes, yes, I know you've written to Captain Jordan—know he's down in Virginia, too—but now at the very last to refuse to write the addresses! You never expected to take that place, Sophy, Sophy, when you pour ears in all our preparations?"

If Sophy Hamlyn was firm, IDA JOCELYN was hopeful and persistent. Again and again she presented the case in its most piteous aspects to Sophy, and at last departed with the field.

"I shall come in to-morrow night again, and shall expect you to have yielded, Sophy; you know it all is a personal affair with me. I never have accepted my post but for the belief that you would be with me."

Sophy did not reply. She kept on a cool steely face until Ida had departed, then she went up to her room and "had a good cry."

If I tell you what she cried about, I am afraid you will think my Sophy a very empty-headed young lady; but have patience with her, and with her history, and do not condemn her at first.

Sophy Hamlyn cried these vexed and bitter tears because—because she had promised to write. To look about the pretty room, the curtains, the carpet, the vases. You note all the indications of a luxurious home, and you see that it is the generally morning attire, and your lip curls disdainfully, and you comment severely upon the weak and wicked exaggeration of a young girl who can not see the meaning of every thing at a first glance. Ida Jocelyn would tell you that Mrs. Hamlyn were not rich. That Mr. Hamlyn failed a few years ago, and has never been fortunate since. "Not actually poor, you know," Ida would go on to say; "only that Hamlyn can't give parties and keep a carriage, and Sophy don't have so much money to spend as she used."

This was all Ida Jocelyn knew about it. And this was all any body knew about it, but the Hamlyns themselves. Sophy had been in the room, and had such a nice time with Sophy in that "homelike house," as she called it, she did not perceive that Mrs. Hamlyn looked tired and worn. She did not know how very, very simply they lived; how much they pinched and struggled to be genteel, and she pretty room just as she had always seen them, looking fresh and bright—for the years of change were for her—for the Hamlyns. And since that time, when Mr. Hamlyn went down, there had been no outward difference in their surroundings. Why should there have been? The house itself was Mrs. Hamlyn's; and there were no rare pictures, no statues of great value to sell. So they kept on amidst the same curtains, and chairs, and carpets, but with only a single servant in the whole house. Mrs. Hamlyn had turned, and pieced, and re-made, with her own hands and Sophy's help, dress after dress, until now poor Sophy's wardrobe furnished nothing further; and Sophy, sitting there alone in her room after Ida Jocelyn's departure, cried vexed and bitter tears over all the vexation and bitterness of this constant planning and pinching; over the fact that she had kept from accepting a post which could not but look alluring to her.

So you see that although Sophy cried because she had "promised to write," it was not so much for the one dress lacking for the one occasion, but for the constant wear and tear of that poverty which hides its hideous cares, its humiliating annoyances, its anxieties, its petty details behind a smiling mask. It was for the necessity that laid the limits so narrowly that a new dress even was impossible at this time. It was for all this that the bitter, vexed tears came, though the one dress was the one final drop in the cup that set it overflowing.

Poor little Sophy! she was but human. Brave little Sophy, too, as you would say, if you knew how she kept repinings out of sight, and almost out of mind, and patiently herself much handiwork unknown before, and shewed a bright face always to father, and mother, and those three boys. But it was hard for poor little Fair. Oh! if she could discover some way to make her only silk dress presentable! It was of no use, no use.

"Ah me!" she said, very wearily. "I am too proud, I suppose, but I can not go shabby. I shouldn't enjoy it. I should have a sense of unfitness about me."

She lies there with her tears, thinking, thinking of the many pleasures which Ida Jocelyn, never dreaming of such thinking, makes her brilliant plans. Ah, Ida Jocelyn, there are many such homes, where such economy is kept, and where you never suspect the many, many cares that hide beneath those who have known better days. Not that they are many; but from Ida's delicate taste, keep up the fair semblance! In there a much sadder suggestion in this? But Sophy sees in a new through her tears.

"There's Aunt Martha's things!" And with this suggestion she slips from the couch, and dashes out of the room up to the dark corner of the attic, where lies that long-forgotten chest of relics, nearly a century old. The cavalry-sword has kept them back, and Sophy drags out a lilac brocade, with glistening eyes. It is so great flourishing pattern, and a trim design of sprays; not at all extravagant, Sophy thinks, and the color suited to her fair hair. Only three days before the evening of the Fair. Sophy is a busy worker; not at all unwilling peace and safety, but the life of liberty, was at stake in the conflict whose murmurs filled all the air and made the land vocal with its cries. Ever since Ned had gone to the field—Ned, the dear brother who shared with her every confidence, rambled with her in dewy twilights in the same familiar walks, read with her the same books, and sang the songs she taught him—her thought had grown constantly more serious and earnest; through every scene of gayety her eyes looked to fields ghastly and ruined, to camps crowded with grim paraphernalia of war, to homes with chairs empty and the feet of orphans pattering on the floor. But society around her was not touched with this mood: its days were full of merriment, its nights radiant with pleasure. Indeed, more than once she had been rebuked for what her associates termed her "sickly sentimentality," her gloomy abstraction in the presence of the grandest social events; and so at last, dissatisfied with herself, at issue with society about her, she had retired to her home and stolen down to Aunt Debby's, yearning for rest and refuge, longing to study and enjoy the Real and the True, with her own heart only as interpreter of Nature's honest teachings.

Captain James Hunt, lying at his tent-door in the June twilight, looking listlessly down upon the Rappahannock flowing silently below him, was suddenly saluted with,

"Here's a letter for you, Captain, right from Riverton."

Captain Hunt was upon his feet in a moment.

"A letter for me! Who can it be from? I haven't, so far as I know, a correspondent in all the world."

Captain Hunt, let it be stated here, was an orphan, standing alone in the world, without father or sister, or any near kith or kin. From boyhood he had fought his own battle, and had fought it bravely, with the manliness of soul. One friend he had, a woman, many years his senior, who, for his father's sake—who one had been very dear to her heart—had more than once exhibited a direct interest in his welfare; but with all her kindness there was a strain in her character—a bravery, and something he could not define—which had made intimate communion impossible; thus leaving him, after all, self-dependent. When the war opened, he was blown over the land he was a tutor in the village academy, respected by all, but without any close companionship; and with the first gun, putting by his books, he went to the one person whose counsel alone he had ever sought, and said, "The flag, Aunt Debby"—as she was called by all who knew her—"has been insulted; war is upon the land; ought I not to go to the field?" The answer was, "Yes, for true soul will follow true soul, and in a week he was at the Capital, enrolled in the Union service, prepared to do and die in its behalf, more happy than he had ever been before. Since, now he felt he had a sublime work to do—an object to accomplish whose grandeur all history must celebrate.

But this June evening he had been saving to himself, "This is a lonely life I am leading, with no intimate friendships, no close attachments; with none in whom to confide—it is a very, very dreary life"!

Just then came the announcement, "Here's a letter for you, Captain, right from Riverton."

You may be sure his nimble fingers were not long in clutching the secret of the precious paper.

"I have felt anxious, James"—so the letter ran on—"that you should know I have not forgotten you, though you have been so long away out of our sight. It has been a joy to me that, thus far, no harm has touched you. I think of you very often, James, hard as my nature is; and, in my poor way, pray that you may still be kept from all evil. And thinking of you so much, my fingers could not keep still, and so I have made you a few homely handkerchiefs, and the like, which I shall send soon after this. Maybe you will find them useful in some time to come; and if they only help you to remember the lonely 'Aunt Debby'—much as it may surprise you to have me say it—I shall be content."

"The dear, good old soul!" said Captain James to himself, brushing a tear from his eye, "who would have thought that, under the rough exterior of her demeanor, there was such a wealth of thoughtfulness and love! Well, what's this?"

Turning the leaf, Captain James had discovered at the top of the page this: "P.S. Lucy Larcom, my nephew's niece, has just come down from the city to stay with me a while. She bids me send her 'duty'—for every soldier, she says, is her friend."

Captain Hunt folded his letter and put it away with a puzzled, wistful look in his face.

"Lucy Larcom—I have heard of her. A handsome, brilliant girl, rich and cultivated, shining in drawing-rooms, at operas and fêtes. And yet"—it seemed to please the Captain to add the "and yet"—"she must have a true woman's heart if, among all her gayeties, she has found time to think of the poor fellows in the field."

The Captain somehow thought very often that day, and during after-days, of the postscript to Aunt Debby's letter. Coming just at the moment when a sense of loneliness oppressed and saddened him, the thought it suggested that mayhap, sometime, he would find comfort and joy in the love of a true heart, stirred new depths of feeling, started a whole brood of pleasing fancies, and dissipated all the despondency which was gathering upon him.

But all these thoughts were put effectually to flight at last. Suddenly the intelligence came that Lee's army had moved into Pennsylvania, and, this almost immediately, was followed by an order for the whole Federal force to march in pursuit.

Captain Hunt, restless and uneasy, hailed with delight the prospect of active duty. He might, at least, if he could do nothing for the cause, escape the troubling thoughts which were pressing upon him, filling his mind with images that might, after all, prove only the delusion and a cheat.

His corps was the first to break camp. The march was a long and weary one, but it had its glimpses of rest, its anticipations of battle and victory; and at last, on the morning of the 1st of July, the corps came in sight of Gettysburg, around which the enemy were already concentrating.

Soon the battle began, rolling along the hills in fiery grandeur. Captain Hunt pressed into it with an enthusiasm amounting to rapture. At first success was ours at every point; the enemy could not resist the impetuous assaults of our gallant troops, and gave way in confusion and disorder. But soon reinforcements came upon the scene; the enemy hastily re-formed their lines, and again met the pursuers with solid front, slowly driving back our jaded columns toward Seminary Ridge. Captain Hunt, always the first in assault, was among the last in retiring. Fearless to a fault, the white heat of battle could never appall him. He was the impersonation of possible defeat was full of pain. So mouldy, almost recklessly, he followed the retreating column, as, sweeping along the plain, it began to climb the height and take fresh position.

But his mood found complete change before the crest was finally reached. Swinging forward to suddenly came upon a lieutenant lying, with a gaping wound in his side, just at the foot of the hill, and vainly endeavoring to stanch the blood flowing from the hurt. In the confusion the young officer —he did not seem to be over twenty—had apparently been forgotten, and was lying just where he fell in the first advance. There was something in the look of the wounded man which instantly attracted Captain Hunt; and gathering him in his arms, with the aid of a soldier he carried him at once out of danger, where, with the help of a surgeon of the other, he hurried away for his regimental surgeon, whom finding, he dispatched at once to the relief of the stranger.

Meanwhile the battle was growing hot again. The Eleventh Corps, coming to Reynolds's help, the enemy had again been driven from the field over the disputed ground, and we held once more the line first occupied. But the conflict was desperate and terrible. Nor was victory immediately ours. A second time our line was driven back; Reynolds had fallen; reserves were hurried forward to repair in the fiery storm; and so at last, bleeding, broken, sad, the brave columns again retired, and at four o'clock in the afternoon found themselves safely in a position where they did not be driven.

But Captain Hunt not this time accompany his command. In the midst of the struggle, while bravely leading his men, he was struck down by a brace of rebel bullets, and for an hour lay helpless and bleeding where he fell. Then, finding a surgeon who was passing over the field, he had been carried to a hospital, and there, while his regiment was establishing itself in the early evening in its new position, was suffering the amputation of an arm, hopelessly shattered by the bullets which some quivering sharp-shooter had sent him as an autograph.

The battles of Gettysburg were ended; the news of our great victory had flashed over the land like a new bestowal on our dear country's heart; the dead on the battle-field had been buried, and the wounded gathered up and cared for, and in thousands of homes waiting and watching with anxiety and fear, yearned through day and night for intelligence of absent dear ones, or smitten households, mourning over the sacrifice that blanked them that the foe had been vanquished, and his pride broken in the dust.

In the town cottage of Aunt Debby at Riverton, hung as it was with summer bloom, two such waiting hearts questioned every passing hour for news from the field. Lucy Larcom was continually asking of Ned; what fate had been his; was he yet alive, or lying among the dead on the field, his face ghastly under the bleaching sun? And Aunt Debby and Captain Hunt, Aunt Debby wondered with sad thought, and had been for days, if the brave young man again with his old smile to the brown cottage, again that sweet gaze on, scattering only on his nameless grave where faded leaves.

With such thoughts as these, full of pain, sharper at times than any knife, keener than any sabre-thrust, these two waiting ones sat through the drifting days.

"Out of the deepest dark rises the starriest hope," Sir Lucy's mockery, which sometimes was a true prophet, found full relief one bright afternoon, when a lieutenant, with bronzed face and faded uniform, alighted very excitedly at the cottage door, and, walking hastily up the graveled walk, caught the old lady in his arms, and before she knew it had half smothered her with kisses.

"Why, Ned!"

That was all the dear woman found voice, at first, to say in reply to this sudden, full-hearted salutation. She had been taken completely by surprise, having no guess of the coming inquiries of Lucy, with no shadow now upon her heart, became happy again as a heart's presence could make her.

Ned, so he told them, had been wounded in the first day's fight; had been carried to a house in Gettysburg, where his wounds were dressed; he remained for a fortnight, when he was permitted to go home. There he spent some days, when, knowing Lucy's pleasant home, he had come down into the country, hoping there to recuperate fully his wasted energies in the few days that yet remained to him of his furlough.

Happy as Aunt Debby was to have Ned under her eye, safe from the battle's rage, her anxiety as to Captain Hunt did not abate. At times she felt inclined, woman as she was, to go in quest of him; and this reflection told her how well most probably he as a soldier labor, and how he must wait and watch, hoping that in some way her solicitude would ultimately bring to her ear the Captain himself should never again be restored to her sight.

It was Commencement-day at Riverton Academy. In the old church, poplar-guarded, on the village green a crowd of anxious fathers, mothers, sisters, and friends were assembled in honor of the occasion. Lucy Larcom, with brother Ned at her side, was there, scores of manly eyes fixed upon her pleasant face. The scene was not so brilliant nor the company as fashionable as at many entertainments Lucy had attended, but she enjoyed it more the less for that, it had the spice of simplicity and novelty; the people around her were something better than artificial shams; the inspiration of the place was robust and practical; and, besides, was not Ned sharing with her the pleasure of the hour?

The exercises of the forenoon concluded, then, during a little pause, there was a sudden stir at the door, and a moment after an officer with a single arm, his face pale, and step weak and faltering, was seen moving up the aisle, half-supported by the village squire and a white-haired deacon known as Ned Riverton. Suddenly, as the pale face came in full view, a great shout rose from the assembly, and rolling into a cheer, was again and again repeated, every one brightening, almost every hand fluttering "a cambric welcome" to the coming one.

For one in that assembly the pale face of the unarmed officer, standing silent and shocked in the presence of the tempest of applause, had a peculiar fascination. Lucy Larcom knew from whose face she remembered, instantaneously, another scene—a scene of carnage and death, with streams of bloodstained lifted above with wounded, flowing through it; with heaps of dead lying far and near; with the flash of guns running along the hills, and the roll of musketry and bugle throbbing gravely through the battle-pauses; and chief of all, himself lying helpless with that face bending over him, and the tongue of angel powerless now, whispering words of cheer and comfort.

He saw in the wounded man whom all Riverton saluted with a cheer the soldier on the field of Gettysburg.

"Who is it, Ned?" said Lucy Larcom, when the cheering for a moment ceased.

Ned did not for a moment answer. Then he said, his eyes moistening as he spoke,

"I can not tell you his name, sis, but I can do something better than that: whatever his name, he is the man who saved your brother's life on that dreadful day."

Ned had told both aunt and sister the story of his rescue, and Lucy's understanding now Ned's interest in the stranger, felt her own heart warming toward him with gratitude.

Just then a voice was heard in faint, fluttering accents, speaking words of thanks for the unexpected welcome. "I left an arm at Gettysburg," the weak voice said, "I think more than compensates for the loss." And then the voice was still again, but another broke the silence with, "Let us thank God that Captain Hunt is safe again;" and then every head was bowed, and the old clergyman of the village gave utterance to the heart's gratitude of every heart.

Captain Hunt! Here was a wonderful revelation for Ned and his sister. This brave fellow who had saved his life was the same about whom good Aunt Debby was so troubling her thought. He did not wonder now that all Riverton rose to do him honor—he was honoring himself to lie at his feet, the brave, manly, modest hero.

At last the programme was ended; the crowd slowly dividing, Lucy and brother Ned Larcom, unable longer to restrain his impatience, pressed impetuously forward, caught the empty sleeve in his grasp, and, with tears in his eyes, vehemently exclaimed,

"The arm that was in that sleeve, Captain Hunt, carried me from death unto life; I am here to offer you my own in return for the deed that is, in life's coming days."

Then, in a moment, in a voice more subdued, "You remember it, Sir?"

Captain Hunt looked into the eager face; and he did remember.

How Ned Larcom thereupon narrated to all within hearing the story of his rescue at Gettysburg; how brave Captain Hunt blushed like a girl at hearing his praises so generously sounded; how Ned told him of Aunt Debby's alarm for his safety, and how he carried him away at last to the brown cottage, supporting him with his remaining arm as he went—all this is recorded in the history of that day in Riverton chronicles, but need not be repeated here.

But when Captain Hunt had Lucy gone? The moment Ned had left her, she had stolen away, with a strange sensation at her heart, to tell the glad news to Aunt Debby; who was for in ignorance of every thing, Captain Hunt having been taken prisoner the moment he arrived in the village and carried off by force to the church; and now as the two approached, the Captain walking feebly, she met them at the gate with a smile, laughing at whatever feeling the events of the day may have stirred in her heart.

"This is my duty, Lucy Larcom, Captain Hunt."

A quick flush crept into the Captain's face at that name. He remembered the message sent him in that name in the letter which, months before and months before, on the Rappahannock; remembered what sweet dreams and ardent hopes that message had excited—dreams and hopes now grey-ful of pensive sad bloom; and it was with something of the old hope in his eyes that he met the greeting which Lucy's "And this, sir, is my preserver, you know!" made necessary.

A month had slipped away; September had come, trailing her scarlet glories along upland and valley; and still Lucy Larcom with Aunt Debby. And still Ned gone: almost daily letters came, entreating her to return to her city home; but she thrust them all aside with indifference and remained. Ned had grown strangely silent and reserved in the few weeks gone; her face, indeed, was still bright and fresh, but it wore a more sober look than aforetime; her manner had become more subdued; in a word, she seemed to be thinking more about herself, and yet clearly it was a sweet thought which had no need to fear the eye of the world.

Captain Hunt, too, had seemed wonderfully changed in these latter days. He came often, it was true, to the brown cottage on the village slope. At first, while Ned remained, he had talked freely, as he had been wont, sometimes sitting for hours in the pleasant parlor, looking by stealth into Lucy's face; but of late he had become reticent, sometimes distant in his manner, Lucy's reserve seeming only to increase his own, and sold to the discomfort he manifestly felt.

But one soft twilight, sitting with Lucy on the vine-hung piazza, a look of new resolution came into the Captain's face. You could see at a glance that some new purpose was nerving his thought and making him strangely bold.

"I am going away soon, Miss Lucy—in a week or most."

He said it abruptly, and in the dim light he saw the girl's face grow white as the answer came, half-tittingly,

"So soon, Captain Hunt?"

"But," he continued, as if he had not spoken, "before I go I have one thing to ask." He paused a moment, and then, in a low voice, added, "I have been all alone in the world, Miss Lucy; in the hot battle-days, in the silence of the bivouac, on the weary march, no memory of a love in some home behind me has ever strengthened my soul or lifted me to lofty deeds for its sake. But these last days in which I have loitered here away from duty have brought me a hope, Miss Lucy, which has sung to me in the night, has brightened my days, and made life dearer than it ever seemed before. One thing only I now lack, and that is the assurance that some day that Hope may blossom into fulfillment—and you alone can tell me, Lucy, whether it ever may."

Lucy Larcom's heart beat almost visibly painfully; her face grew luminous, but she did not answer.

"My hope, Lucy, has been only this: that you might be mine; that when I go away again to the field I may bear your love with me as a comforter and friend. Must that hope, Lucy, be in vain?"

The downcast eyes were lifted now; the white hands, lying so listless before, crept into the waiting palm at once so tender and so strong; and Lucy Larcom, with a look of love and trust on her face that made it shine as the sunrise of a great hope, replied,

"You have given one arm, James, to your country; I shall be glad to give the other and all for their defense."

SPIRITS AND ANGELS.

LONELY musing in the twilight,
When the lengthening shadows fall,
Spirits bright and holy Angels
Come around me silently.
Lost and loved ones gone before me,
Phantoms fair from memory won,
Seem to fill the room with Peace
Midway to the setting sun.

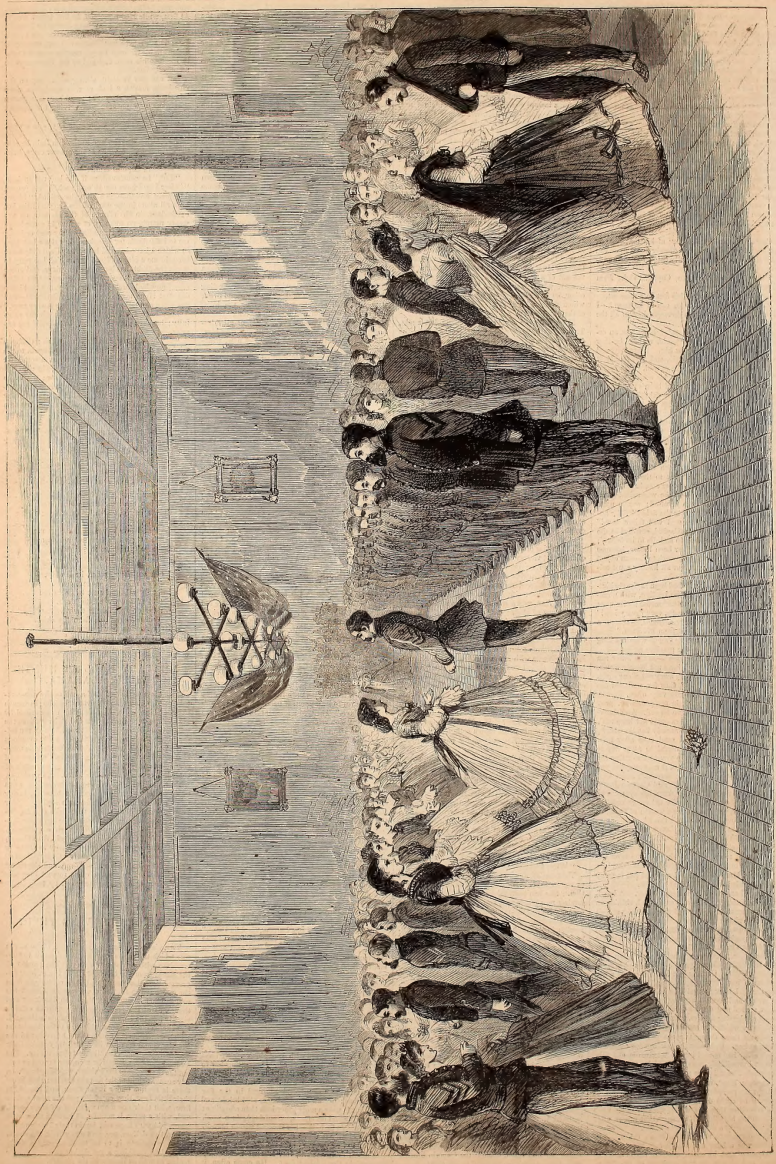
I can see them, robed in Beauty,
Some rejoicing, some forlorn,
Friendly all as when I sent to me
Out of Darkness into Morn.
On the chimes I hear their voices
Whispering soft from the skies.
Holy Angels, hover near me!
Fit my soul for Paradise!

MILITARY BALL AT HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

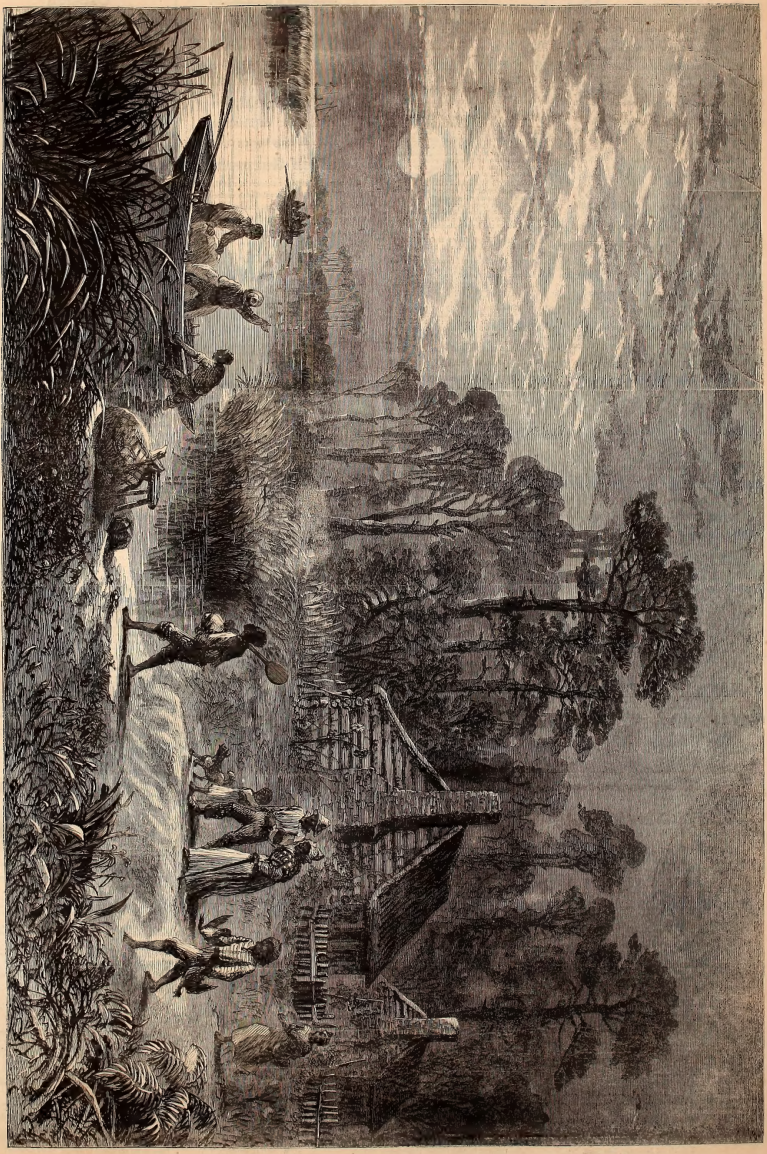
THE view on page 236 of a ball of the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Fifteenth Corps at Huntsville, Alabama, is thus described by MR. LOGAN, who furnishes the sketch: "Since the occupation of this place by General LOGAN the soldiers have made many friends, and a few evenings since they gave a ball, at which a considerable number of ladies were present. The ball was as well conducted and as full of enjoyment as any affair of the kind ever was in this place. The soldiers, with their well-brushed though somewhat worn uniforms, clean white gloves, and bronzed, happy faces, presented a sight well worth seeing. Their very intimate acquaintance with balls of a far different nature and mission seemed to have peculiarly prepared them for enjoying such a gathering. The sketch gives the 'Virginia Reel,' danced with energy, and often performed as many as seven or eight times during the evening. General LOGAN attended the ball for a short time, and expressed himself pleased to see the entire respect that was every where shown the gentler sex by their brave defenders."

NEGROES LEAVING THEIR HOME.

THE view on page 237 illustrates a phase of the war which has not been fully found it in the contemplate with any complacency. The exodus of the slaves from the bondage which has so long oppressed them has at times steadily set continues from the moment the first blow was struck against the national honor, and it will still goes on, perhaps for a year or more, portrayed creatures coming weekly into the Union lines at all points in the field. The general sadness and gloom which overshadow which surrounds the homes of the negroes, and the heartiness and energy with which they make their way to freedom upon the slightest opportunity. The Federal gun-boat, it will be seen, lies far out at sea, but the sharp eyes of the waiting, watching bondmen have caught sight of the flag she carries; they know there is shelter under it for them, and launching their little boat, they carefully put the aged and infirm, with their few more valuable effects, aboard, and, with a pang, it may be, at leaving their rude home, but with hope and joy in their hearts at the prospect of deliverance, pull away from the shore, which henceforth is to be to them only a dark, dreary line and memory, a darker spot. There is pathos as well as history in the picture.



SOLDIERS' BALL AT HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.—DANCING THE "VIRGINIA REEL."—[See Page 235.]



NEGROES LEAVING THEIR HOME.—[See Page 236.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, on the same price, and equally safe conveyed.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, sent by mail to your residence vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

Purce's Patent Magnetic Globe,

For the illustration of the power of the Earth's attraction, and for other beautiful and instructive experiments. Price $10 00. Send for a circular. Sent by mail, postage free, on receipt of price. Also Purce's Compound Magnet, a powerful instrument. Price $2 50. Address

E. PURCE, Box 3561, P. O., New York.

COCOAINE.

BERNETT'S COCOAINE defies imitation, and is the most perfect hair preparation of the age. This fact has caused numerous worthless imitations.

LATEST INVENTION IN GOLD PENS. JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with an Iridium or Indestructible Point, and persessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest price pen made, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an elastic and durable pointed pen at a low figure, and, until now, all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against gilt or silver-plating low-priced pens and calling them gold. We know that ours is the only solid gold pen of genuine diamond pointed and elastic pens in the market that can be sold anywhere near our prices.

Manufacturers' Prices by the Dozen.

No. 2. Medium Pen,	$3 50.
No. 3. Large Pen,	4 75
No. 4. Engraving Pen,	$4 50.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders in Morocco Case, extra, per Dozen,	$4.00.

Sample Pens.

No. 2. Medium Pen,	40 cents.
No. 3. Large Pen,	50 cents.
No. 4. Engraving Pen,	65 cents.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders in Morocco Case, extra,	50 cents.

Warrantee.

We warrant every pen for one year, and to be solid gold, genuine Iridium or Diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity of the most expensive gold pens made.

We send sample pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price. Money promptly registered and sealed comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. ILEY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 181 Broadway, New York.

Two Great Stories by Two Great Authors.

The New York Weekly,

the Greatest of all Story and Sketch Papers, is now publishing two of the finest stories ever given to the world, viz.:

The Silver Ship;

OR,

The Bloodhound of the Carribbean.

By Louis Leon.

And

Adam Floyd,

an exquisite Domestic Tale, by the nation's favorite, the fair-famed

Mrs. Mary J. Holmes.

Who would be without this rich literary treat, when it may be had for Five Cents per week in

The New York Weekly.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts. Call and examine, or ten samples sent free by mail for 20c. Retails for $5, by R. WOLCOTT, 179 Chatham Square, N. Y.

For 60 Cents,

THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for JAN., FEB., MARCH and APRIL. Sent by return post, or a year, for $1 00. Address the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL Publishers, 308 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BILLIARD BALLS.

Patent compressed Ivory Billiard Balls, 2¼ and 2¼ in., $10 per set. 3 in. Bagatelle, $8 per set. 3½ in. Bagatelle, $6 per set. 4 in. Bagatelle, $30 set. FRENCH CLUB, $18 and $3 per box. FRENCH CHALK, $2 a gross. WM. M. WELLING, 207 Center St., New York, Sign of the Golden Elephant.

New Catalogue of Jewelry
Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

WATCHES FOR $8.
WATCHES FOR $10.
WATCHES FOR $15. $20. $25. and all prices to $200. Army Badges, Gold Pens, Jewelry of all kinds. Send for circular.
R. KEITH, 208 Broadway, New York.

MANTILLAS.
BRODIE'S
SPRING OPENING
Took place on
Tuesday, 8th March.
BRODIE,
The Leader of Fashions,
Will make an early Spring Opening of
Ladies' Garments.

For novelty of style, for richness of material, and for endless variety of colors, coupled with moderate prices, the ladies of America never had such inducements to call on the

"Leader of Fashions."
No. 300 Canal Street,
Near Broadway.

PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

VICTORIA,
THE HEIRESS OF CASTLE CLIFFE.
By COUSIN MAY CARLETON.
ILLUSTRATED BY DARLEY.

Price Fifty Cents, paper cover; 75 cents bound in cloth.

COUSIN MAY has fairly surpassed herself in the composition of "VICTORIA," and, popular as her writings always are, we fancy that "VICTORIA" will make the greatest sensation ever achieved by a female writer. The interest commences with the very first paragraph of the first chapter, and steadily intensifies through a plot involving the most fascinating varieties of adventure, excitement, esprit, and dramatic climax.

COUSIN MAY CARLETON'S NOVELS.

SYBIL CAMBRELL; Or, THE QUEEN OF THE ISLE.
SILVER STAR; Or, THE MYSTERY OF FORTRESS HALL.
EMMINIE; Or, THE GIPSEY'S VOW.

Are published uniform in style and price with "VICTORIA." Mailed free of postage on receipt of price.

FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher, No. 94 Ann St., N.Y.

Albums for the Army.

Our New Pocket Album,

holding sixteen pictures, and sold at

Seventy-five Cents,

is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.

Sent by mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of Seventy-five Cents.

SAMUEL BOWLES & COMPANY,

Photograph Album Manufacturers,
Springfield, Mass.

Solid Silver, $1.50. Solid Gold, $3.00.

VETERAN SOLDIERS. We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Pins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field, at $1.50 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one, 100, or 1000.

Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers, 208 Broadway, New York.

SOMETHING NEW
IN PLAYING CARDS.
LOVE SCENES.
Designed by Artists.

The above new Card has fifty-two beautiful pictures, of elegant design and they can also be used as the game at ordinary playing cards, this combining pleasure with amusement. Price 50 cents and two cent stamps, to cover cost for sample pack. $5 per dozen. Liberal discount by gross to dealers. H. A. CASWELL, 60 Nassau St., New York.

MOSKWA,

For Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism, Hip Complaint, Paralyzed Limbs, White Swelling, Neuralgia, Cramp, Spine Disease, Pain in the Breast, Side or Loins, &c., &c. This almost magical effect of the remedy has enabled the proprietor to cure not only his thousands, but his tens of thousands of cases of Rheumatism, Hip Disease, and he challenges the world to produce an article of equal merit. Sold by druggists everywhere. Numerous virtues of the highest order. Try it afflicted sufferer. Price $1; 6 bottles $5. Send for circular.

DR. CLINTON RUFFERS,
Office 36 Beekman Street,
New York.

World's Conqueror.

For Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, &c. No person need despair while a bottle of this medicine is left. Send for circular and see character of testimonials; and you will be convinced. It has no equal. Price $1; 6 bottles for $5.

DR. CLINTON RUFFERS,
Office 36 Beekman Street, New York.

A New Song

By the Author of
"Who will care for Mother now,"
"Mother would comfort me," &c., &c.
Entitled,
"He was not Afraid to Die."
Words and Music by
Charles Carleton Sawyer.

The Colonel of one of our Regiments thus concludes a letter written to the father of a noble soldier, who was killed in battle; "You will always have these cheering words to console you—'He was not afraid to die!'"

The Music of this beautiful Song is published by SAWYER & THOMPSON, 50 Fulton Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y.

☞ Send to any part of the United States on the receipt of the marked price, 30 cents.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner.

FOR KEROSENE OIL LAMPS and LANTERNS, gives a brilliant light free from smoke or smell, and needs no chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior article. Every one is warranted to give perfect satisfaction, or money back. Sample sent, post paid, on receipt of 25 cents. Agents wanted. F. ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, 72 PEARL ST., Third Floor, New York.

FALSE MOUSTACHES 50 cents and $1 a pair. Address C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

THE FIRST has the name
"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

THE SECOND has the name
"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

THE THIRD has the name
"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

THE FOURTH has the name
"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver case, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually furnished with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "DUNDA WATCH Co., Boston, Mass."—no such company exists. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our FOURTH or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as our "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others are named the "AMERICAN WATCH Co." others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from great imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Madame Benedict's MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING Establishment is now REPLETE with every IMPORTED NOVELTY of the season. Milliners not admitted. Waverly Place, NEW YORK.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications.
NOVEL. No. 10. THE TURTLE CATCHER;
Or, THE TIGER OF THE CORAL.
By WILLIAM LIVINGSTON.

This is one of the oldest and most interesting productions of this popular author, whose fame is now universally for six. It is full of marvelous exploits on the ocean. Neat, post-paid, on receipt of price, 10 cents.

GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 137 William St., N. Y.

Croquet. Lee & Longstreth's Set has Patent Metal Gauge, made of well-seasoned wood, in neat case: price from $15 to $40. Also Reid's Rules for playing the game, price 50c., postage free.

WALTER LOW, 823 Broadway, New York.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 31x41. Price $600.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
In Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION and BANKING OFFICE.—SOLDIERS, Drowne & Co., No. 2 Park Place, New York, adjust and collect every species of claim against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

HAVE now been before the public for nearly a year. They have universally pronounced the handsomest and best fitting collars extant.

The under edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles noticed in all other collars.

The curvature of the points on the inside of the turn-down collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—adds greatly to the comfort and appearance of the neck.

The Gazette Collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge on each side.

These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are solidified and made to FIT THE NECK.

They are made in a "Novelty" or turn-down style, in every half-size from 12 to 17 inches, and in "Turnks" or "Stock" shape, from 12 to 17 inches; also a "solid case" in neat box cartes, containing 100 each; also in packages of 10 each, suitable for every handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.

For EVERY GENTLEMAN.

"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."

Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
61 Devonshire St., Boston.

J. S. LOVEJOY & CO., 207 Market, Warren Co., Illinois Depot, Rockford & Co., 627 Chestnut St., Philadelphia; Geary Bros., 32 Market St., Baltimore; Wall, Stephens & Co., 322 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Leavitt and Sears, cor. Fifth and Vine St., Cincinnati, O.; J. von Borries & Co., 434 Main St., Louisville, K.; A. Frankenthal & Bro., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Weed, Winters & Co., 7 to 13 Tihonpsville St., New Orleans.

New Army Watches.

ARMANDALE & CO., Importers, 219 Broadway, New York, would invite to every country and every regiment, for the sale of their new styles of WATCHES. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $115 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 70 00 each.
100 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches.. 18 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 " " " ..... 3 00 to 7 00 each.
2000 Cameo Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Monnie and Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Opal, and En. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Monnie and Jet Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Gent's Breast Pins..... 2 50 to 8 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Pairs and Ribbon Slides..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Bosom Studs..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Pinin Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Pencil Holders 4 00 to 7 00 each.
10000 Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for One Dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—These acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
393 Broadway, New York.

Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. This arm is now similar in all its competitions to be equivalent to any other ever offered to the public. The great advantage of handling with either class of loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others.

We also offer to the public our new Plant & Reynolds Cartridge and loose ammunition loading reviver. This arm is so simple that a bolt or pocket wrench.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. S. In not further stated bolts Rifles and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
202 Broadway, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

POLLAK & SON.
MEERSCHAUM MANUFACTURERS, 257 BROOME ST., NEAR BOWERY, N. Y., Wholesale and retail. Will send, free of charge, a genuine Pipe for 6 Dollars. Pipes of any shape cut to order and repaired.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT SMOKING CASE.

Major-General Burnside
Writes, Jan. 20th, 1864, after thanks for what he is pleased to call our "useful and beautiful present" of a "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case." "It is the most complete thing for a Smoker's apparatus that I have ever seen, and so entirely within the reach of the Soldier in camp, that it will certainly work itself into general use."

Gen'l Thomas Francis Meagher writes:
Feb. 8th, 1864.
To the Ridgewood Manufacturing Co.
Gentlemen.—I feel great pleasure in acknowledging, with many thanks, your present of the "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case," and beg sincerely to assure you of my belief, that your ingenious and tasteful little invention will prove most convenient and useful to every Officer and Soldier, who can stand Smoke as well as fire.
And remain, faithfully yours, &c.
Compact and portable as a Cigar Case, it is offered in various styles at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, $3 00, $3 75 and $5 00, the two latter richly plated and engraved.
Every Smoke Case sent by mail, free to the Army, and everywhere, on receipt of price and 25 cents. A liberal Discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Also the

Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

of superior quality and flavor, put up in Packages to fill the Case, and in various sizes for the General Trade. Also half pound package of this FINE TOBACCO (not weight), carefully put up, sent by MAIL, FREE, on receipt of $1 25. All Orders promptly filled.
OFFICE RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
425 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, New York.

ONE CENT.

AS the warm weather approches prepare to reduce your household expenses by getting

FISH'S KEROSENE LAMP COOKING APPARATUS,

with which you may prepare a meal for FIVE PERSONS at a cost of ONE CENT. Price, ready to use, $2 to $5.
Also the "Union Attachment,"
to be used on a common lamp to heat water, cook food, or support a chafe. Price 50 cents. No family can afford to be without one of these articles. For sale at the Lamp and Stove Stores. Trade supplied by WM. D. RUSSELL, AGENT, 356 Pearl St., New York. Send for Circulars.

Fresh from Abraham's Bosom.
Comprising all his losses exemplified by "Green Backs." Mailed, post-paid, in Paper, 30 cts.; Muslin, 75 cts.
T. E. DAWLEY, Publisher, 18 Park Row, N. Y.

Cavalry Badges.
Annexed is a fac-similie design of our newest style Cavalry Badge, sent free to any address on receipt of price. Silver Plate, $0.50
Solid Silver, letters in gold relief..... 1 50
Solid gold..... 3 50
Solid gold enamelled.. 9 00
Also new style Artillery Badge, and every style Corps and Corps Badge worn by the Army. Send for our illustrated Catalogue. Address C. E. BARCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.
For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., six cents. Adams Press Co., No. 98 Nassau St., N. Y., and 95 Lincoln St., Boston.

BAKER'S RHEUMATIC BALM,
BAKER'S LIVER FEVER COOLER,
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE,
BAKER'S BLOOD ELEVATOR,
are four remedies which no family should ever be without. Price $1 per bottle each.
BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $5.
PRINCIPAL DEPOT: No. 154 Truth Street, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists.
Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price.

CARPET WARP.
WOOL TWINE.
Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, New York.

Opera and Field-Glasses
Can see a man distance of 3 to 4 miles. Spectacles and Eye-Glasses to suit any focus. Also Microscopes of every description. Sent free by mail. B. H. HORN, Optician, 512 Broadway, cor. Eldert St., up stairs. Wholesale and Retail. Send for Circular.

12th Regiment Ball,
IN AID OF THE
Widows and Orphans
OF
Deceased New York Soldiers.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, April 25, 1864.

DR. B. C. PERRY,
DERMATOLOGIST,
49 Bond Street, New York,
Formerly of 29 Winter Street, Boston, treats successfully all Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair, and Premature Blanching. Also, removes Moth Freckles, and other Discolorations from the face, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultations free.
For particulars enclose stamp for Circular.

EMPLOYMENT
At your own homes. Thousands can realize a Hundred Dollars Weekly.—No capital required except what you find in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand citizens as well as soldiers. The greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage.
Address C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Why I love her. My love is on the battle-field. "ROSEHART WARE" piano. Excellent music book; violin, flute, or cornet, each 25c. MEDICAL INSTRUMENTS; price list mailed on receipt of three stamps.
FREDERICK BLUME,
No. 289 Bowery, N. Y.

Enameled Chamber FURNITURE
The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, velvet and chestnut, plain and ornamental, in suits, bedsteads, washstands, bureaus, and Pull Ivories. WARREN WARD, 277 Canal St., N. Y.

Sutlers, Agents, and Peddlers Wanted.
In every city and town to sell Howard's Water and Sweat Proof Money Belts. Address the Howard Belt Company, 74 Broadway, New York. Sample Belt sent free on receipt of $2.

TO SOLDIERS.
You can have one of Howard's Water and Sweat Proof Money Belts, with compartments for Letters, Photographs, and Greenbacks, by sending $2 by return mail, for $5, free. Address Howard Belt Company, 436 Broadway, N. Y.

Best Thing Out!
The "Patent Pocket Amy Pipe," just out, is decidedly the most convenient article for soldiers in the market. It is of the usual appearance, self-cleaning, will burn out all the tobacco, can be carried in the vest pocket, is not easily clogged up, as it can be used with FOUR PARTS immediately. The fire can not be seen, neither can it drop out. By a very ingenious arrangement the smoke is cooled and cleaned before entering the mouth, making it the healthiest, most economical, and delightful smoking pipe in the world. ONE BOWEL SAVES THE CONSUMPTION OF TEN. Also, the famous Meerschaums, Magic Tobacco-Boxes, Thermometers, Union Chrystal Cement, Price Reduced Match Safes, and a host of useful and 12 different articles of our choicest styles, nicely packed. Free on receipt of $4 00. Circulars sent free per mail. Address in full RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau St., Box 3131, New York.
P. S. Money sent in registered letters is at our risk.

Fifty Methods of Employment. Arts, Secrets, Ways to make Money. Sent everywhere for $1; worth $100. Address W. FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md.

AGENTS, for best chance in the World, address J. W. ELLSWORTH, Hartford, Conn., Hartford, N. Y.

DRAWING.
I WILL SEND TO ANY ADDRESS, on receipt of $1 one dollar, Drawing Instruments, by which any novice, old or young, can draw with PERFECT ACCURACY, Engineering of all kinds, and Scenery from Nature, the FIRST TIME TRYING. Address SAMUEL BROWN, Box 110, Wallkville, Allegany Co., N. Y.

Attention Company!
Clarke Onguent, a powerful stimulant. Each packet contains sufficient to make 16 ounces of ointment which in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent, and finding it not as represented, by informing me of the fact, shall have their money refunded, and then at any time within 3 months from day of purchase. Price $1 00. Sent sealed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money.
Address, A. C. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 118,
Albany, N. Y.

$11 Watches. $12
"AN ELEGANT WATCH."
Set in very heavy Silver hunting cases of splendid finish, Silver crystal, ruby jewelled, fine Italian movements, pure white dial, and steel polished hands. Warranted a correct timekeeper, and guaranteed handsomer than with a very handsome gold-plated chain and key, to any address, postage paid, on receipt of twelve dollars, or eleven dollars without chain.
C. E. CLARKE & CO., 208 Broadway, N.Y. P. O. Box 5859.

Watches and Jewelry.
American, Swiss, and English
WATCHES
In every variety, in my own superior styles and quality of cases, movements, &c., for trade or army, large or small, promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years. CHARLES F. HAMMOND, 335 Broadway.

Deafness Overcome BY THEIR HARLAN'S SOUND MAGNIFYING TUBES. They can be concealed. Send for a descriptive pamphlet to
E. HASLAM, 32 John Street, New York.

Union Playing Cards.
Colonel for King, Cadoes of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 camaleo cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Price, in packs, as quoted for wholesale. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address UNION CARD COMPANY,
14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 165 William Street, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, enameled dial, cut hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, sent free by mail in neat case, only $7.
A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $5. Specially adapted to the Army.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15
OR, COMPTOIR WATCH.
A SUPERB "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved or engine turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine English Jewelled or Nickel Movements," "M. J. Norris" Independent Action, Self Balance, and has a STAR MINIATURE SECOND DIAL in the movements, making it a "Correct Guide" to the Soldier or Privateer. Perfect timekeeper, "surveyed one year." WILL STAND ANY, and is an

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch.
Used by the British Army Officers,
Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.
ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, improved Hunting Case, full jewelled movements, warranted, $18.

$30 AMERICAN $30
LEVERS.
"Full Ruby Jewelled, 4 ca. Coin Silver Hunting Case, Gold Inside, with Magic Spring, STEM-WINDING and SETTING. $30
Real English Duplex Stop Watch,
In Massive Silver Hunting Cases, full jewelled, seven Seconds, for Artillerists or Engineers, only $20
Best Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. $20.
are sole importers of the above styles of European Watches. Catalogue of Watches sent gratis.
"Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper" of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a very pretty watch, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is well suited to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." "Illustrated Times" says: "Correct timepiece; and the beauty and finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."
Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 393 Broadway, N. Y., or 40 Ann Street, New York.

A Single Box of Brandreth's Pills contains more real, active, and curative matter than twenty boxes of any pills in the world besides. Fifty-five hundred physicians in one State have given certificates of their superiors. The first letter of their value is yet scarcely appreciated. When they are better known, sudden death and continued sickness will be of the past. Let those who are sick speak right out in their favor. It is a duty which will save life. 25t

Our race are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this period season, and it is so dangerous as it is prevalent; but Brandreth's Pills afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use we prevent the collection of those impurities which, in their malicious quantities, cause so much danger to the body's health. They soon cure liver complaint, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, pain in the back, heartburn, pain in the breast-bone, sudden faintness and costiveness.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase no medicine on PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES.—We guarantee will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. E. G. GRAHAM, No. 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

DR. ROBINSON'S BEST STORY.
GOOD-FOR-NOTHING DICK,
OR,
A HERO OF HUMBLE LIFE.
A STORY OF OUR OWN TIMES.
THIS IS THE BEST STORY DR. ROBINSON EVER WROTE, and should be read by all—especially the young—who can not fail to become deeply interested in the fortunes of the youthful hero of humble life, and be both instructed and amused by the perusal of his adventures.
ILLUMINATED COVER.
PRICE, TWENTY CENTS.
MAILED, POSTAGE PAID, ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.
FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
No. 24 Ann Street, New York.

$50 to $100 per Week.
Agents wanted to take orders for the "Acknowledged Standard" HISTORY OF THE SOUTHERN REBELLION, by O. J. VICTOR. This work is conceded to be the very best published by the Historical Publisher, Members of Congress, Governors, Bancroft the Historian, and the leading men of every order of intelligence and civilians. To be completed in three elegantly illustrated super-royal octavo volumes. Vols. I. and II. now ready. Also to take orders for VICTOR'S HISTORY OF AMERICAN CONSPIRACIES, 1 vol. 12mo. 1860.—Very superbly illustrated volume, selling rapidly. Agents make more than $50 by $100 per week canvassing for these popular books. Sold only by subscription, and exclusive territory given. Send for circular of terms, &c.
Address EDWD. F. HOVEY, Gen. Agt.,
19 Spruce Street, N. Y.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.
TERMS.
One Copy for one Year..... $3 00
Two Copies for One Year..... 5 00
An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $3 00 each, or 11 Copies for $27.50.
HARPER'S WEEKLY and HARPER'S BAZAR, together, one year, $5 50.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
TERMS.
One Copy for Four Years..... $ 00
One Copy for One Year..... 3 00
One Copy for Two Years..... 5 50
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 75 each, or 11 Copies for $27.50. Payment invariably in advance.
TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements will be charged.
Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863, HARPER'S WEEKLY, handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $3 00 each, will be sent by mail, postage paid.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

NEW STYLES OF COIFFURE.

No. 1. The Dusman (very chaste).—No. 2. The Serpentine (quite original).—No. 3. The Hare (suitable for a Matron).—No. 4. The Excelsior (suitable for a very Young Lady).

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our New Normal Stationary Paper Packet. Only $2.5 capital required to obtain a Watch, free, with first order. We also offer Stunning Steel Engravings. $10 invested will yield $50. Send for circular before such inducements are first offered. Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HARRIS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.,
The Oldest Established Price Package House in the U. S.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

Card Photographs.

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over

FOUR THOUSAND

different subjects, to which additions are continually being made of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

73 Major-Generals, | 293 Statesmen,
130 Brigadier-Generals, | 151 Divines,
270 Colonels, | 118 Authors,
84 Lieut.-Colonels, | 30 Artists,
297 Other Officers, | 112 Singers,
60 Officers of the Navy, | 96 Prominent Women,
17 Prominent Foreign Portraits.

2,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c.

Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp.

An order for One Dozen Pictures from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1.80, and sent by mail, free.

Photographic Albums.

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each.

Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.

The smaller kinds can be safely sent by mail at a postage of six cents per volume.

The more expensive can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views

Our Catalogue of these will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

Friends or relatives of prominent soldiers may well confer a favor by sending us their Photographs for copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned unsinjured.

CARTE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Contributors to present to their Pastor, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, &c.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement. In mailed, pre-paid, for $2.25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $4; with 24 Objects, $6, by

HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, for will mail, pre-paid, the Belle-vue, or Pocket STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Front and Field-Piece, accommodating all sizes, for $2.00; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

Card Photographs.

A splendid assortment. Catalogues sent free. Address B. W. Hitchcock, Manufacturer, 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. C. Wilding, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 307 Canal St., New York, corner of Lafayette. Sent free by mail for 65 cents.

A Bad Breath.—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is so delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentrifice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists. The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 165 and 167 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 or $2 (turn-over or Gothic) for a "Collar," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. JOEL W. WHEELER of Cleveland, Ohio, and John C. Leffects, of New York. Putnam Mfg. Co.:

Gentlemen: I know from practical experience that iron well galvanized with zinc will rust, oxidize and rust one particle. I can safely say, after several years experience in the manufacture of chairs, for cloth-piping and wire drawers, in which I have tested the affinity of iron and zinc, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect void of the two.

Now I can say my family commenced using one of your Wringers. It now performs all of its functions as well as it did the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article with us. I have closely observed several other kinds of clothes-wringers, the makers operated being different, trying to produce the same results as the Putnam Wringer, but to my judgment they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is as most perfect as possible, and I can cheerfully recommend it to the best in use.

Respectfully yours, &c., JOHN W. WHEELER.

Many years' experience in the cleansing business enables me to endorse the above statement in all particulars.

JOHN C. LEFFERTS, No. 700 Broadway Street, New York, January, 1864.

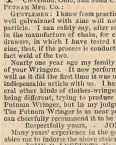
Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.

No. 2, $6 50; No. 1, $5 00; No. A, $8.

Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.
No. 13 Park Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.
S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

F. GROTE. Manufacturer of IVORY TUSKS, 79 Fulton St., New York, cor. Gold. Importer of Ivory, Pearl, Tortoise Shell, Horn, Bone and Napkin Rings, Combs, Brushes, Fancy Goods, wholesale and retail. Also, Manufacturer of Cut and Carved Ivory, Case Leather, Chain, &c. The only place to get a good set of enamel or ivory teeth at reduced prices. All Orders by mail promptly attended to.



Don't buy your Gaiters

or Shoes without Fegg's

Patent Lever Buckle.

They are self-adjusting, and require no holes punched in the strap. Dealers or manufacturers can enclose Ten Cents Currency, and I will mail sample of two patterns.

FREDERICK STEVENS,
215 Pearl Street, New York, and
68 Kilby Street, Boston, Mass.

Shults' Ointment, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 60 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

Soldiers of the Union!!!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD-KNOWN AND WORLD-TRIED REMEDIES

KNOWN AS

Professor Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

You will have find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where any of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay.

Your Life is Valuable!!

Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health!

For 25 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

With, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the grossest and ripest old age.

The following are genuine letters, on file for inspection at this office.

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
Quartermaster's Department, }
20th Illinois Volunteers, }
Folly Island, S. C., November 26, 1862.

Prof. Holloway: Dear Sir—Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies. Address

Lieut. A. W. Fellows, Q. M.,
20th Illinois Vols.

Camp near Brandy Station, Va., }
January 7, 1864. }

Prof. Holloway:

Dear Sir: I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in need of them until now, I want to try them, as Diarrhœa is very prevalent at the present time: send me the worth of the enclosed.

Yours, &c.,
Joseph Walsh,
Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

Pulaski, Tennessee, }
December 26, 1863. }

Prof. Holloway:

Dear Sir: Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dysepepsia, and seek cure.

Yours, &c.,
Thomas F. Turner,
Co. I, 24 Iowa Infantry.

Morris Island, S. C., }
January 21, 1864. }

Prof. Holloway:

Dear Sir: Enclosed you will find 50 cents; for which I wish you to send me some of your valuable Pills; send them by mail. I enclose 10 cents for postage.

Address, Israel C. Hall,
Co. D, 3d N. H. Vols.,
Port Royal, S. C.

Camp of 5th Excelsior Brigade, }
January 23, 1864. }

Prof. Holloway:

Sir: Please send me for the enclosed 50 cents the worth of it in Pills; enclosed find 15 cents to pay postage, and you will oblige. Address,

Yours, &c.,
Serg't. W. Powers,
Co. E, 9th Regt. Excelsior Brigade,
Washington, D. C.

Morris Island, S. C. }
January 21, 1864. }

Prof. Holloway:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and want to get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills.

Yours, &c.,
William Christy,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.,
Morris Island, S. C.

CAUTION.

If the reader of this "notice" can not get a box of Pills or Ointment from the drug store for the price, let him write to me, 80 Maiden Lane, enclosing the amount, and I will mail a box free of expense. Many females suffer from my medicines on hand because they can not make as much profit as on other persons' make. 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 per box or pot.

What a wonderful discovery is Perry Davis' Vegetable Pain Killer!

It not only cures the ills of the human family, but is also the best cure known for horses with colic. It has never been known to fail in a case of the worst cramp, and for sprains, galls, etc., it never fails—try it once. Directions accompany each bottle. Sold by Druggists generally—

Renton County (Ky.) Democrat.

250 Rare Receipts.

17 Superb Electrotype Engravings.
TELLS WHAT TO DO, AND WHAT TO DO IT.
Both sent free by mail for 25 cents.
HUTCHISON & CO., Publishers,
449 Broadway, New York.

TROPICAL BALSAM

Prepared by Carreno Brothers & Co.

This celebrated and unparalleled medicine, composed entirely of vegetable and purifying ingredients, is the only remedy ever past the great popular remedy of South America, and is now offered to the people of the United States, as a positive, cheap, and safe remedy for all the direful maladies, originating from impure blood, such as fever, ulcers, boils, blotches, tetter, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, ringworm, scurvy, humors, piles, headache, toothache, and other diseases too numerous to mention in this notice.

Ever since this valuable medicine has been introduced in this country, its sales have increased so rapidly that we have failed to produce the most wonderfully successful results. Thousands of families are ashamed to keep always the Balsam by them, in order to use it in time in cases of wounds, hemorrhages, burns, bruises, &c., and those who are devoted to such occupations as expose them to danger, or require the use of edged tools, to which they may be subjected in any way. For valuable testimonial letters, see the Tribune and Herald, or the Trade Circulars.

Price of bottles, 37 cts. and $1.

General Depot at WM. E. SHELLEY, No. 7 Nassau St., near Wall, New York. To sold at the drug stores generally in New York and Brooklyn.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Gold Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guaranteed exchangeable, or money back, for a 3-cent stamp. Pens supplied on receipt of 50 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, 18 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVER WATCHES.

Trade Mark. P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on delivery.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches.
208 Broadway New York.

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day made Easy.

By selling the Great "original and only genuine" Dimond Paper Collar and Cuff Patents, each of which containing "more real valuable articles" than any fullsized linen collar ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Jewelry Articles, Yankee Notions, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, &c. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Retails only 25c. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and camp. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect timekeeper, presented to each agent who reports. Secured by return mail.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL DIMOND PATENTS, each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others genuine. Beware of imposition. Our mode of operation as described by other parties, see page 141 in New York Journal of Beauty, Feb. 25. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing "Letter patents indorsements," &c.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Original, Largest, and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA

HAIR RESTORATIVE.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair to its natural and their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading of one lady with another, and thus gives a life appearance instead of the dull dead black of dyes, so that the most critical observer can not detect its use. It does not require previous scraping and washing, and hows for its application, nor does it stain the skin; but is a beautiful applied and easily wiped from the skin or any hair-dressing. It does not claim to make the hair come in where it has once fallen out; nothing will do that, whatever may be advertised to the contrary; but it will prevent the hair falling out, make it soft and silky, and cleanse it and the scalp from all impurities and unhealthy matter, and become the best effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c.

Hoyt's Imperial Coloring Cream.

An appropriate accompaniment to the Hiwatha; oils and colors the hair at the same time, and changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black, as desired.

N.B.—Ladies' French hair-dresser in attendance to apply the Hiwatha.

HOYT, WOOD & CO., 19 University Place, N. Y.

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER!!!

In Coin Silver!! For $1 50. Including the engraving of the Name, Co., and Regiment. Also the National Button Tie, Cavalry and Artillery Pin, Members, Engineer, and Signal Corps Pins.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO.
No. 2 Murray Street, New York.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it, by using Dr. Lee's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Stores.

Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

LANDS.—TO ALL WANTING FARMS.—Large and driving interest of Salem Dickerson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune:—It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts in an almost level position, and admirable location for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

Common Camphor will not kill moths—they only dislike it. Sweeping suffocation to Moths and Millers is

CEDAR CAMPHOR

Sold by druggists, and factured by HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston. Cheap, Durable, Certain, Fragrant, Brit. Write for a circular.

Diarrhœa and Dysentery will decimate the Volunteers far more than the bullets of the enemy, therefore let your Surgeon see that he carries with him a full supply of HOLLOWAY'S PILLS. Their use in India has made them a household word in the British Soldiers. Only 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 per box.

Distilled Dew
For the Skin and Complexion.

Removes, tan, freckles, and discolorations, and renders the skin beautifully clear, soft, and white. Contains no acid, lead or poison. Sold by all Druggists. Principal Depot, 779 Broadway, N. Y.

To consumptives.—You will get the Recipe for a sure cure for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, and all lung complaints, by sending to Dr. Chase Brant, Box 2511, New York. He sends it free. Write for it.—It has cured thousands.

To Consumptives.

Consumptive sufferers will receive a valuable prescription for the cure of Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung affections free of charge, by sending their address to

Rev. E. A. WILSON,
Williamsburgh, Kings Co.,
New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 381.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1864. [$4.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

FLORAL DEPARTMENT OF THE GREAT FAIR.—[See Page 240.]

THE SOLDIER'S REST.

At the breaking of the morn
Fresh and fair,
When the brightness of the dawn
Lit the air,
The clangor of a horn
* To the drowsy ear was borne
Of a soldier vast and worn
With toil and care.

Uprspringing he arose
From the plain,
Where he sought a calm repose—
Sought in vain.
Forgets the sleep he wooes,
And with dauntless heart he goes
To fight his country's foes
Once again.

For that bugle-call had thrilled
Him before,
When the blackened air was filled
With the roar
Of the ruthless guns that stilled
Many a heart with ardor filled,
And the hail that thousands killed
Fast did pour.

His weariness and all
Were forgot,
Through his veins that bugle-call
A frenzy shot,
Where the blows do fastest fall
He would conquer over all,
Or a hero's funeral pall
Should be his lot.

With a purpose widely rash,
And fast desire,
In the fiercest fight he'd dash;
No'er retire.
He'd fight where sabres clash,
Where leaden bullets crash,
And belching cannons flash
Deadly fire.

When the day had almost gone,
And the night
Was kindly coming on
To hide the sight,
At the setting of the sun
A great victory was won,
But some precious blood had run
In the fight.

And where they closest press'd
O'er the ground
As their numbers did attest,
Strewn around
Mid the bravest and the best
Who had stood the fiery test,
His last unbroken rest
He had found.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1864.

To Advertisers.

☞ The Terms for Advertising in Harper's Weekly will hereafter be as follows:

INSIDE PAGE, $1 00 per line; OUTSIDE page, $1 50 per line, each insertion, Cash.

Harper's Weekly has a circulation of about One Hundred Thousand Copies, which are scattered over the whole country. Every number is probably read by eight or ten persons, so that the ensemble in its pages reach the eye of more individuals than advertisements in any other periodical. It is essentially a home paper, and is found in every variety of circumstances take an interest in the thrilling events of the day. It is not destroyed after being read, as daily papers are, but is kept, and in many cases bound, placed in a library, and referred to from time to time. Advertisers who wish to bring their business to the notice of the public at large, and especially of the households class, can find no medium so suitable for their purpose as Harper's Weekly.

SHALL GENERAL M'CLELLAN BE CALLED INTO SERVICE?

TO supply the excitement which the quiet of the last few days has ended the war. There was a reaction, indeed, and Charles Second returned. But then came a counter-reaction, and the supreme atrocities of Charles First fought for, and which Oliver Cromwell destroyed, Pompey may have been a better tempered soldier than Cæsar, but he was not. What then? Cromwell understood the cause, and believed in it. Fairfax did not. So, at the beginning of our Revolution, the people and the States fought the command of our army, George Washington and Charles Lee. Washington was a country gentleman, who had seen military service in his youth; Lee was an accomplished and approved soldier. It was the business of his life. If it had been a purely military question, Lee had the advantage. But his foreign birth, and the universal confidence in Washington's entire comprehension of the cause and devotion to it, decided the question. Lee had important service in the army; but he was of little real use; for he had little faith in the cause or care for it. He was a soldier seeking his own advancement. Washington believed in the cause of America, and he won it. Suppose Lee had been put in command solely on the ground that he was a good soldier, what would have been the result?

General M'Clellan may be the best soldier in the country. But unluckily for his claim, with the best opportunities in the world to prove it, he has not succeeded. On the other hand, the one thing he has proved beyond question is his sympathy with slavery and slaveholders and their friends, and his total want of faith in the policy of the war. Unless that policy is changed he could not honestly support it. Why then should he be asked to devote his military abilities to a cause which he does not approve? Until it is changed, therefore, his friends ought not to wish him to be recalled to the field. But when it is changed, when it becomes the policy of the American people to overthrow the rebellion of slaveholders by saving slavery, then General M'Clellan will undoubtedly be made Commander-in-Chief. The hands that now manage him will then manage the country—and the Lord have mercy upon us!

CONGRESSIONAL LETHARGY.

There are two bills before Congress of the utmost importance, the passage of which should not be delayed, but which have been put aside for matters of much less moment. They are the bill regulating the payment of colored troops and the bill establishing a Freedmen's Bureau. Both of them relate to the negro question, but considering that shirking the negro question has brought us into the war, it is tolerably clear that continued shirking will not get us out. The three most vital points to which public and legislative attention should be constantly directed are the financial question, the military question, and the negro question. They may be very disagreeable subjects, all of them, but they are unavoidable. And if the Union men in Congress would let the Copperhead twaddle about the eternal negro dribble itself away at its own sweet will, the great and necessary legislative steps would be taken.

There is no more pressing practical issue than the payment of the colored troops. There can be no doubt that if it is right to enlist such soldiers it is wrong not to pay them exactly as all other soldiers are paid. And if the wages of an apprentice enrolled under a draft or otherwise are not paid to his employer, there is still less reason to pay the wages of a slave so taken to his master. Again, if the children of a poor man slaveholder killed in a fight without compensation to the parent, there is surely no reason why the slaves of a rich slaveholder should not be regarded and treated exactly in the same way. It is intolerable that in a republic any class whatever should be privileged, but it is inhuman that a class based upon the meanest injustice should be preferred. Nobody insists, not even those friends of man, the New York city Copperhead delegation in Congress, that the poor laborer at the North should be paid for his children who are taken into the army; but these gentry insist that it is very tyrannical and unconstitutional if a rich man on the border is not well paid for the slaves whose wages and work he has always appropriated to himself. The truth is that the Government should accept every man it wishes, black or white, and pay them all equally for an equal service. Until it is ready to do that the policy of colored enlistments is premature. But Congress may be perfectly well assured that the people of this country are fully prepared for that policy, and heartily approve it. Let Messrs. Dawes and Sumner, Saltonstall, & Co., in the Senate, and Messrs. Cox, Pendleton, Wood, & Co., in the House, therefore, talk about the eternal negro until they are tired, and then let us have the Freedmen's Bureau which shall wipe out the class distinction among citizens in the army of the United States, which, by not being wiped out of the statute-book of Congress, has produced its inevitable consequence, civil war.

Nor is the other point of the Freedmen's Bureau less pressing or less practical. Statesmen and soldiers are to deal with facts. And the fact is that the overthrow of slavery, a natural and inevitable result of the war, has not already taken place in our hands. Under the circumstances we can not abandon them. We are bound to give them the same chance that all other people have had to save them alone is to deprive them of that chance. Our policy, therefore, should be universal and uniform. The freedmen are to be protected in their equal rights with other people, nothing more. They are not to be made serfs attached to the land; they are to be defended against the consequences of their ignorance, as their servile race of the white race and against the contempt bred by slavery in the whites themselves, which holds that they have no rights to be respected. The effects of long years of the condition of the emancipated slaves are every where effectively the same, and there is consequently not to be one policy in Louisiana, another in South Carolina, and another in Alabama. The late slaveholders in all those regions are to be made to understand clearly that the colored people are free, and have exactly the same rights of respect and protection under this Government that they have. They are to make fair bargains with them and keep them fairly, or suffer the consequences, as we are all suffering the direful consequences of departure from this simple and palpable rule hitherto.

Mr. Eliot's bill, already passed by the House, is good; but Mr. Sumner's, which will be introduced in the Senate, is simpler and more comprehensive. There should be no delay in any simple consideration and prompt passage. The grave questions imperatively thrust upon the country by so wide and radical a social convulsion as the present war are not to be settled by scoffing and sneering and jeering on the one hand, or by shirking and drifting on the other. The Union men in Congress have the work to do, and they must do it without the least sympathy or help from the Copperheads. We have no reason to suppose that the Union men seriously differ in their convictions upon the necessities and duties of the times. But all legislative bodies have a dangerous habit of delay. Let us urge our friends to be active, firm, and careful.

No. 2 PALACE GREEN, KENSINGTON.

The late sale of Thackeray's furniture, books, pictures, and collections of every kind occupied four days, and excited great attention. The prices were very high; nor is it surprising, because the peculiar character of the man gives its own geniality to every object associated with him. There was much plate and china for sale; he had a great liking, and the decorations of his house illustrated the taste which built it, and which is the pervading tone of so many of his writings—the fashion of Queen Anne. It is impossible to read the description of the busy scene without a painful feeling, for it is precisely one of his own texts.

It is the more striking because of a passage describing his presence at a similar scene at Gore House, the residence of Lady Blessington. It had been a merry house. Willis, in his earlier letters from Europe, describes it well. The wits, the beauties, the gay world of London —all met there. Bulwer, Disraeli, Moore, and the later set of lions all came and sat at the feasts of the blithe Irish lady, when suddenly Debt gave such a thundering double-knock at the door that the revel ended in a twinkling, and Lady Blessington, with her exemplary son-in-law, Count D'Orsay, crossed the channel to Paris. The sale at Gore House followed. The old Duke of Wellington took their hat. Thackeray came with the rest, and one can imagine with what feelings. His heart ached, we may be sure, as he saw for the last time the cari lenghi. His eyes shone kindly as his heart whispered, Vanitas vanitatum. But we need not imagine it only; we have the record. The speech which records about the sale is mildly in Paris. He describes the crowd, the eagerness, the confusion; and he adds: "Mr. Thackeray came also, and there were tears in his eyes as he went away. He is, perhaps, the only person whom I have seen really affected at your departure."

It was very characteristic. It is a very touching scene to remember. Thackeray did not stand there censorious. He did not think the soft-hearted Irish woman the greatest or the best of beings, but he was just to his own memories. He owed many a pleasant hour to the gay rooms, and he was not ashamed to pay the tribute of regret. She was not Aspasia; no. But as he moves through the rooms, with moist eyes, can you not hear him humming,

"Oh! what a pity
Or that of Sergeant Tadby,
Mostly I'd admire
Peg of Limavaddy.
And till I expire,
Sweet Peg of Limavaddy,
I will sing aside my lyre
Peg of Limavaddy."

It is of his Gore House that we read now, and of those who come to look upon his cari lenghi. How many as they moved sadly about must have murmured in their own words: "We moralize upon his life when he is gone, and yesterday's preacher becomes text for to-day's sermon."

EQUALITY.

It was very amusing to read the report of the debate between Mr. Pendleton of Ohio, and Mr. Broomall of Pennsylvania, upon the Montana Territorial bill. The Senate made the very natural provision in the bill that only male citizens of the United States should vote. Now the pro-slavery gentlemen repose in great comfort upon what they call a decision of the Supreme Court that negroes are not citizens; so that if they really believe that the question is settled, they ought not to be troubled by a bill in which the word "white" would be sheer tautology.

So when Mr. Pendleton called attention to the fact that the word white had been stricken out, Mr. Broomall asked him why he was troubled, since the court had decided that negroes were not citizens? Mr. Pendleton replied that his object was to know whether Mr. Broomall and his friends agreed with the court. Mr. Broomall asked him if he were not satisfied with the decision. Mr. Pendleton asked him in return whether he thought that it had been so decided. Mr. B. said that he had not so. Mr. P. said that he wished to hear Mr. B. thought so. Mr. B., according to the summary, replied that he was not called upon to review the decision. Whereupon Mr. Pendleton announced that his object in bringing the matter to a vote was to test the sincerity of the often-repeated declaration of the Union men that they were not in favor of negro equality.

"Here's richness!" quoth Mr. SOPERS over his skimmed milk. Here's statesmanship! We trust that Mr. PENDLETON will have had his vote before this, and that every Union man in the House will be present, and in a clear voice declare that the Congress of the American people holds this truth to be self-evident that all men, including Chia Copperhead as well as the brave brethren of ROBERT SMALLS, and the black heroes of MILLIKEN'S Bend, PORT Hudson, FORT Wagner, and Grimes, are created equal, and with an inalienable right to life and liberty so long as they behave themselves, and that the right to throw a vote shall not be determined by a man's height, nor the fashion of his clothes, nor the shape of his hat, nor the color of his skin.

It is quite time that this absurd talk about "negro equality" was ended. Does Mr. PENDLETON believe in "French equality," or "Irish equality," or "Chinese equality?" Does he think a drunkard and degraded man of any nation, who can neither read nor write, who is a nuisance and a pest, has a higher claim to "equality" than FREDERICK DOUGLASS? Let him be careful in his answers. Quicker a oracle. PENDLETON SMALLS is a much more valuable and honorable citizen of the United States than ROBERT TOOMBS.

OLD AND NEW COPPERHEADS.

As an illustration of the utter extinction of the right of free speech, which, with all other rights and liberties in this country, the bloated tyrant LINCOLN has annihilated in blood, we commend the following extract from a "Democratic" journal, the Metropolitan Record, a most faithful exponent and expositor of the "Democracy" which consists in toadying slave-lords, and supporting the theory that capital ought to own labor:

"As to the freedom and independence of the South we have no apprehensions. Her people can never be conquered, and, if they were possible, ARNAUD LINCOLN and the man to accomplish that subjugation. The address of the Virginia Assembly is a proof that the resolution which animated them is as strong as ever, and that it is unconquerable; that there is no faltering, no wavering. In the eloquent words of the great document, 'Virginia will not stop backward.' . . . Grand old State, may we never see the day when you shall have to bow beneath the yoke of the oppressor! If bloodshy should ever come, then will the friends of freedom, the lovers of true heroism and manhood, number you first and foremost of a great people, for, while fighting for liberty and independence—fell on the battle-field, you fell with WASHINGTON. . . . Such a response should have been sufficient to save the great Commonwealth from the trend of the heartless tendency."

This is like the speech which FERNANDO WOOD made last autumn at Bergen, in New Jersey, in which he said: "There is no such thing as secession under the Constitution upon which the Government of this country is founded. Suppose New York chose to secede, who dare attempt to prevent her? . . . Virginia has the same right as New York. . . . It is the privilege of the people now to refuse to give another man or another dollar for the purpose of carrying on the war."

If any man asks why the Government, in the midst of a civil war, does not silence such talk, the reply is very obvious; because it is quite strong enough to tolerate it. But its constitutional right and power to send FERNANDO WOOD to Fort Lafayette and to suspend the Metropolitan Record as indispensable as his FLAG to full a rebel upon the battle-field. They are not derived from the clause which declares that treason shall consist in levying war, but in that which empowers the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus when, in time of rebellion and invasion, the public safety requires it. In such instances as these, and at this time, the Government rightly judges that the public safety does not require it. For the great mass of the American people have found such orators and newspapers as their fathers felt toward Burke's Aurora, which said of General WASHINGTON, when he retired from the Presidency: "The man who is the source of the misfortunes of our country at this day reduced to a level with his fellow-citizens.....The name of WASHINGTON from this day ceases to give currency to political iniquity and to legalize corruption."

What the slanderers of Washington said of him their descendants, the Copperheads, now say of the Government of which he was a chief founder. They are equally safe in public contempt. They and their falsehoods will be equally held in the undying scorn of the American people.

GENERAL ORDER NO. 28.

GENERAL DIX has issued a strict order against thieves. General Order No. 28 recites that its attention has been called to the fact that the county of Richmond (Staten Island), the town of West Farms, Westchester county, and several other towns have provided for a bounty of three hundred dollars to recruits, and that the authorities have provided that a hundred of this sum shall be paid to the recruit, leaving the disposition of the rest to be settled between the recruit and the bounty broker—in other words, giving the broker two hundred dollars.

This ridiculous confluence of the authorities with the bounty brokers whom the United States liberally pay for their services, General DIX wisely intends to stop summarily; and therefore orders that no enlisting officer shall receive any recruit who has not received the bounty raised for him in the county or town; and that no recruit shall be allowed to pay any part of his bounty to the runner, even though an agreement be shown, such agreements being almost always fraudulent. The General most properly holds that when a certain amount, per man, is levied upon a town or county as bounty money it must be paid to the recruit on the order or appropriation of it is unlawful. But if the money be raised upon conditions specifically stated, as for instance, that two hundred dollars shall be paid to the recruit and one hundred to the runner, then the Court says that the only remedy for the taxpayer is to enlist where he is more liberally treated, and for the tax-payers to place their money in the hands of men who will not lavish it on runners and bounty brokers.

This is an admirable order, and we wish only that it had been earlier issued. The tax-payers of Richmond county especially have suffered grievously from this business. Notwithstanding that much of the money was raised by a direct tax, the impudition that able-bodied young unmarried men should not be bought off, we learn that the quota of the county was lessened by this substitute bounty, and that a large share of the money raised has gone into their hands. But if strictly enforced General DIX's order will put an end to the whole business, and, as he says, "protect recruits from the frauds practiced upon them," and also the tax-payers from the frauds to which they have been subjected.

THE BOOK TRADE AND THE FAIR.

We published last week a statement of the contributions made by the "BOOK TRADE," up to the 25th of March, to the Fund of the METROPOLITAN FAIR, and this week the following additional subscriptions have been handed in to the Bookseller's Committee of the Fair:

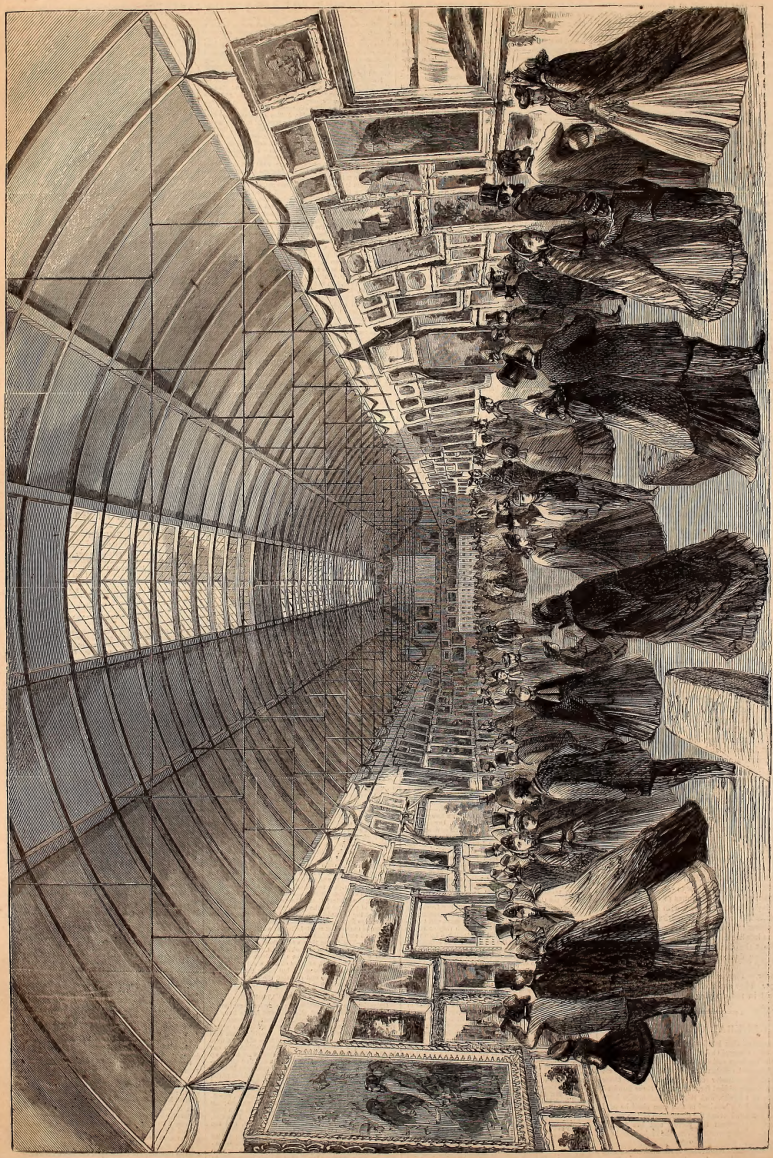
CARLTON & PORTER	$500
EVER & SEWELL	250
W. I. POOLEY & CO.	100
J. W. G. & H. BENSTON (Cash)	100
M. W. DUNN	100
ARS. S. S. UNION, per GEO. S. SCOVILLE, AGT.	500
ROUTLEDGE, WARNE, & ROUTLEDGE	100
C. D. ARNOLD	25
JAMES FOTT, AGT.	25
TRAL PUBLISHING SOCIETY	50
THEO. BERNARD (Additional)	10
ALEX. STEWART (Additional)	10
A. TURNBULL (Additional Cash)	5

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

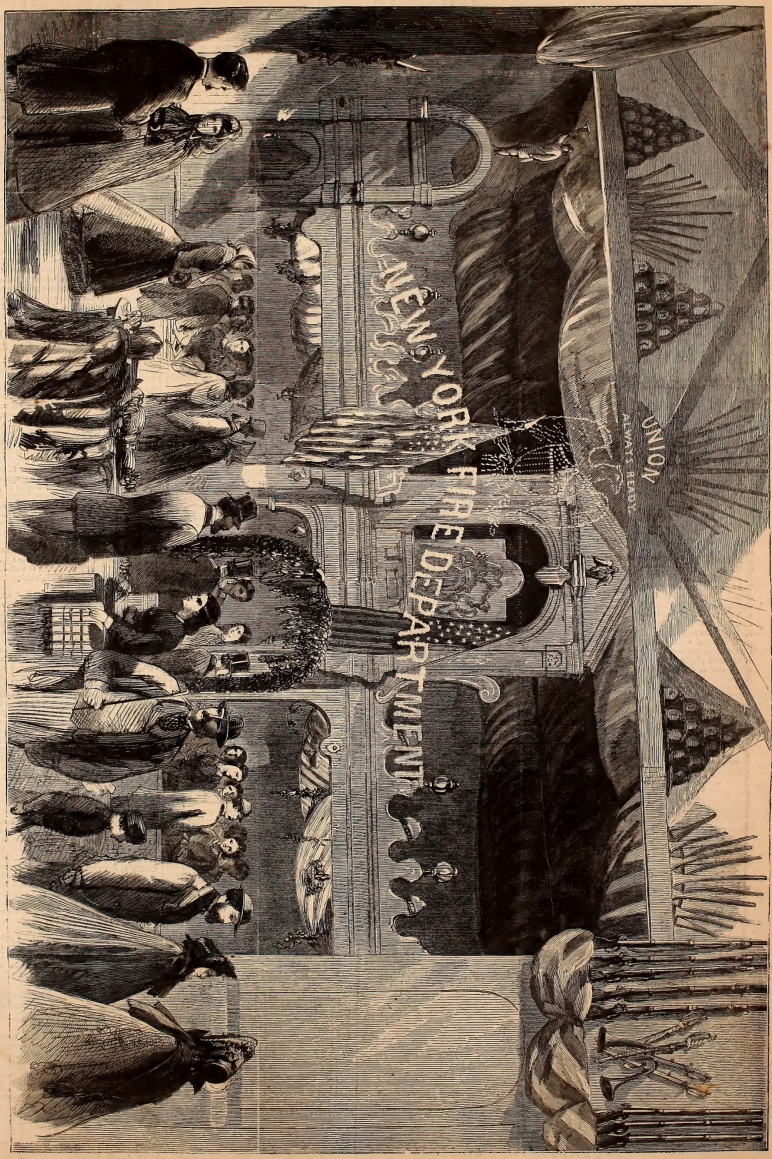
CONGRESS.

SENATE.—March 30. Several bills were reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, dealing with details of the claim of Mrs. Mary Throckmorton for compensation for six negroes enlisted in her name, which the District Commissioners of Emancipation could not allow, owing to refusal by the rebel army. Steps are taken in an officer in the Union army—Mr. Harlan reported a bill to add a railroad in Iowa, from Burlington to the forty-third parallel to a point on the Missouri River, with the Sioux City and Pacific, and Hannibal, Missouri, and one from Sioux City to Mankato, giving five alternate sections per mile.—Mr. Wilkinson from Minn. a bill to provide a temporary Government for the Territory of Montana.—Mr. Wade from Ohio, amendment to the 10th section, striking out the words "three white male inhabitants," and inserting "the same number of persons that entitle States, or those who shall have declared their intention to become such." The following resolutions were then taken up, to be proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery.—Mr. Wade from Ohio, a resolution to instruct the Committee on Territories to make a speedy against the measure.—March 31. The House bills for the admission of Nebraska into the Union, Territory of Montana was taken up, the pending question being to strike out the 10th section. The 10th section, defining the qualifications of voters and eligibility to office of rebel Territory. The amendment was rejected—27 to 17. After a brief debate the bill was passed—29 to 8.—Mr. Sumner introduced a joint resolution for the joint resolution to amend the Constitution to prohibit slavery. Mr. Sumner offered the following amendment to the resolution: "That no negro, or person whose mother or grandmother is or was a negro, shall be held to service or labor, or be liable to any civil or military office, or any place of trust or profit under the United States."—The bill was called for Yeas and Nays, but no quorum voted.—April 1. Mr. Wade introduced a bill to fix the terms of courts to be held at Carson City, Nevada, and Dallas City, Oregon, and to extend the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Island, Oregon, instead of an assay office at Dalles City. Its consideration was taken up and passed.—Mr. Howard endeavored to obtain the floor to get up his resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information in regard to the churches and property of Christian denominations taken possession of by or under the control of the military authorities of the army. Several Senators desired to get up other bills, but Mr. Howard, after a long debate, refused to withdraw it until Monday.—April 4. A resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to consider the expediency of so amending the Neutrality Laws as to prevent persons from being enlisted or commissioned within the neutrality to those which return the same, and to obtain the action of other Governments in the same manner.—Mr. Sumner reported a bill to establish a Bureau of Emancipation.—A bill for the relief of persons who have lost of claims for spoliation committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801.—Mr. Howard offered a joint resolution relation to the amount of five millions of dollars for damages to churches, hospitals, asylums, etc., destroyed by the French. It does not favor claims embraced in the Convention of 1831, nor those for which have been received the United States and Spain, nor those in the treaty of 1831 with France.—The House bill providing for the settlement of residents of one State into the regiments of other States was taken up. Mr. Sumner addressed the bill. Under it, he said, States unsuccessful in filling their quotas could go into the State to recruit, and persons of color who had been slaves to make up their deficiencies. To this he objected, as the objection, as the rebel Government were confounded and demoralize our army. Mr. Sherman also opposed the bill. Mr. Howard favored the bill. The passage would produce great mischief. Mr. Wilson argued in favor of the bill. Mr. Sumner moved to amend the bill of men for our armies from the States partly under rebel rule. The vote was reconsidered.—The joint resolution to amend the Constitution so as to abolish slavery was taken up, and Mr. Howe spoke in favor of the measure.—April 5. A bill for the collection of taxes in the insurrectionary districts, with amendments striking out the provision authorizing grants of forty-acre lots to soldiers, and that empowering the Tax Commissioners to sell lands condemned to be unfairly made, was reported.—Mr. Anthony offered a resolution for the appointment of two Justices of the Supreme Court and District Courts at the next session, if they should not be appointed.—Bill of the Supreme Court from $4000 to $6000, according to the length of the circuit.—Bill to add three-fourths of their salaries to Justices of the District Courts, provided such salaries shall not be less than $2000 each in cases where the service has exceeded fifteen years.—The joint resolution to amend the Constitution came up as the pending order. Mr. Johnson spoke with great force and eloquence in favor of the removal of slavery, which has produced so much mischief. Mr. Davis's amendment, that "no negro person whose mother or grandmother is or was a negro shall be a citizen of the United States, or be eligible to any civil or military office, or any place of trust or profit under the United States," was rejected, as were other amendments offered by Messrs. Saulsbury and Davis.

HOUSE.—March 30. The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Senate's army bill, and a number of amendments to the thirtieth section, principally as to the rate of bounty, were adopted. The House then proceeded to consider the bill for the reconstruction of States established by the President, Mr. Ashley advocating its passage.—March 31. Mr. Stanton reported the Senate bill, which was passed, for the appointment of officers in the Department of Indian Affairs in California.—The House then resumed the consideration of the bill, defining the Delaware and Delaware Bay Railroad to be a Post and Military Road.—Mr. Kelley offered a resolution declaring that no contract was passed over, and the House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill. Mr. Stevens offered a substitute for the thirtieth section, with a view to restore the 7 per centum interest on bonds, economy, etc., for Canada, he having the day before reduced it to six, which was carried by 78 to 57.—April 1. The effect, restores the original thirtieth section, which provides that every association which shall receive any deposit or any loan or discount made, or upon any note, bill of exchange, or other evidence of debt, bearing interest or upon which interest is received in advance, or any banking, receiving, or charging a greater rate of interest than seven per centum per annum, exclusive of the entire interest. Those paying it may recover back by an action of debt the amount of interest thus paid. The section designating the places of redemption of the compound notes, viz.: Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Albany, Buffalo, Detroit, Pittsburg, Albany, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Portland, and Buffalo. Mr. Eldridge moved an amendment, providing that the notes be redeemed in gold. No further action was taken on the bill.—April 2. Mr. Stevens asked leave to introduce a bill regulating commerce among the several States. It declares that no person shall be required to obtain a license to transport freight and passengers from one State to another. The object is to do away with the tax system now existing. Objection was raised.—Mr. Blaine introduced a bill to prohibit the exchange by loan of State certain sum of money expended by them in raising, organizing, and equipping troops for the Union army. It provides for a Board of three Commissioners to hold sessions in the several States, to audit the claims, and issue certificates due the States, towns, cities, and counties. The bill was referred.—Mr. Pendleton presented a bill fixing the rate of preventing collisions on the water, by signals, by whistles, etc. Mr. Pendleton introduced a bill to amend the act to contribute toward a uniform international code of rules. The impression of these rules had for a long time been felt by the parties interested, but up to this time none had been established by the authority of the United Kingdom.—A bill regulating the advancement and tonnage of ships and vessels of the United States was passed.—A bill was passed providing that the name of the Collection District of Cape Vincent be changed to that of Clayton.—Another bill was passed exempting from the payment of tonnage duties vessels of the State of Maine, salt-boats, freighters, scows, and other crafts without masts, and confined to the waters of the Atlantic boards of the State.—It reported a joint resolution to give notice of terminating the Reciprocity Treaty with Canada at the end of twelve months from the expiration of ten years from the time the treaty went into operation.—The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the National Bank bill. The Committee struck out the words of 64 against 59, the ninth section, which provided that no association shall pay out or put in circulation any notes which the banking association not authorized by this act.—April 4. The House resumed the consideration of the National Bank bill, and the Senate bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 29. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—April 30. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 1. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 2. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 3. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 4. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 29. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 30. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—May 31. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 1. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 2. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 3. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 4. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 29. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—June 30. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 1. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 2. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 3. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 4. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 29. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 30. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—July 31. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 1. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 2. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 3. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 4. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 29. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 30. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—August 31. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 1. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 2. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 3. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 4. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 29. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—September 30. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 1. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 2. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 3. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 4. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 29. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 30. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—October 31. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 1. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 2. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 3. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 4. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 5. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 6. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 7. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 8. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 9. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 10. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 11. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 12. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 13. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 14. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 15. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 16. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 17. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 18. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 19. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 20. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 21. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 22. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 23. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 24. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 25. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 26. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 27. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the duties on imports, and to establish the Treasury Department.—November 28. The House took up the bill to amend the act to regulate the



PICTURE-GALLERY OF THE FAIR, FOURTEENTH-STREET BUILDING.—[See Page 245.]



THE FIRE DEPARTMENT IN THE FAIR.—[See Page 246.]

THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.

THE METROPOLITAN FAIR, which opened on the 4th instant, is in every respect a demonstration worthy of the large-hearted and patriotic benevolence of the commercial metropolis of the country. The opening display, in which all the military in the city participated, was magnificent attracting universal attention. For the most part, business throughout the city was suspended, and the streets were in holiday attire, gay with flags and banners and great throngs of enthusiastic citizens. The military procession embraced some 8000 infantry, with 2000 cavalry and artillery. The United States troops were commanded by Major-General DIX, and the Volunteer and State militia by General SANFORD. The display on Broadway was in every respect the finest which has been witnessed since the reception of the PRINCE OF WALES some years ago.

The inauguration ceremonies took place on Monday evening. After prayer by Rev. Dr. WILLIAM ADAMS, and the singing of the Star-Spangled Banner, and the Army Hymn, composed by OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, General DIX, on behalf of the Gentlemen's Executive Committee, formally presented the contents of the Fair to the Ladies' Committee. In his remarks, which were warmly applauded, he complimented in high terms the zeal and enthusiasm displayed by the women of the North in their labors for the relief of our suffering soldiers. Mr. JOSEPH H. CHOATE, in behalf of the ladies, responded to the speech of General DIX; after which the ceremonies were concluded by the singing of "Old Hundred" by the entire audience.

We give in this number a series of admirable views of some of the principal features of the Fair, together with an illustration of the grand opening, and a diagram showing the location of every department and section of the main building on Fourteenth Street.

THE GRAND HALL,

as we give it on pages 248 and 249, presents aspects under which can be fully appreciated only when seen from the point from which our artist has made his sketch. The whole interior is one mass of decorations and beautiful displays of tasteful ingenuity. Every available inch of space is filled, and every branch of business is represented in the goods offered on exhibition and sale. An inventory merely of the articles on exhibition in this building would occupy pages of our paper.

Among the many pleasant and attractive features of the Fair, none probably surpasses

THE FLORAL DEPARTMENT

(illustrated on page 241), which occupies the centre of the principal building. The structure is of elliptical form, about twenty-five feet in length, and twenty-eight in diameter. The symmetrical pillars are wreathed with flowers, and moss, and evergreens, while flowers of every hue and name are again trained up on spiral wreaths, blending most tastefully with the darker tracery of the chimney. The show-counters stand about three feet from the ground, and are handsomely paneled. From these counters double rows of columns ascend to the dome, which is one mass of evergreens and floral decorations. A smaller temple—a Temple of Liberty—surmounts the larger one, and this is reached by a spiral staircase, which is but one path of flowers. On the upper fence-work of the temple the names of the most glorious battles of the war are represented, that of Gettysburg being prominently represented. The names of other battles follow in the order of prominence, as follows:

GETTYSBURG. ANTIETAM.
FORT DONELSON. VICKSBURG.
FORT HUDSON. NEW ORLEANS.
FORT ROYAL. ROANOKE.
CHANCELLORSVILLE. CHATTANOOGA.

The names are wrought with different-colored immortelles, Gettysburg being in crimson flowers, Vicksburg red, Antietam blue and white, Roanoke yellow and white, etc.

THE FINE DEPARTMENT,

illustrated on page 245, occupies the northeastern corner of the main building. The stand is 60 feet in length, and is covered with a canopy of flags reaching to the roof of the building. An ornamental front of exquisite design hangs down to within six feet of the counter. The apex of the front is ornamented with hooks, ladders, brass pipes, lanterns, and hose, and arranged in such a manner as to represent the rising sun. Underneath is the motto "Union," constructed of gas pipes, which is lighted at night, and produces a brilliant effect. A large transparency overhangs the counter, and at night attracts great attention. Immediately over the centre of the counter is an extensive panel containing the coat of arms of the State of New York in zinc relief. On each side hang signal lights of the various steam-engines set between shields bearing the names of the principal battles in which the Fire Zouaves were engaged—"Antietam," "Gettysburg," "Fair Oaks," and "Malvern Hill," overhanging the counter to the north, and "New Orleans," "Port Hudson," "Vicksburg," and Chattanooga to the south. This department is crowded with every variety of rare and costly offerings. The arrangement was made under the direction of Mr. CHARLES MELLEN, and reflects the highest credit on his taste and skill.

THE PICTURE-GALLERY,

Of which we give a view on page 244, is an elegant witness of the wealth, magnificence, and progress in art and refinement of the greatest city of the Western continent. The upper division of the main hall—by far the largest—is devoted to the more massive of oil-paintings, of immense value, lent by citizens for the whole period of the exhibition. These paintings are all carefully labeled with the subject of the work, the party to whom each at present belongs, and the artist whose brush produced it. The value of these paintings alone exceeds $400,000. Among the paintings exhibited are LEUTZE'S "Washington crossing the Delaware;" CHURCH'S "Heart of the Andes;" BIERSTADT'S "Rocky Mountains;" HUNTINGTON'S "Mercy's Dream;" CROWNINSHIELD'S "Indian Summer," with others of the old and modern masters. The collection of engravings in the lower section of the upper gallery embraces selections from the galleries of GOUPIL & Co. The photographic section includes photographs of our most eminent men. Among others the following are conspicuous: A fine photograph of Secretary STANTON. Portrait of Secretary WELLES. Portraits of Generals GILLMORE, SHERIDAN, SLOCUM, HALLECK, CUSTER, DE TROBRIAND, MEAGHER, and PLEASANTON, and groups of American, English, French, Italian, and Russian sailors.

Every visitor to this Department will carry away with him higher estimates of the beautiful, and a keener appreciation of exalted man's in ennobling and purifying human thought and life.

THE NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT,

presented on page 252, is eminently creditable to the loyal men and women of that State, who for weeks have labored with unwearied enthusiasm in preparing for this event. The arrangement of the Department, which was under the direction of Cropsey, the painter, who gave himself for a fortnight to the work, is at once tasty and effective, while the goods on exhibition embrace a vast variety of offerings, representing almost every department of production and home manufacture. This Department occupies a space of 90 feet on the northwest end of the wing toward Fifteenth Street; over the whole the name of the State spans a large portion of the wall, the letters being in the natgeal colors, red, white, and blue, and arranged in segment form. Under this is a large American eagle bearing the shield of the United States in his talons, and surrounded by a multitude of flags artistically arranged. Under this, and over the tent occupied by the Soldiers' Department, is another shield, upon which the arms of the State are depicted, and on both sides are hung tablets with the names of the counties inscribed upon the blue ground. American streamers float between. In the corner at the extreme right is the Cockloft Summer House—a fac-simile of the original, which LEWIS and FAUGERO have celebrated in their "Salmagundi"—and at the extreme left an Alhambra, the intermediate space being occupied by numerous tasteful flowering fair seasons, in which goods appropriate to those seasons are sold. The Cockloft Summer House is adorned by some picturesque embellishments, including a little garden with plants from the place where the original stood (at Newark, New Jersey), and some very fine Sunny Jim. Inside this house are a great variety of memorials, including a table upon which Mr. IRVING wrote.

In the Square Buildings

THE CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT

is one of the most interesting features. The department is handsomely decorated, and has an immense assortment of toys, baby-frames, musical instruments, rocking-horses, baby-houses, fruits, confectionery, etc., making it a bazaar, a museum, and a curiosity shop all in one. This department occupies the eastern end of the building. A platform advantageously situated, and crammed with banners and paintings, affords the necessary conveniences for tableaux, concerts, and other entertainments given by the children. No visitor to the Fair should fail to look in upon the little folks, and participate in the joy of their carnival.

Another department in the Union-Square Buildings,

THE KNICKERBOCKER KITCHEN,

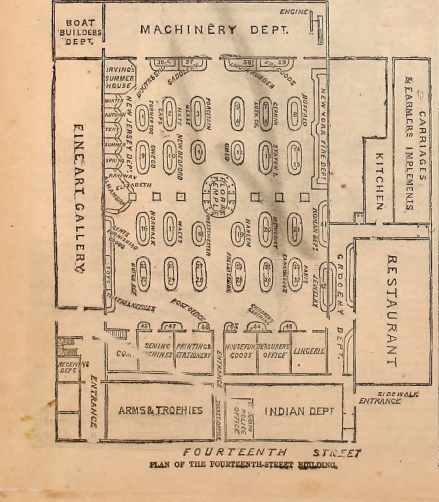
attracts special attention. All the appointments of the Kitchen are of the antique pattern, not excepting the chimney ornament, in the person of an old negro, who discourses sweet tunes from a violin for all who care to hear it. The wood-fire burning on the hearth—the old crane and pot hanging over the flame—the tea-chests on the mantle shelf—the deal dresser scrubbed into whiteness—the old crockery cracked and marked with the wear of a hundred years—the long low settees—the old bed with its curious coverlet—all remind the spectator of the time when the Knickerbockers reigned supreme through the length of Manhattan. The meals, too, spread on the Kitchen tables, are precisely such as the fathers sat down to daily in the olden time.

THE INTERNATIONAL DEPARTMENT

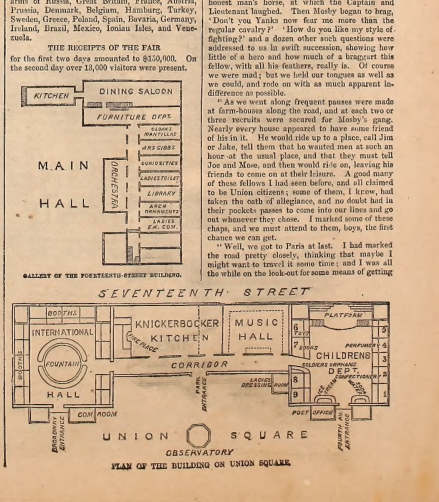
is one of the largest in the Fair, all nations being represented. Upon the window-screens are the arms of Russia, Great Britain, France, Austria, Prussia, Denmark, Belgium, Hamburg, Turkey, Sweden, Greece, Poland, Spain, Bavaria, Germany, Ireland, Brazil, Mexico, Ionian Isles, and Venezuela.

THE RECEIPTS OF THE FAIR

for the first two days amounted to $150,000. On the second day over 13,000 visitors were present.



PLAN OF THE FOURTEENTH-STREET BUILDING.



GALLERY OF THE FOURTEENTH-STREET BUILDING.

PLAN OF THE BUILDING ON UNION SQUARE.

CORPORAL SIMPSON'S STORY.

"IT was a grand ride and adventure—that we had last week."

The boys drew closer to the fire; they knew my story was worth hearing, and, lighting their pipes, got ready to listen.

"Yes, a right jolly ride! You remember, boys, that on the 25th of March Captain Gere, of the Griswold Light Cavalry—you have fought at their side more than once—was sent out with a hundred or so of men to the neighborhood of Berryville and Winchester on a scout. Well, we encamped at Millwood, a straggling sort of place, you remember, about seven miles from Berryville. After the fires were built, rations not being over-plenty, Dick Weatherbee, sergeant, private Harry Johnson, and myself determined to indulge in a little foraging on our own account, and in prosecuting our laudable purpose went some two miles from camp to a farmhouse, where we ordered supper from an old woman, apparently the only person on the premises. She didn't seem to care about giving us what we wanted, but we sat down resolutely to wait, engiving her to understand that we meant to stay, until our wants were supplied; and so at last she went about preparing us a meal. She moved very slowly, however, and seemed feverish and uneasy, as if she was waiting for something she did not wish us to know about. From finally, however, the supper was ready, and we were just sitting down at the table, when we were treated to a 'surprise' we had not bargained for. Suddenly several revolvers advanced threateningly into the room, each having a shaggy fellow behind it with 'shoot' in his eyes, and a firm set about his mouth that warned us that pleasant, considering how close the pistols were to our heads. Now you know, boys, I'm not a coward, but I didn't like the situation just at that moment. I recognized the foremost of the three who came into the room as Mosby; and I knew he was not apt to care where his bullets hit; and besides, the fellow at my Lieutenant who accompanied him did not look as if they were going to waste our wits in words or powder. Upon their demand, therefore, that we should surrender, we signified immediate assent, but not without a good deal of fuss, for we knew Mosby, which seemed all the more tempting now that they were beyond our reach.

Our surrender, however, was any thing but depressed. Indeed Le was in the jolliest humor possible, and indulged in all sorts of jokes at our expense. We didn't, however, take any of our wits in answer. We had been in worse scrapes a great deal than that, and we did not altogether despair of getting out some way or other.

"After helping himself to what supper he wanted Mosby told us we must march back to Paris, where he had his head-quarters, and we accordingly went out, watched by the Lieutenant, to get our horses, which were tied near the house. Johnson, somehow, managed to give the Lieutenant the slip, and, instead of getting his horse, hid in a haystack, and so got off. Mosby not daring to wait and hunt him up lest some of our fellows should pounce down upon him.

"Well, Weatherbee and I mounted, and under strict guard we started for Paris, ten or twelve miles, you remember, away. The ride was by no means a short one. Mosby constantly rode up with questions. 'Were you with Colonel Cole when I thrashed him at Upperville? was one of his first questions, to which, of course, he got no satisfactory response. Then, after a while, he asked, 'What do you think of my gray nag—I took him from a Yankee Lieutenant.' Weatherbee said that wasn't the only instance of a rascal riding on an honest man's horse, to which the Captain and Lieutenant laughed. Then Mosby began to brag, 'Don't you Yanks now fear me more than the regular cavalry?' 'How do you like my style of fighting?' and a dozen other such questions were addressed to us in swift succession, showing how little of a hero and how much of a braggart this fellow, with all his feathers, really is. Of course we were mad; but we held our tongues as well as we could, and rode on with as much apparent indifference as possible.

"As we went along frequent passes were made at farm-houses along the road, and at each two or three recruits were secured for Mosby's gang. Nearly every house appeared to have some friend of his in it. He would ride up to a place, call Jim or Jake, tell them that he wanted men at such an hour at the usual place, and then they must tell Joe and Mose, and then would ride on, leaving his friends to come on at their leisure. A good many of these fellows I had seen before, and all claimed to be Union citizens; some of them, I knew, had taken the oath of allegiance, and no doubt had in their pockets passes to come and go and go out whenever they chose. I marked some of these chaps, and we must attend to them, boys, the first chance we can get.

"Well, we got to Paris at last. I had marked the road pretty closely, thinking that maybe I might want to travel it some time; and I was all the while on the look-out for some means of getting away. The chance came before I expected it. Mosby, as we came up to the house where he had his head-quarters, dismounted and went in, leaving his pistols in the holsters. How my heart fluttered when I saw that! My horse stood close by Mosby's, and his pistols were almost within my reach. But there sat the Lieutenant with his revolver in his hand, ready to shoot me down at the first impudent movement. Caution was necessary. So, leisurely getting down, I pretended to tie my horse. As I fumbled about the bridle I saw out of one eye that the Captain was moving off, to look, I was sure, for an Orderly to take the horses. Mosby's horse was between the Lieutenant and myself. Here was a chance: if I could only get the pistols, I might fight my way out. Suddenly I put my foot into the stirrup of Mosby's saddle, and had pistol in each of the shooting-irons. But the Lieutenant saw the movement and fired. Fortunately his aim was bad, and he missed me. In an instant I had one of the pistols, and, aiming straight at the fellow's heart, shot him dead. Heavens! how excited I was! But I wasn't out of the woods yet. The Captain, hearing the discharges, turned round instantly and fired; but he too shot wide of the mark. Mosby, all excitement, rushed to the door, shouting,

"! What's all this infernal row about?"

"We were too polite, boys, to swear at him in return, as I just leveled at him as he stood in the door, sending a bullet close to his ear, and making him dodge out of sight. Then what time we were! But we didn't leave without a benediction. As we flew away Weatherbee shouted,

"How do you like our style of fighting, Colonel Mosby?"

"And I sent back this parting cry:

"'Come and see us, boys, we're of the New York Twenty-first.'

"So, lads, we got away, leaving one vacancy among Mosby's officers, and carrying with us Lieutenant Mosby's flag, saddle, pistols, and over-coat. You will find them all in the tent there, except the horse—he is out cooler in the woods eating Union provender, on which, if Mosby told the truth, he was brought up.

"Oh, good thing came out of our capture. Mosby, as we learned during our ride, and from his talks with the farmers, intended to attack Captain Gere at daylight, hoping to surprise and cut him to pieces. Of course we spoiled that nice little plan by getting in time to give the Captain warning of what was going on, and enable him to make preparations for defense. Mosby evidently thought better of it, and didn't come."

Corporal Simpson's true story, told round the camp fire, has a sequel. His regiment were so pleased with his exploit that they have determined to buy from the Government the horse, arms, and equipments he captured, and restored them to the Yankee corporal who beat Mosby out of his pet nag.

OUT OF THE DEPTHS.

A LONG merry shout broke the stillness of the autumn afternoon as a troop of children came thronging out from the brown school-house among the maples, and then, breaking into groups of two or three, scattered along the worn wood-paths to their homes.

School was out, and yet the mistress lingered within, still seated in her chair, with listless, drooping figure, and hand shading her brow.

How those weary eyes had watched the lagging hours of that long day—how miserably long it had been to her! Never had her pupils seemed so restless and troublesome, never her calling so irksome and distasteful; the reins of authority had lain loosely in her nerveless fingers, for thought and purpose and impulse had all that day refused to exert themselves, while in her woman's heart Love and Duty waged fierce and doubtful strife.

As she sat there now so dreamily, a shadow crossed the sunny floor, and Lois Dense sprang up with a little cry, half of alarm and half relief. For the last, tremulous little hands were clasped in those of the tall young soldier standing near her.

A regretful, passionate wail broke from her lips:

"Oh! Allyn, my Allyn, why must you go? All I have to care for me in this bleak, bitter world, I have been thinking of it all day long, and indeed I can not have it so."

The maid that had been gathering so long over the violet eyes melted into tears, falling thick and fast over the flushed cheeks.

Allyn Winthrop could only draw the poor throbbing temples down to his breast, and whisper sweet words of love to soothe and comfort her; smoothing the rippling fair hair with touches that, in shades of grief, perplexity, and doubt chased each other over his fine, firm face.

That was indeed a hard struggle that had dispossessed her gentle soul of its life-long patience and repose—its shrinking sensitiveness, made her so different from his quiet love, his shy little Lois. How his heart still thrilled with that passionate cry, "Allyn, my Allyn!" She, his little betrothed, who scarce ever whispered a caressing word, though he knew she loved him dearly.

A little while, and the tempest of grief had robbed itself to repose, and the tenderly patient look came back to her eyes, though still the mouth now and then quivered, like a little grieved child's.

The clock ticked on with monotonous drone in the school-room, and from the pine table there floated up sweet odors of the blossoms and the maple boughs brought her as fresh love-offerings every morning. Ragged, in vases of broken tea-cups, on either side her piles of books, they were breathing out to her their fragrant hearts. Allyn's arm was about her, and his cool, soothing fingers still stroked her hair. How naughty and rebellious had she been all day! Those tears had eased her heart-ache, and she could think now that every one was very kind to her in her lonely orphanage, and even try to smile at her lover's cheery talk. The natural buoyancy and hopefulness of youth were coming back, and she was ready to talk with him quietly and almost cheerfully of their uncertain future. They even found themselves drawing vague yet delicious pictures of happy days when, peace returned, their lives, which were now to be so widely leveled apart, should be knit into one forever. Then they dwelt with kindling enthusiasm upon the Great Cause, to which they had both given all their hopes and aspirations; and while Allyn spoke with proud energy of the certain triumph of the Republic, Lois felt all the mists of doubt and fear vanishing away before the glad flame of patriotism, and herself lifted above all selfish sense of grief and loss, out of the shadows, to those shining heights of self-abnegation and devotion where his firm feet trode.

The fresh breeze came through the open door, freighted with the fragrance of the autumn woods and pleasant dreamy sounds, the lowing of distant cattle, a song from the village, and the clear note of a bell. On the verge of the horizon the golden sunset light bellows broke in surge and foam of gold and snowy splendor and waves of ruby light, rolled back athwart the sky, leaving a fine dusky purple room with crimson glories till it seemed beautiful in their eyes.

Presently Lois unlocked a drayer in her table, and drew out a little worn volume.

"I want to give you this, Allyn," she said, very softly, "because I value it more than any thing else I have. It was my mother's Prayer-book, and I her only child. Sometimes when I was very sad and beautiful Litany, when her heart was almost done throbbing here. I have nothing more precious to give you," she said, looking up with a sad, tender smile.

The light was fading now, the shadows falling among the maples, and the room was growing dusky and chill. Oh! sweet parting hours, why must they end? Allyn wrapped the shawl carefully around her slight form, and drew her to his side, the darkening school-house, wandering down toward the village. Deeper shadows drifted down into the maples, and one by one golden stars stole out, and looked down upon them with loving eyes.

"Lois, when I am gone you will go often to see Hannah, will you for my sake? I know that she is moody and petulant at times; but I am sure she loves you, as who does not? and she has been a kind, faithful sister to me. Ruth, too—poor, sensitive girl!—seems lonely and depressed, and since I will never away it has been my task to comfort and cheer her."

Tender, parting bequests, how fervently little Lois accepted them, how sacredly she kept her in a great loneliness was rising in strong, rebellious throbs!

Again she bent her head to listen to the low notes.

"And you, my darling, when Hope better than my pitiful counsel, tells you that even Honor and Life He will surely have you in His holy keeping, and love and comfort you always, dear Lois."

Another long silence, and they had reached the low red house where the young schoolmistress lodged. At the gate they paused. A long, clinging pressure of hands, kisses, and kiss—a broken "good-by"—and they had parted.

"Must other women's hearts yet break to keep the Cause from falling?

God pity our brave lovers, then, who face the battle's blaze,

And pity wives in widowhood. But is it unavailing?

O Lord, give Freedom first, then Peace, and unto Thee be praise."

The autumn had passed, and the bleak, early winter had set in. Fierce northern blasts swept through the leafless woods, and scattered with their scarlet banners of the maples, and beating in fitful gusts against the brown school-house, where Lois still gathered her little flock of pupils, and patiently strove to guide their tasks. But it was hard to be cheerful, now that her letters, those white-winged messengers from the front, were only a few a day irregular. She knew that Allyn's regiment had marching orders; that an engagement might be brought on every hour; that the Rebel forces were clouded her young life. She could only pray and wait.

So the days were on till near Christmas; then, the children dismissed for their holiday-week, she would enjoy a little rest and quiet at home, and a little time to sit and dream of Allyn, or fashion with her swift, slender fingers little love-tokens, some words of cheer and hope, to send him in Hannah's waiting box of good things.

Christmas-eve. And there came to the village fateful tidings of fierce conflict and bloody defeat. They found their way into the village church where a group of laughing, chattering girls sat among piles of fragrant green wreaths, wreath and garland for font, and chancel, and column.

There came a hush upon them as they glanced at Lois, sitting a little apart in the shadow of a pillar. for Allyn's regiment had been in the fight. The light shone down on the pretty head bent gracefully over her work, the violet eyes, the delicate, patient face, and the parted girlish lips. The subtle, spicy aroma of the pine and hemlock seemed to steal back to last Christmas-tide, when Allyn and she had spent a short, bright afternoon in gathering leaves for this same pleasant task. Again she felt the fresh wind blowing on her face, felt the pressure of Allyn's strong arm as he bore her, half-frightened, half-laughing, through the tangled wood in search of laurel and ground-ivy, and the delicate rose-tint deepened in her cheek while she recalled the swift kiss Allyn had given her as she stood on tip-toe stretching up her arms for the dropping boughs.

The sudden stillness brought back her wandering thoughts. One of the girls crossed over and put a paper into her hands. Her eyes ran swiftly down the lists of killed and wounded. She gave a little sob of relief, "Not there; God be thanked!" Further on she read, "Missing: Private Allyn Winthrop."

"Oh, girls, I can not work any more to-night!" she said, and hastily left the church; then ran down the street to Hannah Winthrop's door.

Weeks passed by and no further tidings came. How the bitter tears would start when returning from her fruitless errand to post-office or newsdepot, or from searching Hannah's stern face with her wistful eyes and reading their answer, "No tidings!"

Poor little Lois! poor lonely child-heart! She had had no mother on whose kind breast she might sob out her love and sorrow; and day after day she must go through her humble tasks, though her heart was crushed with grief. Hannah was too stern to her at times—as kind as her hard nature would permit; yet she sometimes met the poor, sensitive girl with blunt words, and even bitter reproaches, when she was yearning for love and sympathy.

Thus it happened one night, when, through thickly falling snow, Lois had walked to Hannah's door only to find a fresh disappointment awaiting her. As she shivered over the bright hearth-blaze, Hannah stood looking on with slowly shaking head and gaze. Suddenly she spoke, fiercely: "Yes, Lois Deane, it is just a piece of your work that Allyn Winthrop is dead and lying, filling his head, as you did, with your fine nonsense about duty and patriotism. What is it—I want you to answer me—more plainly his duty to stay at home and care for his own kith and kin?"

No response came from the shrinking girl, only the poor head drooped more meekly.

"Yes," continued Hannah, with fresh vehemence, as if stung by her silence—"yes, you knew when he had made up his mind to enlist, you could have stayed him if you had lifted as much as a finger. Oh! I believe you cared for him in your way."

Poor Lois, that last thrust was too cruel. Not care for him! How could she say that? Merciful God, how long, how long, the poor, friendless girl felt a sense of utter desolation creeping over her. Those harsh words, coming from Allyn's sister, pierced her heart like a sword-thrust. Allyn, Allyn, the beloved one, all her world, and the only light for her sunless life, dead, perhaps! Ah, she was desolate indeed!

"Mercy on us," cried Hannah; "the child is fainting! Lois, Lois—no, what have I done!" Here, Ruth, Ruth, quick!"

"Oh, Hannah, what have you been saying to her?" cried Ruth, kneeling to help her about the unconscious form, now stretched prone upon the floor.

"Oh, sister, my heart was so bitter with sorrow!" Hannah answered, as they bore Lois to the low settle before the fire. Then, "If she'll forgive me, she shall never hear a harsh word from my lips again."

Long and tenderly the two sisters bathed the pallid temples and slender wrists, dropping pitying tears upon the little pinched face, in which now, as it lay there as limp as death, they could see the tongues of a grief of whose intensity they had no conception.

But consciousness at last returned, and it was pitiful to hear the plaintive moan which rose to her lips as she slowly unclosed her eyes.

"O Hannah, Hannah, I could only die!"

Thenceforth Hannah would not hear of Lois's leaving her. "She should stay and take Allyn's place. She would try by teaching for that winter, for she wasn't fit for any thing, and must rest and get recruited up."

She was, indeed, too weak and ill now for any work, and she gratefully accepted Hannah's offer. In truth she would not have been denied. So the second year passed by while Hannah grew to love her very dearly—she was so gentle, so grateful, and repaid affection with such sweet interest.

Lois found it more pleasant to be a patient child; it was to her a new and delicious life, and she began to grow strong, and almost happy again.

She was sitting quite alone one afternoon, Hannah and Ruth being out on some household errand, when she heard a knock at the door. Was it a veritable premonition of some great evil that drove the blood suddenly to her heart? Faint and trembling she opened the door. There stood a soldier, brownfaced, and travel-stained.

"Does Hannah Winthrop live here?"

Lois tried to speak, but could only bend her head in response.

"Is she at home?"

"No!" was the inaudible.

The soldier looked at her steadily, and a grave gentleness overspread his face.

"Well, perhaps you will be good enough to give her this. I picked it up on the ground after the battle, and saw her name in it. I had heard him speak of his sister Hannah, and I thought I would take the trouble to hunt her up, as she might value it. I suppose it was a comrade to do as much for me if my time should come."

The soldier handed Lois a package, and, with a respectful touch of his cap, was gone, leaving the poor girl clutching the door-post for support, for every thing had reeled and turned black before her as she received the mysterious little square parcel.

Then she turned with tottering steps to the room, and sank down upon a chair, feeling a sickness at her heart she had never known before, for now the dread certainty of that she had only feared before came crushingly upon her.

Pallid and white, she sat there when the sisters returned, and silently she held out the package to Hannah. Her wistful eyes watched the trembling fingers as they untied the wrappings and brought to view a little book—her Prayer-book, torn by a bullet, and stained with blood.

Lois rose from her chair and staggered forward. "O Hannah, give it to me—it is mine!" pleaded the quivering lips.

It was not until she had reached her own room that she ventured to examine that dread souvenir. No tears came to her hot eyes as she turned the stained pages, and her temples throbbed with pain. Oh! bitter, bitter grief and loss. The bullet, as it had crashed through the pages, had marred that sublime petition in the Litany in which her full heart had so often and fervently been lifted up, at church, in her lonely walks, and in the silence of night at her quiet bedside:

"From battle, and murder; and from sudden death, Good Lord deliver us!"

Vain, vain and ineffectual prayer. It could not shield from the death-shot the heart she loved so truly. Oh, what was there left to live or to pray for any longer? As the eyes fixed upon the book mechanically traced the page, another petition caught their gaze,

"By Thy Cross and Passion—"

Oh sinful and rebellious heart, was there not One made whose sufferings were more sacrificial even than? She felt this even from the depths of her grief and heavy heart. Now came sweet and soothing tears. She would look up to Him, the merciful One, the Healer, and ask Him to pity and sustain her. And then she remembered Allyn's parting words—that God would love and comfort her. She would strive not to sink under her terrible grief. There were other bereaved hearts in the world. She would live for them. And then there came flowing back to her memory a fragment of a hymn her mother used to sing, in those far-off days when, a lighthearted child, she sported in safety and sorrow or loss:

"What if thou always sufferest tribulation,
What if thy Christian warfare never cease,
Soon thou shalt gain the spoils from the oppressor,
There thou shalt find thine everlasting peace!"

Perhaps the women who then wept in the solemn, quiet room—even with strong, passionate cries and sobs, and the other with plaintive, broken moanings—divined, when the three came together again, the sorrow of Lois's quiet repression; but it is certain that they both turned to her for consolation. It was strange to see Hannah leaning on this gentle child, who, strong in the strength of the Everlasting Arms, was now the pillar of the household.

So Lois lived on, finding comfort in pouring balm into other wounded hearts. She thought only of After all, life is short, and heaven a long, blissful rest.

Lois began her school again, gathering together her scattered flock, and teaching them with new love and skill. At home she bore with the nevervarying patience Hannah's now-returning querulousness, and strove to infuse into their hard and meagre life some of the beauty and fragrance of her own. Poor, pining Ruth, too, who grieved so unceasingly over her lost lover, found Lois's loving in the church-yard, and her husband away at the war, was an object of her kindest attention. All these helped to keep her mind from brooding on her own great grief, and she thanked God for this power to work and care for others.

Passion-Week, with all its gloom and sorrow, had gone by, and the happy Easter morning dawned fair and beautiful. Its warm, delicious sunshine flooded the church-with-in when Lois sang among the Sunday-school children, and filled her heart with something almost like gladness—certainly with grateful peace. The exquisite odors of Easter flowers—white lilies, jasmine, and violets, that her hands had helped to place around font and altar—seemed to float softly down upon her like the consecrated breath of martyrs and saints, once bowed in deathly anguish, now risen to life eternal and glory. The joyful notes of the organ joined the pure voices of the children as they soared upward in their Easter carol:

"Easter Day is come at last, Hallelujah!
Mournful Shadow of Lent no more can cast, Hallelujah!
Day to faithful hearts so dear
Was a feast all the year
Dawns so bright, and shines so clear, Hallelujah!

"Shame, and pain, and woe are fled, Hallelujah!
Glory crowns the wounded head, Hallelujah!
And the Lamb to triumph slain
Breaks the gate and bursts the chain,
Rising to an endless reign, Hallelujah!"

Bright tears stood in Lois's eyes, and sparkled on her fair cheek. And yet she felt so peacefully happy—as that adoring strain her soul had been lifted up above the cross and life of life. The music had ceased, the children passed out of the church, and Lois followed. It would be some time before she could sing; so she walked slowly home, and gained her own room so quietly that no one heard her. Here she pleased the quiet, neatly chamber seemed to her, with the bright morning sun shining in on the low walls, lighting up the rose pictures, and kissing the dark-brown little bud and blossom! She threw off shawl and bonnet, and sat down with her Bible on her knees. The Easter Collect was there but she could not read more fair, or pensive, or peaceful—

"Lois! O Lois! are you here, child? O Lois, do come quickly!"

The voice was Hannah's, and there was something in it that made Lois's heart stop beating, but not with dread.

"Don't faint, dear; don't be frightened!" hurriedly whispered Hannah, as the door sprang swiftly down the stairs. Lois only gave one look at Hannah's face, flushed with some great joy, and fell on to her knees, while her heart was lifted up with one prayer of thanksgiving.

After a while, when the tumult of joy which greeted the lost one's return had subsided, Allyn told them with his old, grave sweetness how it had happened that he was spared to them. The bullet aimed at his heart had only inflicted a severe wound, having spent its force on the book that lay in his breast; and so Lois's parting gift had saved his life. Then another shot came and struck his arm; and while striving to drag himself from the heat of the action he had swooned, and the book had fallen from his nerveless grasp. He told them of his sufferings those weary months he had been a prisoner, unable to send any news to those at home, and how at last, escaped from captivity, he had come back with feet arm and broken health, but with undaunted spirit, still firm and faithful in the Great Cause.

Then there came over all a silence deep and tender, out of whose stillness each heart was lifted up in a fervent though unuttered Easter psalm of praise and thanksgiving.

GRAND HALL OF THE FAIR BUILDING,

FOURTEENTH STREET.—[See Page 246.]

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

It is a sure sign when a man slips down in the mud that he has had a drop too much.

A soldier in one of the Kentucky camps, during one of the cold nights, says the motto with them is: "Unfed we sleep; divided we freeze!"

What language does an Arabian child speak before it can lie to its father?—ImmArabic, unquestionably.

"And ye have taken the tenderest pledges, have ye?" said somebody to an Irishman. "Indade I have, and am not ashamed of the same, either." "And did not Father Tim try to take a little wine for his stomach's sake?" "So he did; but being a true son Timothy, said there is nothing the matter with my stomach."

The editor who read the harder the work of driving my thing into it.

Miss Tompkins says that every unmarried lady of forty has passed the Cape of Good Hope.

An Irishman on board a vessel when she was on the point of foundering, being desired to come on deck as the ship was going down, replied that he had no wish to go on deck to "see himself drowned."

"Has your son Timothy failed?" inquired Gobbens of Stubbens, the other day. "Oh, not at all; he has only resigned over his property, and fallen back to a better position," was the reply.

An alderman of London once requested an author to write a speech for him to speak at Guildhall. "I must first clear with you," was the reply, "to see how you open your mouth, that I may know what words will fit it."

"Time works wonders," as the lady said when she got married after an eight years' courtship.

A lady, teaching her little daughter, four years old, pointed to something in the book, and asked, "What is that, my dear?" "Why, don't you know?" inquired the child. "Yes," said the mother; "but I wish to find out if you know." "Why," responded the little miss, "I do know." "Tell me, then, if you please," said the lady. "Why, my dear," was the reply, "it is no use my open your mouth, that I may know what words will fit it."

"Time works wonders," as the lady said when she got married after an eight years' courtship.

A lady, teaching her little daughter, four years old, pointed to something in the book, and asked, "What is that, my dear?" "Why, don't you know?" inquired the child. "Yes," said the mother; "but I wish to find out if you know." "Why," responded the little miss, "I do know." "Tell me, then, if you please," said the lady. "Why, my dear," was the reply, "it is no use my open your mouth, that I may know what words will fit it."

"Grandmother" said Ike, seriously, to Mrs. Partington, "have you heard the report that the Prince of Wales's baby has not got all its fingers at one end and toes at both his legs and arms?" "Law me!" exclaimed the old lady. "How how could he ever wield the sceptre of his empire, or what he ought to do?" Ike, however, pretended not to hear the remark, but began clapping the cat's windows as if he thought she took that fashionable dish not one that nobody has all his fingers on one hand, nor any body at both ends.

A tavern-keeper in Newark, when giving a New-Year's present to his "help," told one of his porters (a smart Yankee) that he was about the best man in the town, and therefore he should give him the most costly present. "Sure," said Patrick, "you've hit me with eight, I always name to do me duty." "I believe you," replied his employer, "and therefore I shall make you a present of all you have taken from me during the year." "Thank ye Honor!" said Pat: "and may all yer friends and acquaintances treat you as liberally."

A bold-fashioned fellow in the Southern States tells of a baker whose loaves had been growing "smaller by degrees, and beautifully less") who, when going his rounds to serve customers, rang a bell to draw out purchasers, when the lady within exclaimed, "Who's there?" and was answered by the baker." "Bread or no bread?" "To leave you bread." "Well, you needn't make such a fuss about it; I've brought the scythe!"

A cross story is told of an Irishman who went to see the gorilla in the cabinet of Amherst College. Not knowing the difference between that animal and the gentleman he remarked, on seeing it, "If they have got such soldiers as that off South, I don't going to war!"

It is said that the rebel guerrillas have killed and carried off seven hundred "bull dogs" on the Kansas border, first which proves conclusively, says an exchange, that the sword is mightier than the pen.

A poor fellow who pawned his watch says that he raised money with a lever.

Father O'Leary and Corran were cracking their jests at a dinner party one evening, as was their wont, when the celebrated advocate turned abruptly to the good Father, and said:

"I wish, O'Leary, that you had the keys of heaven."

"Why, Corran," asked the divine.

"Because you would then let me in," said the facetious counsellor.

"It would be much better for you, Corran," said Father O'Leary, "if you had the keys of the other place, because I could then let you out."

Before the days of the teetotalers, a neighbor of Mr. Bailey used to say to his children, at an early hour of the day, crawling slowly homeward on his hands and knees over his footy ground, "Why don't you get up and walk like Mr. Bisbee? Why don't you get up and walk?" said his neighbor one day, when he had hit it's so slightly that here that I'm a-afraid I shall b-b-break through!"

"If but a sheep," said old Meredith to his better half when he found the cattle is going crisky. For he's grimin' at the plow, he's grimin' at the barn, and he's grimin' at himself wherever he goes."

"Well, well now! You don't know nothin'. The critter's got a love-ticket."

A country schoolmaster once asked one of his pupils if he had ever seen an elephant's tail. "Yes, Sir, I have," showed the young hopeful. "Where?" inquired the schoolmaster, quite surprised at the boy's acquaintance with an elephant. "At the ropy, accompanied with a most provoking grin.

Stocks are subject to tumbles, but crockery dealers are the boys for tumblers.

When does a fine sentence assume a lady's name?—When it is reversed.

A drunkard leaning against a church railing, replied, in answer to a question from the sexton, that he didn't exactly belong to a church, but he was listening that way.

Money, like a boot, when it's tight, is extremely trying.

A SUPERIOR QUESTION.—Will our marry me?

A fool may commit an error, but it takes a wise man to err in it.

The young woman whose modesty was so shocked the other day at the mention of a fore idee has been deserted in the act of concealing the naked truth under a false hood.

A tourist stopping at a French hotel saw the phrase "fresh-water chicken" on the bill of fare. Desiring to know what this meant, he sent for a dish of water chicken. He tried it, and finding it excellent, recommended it to the rest of his party, ladies and all. All liked the dish wonderfully, and so became frog-salore without knowing it.

When is a lady like a spoon?—When she is in-de-ran-ging.

What is that which nobody wants, and nobody likes to lose?—A lawsuit.

ONE OF MANY.

"JOHN GARVEY, private, killed."

It was a short record—only a line in long columns of other lines; but to a home in the New Hampshire hills it came with the power of a great despair, making all else dull and null.

It was a right pleasant home, with all beautiful surroundings, and on the first August day, this brief announcement brought grief and desolation, as home made luminous by love, musical by the prattle of sweet-tongued children, holy by the voice of daily prayer—a home where bright eyes looked lovingly into life's depths of joy and hope, and brave hands performed with cheerful industry life's daily work. Vines clung tenderly around the low windows; flowers—scarlet, pink, and gold—fringed the pleasant walks; and all day long, from the open door to the door, birds sung their jocund airs in the drowsy ear of summer, dreaming amidst the glories of her own bounty.

But it was dark now; there were shadows on the faces which had been bright all the summer through, and those who sobbed and sighed were waiting through the prayers of the stricken mother of the fold, kneeling with the dear wondering ones around her.

"I am dying, comrade." The voice was faint, and had a moan in it. "I am dying; put your hand here on my heart. See! it has almost ceased to beat. Dying, dying!"

The hills and hills along the valleys the battle rolled with noisy grandeur. Through the thick smoke great flashes of smoke burst now and then with terrific explosions. Men in dense masses were lying there on the edge of the flaming field, was closed to the battle's tumult. In his ears softer voices were breathing; on his eyes a vaguer than battle glory was shining—shining from far-off New Hampshire hills, where the sun was lying like a benediction.

"Lift me up a little," the weak voice said; "so," and as he spoke his brightened for a moment with an expression of relief. Then—"Comrade, comrade, rade, in dear New Hampshire, and a wife and three little ones are waiting for me. I had hoped to go to them in a little while—my time would have been out in September. I have dreamed many a night, lying under the stars, of walking up the village street, and finding Tom and Kate and Susy waiting for me at the gate, their little faces all shine with joy. Comrade, comrade, are you sure you've been praying for me, counsels—praying with their little hands folded on their mother's knee; and the dark home all took up to the throne. Sure that thought, the sight of that picture lying in my heart. But all that is over now. I shall never sit again with them at the table, or have my little wife on my chicken round me on the grass-plat, under the poplars, at the door."

A spasm passed over the speech for a moment. His heart was bleeding as well as the wound in his side. Presently, as if God were holding up to him the past, he went on, dreamily:

"I remember well, comrade, the day when Jenny and I were married. It was in the old church on the village green—you will see it if you go there, with a grave-yard full of weather-beaten tombstones behind it. June was blushing in her sweet breath in at the windows, filling all the place with a delicious balm; friends and neighbors stood around; the white-haired old minister—he had christened us both when it was still summer with him—with a happy face knit us together; and then, with a benediction resting upon us, he bade us welcome to life. If but yesterday—we walked homeward, oh, how joyously, along the narrow by-path, under the apple-trees, whose boughs seemed to whisper benedictions on us as we went. Then, I remember, I took Jenny to my own little home, just on the village border, and we began life's work together. Comrade, our hearts, summer overhead, summer under our feet, were a-wing. Then, comrade, there came to us—a boy with his mother's eyes; and a new song was put into our mouths. How like a visceral seemed the baby-face that was nestled against my own. How we watched and loved our boy! How our hearts opened to receive his sisters when they came, coming to be with us. Comrade, comrade, comrade! We used to think, Jenny and I, as we looked into the faces of our darlings, that God must have missed a three of his brightest, when three were taken and watched down to our home."

The soldier paused again, tears on his cheek, his voice trembling. Then, "Comrade, comrade, comrade," he said, "I will soon be done. Our little ones grew up around us; we had to work harder, for Jenny and I, and the future brightened all our toil; we would have given our lives for them. If you have a child at home, comrade, you know what that feeling was. Well, we were happy, never dreaming of going apart, when, suddenly—your memory will help you here—the nation called, and a cry came for help, for men to defend the life of the nation. My grandfather, comrade, fought with Washington at Valley Forge, and I believe I have at home a sword he wore in those old days, and my blood leaped at that call. But for a day, a week, I thought my own life I could not give up, I thought, and leave my home, my wife, my little ones, so dear, so more than precious. But then, that home was worth while only as a part of it; what would become of my dear ones if chaos came? I felt we could not walk the streets, and lie down at night, with the confidence, the consolation, that we had a country, a Government, a law stronger than any mob, greater than the maddest fury of rebellion? I could not hold out against these thoughts, comrade; so at last I told Jenny all that was in my heart; and she, God bless her brave soul! said, firmly but with tears: 'Go, John—the Father will care for us; the country needs you; go!' And so, comrade—you see my picture. I was to have horses, parks, chateaux."

"Well, you have four horses as it is."

"Yes, and I put a pad-saddle on, and dance on them for a livelihood, en maillot. My beautiful husband allows me to become a horse-rider in a circus. I am the Honorable Lady Blunt."

"Not a bit of it. Your husband is not in the least a titled personage. He is a gentilhomme Anglais, rien de plus."

"He is a fool, or else il finira galérien," the lady returned, with concentrated bitterness. "Enfin, I am the wedded wife of Monsieur Francois Blanc. Monsieur, je suis votre très devoeée. Oh! he is an angel, my husband!"

"Mon gros m'a donné pour mari,
Mais comme il est laid, mon Dieu!
Plus sottly whistled between his teeth Monsieur Constant.

"Say rather un homme lâche—a prodigy of baseness. He married me by subterfuge and fraud."

"He did," Constant echoed, agreeing with the wild animal for once; "subterfuge and fraud are the words. Après."

"His millions turned out to be all in protestéd bills, long overdue, and for which he was responsible. He was reliable de dettes. He made me dance and sing at his infamous supper parties for the amusement of his vagabond aristocrat friends. It was I who paid the Champagne à ces beaux festins. Monsieur was not too proud to spend my salary month after month. Monsieur was unfaithful to me."

"Vous lui avez donné la réplique, ma belle."

"If he insulted me, neglected me, he only went on, seeming not to have heard the valet's scornful remark. "He beat me. Beat me, on occasion to parent or governess ever dared to lay a finger."

"Don't you remember the Bengleuse who used to ride on the dance to the sound of cor and a leather strap. You tried to strangle Blunt twice, to stab him once. You would have put something in his coffee had you dared."

"Only when the marks of his brutal hands were on my face, when the livid bar raised by his cravache was seen on my shoulders. Men are women who like to be beaten. He should have undermined me if he did not love he is un lâche."

"I know it was not a happy marriage. You flew out of the window soon after the honeymoon, and Blunt followed after it. You used to smash a great deal of crockery-ware in those days. Well, you would have your own way. It was the Honorable Lady Hotel Rataplan, and to asking milords to supper."

"He deprived me of my child—of my little Lily," the lady said, after a pause of passionate silence, during which her bosom heaved, and she panted as though want of breath, and not want of self-command, compelled her to a temporary surcease in invective.

"No," cried Constant, quietly. "You have nothing to do with it. You have no respect to the child. He didn't deprive you of it. I did."

"Monster!" cried the lady. Her looks, however, did not bear out the accusation of her words.

"Benefactor, rather. I did not choose to have the little one brought up in the midst of the pugs and mamma were making round it. If Blunt had been left alone with it, he is so lazy, insouciant, thoroughly selfish and worldly heartless, if you will, that he would have left it on a horse, or sent it to the work-house. Had it been confided to you it would have had its brains dashed out by one of your mad rages; or else, à coups de cravache, it would have been educated for the pad-saddle and the circus. One amazon in a family is quite enough, countess."

He gave her the name bestowed upon her, half in joke, half in mockery, by the habitués of the theatre, whom she offended by her haughtiness and terrified by her temper.

"Non; shall the child, where is it?"

"Safe and sound, away from temptation, at school, chez de bonnes dames puritaines. When she is full grown she shall be a governess. Pray for her wicked papa and mamma."

"I will," said the lady, with tragic Blunt, and that is enough to make me hate it," said she woman, disdainfully.

"You are made for a mother. Nature, you are a potent influence. To be sure, you have scarcely ever seen the poor little thing. It was born during a long illness of yours, and on the morrow of her christening you have never set eyes upon her. I will take care you never do. Ah! by the by, I had forgotten—there is of a dangerous nature. When Heaven gave you that beautiful body, and that brilliant intellect, how was it you forgot to give a mother's heart? Imagotelle as a heart was left out, madame?"

As he spoke he raised his flaccid lids and gazed upon her with piercing intensity. The woman's head scornfully, and adjusted the glittering bauble she wore in her hair.

"Do you wish to revive the old story?" she asked, with a sneer. "I thought that in our present state of social alliance, diplomatic defensive, there was a secret article to the effect that nothing ever was to be said about the days when we were young and foolish."

"When I was young, and a fool—a madman," the valet retorted. "I am growing old. Je grisonne. You are still young, but foolish no more. You never were. Oh no! You were always wonderfully wise."

"As you please," the wild animal, who had become strangely tranquil, perchance through sheer bassitude, uttered. "I must beg you, however, not to bore me with these old histories of Colin and Jacqueline. They are all very well in pastel, or in porcelaine de Sax, mais elles m'ennuient en prose. What do you want here, so late at night?"

"We are both night-birds. My visit in the end will be a welcome one. I have brought you a hundred pounds from your husband."

"Keep yours," said the lady, coolly, and hold out her hand.

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

QUITE ALONE

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER XII.

THE WILD ANIMAL.

MONSIEUR CONSTANT, giving one low but authoritative tap at the door of the front drawing-room, turned the handle, and found himself in a room of the presence of the "wild animal."

She was not lying on state. There were no bars before her. She was not growling à quatre pattes. Quite the contrary. She was merely a very beautiful young women in a black satin dress and with a great diamond necklace round her neck, and great diamond bracelets on her arms. Neck and arms were bare.

"I put on these for him. I dressed for supper," she explained in a fury so soon as she saw the valet, "and the traitor sends me word that he can not come. Sends me word by a wife of his brigade, that he is ill. Ill! Bah!" she continued, paraphrasing, perhaps unconsciously, Roy Bluss. "I will poison him. I will poison him in his soup. I greet him with the salute of a German ambassador, who eats onions and drinks stout."

The woman was a Frenchwoman, pur sang.

"Tut, tut, tut," quoth Monsieur Constant, in French. "If you have a fool to poison, be sure! You should have devoted yourself to melodrama, madame, and not to the manège. What a pity that Blunt should compel you to be a scrimsonge must, and that you should have nothing better to say in public than 'Haoup! hup là!' and 'Bravo Mlle. Fanfan!'"

"Coquin!" screamed the lady. "Are you come to insult me?"

"I am come to wake Mademoiselle Rataplan, qui dort du sommeil des justes? She does not ask milords to sup with her. Nor would you if you were the wife of an English gentleman, an fashionable, un lion, quoi?"

A deep crimson veil—a blush not of shame, but of rage, fell, like a gauze in a scene in a spectacle, over the woman's white neck and arms. She set her teeth for a moment and ground them, and then, starting up, began with the passionate volubility of her nation:

"The wife of an English gentleman! The wife of a swindler, un escroc! a gambler, un gueux. He was to have millions, forsooth. Je vous en donne, moi, millions. I was to have horses, parks, chateaux."

"Well, you have four horses as it is."

"Yes, and I put a pad-saddle on, and dance on them for a livelihood, en maillot. My beautiful husband allows me to become a horse-rider in a circus. I am the Honorable Lady Blunt."

"Not a bit of it. Your husband is not in the least a titled personage. He is a gentilhomme Anglais, rien de plus."

"He is a fool, or il finira galérien," the lady returned, with concentrated bitterness. "Enfin, I am the wedded wife of Monsieur Francois Blanc. Monsieur, je suis votre très devoeée. Oh! he is an angel, my husband!"

"Mon gros m'a donné pour mari,
Mais comme il est laid, mon Dieu!
Plus softly whistled between his teeth Monsieur Constant.

"Say rather un homme lâche—a prodigy of baseness. He married me by subterfuge and fraud."

"He did," Constant echoed, agreeing with the wild animal for once; "subterfuge and fraud are the words. Après."

"His millions turned out to be all in protestéd bills, long overdue, and for which he was responsible. He was reliable de dettes. He made me dance and sing at his infamous supper parties for the amusement of his vagabond aristocrat friends. It was I who paid the Champagne à ces beaux festins. Monsieur was not too proud to spend my salary month after month. Monsieur was unfaithful to me."

"Vous lui avez donné la réplique, ma belle."

"If he insulted me, neglected me, he only went on, seeming not to have heard the valet's scornful remark. "He beat me. Beat me, on occasion to parent or governess ever dared to lay a finger."

"Don't you remember the Bengleuse who used to ride on the dance to the sound of cor and a leather strap. You tried to strangle Blunt twice, to stab him once. You would have put something in his coffee had you dared."

"Only when the marks of his brutal hands were on my face, when the livid bar raised by his cravache was seen on my shoulders. Men are women who like to be beaten. He should have undermined me if he did not love he is un lâche."

"I know it was not a happy marriage. You flew out of the window soon after the honeymoon, and Blunt followed after it. You used to smash a great deal of crockery-ware in those days. Well, you would have your own way. It was the Honorable Lady Hotel Rataplan, and to asking milords to supper."

"He deprived me of my child—of my little Lily," the lady said, after a pause of passionate silence, during which her bosom heaved, and she panted as though want of breath, and not want of self-command, compelled her to a temporary surcease in invective.

"No," cried Constant, quietly. "You have nothing to do with it. I did not choose to have the little one brought up in the midst of the pugs and mamma were making round it. If Blunt had been left alone with it, he is so lazy, insouciant, thoroughly selfish and worldly heartless, if you will, that he would have left it on a horse, or sent it to the work-house. Had it been confided to you it would have had its brains dashed out by one of your mad rages; or else, à coups de cravache, it would have been educated for the pad-saddle and the circus. One amazon in a family is quite enough, countess."

He gave her the name bestowed upon her, half in joke, half in mockery, by the habitués of the theatre, whom she offended by her haughtiness and terrified by her temper.

"Non; shall the child, where is it?"

"Safe and sound, away from temptation, at school, chez de bonnes dames puritaines. When she is full grown she shall be a governess. Pray for her wicked papa and mamma."

"I will," said the lady, with tragic Blunt, and that is enough to make me hate it," said she woman, disdainfully.

"You are made for a mother. Nature, you are a potent influence. To be sure, you have scarcely ever seen the poor little thing. It was born during a long illness of yours, and on the morrow of her christening you have never set eyes upon her. I will take care you never do. Ah! by the by, I had forgotten—there is of a dangerous nature. When Heaven gave you that beautiful body, and that brilliant intellect, how was it you forgot to give a mother's heart? Imagotelle as a heart was left out, madame?"

As he spoke he raised his flaccid lids and gazed upon her with piercing intensity. The woman's head scornfully, and adjusted the glittering bauble she wore in her hair.

"Do you wish to revive the old story?" she asked, with a sneer. "I thought that in our present state of social alliance, diplomatic defensive, there was a secret article to the effect that nothing ever was to be said about the days when we were young and foolish."

"When I was young, and a fool—a madman," the valet retorted. "I am growing old. Je grisonne. You are still young, but foolish no more. You never were. Oh no! You were always wonderfully wise."

"As you please," the wild animal, who had become strangely tranquil, perchance through sheer bassitude, uttered. "I must beg you, however, not to bore me with these old histories of Colin and Jacqueline. They are all very well in pastel, or in porcelaine de Sax, mais elles m'ennuient en prose. What do you want here, so late at night?"

"We are both night-birds. My visit in the end will be a welcome one. I have brought you a hundred pounds from your husband."

"Keep yours," said the lady, coolly, and hold out her hand.

"Not so fast. I know your capacity for absorbing money. A hundred or a thousand pounds would slip with equal facility down that pretty swan-like throat. It is not the first time that I have been very hardlier dealt by fiends. Certain conditions, not very hard ones, are attached to this advance. We, that is monsieur," he was respectful to the dandy even in his absence, "must not be annoyed for six months."

"And you offer a miserable hundred pounds. C'est peu."

"It is all we can give. Business has not been prosperous. Times are very hard with us; and this hundred pounds even can be ill-spared."

"I dare say. Times also are very hard with me. But tell me, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, has my precious husband any funds of his own?"

"Not a sou. He ate up his patrimony years ago."

"Have you? I can understand the other."

Constant shrugged his shoulders. "What can a poor demoiselle à gages be worth?" he replied.

"C'est donc de l'argent volé. You have stolen this hundred pounds then. Keep it. Je n'en veux pas."

"Hypocrite! Your mouth is watering for it, and you know well that it were ten times as much. So, madame, it is not money stolen; it is money won."

"By cheating."

"As you please. I have it here, in five-pound notes."

"Give it me, then. I don't think my husband has yet devoted himself to forgery. He has not application enough. You may tell him from me that I will not trouble him again for six months. Milord, lui, n'est pas dans la dèche himself."

"What are you going to do with your milord?" the valet asked, with a darkling look.

"Cut his throat. I don't ask you with what little lingères you are en bonne fortune. If you must know what I mean to do with milord, then by Dieu-merci he is bleed him for the good of his constitution. It a trop de sang, ce mauvais-là."

"He is not of age."

"The usurers are kind to him."

"Do you love him?"

"Did I ever, even my body, Jean Baptiste Constant?" asked the woman, with candid contempt.

I don't think you did. It will be your lot some day to love, and to be spurned as you have spurned—never mind whom."

"Comte," replied madame.

"Qui que tu sois tu vois ton maître.
Qui sut, qui fut, ou le doit être."—

Who e'er thou art, thy master see.
Who is, or was, or is to be.

"A charming sentiment, more charmingly expressed, although I never believed in it for a moment. Love is no master of mine, never was and never will be. But the couplet is exquisite. It is Voltaire, is it not? A charming writer is Voltaire. It is growing very late. I think you had better give me the money and let me go to bed."

"Here are your wages, Harpy," muttered Constant, and he handed her a packet of notes.

"Thank you. C'est pas grand'chose, mais c'est du numéraire tout de même. I have almost forgiven milord. He will come to-morrow and see on his knees."

"Good-night, Valérie."

"Hein," said the wild animal, with a look of simulated surprise, but profound disdain. Since when, Monsieur qui brose les habits de mon mari?"

"Good-night, Mrs. Blunt, then."

"The Honorable Lady Blunt you mean, faquin" but this he/she said in mockery.

"Bah! that will do for France, but in England it is absurd."

"Au revoir, donc, under any circumstances. Be sure you give my love to my husband."

"I will give him as much love as you send him: and, mind me, I should say, waste much breath. Again good-night."

"Bonsoir, mon ours."

He had taken a seat during the entire interview, but had half stood, half lounged against the console on which he had placed his hat. He now advanced a step over her as she sat, threw his hat on her jewels and her satin, on a sofa, and putting his hands to hers, said in French, "Come and I will quote his very words.

"Tu es une créature sans cœur et sans mœurs, digne d'être enfermée et flétrie en plein Gallipolis."

"So I have no heart, and no manners, and ought to be whipped, eh? Thank you, my complimentary lover of moral philosophy. Au revoir et à bientôt."

Constant did not care to renew the colloquy, and without answering another glance he took her left the room. His face had turned livid, and he was trembling all over. But he had great command over his emotions, and by the time he reached the salle à manger again his countenance was as unruffled as ever.

Rotation had gone to bed. Constant, however, was an old habitué of the house, and made himself comfortable with the cigars and champagne. La Miss Thomas. He was no smoker; but she brewed him a silver timbale full of mulled claret, of which he took a mouthful in moderation, and remained, after a game or two at dominoes with the mahogany-colored sentinel, until past four in the morning. His conversation was mainly about the "countess" and her temper; to which the old woman's general response—she agreed, however, perfectly in what he said—was "Enfer!" Many of the lodgers at the Hotel Ratafiat were very late night-birds indeed; and it was four in the morning before Monsieur Constant left Leicester Place. Often, during his vigil, his eyes sought the smoke-begrimed ceiling, as though they could pierce through the joists and planking, the laths and plaster, and light once more upon the beautiful woman with the bare neck and arms, and the black satin dress.

CHAPTER XIII.

TO GAMRIDGE'S.

GAMRIDGE'S Hotel was in Pump Street, Regent Street. Gamridge's was much frequented by the junior members of the aristocracy, and by officers bearing his Majesty's commission. Gamridge's was the legitimate successor of the house of the old Slaughter's Coffee-house in St. Martin's Lane, whose ancient cellar and rooms military frequenters Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" discourses delightfully. Gamridge's, in 1836, was at the zenith of its glory and renown; but a few years afterward—such is the mutability of human affairs—Gamridge's was destined to be eclipsed by the Cave of Harmony.

Why "Rag" and why "Famish?" I, as a poor slouching civilian, am not, I hope, bound to know. The Rag and Famish seems to me a most palatial edifice, superb in all its exterior appointments. I have heard that its inner chambers are decorated in the most lavish style of Oriental splendor; that its smoking-room vies in gorgeousness with the Court of the Lions at the Alhambra; that, in point of luxury and cenory, it is the most eminent upholsterer in London has run riot. Nobody can be in rags, nobody can possibly be famished, at the Rag. The cuisine, I have heard, is exquisite, the wines and liquors are beyond compare. The lightest-rested and lightest-bottomed foot-page on the parish of St. James's gambol and grin behind the plate-glass doors. The men who smoke and the men who masticate military bricks puff their cigars on the steps. There are always half a dozen Hansoms in waiting before the door. On the Derby Day drags by the score start from the Rag. The prizes in the race sweeps at the Rag are said to be enormous.

Let me see, what is the pay of a subaltern in the Line? Some seventy or eighty pounds a year, I believe. What is the pay of a general officer? Not many hundreds per annum, I am afraid. It strikes me that the establishment, not only of the Rag, but of the Senior and Junior United Service Clubs, must have been an inestimable boon to the young warriors who are ready to fight their country's battles, and to the old braves who have fought them, and retired to grass, and whose belligerents are now hives for bees. To live like a lord, and to be served like a prince; to have all the newspapers and periodicals, and a first-class library; billiard and smoking rooms, baths and fiaratories, lounging and elbow-resting room; a numerous staff of silent, civil, and obliging servants; to have all your liveries, and as much stationery as ever you want; these are joys familiar to the members of the Rag, and of other kindred clubs. Then the young fellow on active service can run up from Chatham or Aldershot, and have the free range of a Venetian palace for a day or two. The battered half-pay has but to provide himself with a bedroom at half a guinea a week in Jermyn Street, or St. Alban's Place, and to dine mine at the clock on one morning till two or three of the clock on the next, he may live as luxuriously as the Italian Cathay. The charges themselves are moderate. The table-money is inconsiderable. Beer, bread, and pickles are dispensed gratuitously. The cigars are not dear. The champagnes and wines are supplied at rates very little exceeding mere price.

Whereas, I can't see what a civilian wants with a club at all. He has a home, which the soldier and sailor, as a rule, hasn't, and he has a meal at home. He may reflect himself in a decorous dining-room at home. If he wants books, let him subscribe to Mudie's. If he wants talk, let Mr. Panizzi for a ticket for the Museum Reading-room. He needs no smoking-room. Civilians have no right to smoke. It is not in their hard-room. Civilians should be men of business, and men of business have no right to play billiards. "Clubs," says Rochefoucauld, "are one of his wisest apophthegms, "are weapons of offense, wielded by savages for the purpose of keeping off the white women." So it is right. Clubs, for your dashing, rollicking, harum-scarum soldiers and sailors, are all very well. The gallant fellows need a little relaxation after the galling restraints of barracks or ship-board; but clubs, to the temperate civilian, are a snare and one of the meanest pretexts for selfishness and self-indulgence.

Having, I flatter myself, in the preceding paragraph, set myself right with the ladies (whom I am always trying to conciliate, and always unsuccessfully), let me proceed with the description of Gamridge's. Social clubs of the palatial order were rare in 1836. St. James's had its exclusive political coteries—Brooks's, Boodle's, and the like; but none save the elect of the elect could obtain admission to them. Cockcroft's was not yet founded, nor was a gaming-house. The Carlton wasn't built. The Athenæum and the Reform were arrogant with the flush of the March of Intellect, and looked down upon the men of the sword. The members of the latter defined all literary quarreling among themselves. The United Service only admitted officers of high grade. What remained, then, for the young or middle-aged warriors but Gamridge's.

Gamridge's was not a club; its coffee-room was open to all comers. The encroachment of its frequenters was so strongly marked that an outsider rarely, if ever, ventured to set foot within the mysterious precincts. A bagman who presumed to enter Gamridge's would have had a bad time of it. There would have been waiting in Lonesdale if a Manchester man had so far forgotten himself as to intrude, uninvited, on the Cambridgean exclusiveness. In its distinctive typification, and its invisible but impassable barriers, Gamridge's resembled one of the old coffee-houses of the preceding century. They, too, were open to all; yet you seldom found any but merchants at Garraway's or Jonathen's, soldiers at the Crown in Whitehall, gamesters at Sam's St. James's Street, country squires at the Star and Garter in Pall Mall, Jacobites at the Harp at Cornhill, booksellers' hacks at the Devil in First Street, lawyers at the Cock, and publishers at the Ball in Long Acre.

There had never, in the memory of the oldest inhabitant of Pump Street, been a Gamridge. Who he was, if ever he were at all, there is no knowing. In 36 the landlord—landlady, rather—was Mrs. Vash: a handsome, portly widow, who wore bishop's sleeves, and a multitude of ribbons in her cap, and had many daughters, whom she kept scrupulously at boarding-school to preserve them from the perils of Gamridge's; for, if not "wild geese" one would "Polly" about, wilder than ever. Mrs. Vash was a woman of the world. A few, a very few, of her oldest customers—old gentlemen who had been so long and so consistently raking about town that they seemed, on the principle of extremes meeting, almost staidness itself—were admitted to the luxurious privacy of Mrs. Vash's bar-parlor. She was an excellent judge of port-wine, and, being a generous hostess, would occasionally treat some of her prime favorites to a bottle with a peculiar tawny seal. In the coffee-room Mrs. Vash tolerated cigars, and liberally charged nineteen apiece for them. She was equally careful to charge exorbitant prices for every other commodity. You might get as dinner nowadays at the Rag for what a breakfast cost at Gamridge's. The political Gamridge's were High Tory to a tune. The tree-blue patrician class had lost much power and influence by Catholic Emancipation and the Reform Bill, and three Parliaments for a change into dissipation. Liberal Conservatives had not yet perked up into existence. Among the Gamridge Radicals I was held to be the orthodox thing, just then, to be steady and sober, to bring in moral acts of parliament, to hound forward the Church Establishment. The Tories sneered contemptuously at education and morality. They were staunch churchmen, but in the "lying Jesuits" sense, like Lord Eldon, supporting the sacred edifice from the outside. They called the London University "Sinkomsley," or the new Gamridge Pig and Whistle. They held schools where the birch was not in daily use as the vilest hot-beds of sedition, and were careful to bring up children to seminaries where they knew they would have plenty of flogging in the good old Tory style. The society at Gamridge's was a permanent protest against the Penny Magazine, and the steam-engine, and the spread of cheap literature, and the diffusion of educational whimseys of your Broughams, Denmans, Fundays, De Morgans, and compeers. Nothing would induce any of Gamridge's to read or attempted at Gamridge's; and even those elementary functions were performed in the manner most calculated to do the least amount of benefit on the human frame. The guests breakfasted at three in the afternoon, and dined at midnight. The waiter in the coffee-room at noon, and knocked-up roots went to bed at tenthree. There were many white-faced waiters who never opened the shutters at all, and to like that perpetual insomnolence. Pale ale was unknown in England then, but the popping of corks from bottles of porter and stout was audible all day long. Dice, only, Mrs. Vash rigidly refused to wink at. "If gentlemen, who were gentlemen," she remarked, "chose to call a main, they must do it in the parish of St. James's, and not in the parish of St. Anne's." Mrs. Vash was a cool of the old school, and liked to see things done in their proper places.

It was a curious time, and yet somewhat of the patriarchal element remained. Plebeian disputation was confined to the youngsters. The old gentlemen sat in the Brunz, mounted on steady ambling cobs. A new race of rakes drove them gradually from the coffee-room at Gamridge's, and left them to back-gallop, where they piped disparagement of the rapscallion age over their port with the tawny seal. Thence, by slow degrees, they were driven to Pump Street, and to Bath, and Cheltenham, and Fogydom, and went home to bed, and fell paralytic, and so died.

Mr. Ernest Constant strolled into Gamridge's at about a quarter to one in the morning, with a light, tight-fitting frock-coat buttoned over him, a cane-hook in one, and looking, on the whole, "as fresh as paint." The coseness of the simile may find objection; but Constant had been refreshed with a glass of lemon-colored kid gloves decorated his hands, the many rings bulging from beneath the soft leather. His hair, which had been rearranged—perhaps those ornaments and his hair were not strangers to a recent touch from the curling-tongs—by the same hair-dresser in the Quadrant who kept open till past midnight for the behoof of exquisites such as he—his clothes had been brushed by the very exterior sprucest and polished up. He had passed a hard day, but he was ready to begin a night as hard.

There was no particular clamor about the exterior of Gamridge's. It was a George-the-Second mansion of sad-colored brick with stone dressings, and the door-way, to which a step led up, was in a state of compound fracture from the excessive playfulness of late-returning guests. A lamp-glass broken, one pound five, was a common item in Mrs. Vash's long bills. When the late-comers and lodgers didn't smash the lamp, they smashed the fan-light, or the soda-water tumblers, or the coffee-room panels, or the waiters' heads. They were always breaking something, and every thing was charged in the bill. You entered Gamridge's by a long, low, oblique passage, seemingly specially designed for the benefit of gentlemen who came home late, overtaken with liquor, and who had to find it out. They could not well tumble down in their progress along that sporting passage. The coffee-room was almost devoid of decoration. Had it been papered the gentlemen would have torn the paper off; had there been a pier-glass somebody would have smashed it, but as pier-glasses then cost twenty pounds the item might have been subject to inconvenient dispute in the bill. So, to be on the safe side, Mrs. Vash provided her guests with a thick circular mirror in a shabby frame, which defied even a poker. En revanche, the gallant youths who frequented the coffee-room had smashed their names on it, as well as on the window-panes, in a hundred places, with their diamond rings.

There was an immense dumb-waiter. The tables were of mahogany, brightly polished; wax candlesticks, in silver sconces, were always used, to the disdainful exclusion of gas—and each one of those same candlesticks many a tall fellow had been laid flat that the floor was subsided, and triangular spittoons were distributed about. It was the oddest combination of luxury and economy, of a club-room and a pot-house.

In this room a dozen of the greatest families in England were assembled. Some had fifty thousand a year, and some had nothing, and owed three fifty thousand pounds; but, poor or rich, all were fashionable. It was a congregation of prodigal sons and prodigal fathers, but fathers and sons were both accustomed to sit in the high places, and to have much deference paid to them.

GEN. ANDREW JACKSON SMITH.

GENERAL ANDREW JACKSON SMITH, whose portrait we give on page 253, and who has recently come prominently before the public as commander of the Red River Expedition, was born in Pennsylvania, and graduated at West Point in 1838. In the same class with BEAUREGARD and HARDEE, of the rebel army, old Generals BARRY, M'DOWELL, and Major Sibley in the Federal service. For seven years he was Second Lieutenant in the First Dragoons, with whom he served during most of that time in the Territories. In 1847 he was Captain, and served against the Indians in South Oregon. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Second California Cavalry, and in March, 1862, was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers. In October of that year he was placed at the head of the First Division of General GRANGER'S army in Kentucky; but subsequently was attached to General GRANT'S army, as commander of the Tenth Division of the Thirteenth Corps. General SMITH led the right division in the attack on Vicksburg in December of that year, and afterward commanded the Second Division of the Thirteenth Corps at the battle and capture of Fort Hindman, Arkansas Post, in January, 1863. After the return of this place the army to the vicinity of Vicksburg, General SMITH was placed in command of the district of Corinth, from which post he was removed to the command of the post of Columbus, Kentucky, in order to keep open the communications along the Mississippi River with General GRANT'S command, here the rebel strong-hold. Having cleared that part of Kentucky of guerrillas, General SMITH on the January 24, 1864, relieved of his post command, and ordered to lead the Third Division of the Sixteenth Corps in the Sherman expedition through Central Mississippi.

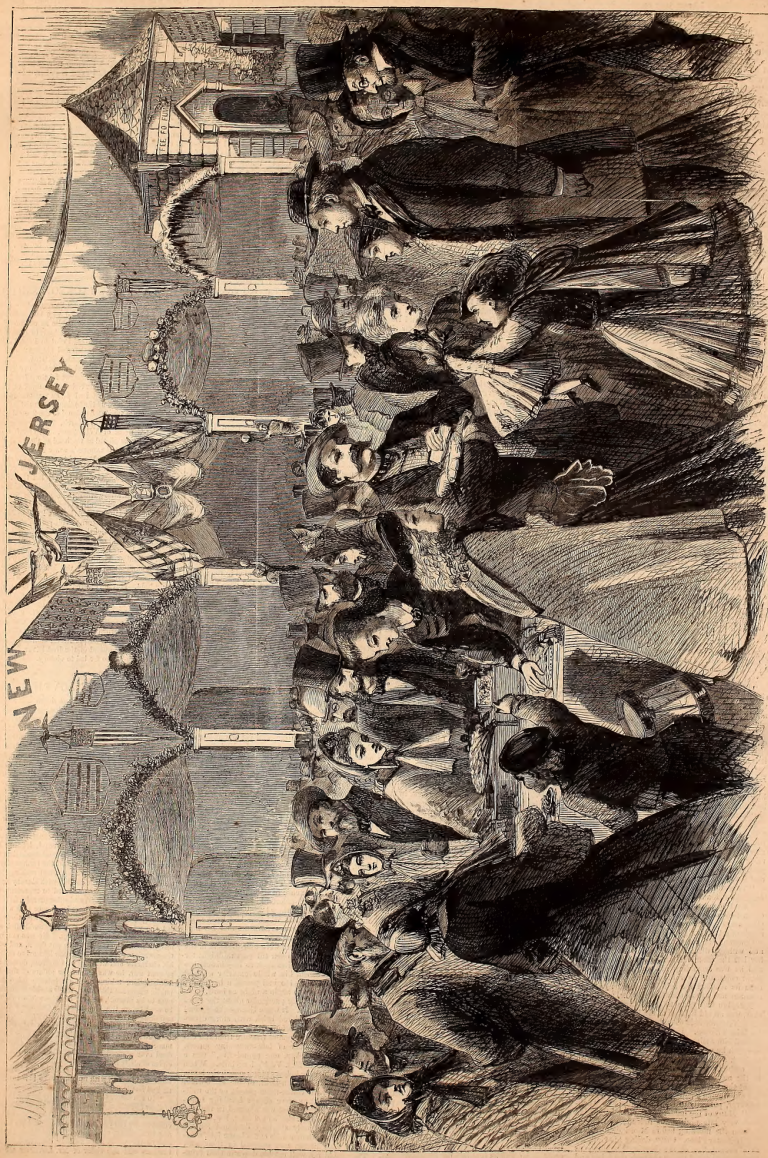
After the return of the forces under General SHERMAN to the Mississippi River, General SMITH was placed in command of the Red River Expedition, which he has so far led to victory.

HON. OWEN LOVEJOY.

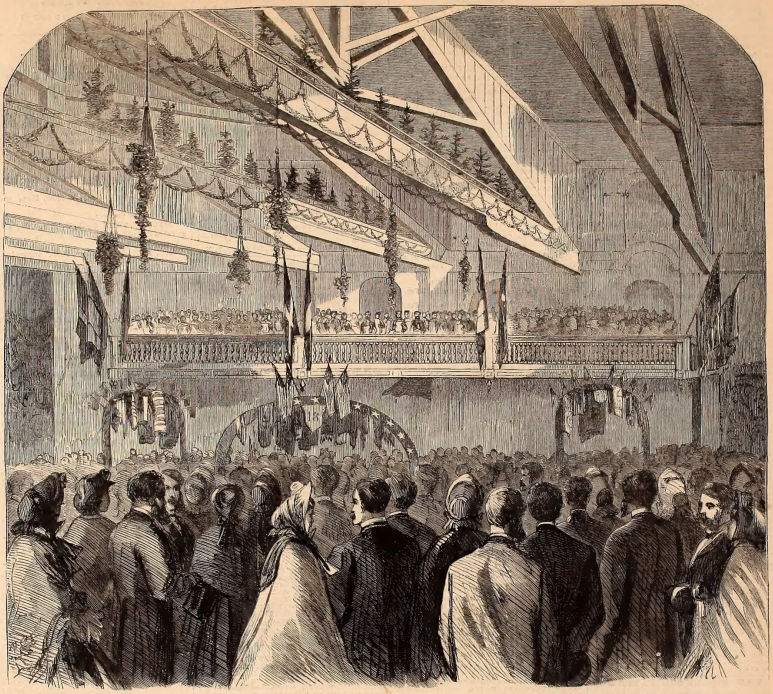
HON. OWEN LOVEJOY, whose death was recorded last week, was born in Albion, Maine, on the 6th of January, 1811. His father was Rev. Dr. DANIEL LOVEJOY. Until eighteen years of age his time was spent on a farm. He then fitted for college, and worked his way through Bowdoin by his own exertions. He studied for the ministry, and in 1837 was in Alton, Illinois, when his eldest brother, Rev. ELIJAH P. LOVEJOY, was shot. JOHN QUINCY ADAMS said, "the first American martyr to the Freedom of the Press was Elijah Lovejoy." Over his dead body OWEN, at the age of twenty-six, vowed a life-long hostility to the system of American slavery. He was ordained as a minister of the Congregational Church at Princeton, Illinois, and held that relation until 1854, constantly maintaining revolutionary and unpopular views, but his church to exclude slaveholders and apologists for slavery from its communion, and the community at large to protect the fugitive bondman from slave-hunter on free soil. As the conflict with slavery deepened, Mr. LOVEJOY was selected to represent the people in the Legislature, and subsequently, in 1858, was sent to Congress, where he at once took a commanding position, and became known, throughout the whole country, as an unconditional and courageous advocate of Liberty. He was emphatically a man who could not be awed or cowed even the enemies of his principles soon learned to respect his character and worth. In Congress, during the present war, he was one of the warmest of the Administration, taking such an intense interest in public measures that once, when unable from sickness to be present, he sent his views to Congress to be read before the House. The Chicago Tribune, summing up the features of Mr. LOVEJOY'S character, says:—"In public as well as in private life Mr. LOVEJOY was a sincere, upright, thoroughly honest man. He is mourned by a host not only living or dead ever accused him of departing from the principles of strict integrity.

"At home, of late years, he has been a large and successful farmer, with fine improved breeds of cattle and fertile fields.

"In the bosom of his large family he was the idol of their affections, the most exemplary of husbands, the most indulgent of fathers. A widow and nine children are left to cherish his memory and his virtues as a rich legacy, and to mourn what seems to them and to the world his untimely departure." Two brothers and one sister of Mr. LOVEJOY are still living.



NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT OF THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.—[See Page 246.]



GRAND OPENING OF THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.—[SEE PAGE 246.]

BRIGADIER-GENERAL ANDREW JACKSON SMITH.—[SEE PAGE 254.]

THE LATE HON. OWEN LOVEJOY.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY WILLIAMSON, BENDELTS.—[SEE PAGE 261.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until his consummated advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great variety of pens now sold to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Premium Price of Gold Pens, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, send a "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

LATEST INVENTION IN GOLD PENS. JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the FIRST time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with the Iridium or Diamond Point, and possessing all the elasticity and flexibility of the highest price pen ever sold, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. More than has been spent in trying to produce an elastic and diamond-pointed pen at a low figure, and, until now, all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising low-priced pens and calling them gold. We know that none is the only solid gold and genuine diamond pointed and elastic pen in the market that can be sold anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices by the Dozen.

No. 2. Morton Pen,	$3 50.
No. 3. Large Pen,	$3 75.
No. 4. Extra-Large Pen,	$4 00.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders in Morocco Cases, extra Per Dozen,	$4 00.

Sample Pens.

No. 2. Morton Pen,	40 cents.
No. 3. Large Pen,	50 cents.
No. 4. Extra-Large Pen,	65 cents.
Silv. Mounted Ebony Holders in Morocco Cases, extra,	50 cents.

Warantee.

We warrant every pen for one year, and to be solid gold, pointed with Iridium or Diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity of the most expensive gold pen made.

We send no pens to any address in the United States, but postage paid, on receipt of price. Money promptly safeguarded and returned, if not as represented.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 181 Broadway, New York.

AMERICAN NEEDLE CO., 442 Broadway, N. Y.
J. W. BACHELDER,
Needle Manufacturer for the Sewing Machines.
12th Regiment's Illustrated Hand Needles. Try sample. Any quantity, any size. 250 for 50c., or with beautiful Needle Book, $1, by mail. "We find them superior to others for Sewing Machines or Hand Sewing."—Messrs. Demorest.

NEW SEWING MACHINE ATTACHMENTS.
(Applicable to all Machines, sent free by mail everywhere.)
The Self Guide,
Guides the work itself perfectly; Hems, Tucks, &c. Price $1.
The Needle Setter with Gauge,
Sets the Needle itself, and tells all the sizes. Price 25c.
Address J. W. BACHELDER'S Needle & S. M. Depot, 442 Broadway, N. Y. Discount to Agents; full directions accompany each.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE.

Major-General Burnside
Writes, Jan. 29th, 1864, after thanks for what he is pleased to call our "useful and beautiful present" of a "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case." "It is the most complete and convenient apparatus that I have ever seen, and so entirely within the reach of the Soldier in price, that it is peculiarly such a gift as we desire."

Gen'l Thomas Francis Meagher writes:
Feb. 5th, 1864.
"To the Ridgewood Manufacturing Co.
Gentlemen:—I test great pleasure in acknowledging, with many thanks, your present of the "Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case," and beg also only to assure you of my belief that your ingenious and beautiful little invention will prove most convenient and useful to every officer and Soldier, who can afford a Pipe and Tobacco as well as Box.
And remain, faithfully yours, &c.
Compact and portable as a Cigar Case, it is offered in various styles at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, $3 00, $3 75 and $5 00, the more richly plated and engraved.

3^{rd} Single Cases to be sent, free to the Army, and every Regiment a supply of price and 25 cents. Liberal Discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Agents Wanted.

Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,
of superior quality and flavor, put up in Packages to fill the Cases, and in various sizes for the Army Trade. At all prices from 25 cents per Fine Tobacco, full weight, sent fully paid by mail; Small Plugs, 10 cts. per Oz. All Orders promptly filled.
OFFICE: RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
429 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, New York.

DEMOREST'S N. Y. ILLUSTRATED NEWS.—The only color and valuable Weekly will give some striking novelties this week. Do not fail to see it. Now ready.

Enameled Chamber FURNITURE

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, washable and chaste, plain and ornamental, in suite, wholesale and retail. Also Mattresses and Palliasses. WARREN WARD, 377 Canal St., N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen of Pens—Morton's Pen, the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Jim-dandy Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Intellect Pen.—These Pens are not warranted, but correspond in size to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 62½ cents, the Lucky Pen; and for $1 00, the Elegant Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Intellect Pen.

Also the World-Pervading, Self-writing Gold Pen, with Iridescia Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accidents.

All subscribers will please name the No. being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the smallest, and No. 5 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broads, Coarse Broads, and Stubs. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 00 a No. 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $2 75 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 a No. 10 Pen.—all 1st quality.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $4 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED EBONY HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.—all 1st quality.

The "31st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridescia Points, carefully selected from the entire product of the factory, with the slightest imperfection which skill and the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "31st Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him at any former Rates.

The "31st Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities the best Pens heretofore sold under Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In regard to the Extra Gold Pens, he wishes to say, previous to reporting his New and Patented Machinery, that no one could have made a Good Writing Gold Pens at the prices, and the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Persons ordering must in all instances specify the Number and "Quality" desired. Either "Quality" will be sent, and he particular to describe to the kind they prefer—whether of flat nibs, coarse or fine.

All remittances sent by mail is registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty-five cents for registering, in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will pay postage on the letter.

Further sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full value in Gold Pens, at my risk.

To AGENTS.—A discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $5, of 25 per cent. on sums of $10, and of 30 per cent. on sums of $20, if sent to one address at a time.

Address,
JOHN MORTON,
No. 25 Malden Lane, New York.

Sensible Present For a Soldier!

One of Howard's Patent Water and Sweat Proof Money Belts, with compartments for Letters, Memorandums, and Card Photographs. They are light, durable, and elegant. Sent free to all parts of the country on receipt of price, Two Dollars.
HOWARD BELT CO., 426 Broadway, New York.

Soldiers' Badges.

All Soldiers who want a nice gold or silver Badge should send in their orders promptly to me. I am constantly forwarding to the Army Officers' and Soldiers' Trophy, Eagle Badges, with Name, Co. Plan, at $1 00 each; also 18c. gold or 10 cents each. Crossed Cannons, Crossed Guns, Crossed Sabres Artillery and Cavalry Plans, at $1 25; 18c. gold, $2 00. Shield Badges, with Name, Co., &c., at $1 00 per doz. Badges enamelled in red, White, or Blue, for every Regiment in the service, at $1 50 per doz.; 18c. gold, $2 00; in silver, $1 50. Also fine Gold Pens, with ebony or silver mounted Holders, at $2 00 per doz. Send for circular or new styles, all sent free by mail. Agents wanted—Clergymen of all kinds invited here liberally that at any of my other houses.
E. KITH, 48 Nassau St.
Dealer in Army Badges, Watches, Gold Pens, Jewelry, &c.

WATCHES.

A Heavy Hunting Cased Silver Compoite Watch, fine movement, jewelled, stem-winding and setting, the appearance of Solid Silver, sold by the case at $12 00. Sample Watches sent free of expense, at $16 00.

The Great English Army Watch, in heavy handsome solid Composite hunting cases, beautifully engraved, highly finished and perfectly jewelled, and in running order. These cases will wear for a generation of time. Sold by the case at $16 00. Sample Watches sent free of expense, at $15 00.

The Great New Army Watch, especially for Soldiers, in heavy and in light Composite Hunting and Hunting cases, genuine Lever movements, ruby jewelled, and warranted a correct time-keeper, and durable, only $18.

Constantly on hand Watches of every description, from the cheapest to the finest. Send for circular or price-list. Sample Watches sent free. Postage, by the case, $2 00; Registering, 20 cents.

WARRANTED.

We warrant every Watch to be as represented, or money refunded. A written guarantee given if required.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Importers of,
181 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
in Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be ORDERED BY EXPRESS, No. 14 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

New Cavalry Badge, in Solid Silver, $1 00.
New Artillery and Battery Pin, in fine Gold Plate, $1 50.
New Battle Pin, with the likeness of either General, in fine Gold Plate, $1.
New Naval Pin, fine Gold Plate, $1 50.
New Volunteer's Pin, do., $1 50.
New Engineer's Pin, do., $1 00.
Also a Solid Silver Shield, either Army Corps, Div., or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment, &c., engraved in best style.

E. P. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 199 Broadway, N. Y.

12th Regiment Ball.
For the Benefit of the Widows and Orphans
Of
Deceased New York Soldiers.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, April 25, 1864.

I loved that dear old Flag the best. Why I love her. My love is on the battle-field. "EVENDEN'S WAR" pieces. EVENDEN'S patriotic book; violin, flute, or cornet, each 25c. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS; price list mailed on receipt of stamp.
FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, N. Y.

A New Song
By the Author of
"Who will care for Mother now,"
"Mother would comfort me," &c., &c.
Entitled,
"He was not afraid to Die."
Words and Music by
Charles Carroll Sawyer.
(The Colonel of one of the Regiments his song concludes a letter written to the family of a noble soldier, who was killed in battle: "Yet will I always have these cheering words to console you.—"HE WAS NOT AFRAID TO DIE!")

The Music of this beautiful Song is published by SAWYER & THOMPSON, 20 Union square, New York. Mailed, $1 25" Sent to any part of the United States on the receipt of the marked price, 20 cents.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

HAVE now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best thing in the market.

The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles formed in all other collars.

The cravat scorns no puckers on the inside of the turn-down collar—they are ALL SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the neck.

The Gutta Percha Cloth is smooth and enamel finish edge on both sides.

They require no soft simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOLDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.

They are made in "Novelty" cut turn-down style, in every half-size from 12 to 18 inches, and in "Funka" or Garibaldi, from 13 to 17 inches; and packed in "solid packages" of one dozen each, or "assorted packages" in smaller ones of 10 each—the latter a very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.

12mo ENVELOPE COLLAR is stamped

"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."

Sold by all dealers in New York Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
61 Devonshire St, Boston.

J. S. Looney & Co., 37 Warren St., New York; Hayden, Bradley & Co., 64 Chestnut St., Philadelphia; Hodges Bros., 25 Hanover St., Baltimore; Wall, Stephens & Co., 20 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Lewis and Bowles, cor. Fifth and Vine St., Cincinnati; J. von Borries & Co., 334 Main St., Louisville, Ky.; A. Frankenthal & Bro., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Weed, Whitten & Co., 7 to 12 Tehoupitoulas St., New Orleans.

Madame Benedict's MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING Establishment is now REPLETE with every IMPORTED NOVELTY of the season. Millinery not admitted. 12 Waverly Place, New York.

Veteran Soldiers.
We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Caps for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field, at $1 50 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one, 10c, or dozen.
Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for circular. Address
DARWIN G. MOORE,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, New York.

To Wounded Soldiers
Who have been Discharged.

The Bounty of $100 and Back Pay has been fully discharged on account of wounds received in battle, is now to be paid at the U. S. Army general Hospital, Fort Schuyler Pay Department. The Discharge must in all cases be procured by the Soldier. When a Soldier dies, only the discharge can be sent by mail, giving distinctly the Name and Full Address of the applicant.
New York, March 26th, 1864.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns. Gives a soft, mellow light, free from smoke or smell, and needs no chimney. We answer or parad to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which every one who purchases it pronounces indispensable. Sample by mail, for 25 cts. Agents wanted.
P. LESLIE & CO., Manufacturers, 7 Platt Street, New York.

New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 213 Broadway, New York, want Agents in every county and every town. Liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

Tooth Wash.

BENNETT'S ORIENTAL TOOTH WASH is worth all other dentifrices. Sold everywhere.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The first has the name
"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The second has the name
"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The third has the name
"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." printed on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The fourth has the name
"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH Co., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold at our FOURTH OF JULY PRICE, and, usually, have the name "Samuel's Watch;" others are named the "APPLETON WATCH CO.;" others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT. And the many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from great imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards.
National Emblems.

Sight of Eagles.

The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and FLAGS. Union Number of KING: Goddess of Liberty for QUEEN: Major for JACK.

The Union Playing Cards are the first and only genuine American Cards ever produced, and as they are entered according to Act of Congress, they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.

The Cards are rapidly taking the place of Cards bearing Foreign emblems. The demand for them is unprecedented in the Card Trade, and they will soon become the Leading Card in the American market.

In playing with these Cards, they are to be called by the names the emblems represent, and as the emblems are as familiar as household words every-where among the people of the American Republic, they can be used so readily the first session at cards bearing Foreign emblems.

The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive Card ever offered. They are produced in the highest style of the art, and each pack is put up in an elegant Card Case, suitable to keep them in when not in use, and thus in handsome dress for the trade.

Two Sample Packs in Card Cases sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.
Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
14 Chambers St., or 419 Broadway, N. New York.

ENTERTAINING NOVELTIES continually appearing in DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS. Do not fail to see this week's number, now ready, universally acknowledged the most spicy and fine weekly now published.

Opera and Field-Glasses
Can see a man distance of 3 to 4 miles. Spectacles and Eye-Glasses with French flint glass. Also Microscopes of every description, from $1 to 250. R. & J. BECK, Philadelphia, 213 Broadway, cor. Fulton St., up stairs.
Wholesale and Retail. Send Stamp for Circular.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches ..... $125 00 each.
100 Gold Watches ..... 70 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches ..... 40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches .. 15 00 each.
3000 Vest and Neck Chains ..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets ..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " " " ..... 3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 8 00 each.
3500 Gent's Breast Pins ..... 2 50 to 8 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys ..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides ..... 3 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sets of Room Studs ..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons ..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings ..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings ..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets ..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry ..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'tel Holders 4 00 to 8 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one has been, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. This gun is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. The great advantage of loading with either kind of loose ammunition also makes it superior to all others.

We also offer to the public our new Pistol & Reynolds' cartridge and loose ammunition loading revolver. This arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. S. Do not forget that both Rifle and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
362 Broadway, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell by new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

POLLAR & SON.

MERCHANT TAILORS, 257 BROOME ST., NEAR BOWERY, N. Y. Will send a Sample of Cloth, with self-measurement, free of charge, a genuine Pipe for 5 Dollars. Pipes of any shape cut to order and repaired.

Watches and Jewelry.

American, Swiss, and English

WATCHES

In every variety, in (my own) superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the trade or army, large or small, promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years. T. B. SYNNES, 175 Broadway, New York.

SOMETHING NEW

IN PLAYING CARDS.
LOVE SCENES.
Designs from French Artists.

The above new Card has fifty-two beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can also be used the same as ordinary playing cards, thus combining pleasure with amusement. Easting 50 cents and two red stamps, we send for sample pack. $5 per dozen. Liberal discount by gross to dealers. H. A. CASWELL, 82 Nassau St., New York.

MME. DEMOREST'S IMPERIAL DRESS ELEVATOR, a very durable, convenient, and perfect arrangement for raising the dress, and thereby forming the fashionable style, uniformly all around, and letting it down at will. Price 50 cents. Sold at all the fancy and trimming stores, or sent by mail free on receipt of the price, No. 473 Broadway. Dealers supplied on liberal terms.

BILLIARD BALLS.

Patent compressed Ivory Billiard Balls, 2¼ and 2⅝ in., $10 per set. 2¾ Bagatelle, $8 per set. 1¾ in. Bagatelle, $6 per set. 15 Ball Pool, $30 set. FRENCH ORE TIPS, $2 and $3 per box. FRENCH CHALK, $2 a gross. WM. M. WELLING, 207 Centre St., New York, Sign of the Golden Elephant.

New Catalogue of Jewelry
Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 emanded cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY, 14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 105 Walnut St., Cincinnati, O.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES? —My Unguent will force them in a paper (merely in an envelope from the manufacturer) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—by mail, 25 cents extra. Address on receipt of an order. E. G. GRAHAM, No. 160 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts. Call and examine, or send stamp for 30c. Retails for $8, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

For 60 Cents,

THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for JAN., FEB., MARCH and APRIL, 1864, will be sent, post, or a year, for $1 50. To secure the PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBER, with PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, and WILL, with all the PORTRAITS of DISTINGUISHED MEN, send at once to FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Attention Company!

Clark's Onguent, a powerful stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of whiskers or mustaches in six weeks on the smoothest face, without injury to skin or loss of hair. Any person using this Onguent, and failing to do as represented, by following one of the sets, can have their money returned them at any time within 3 months from day of purchase. Price $1.00. Sent safely and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money.
Address, A. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 118,
Albany, N. Y.

$11 Watches. $12

"AN ELEGANT WATCH."

Set in very heavy Silver hunting cases of splendid finish, silver plated, ruby jewelled, fine Engine Turned movements, pure white dial, and steel polished hands. Warranted a correct timekeeper, and promptly forwarded, together with a very handsome gold-plated chain and key, to any address, by express, C. O. D., on receipt of twelve dollars and eleven dollars without chain.

C. E. CHANDLER, 389 Broadway, N. Y. P. O. Box 5055.

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS, THE FIVE PAPER OF AMERICA.—Everybody and his wife are in ecstasies at the new advertising DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED NEWS, as the most splendid, interesting, and live illustrated paper ever published. It needs only to be seen to be appreciated.

Patent Army Pipe, just out. Can be carried in the vest pocket, is self-cleaning, and an elegantly finished pipe; retails price 50c. One doz. sent free on receipt of $3 75. Agents make easy $16 per day, and receive an assortment from us which will sell like wildfire. Send quick, and get the cream of the trade. 800 can be sold in every full regiment. Circulars of 79 new patented articles sent free.
RICHARDS & CO., Box 5181, 37 and 39 Nassau St., N. Y.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The Spring number of this magnificent Fashion Magazine, now ready, presents a brilliant array of Illustrations, Stories, Fashions, and some unusual and novelties for Spring, among which is a large, handsome, extraordinary stereoscopic plate, twice the usual size, and the most fashionable that has yet appeared. Also, a large and beautiful Fashion Supplement, containing Six Full Size Patterns, an elegant Work Apron, with many valuable information, &c., all for only 25 cents; or yearly subscription, $1, with a premium of One Dollar's worth of extra value. No lady will fail to subscribe immediately. The Agriculturist and Mme. Demorest's Mirror of Fashions, or Peterson's Magazine and the Mirror of Fashions, or Frank Leslie's Gazette and the Mirror of Fashions, $2 75, less than the cost of Godey's alone. Splendid premiums for clubs. Address MME. DEMOREST, 473 Broadway, N. Y.

CARPET WARP.

WOOL TWINE.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 9 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

FALSE MOUSTACHES 50 cents and $1 a pair. Sent free by mail. Address, C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY.—The Art of Advertising Pamphlet mailed for 25 cents, by MASON & CO., No. 93 N. SIXTH Street, Philadelphia.

BURNETT'S

Standard Flavoring Extracts

For Cooking Purposes.

THE SUPERIORITY OF THESE EXTRACTS CONSISTS IN THEIR

Perfect Purity and Great Strength.

We select the following testimonials:

POPULAR HOTELS.

"Pre-eminently superior to all others for culinary use."
PARKER HOUSE, Boston.

"Superior to any we have ever used."
REVERE HOUSE, Boston.

"Have used your Extracts for several years, and regard them the best in the world."
FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, New York.

"Our tea has proved them very excellent."
ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL, new York.

"Have been found highly superior by thorough and extensive use in our Establishment for years."
CONTINENTAL HOTEL, Phila., Pa.

"Possess all the rare qualities claimed for them."
ISTAHR HOUSE, Baltimore, Md.

"Far superior to any in the market."
WILLARD'S HOTEL, Washington, D. C.

Comment is unnecessary. Our standard quality will remain unimpaired.

These Extracts are for sale in every city and town in the United States and Canada.

The best are the cheapest!

MANUFACTURERS AND PROPRIETORS,

JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.,

BOSTON.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38x51. Price $2500.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—You will get the Recipe of a sure cure for Liquid Colds, Consumption, and all lung complaints, by sending to Dr. Ulcus Brunt, Box 2531, New York. Use cards if free. Write for it.—It has cured thousands.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION and BARGING OFFICE.—SOLDIER, Bounty & Co., No. 2 Park Place, New York, report and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Land-Bounty Warrants bought, sold, rent by mail, &c.

DEMOREST'S N. Y. ILLUSTRATED NEWS, a Weekly Journal of Illustrations on all live subjects, and a National and Family Newspaper in the most comprehensive sense. Published 90 Nassau Street. Sold everywhere.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, &c., &c. Will be sent to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., six cents. Address PRESS Co., No. 79 Ann St., N. Y., and 35 Lincoln St., Boston.

BAKER'S RHEUMATIC BALM,
BAKER'S TOOTH SOOTHER,
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE,
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR,

are four remedies that have already stood over be without. Price $1 per bottle each.

Also,
BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $5.

PRINCIPAL DEPOT: No. 154 Tenth Street, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by all Wholesale Druggists.
Remedies sent to any address upon receipt of price.

Cavalry Badges.

Annexed is a facsimile design of our newest style Cavalry Badge, sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co., and Regiment handsomely engraved thereon.

Solid Silver..... $3 00
Solid Silver, letters in gold relief..... 3 50
Solid gold..... 7 00
Solid gold enameled.. 9 00

Also our style Artillery Badge, and every style Cap Pin and Corps Badge used by the Army. Send for our Illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALL & CO., 205 Broadway, N. Y.

A GREAT CHANCE

FOR BOOK AGENTS.

D. APPLETON & CO., Nos. 443 and 445 Broadway, N. Y., have in press—APPLETON'S CYCLOPÆDIA OF COMMERCIAL AND BUSINESS ANECDOTES: Comprising interesting Reminiscences and Facts, Remarkable Traits and Humors, and Notable Sayings, Decisions, Experiences, and Characteristics of Merchants, Traders, Capitalists, Mercantile Celebrities, Millionaires, Bargain Makers, etc., etc., in all ages and countries. Designed to exhibit, by nearly Three Thousand Illustrations, Anecdotes, and Incidents, the Practical Operations of Business, Trade, Finance, and General Business Pursuits. Illustrated with steel plate portraits and wood engravings. 1 vols. 8vo, $6. To be published by subscription.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY SECTION TO CANVASS THE WORK. Prospectuses, giving a full plan of the book, now ready, and will be sent to any address on application.

POPULAR GLEE BOOKS.

MUSICAL LYRA. A New Collection of Glees, Quartets, Duets, Trios, Choruses, &c., $1. Young Folks' Glee Book, $1. The Western Bell Ch., Union 50c., 60 cts. Tuneful Voice, $1. Family Circle Glee Book, a collection of Vocal Accompaniments, 9 vols., each, $1 50. Boston Museum, 3 vols., each, $1. Boston Glee Book, $1. Modern Lyre, $1. Concordia, 50 cts. Jenny Lind Glee Book, $1. Musical Glee Book, $1. Any sent to any address, post-paid, on receipt of the price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

G.L. & J.B. KELTY'S WINDOW SHADE MANUFACTURERS.

White Hollered for Shades. Only Agents for Bray's Patent Fixtures.

LACE CURTAINS.

New Spring Styles for 1864.
G. L. & J. B. KELTY, 359 Broadway, N Y.

Soldiers Robbed.

Thousands have been robbed of their money and other valuables, from time to time, for the want of such books as article 24, Regulations, Navy Drill. They are water and sweat proof, and are made with compartments for Letters, Greenbacks, and Photographs. Sample Belt sent free by return mail, to any part of the country, on receipt of price, Two Dollars.
HOWARD BELT CO., 489 Broadway, New York.

A FINE COLLECTION OF

VIOLIN MUSIC

Is contained in "Winner's Perfect Guide for the Violin." The pieces have been selected with great care, and comprise many of the new and popular Melodies of the day, while the easy and agreeable lessons for the beginner, render it the best work that can be put to the hands of beginners. Price only 50 cts. Sent post-paid.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Just what every Family wants. Sawyer & Co.'s No Chimney Burner for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene Oil with a brilliant light without chimney, smoke, or odor. Sizes No 2 Fairy, No. 3 Globe No 2 Fairy Lantern. Agents wanted. Send for circular. Sample sent free for 50 cts. American Institute awarded 1st Premium and Medal, 1863.
SAWYER & CO.,
Cambridge, Mass.

CRISTADORO'S HAIR RESTORATIVE.

CONJURING!

The whole art of Conjuring made easy, with full directions for performing 150 of the most wond rful and astonishing Feats of Hand, Eye, Slight of Hand, Parlor Magic, Cupidan, and Legerdemain. Handsomely illustrated. Price 15 cents. Sent, post-paid, by mail.
M. M. SANDORN, Stanhope, N. J.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW all that is worth knowing relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, etc., etc., read Herbert and enlarged Physiology.

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the standard works issued in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Headache, Nervousness, Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Affections of the Urinary Organs, Barrenness, Leprosy, Bad Blood, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and three other Sportsmen, Diseases of the Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Hegenomy, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand things of value to married and single never written before, nothing, altogether, a curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. 400 pages; 100 Illustrations. Contents tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1.50.
Address Dr. PIERCE, M.D., No. 1130 Broadway, N.Y.

Perce's Patent Magnetic Globe

For the illustration of the power of the Earth's attraction, and for other beautiful and instructive experiments. Price $2 50. Send for a circular. Sent by mail, postage free, on receipt of price. Also Perces Compound Magnet, a powerful instrument. Price $3 50. Address E. PIERCE, 98 Beekman St., Box 5061, P. O., N. Y.

Before and Behind abe Curtain.—19 Photographs, representing the advantages and disadvantages of the legal profession. Introducing: Subscriber; Privileged Success; Rotation; Rehearsal; The Audience; Ladies' Dressing Room; Gentlemen's Dressing Room; The Lobby; The Private Box. Price $2 per doz., and cent, postpaid, by Richard Parker & Co., cor. Ann and Nassau Sts.

The Graefenberg Company's

Uterine Catholicon (Marshall's).

An infallible cure for "Female Weakness," and all Uterine complaints of women.

Price $1 50 per bottle. Five bottles for $5.

The Graefenberg Vegetable Pills.

The best Pill in the world for family use, and for all Bilious and Liver complaints. Price 25c. per box.

Address all orders to J. F. BRIDGE, M.D.,
Resident Physician GRAEFENBERG COMPANY,
No. 139 William Street, near Fulton, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED:

A Treatise on Military Surveying.

THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL, including a description of the Maps in the Department. By C. H. RAMSAY, Captain of Engineers. 1 vol. 12mo, cloth, $2. Sent by mail on receipt of price.
D. VAN NOSTRAND, 192 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $2 50
Two Copies for One Year 4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Ten Subscribers.
Single Numbers, each, 25 Cents.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months $1 00
One Copy for One Year 2 00
One Copy for Two Years 3 50
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 15 each, or 11 Copies for $21 00.
Terms to Advertisers.—One Dollar per line for inside, and One Dollar and a Cents per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.
HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

THE METROPOLITAN PAIR.

ELEANOR. "You had better buy some of my Cigars—edme, take one!"
YOUNG SWELL. "Ah—thanks, no—I never Smoke!"
ELEANOR. "What! not if I bite off the End!"

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
AND
AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our New Novelty STATIONERY PRIZE PACKET. Only $15 capital required to obtain a WATCH, FREE, with first order. We also offer SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered.

Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.,
The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, post-paid, for $2 75; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $4; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, in well mid. pres'd. the Bulwer, or Perfect STEEL PEN, with Gold Iridium Points and Hard-Rock, accommodating action for $2 00; with 12 assorted views, $3. A liberal discount to the trade.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready made or to measure, at $23, $26, and $45 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent free every where.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3 50, $3 75, and $4 50 each; all on one part long. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

5 in the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the easy armure and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cts. each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 367 Broadway, N. Y.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

ALSO, a full assortment of

Jet. Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street. N. Y.

31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau Paris.

Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

MOTHS

Effectually to Insect Life is

CEDAR CAMPHOR

Odors, gentle, durable, fragrant. Material only by HARRIS & OLIVERAN, Boston. 10th will be sent free by mail for 50 Cents.

A Beautiful Complexion from Tan,

Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For shaving it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey, and other valuable articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, nights and mornings, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 105 and 107 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metallic. Send for a "TURN-OVER" 25 cents for a "CHASE," or to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. JNO. W. WHEELER, of Ithaca, Tomkins County, Ohio, and JOHN C. LEFFERTS, of New York, Putnam Mfg. Co.:

GENTLEMEN: I know from practical experience that iron well galvanized with zinc will not oxidize and rust nor tarnish. I am safely say, after seven years experience in the manufacture of chain, for chain-pump and waterbuckets, in which I have tested the affinity of iron and zinc, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect void of the two.

Nearly one year ago my family commenced using one of these Wringers. It now performs all of its functions as well as it did the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article with us. I have recently observed several other kinds of clothes-wringers, the modes operated being different, trying to produce the same results as the Putnam Wringer, but in my judgement they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is as near perfect as it possible, and I can cheerfully recommend it to be the best in use.

Respectfully yours, JNO. W. WHEELER.

Many years' experience in the galvanizing business enables me to say that the above testimony is well-founded.

JOHN C. LEFFERTS, No. 100 Bleecker Street, New York, January, 1864.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.

No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 50; No. A, $8.

Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 13 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.
S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

$100 Per Week $100 Made Clear,

And a Gold Hunting-Case Watch given free to all agents who sell our Original and "only Genuine" Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Package, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. We are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated American Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. We will do as we have done for years past, present free to every one who acts as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Watch, "Genuine Swedish Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented as the first present with the first order for goods. A single one of our Hundred of Packages contains more than the valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of "each package" will be found "Fine Stationery," Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, "Engravings," Jewelry, Fashion Plates, Embroidery Needle-work, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Perfect Measurement for Ladies' Basket Sacque for 1864, Game Gumbleers, Games, Rare Recipes, How to get Rich, Treasure Secrets, Many Articles, Birth and Costly Presents of Solitaire Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth more than the price of the Package. Agents make immense profits. 100 to 300 per cent. profit. We guarantee that agents can make $25 per day. Our regular Agents are clearing $50 to $100 per week, and many others are doing the same. Our Agents' Package stands foremost in the market for quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the country. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements, &c., &c. AMERICAN PRIZE PACKAGE CO., Cor. Nassau and Ann St., New York. Only Original and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 94 Liberty St., New York. Any one sent free by mail on receipt of price.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, enameled dial, cut hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, vast free by mail in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

OR, COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved or engine turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring. "Genuine English Jeweled or Swiss Movements," "M. J. Toulmin" Independent Action, Self Balance, and has a SMALL MINIATURE COMPASS set in the movements, making it a "Correct Guide" to the Soldier or Traveler. Perfect timekeeper, "warranted one year." WILL STAND AUDI, and it an

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch.

Used by the British Army Officers,

Sent free by mail, in elegant MOROCCO CASE, for only $15. ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Case, full jeweled movements, warranted, $15.

$30 AMERICAN LEVERS. $30

Full Duty Jeweled, 4 or 6 Oil Stone Hunting Case, Gold Joints, with Magic Spring, FULL GUARANTEE, only $30

Real English Duplex Stop Watch,

In Massive Silver Hunting Case, full Jeweled, Sweep Seconds, for Artillerists or TIMING HORSES, with full guarantee, only $30.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the Celebrated Watches of European Makers. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.

French Artist's Illustrated Magazine of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces; and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."

Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Importers, 33 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

Don't buy your Gaiters or Shoes without Fogg's Patent Lever Buckle.

They are self-adjusting, and require no holes punched in the strap. Dealers or manufacturers can enclose Ten Cents CURRENCY, and I will mail sample of two pattern.

FREDERICK STEVENS,
203 Pearl Street, NEW YORK,
and
63 Kilby Street, Boston, Mass.

Shults' Ongnent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

TROPICAL BALSAM

Prepared by Carreno Brothers & Co.

The celebrated and unequalled Balsam, combining the only of salsifrieon and purifying vegetables, has been for many years used by the Spanish people exactly of South America, and is an infallible remedy for the speedy cure of pimples, sores, and other diseases of the skin and throat; affections resulting from falls, blows, or bruises, however severe; hemorrhages, wounds, contusions, colics, falcons, bursiæ, piles, headache, toothache, and other diseases. See Directions around the bottle.

Ever since this valuable medicine has been introduced in this country, its interest and extensive use has never failed to produce the most wonderfully successful results.

Heads of families are advised to keep always this Balsam by them, in order to use it in time in cases of wounds, scaldings, burns, bruises, &c.; also those who are devoted to such occupations as expose them to danger, or require the use of instruments whereby they may be injured in any way. For valuable testimonial letters, see Our Trifolium and Counter-Irritant Sir STAR-USE.

Price of bottles, 37 cts. and $1.

General Depot for the U. S. HELLIS & CARNOT St., near Wall. New York. Retailed at the drug stores generally in New York and Brooklyn.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanies each Pen. Circular, with Description of Pens, sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, 75 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For Circulars, Description of Principles and Drawings, address H. C. L. BATES, 377 W. 23d St., N. Y.

Andrews' Excelsior Yeast Powder.

Gives universal satisfaction. "It is the test." First-class Groceries everywhere keep it. Established 14 years!

THOS. ANDREWS & CO.,
136 and 138 Cedar Street, New York.

To Consumptives.

Consumptive sufferers will receive a valuable prescription for the cure of Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung affections free of charge, by sending their address to

REV. E. A. WILSON,
Williamsburgh, Kings Co.,
New York.

Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

LANDS.—TO ALL WANTING FARMS.—Large and fertile tracts of land, with mild and healthy climate, 10 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, produces large crops of wheat and corn, with little labor. Twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $50 per acre, payable one-fifth cash, balance in annual payments to suit purchasers and others, churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most important section for the sale of farms. We are selling and building. The beauty with which the land is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Persons containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune:—It is one of the most attractive fertile tracts in an almost level position, and suitable condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western States.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it by using Fabre Fabre's New Compound. For sale by druggists.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVER WATCHES.

Trade Mark. P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway New York.

Perfectly Pure Articles.

"CREAM TARTAR," "PURE SODA," "PARAGON BAKING POWDER," "EXCELSIOR YEAST POWDER," sold by

THOS. ANDREWS & CO.,
136 and 138 Cedar Street, New York.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA

HAIR RESTORATIVE.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair and whiskers to their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading of one hair with another, and thus gives a life appearance instead of the dull dead black of dyes, so that the most critical observer can not detect its use. It does not require previous washing and washing and hours for its application, nor does it stain the skin; but is as readily applied and easily wiped from the skin as any hair-dressing. It does not claim to make the hair come in when it has fallen out; neither will its effects, whatever may be advertised to the contrary; but it will prevent it from falling out, make it soft and glossy, promote the curl and the scalp from all impurities and humors, and entirely overcome the bad effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c.

Hoyt's Imperial Coloring Cream.

An approximate substitute to the Hiawatha; oils and colors the hair at the same time, and changes light and red hair to a handsome brown or black, and gradually where.

N.B.—Ladies' French hair-dresser in attendance to apply the Hiawatha.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER!!!

In Cola Silver!! For $1 86. Including the engraving of the Name, Co., and Regiment. Also the National Rifle Pin, Cavalry and Artillery Pin. Medal, Engineer, and Signal Corps Pins.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO.,
No. 2 Murray Street, New York.

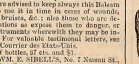
Holloway's Pills cleanse the blood of all degenerated particles, and render it as pure and sweet as gold. Its action is gentle, but sure and reliable. Fever and ague, and all the pestilential diseases most prevalent in this continent are prevented by a timely use of this marvelous remedy, and cured by a course of the same according to the directions that accompany each box. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 40 per box.

Croquet; Lots of implements for this favorite Game. For fully well-seasoned wood, in neat case; prices from $16 to $46. Also Reid's Rules for playing the game, price 50c., postage paid.

WALTER LOW, 823 Broadway, New York.

Card Photographs.

A splendid assortment. Catalogues sent free. Address B. W. HYCROCKS, Manufacturer, 14 Chambers St., N. Y.



Ask your Sutler

To show you one of

Howard's Patent Money Belts.

They will be found a handy article in many circumstances. They are light, durable, and elegant, and are made with a compartment for

LETTERS, GREENBACKS, and PHOTOGRAPHS.

If your Sutler has not got them, you can have one sent you by return mail (postage paid) by sending Two Dollars to the

Howard Belt Co., 436 Broadway, New York.

Sutlers, Agents, and Peddlers wanted in every Camp, Hospital, and City.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 70 cents. Ten times as large as any $1 00 microscope for $1 00. Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

A Great Success.

The New Novel, "LOU'S LAST," is a sensation book for the hour only. It is a story, as the New York Tribune remarks, that will obtain a double public interest by means of its earnestness, vitality, and truth to nature. It is for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postage paid, on receipt of price. For sale at WELLINGTON, 107 Canine 34, N. Y., Fight of the Genuine ELEPHANT.

The Rev. Charles W. King,

Formerly Secretary of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, and recently connected, as resident Minister and Physician, with the Weissenheim Mission, will send 12c. Free of Cost a Receipt or Prescription with which he cured, after he had tried, while in charge of the large Mission Hospital, upward of one hundred cases of CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS, and other throat and lung diseases.

The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma. Catarrh. Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lungs. Throat, and Air-Passages; while it specially invigorates the enfeebled Nervous System, and energizes the deranged functions of the Stomach. Liver, and Bowels. Address, with stamp,

Rev. CHARLES E. KING,
Station D, Bible House, N. Y.

P. S.—Ministers Papers and Ministry supplied gratis.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 382.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

LADIES IN ATTENDANCE IN REGULATION COSTUME AT THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.—[SEE PAGE 260.]

HOME-NEWS IN BATTLE-TIME.

DYING! Along the trodden, bloody field,
Along the hills where rifts of battle run,
The Night came down with flaming spear and shield—
Came down with starry helpers marching in her van—
Came down and touched the rows of mangled dead,
Across the knolls and by the little ridges lying,
With loving smile, and, silent, bowed her head,
Like some pale mourner, o'er other hearts once dying.

Just on the edges of the stormy fight,
At the soft night came down, a group of soldiers knelt
Around a comrade, lying calm and white,
A stain of flowing blood upon his buttoned-bolt;
Close by him on the trampled meadow-grass,
Beside his musket an unopened letter lay—
A message from the home which now, alas!
Must be forever dark because of this sad day.

"Read to me, friend!" he said at last—
"Read me what Mary says; I shall die happier so!"
Then, while across his face a spasm passed,
He softly mouned: "It only came to-day you know;
Just as I came afield 'twas given me—
I could not pause to read it then; but, comrades, hark!
I'm going now—the long, dim way I see—
Read me what Mary says; 'twill cheer me in the dark."

They read him, as he wished, the precious lines—
The words of love, of brave encouragement and cheer—
Read him how Mary, 'mid her household shrines,
Was hopeful and content; how Baby, "little dear,"
Had learned to walk; how Tom had won the prize
At school but time; how he, the dear one far away,
Was prayed for nightly; how with straining eyes
They waited his return, as for a festal day.

They ceased. Upon the pallid, vacant face
A deeper shadow fell, and with a weary cry
The dying soldier sobbed: "Give them Thy grace, O loving Father, shield them till the storm goes by!"
His voice grew faint, then ceased—but one who bent
Close to the failing lips heard this: "Good-night, my Mary dear."
As if with death's cold chill and pains were blent
Sweet memories of home—dreams of life's brighter years.

And still the battle throbbed along the hills,
And still the dying and the dead in billows lay
Along the trenches and by the crimson rills—
The night shades folding all in mantles dun and gray.
There, where he fell, they scraped a shallow grave,
And with a few letter on his breast, and old and calm,
Left him to wait the roll-call of the brave,
The summons to receive the victor's crown and palm.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1864.

A WORD FOR THE HOUR.

WHILE the great preparations for the campaign are proceeding let us not fall into the old and foolish error. General GRANT will have a large and trained army. He will have at his command all the military resources he requires. He has already the confidence of the people and the hearty support of the Government. He has the cause of the country, of humanity, and of civilization to fight for; and he and his army fight like men and Americans. On the other hand, he will be opposed by a skillful and tried soldier; by a trained army, swelled by a remorseless conscription, fighting upon ground familiar to it, and for a cause which it has a ardently espoused. The battle will be desperate, as the issues are momentous. But before it is joined, let us, as sensible men, ponder on her how uncertain the event of every battle is, and not take leave of our common sense by declaring that we must and shall win. Unquestionably our cause will finally prevail, but only upon the condition that we show the qualities which compel final victory; and we merely prove the want of those qualities by a blind and exulting confidence that we can not be defeated.

However desirable success may be, and however easy of preparation, those who say that, if we do not triumph in this or in any particular campaign, there will be a reaction of indignation measures to end the war among ourselves, say so merely for a mischievous purpose, and with a profound want of appreciation of the American character. For what does it mean? If GRANT, for instance, is defeated, is it proposed to break up the war for the Union and to sue the rebels for such terms as they may vouchsafe? Or is it intended that we shall concede our task to be impossible, and ourselves propose a separation? No: those who speak in this manner mean that they would prefer to take the risk of civil commotion here, rather than that the conduct of the war should remain in the civil and military hands that now control it.

The object is a party movement ingeniously made, and loyal men permit themselves to be parties to it when they insist that we must not allow ourselves to contemplate the possibility of failure in this campaign. Yet the device is transparent as it is ingenious. For knowing that no truly loyal men would wish to remove GRANT, or BANKS, or THOMAS, or ADMIRAL FARRAGUT, or ROSECRANS, or BURNSIDE, or PORTER, or BUTLER, or SMITH, from their present commands, knowing that they only have the popular confidence, the game is this: to say constantly in advance, if GRANT succeeds, it is in spite of the Government: if he fails, it is because of the interference of the Government. In either case, it will be urged that the Administration is imbecile. And it is for this result that the "Democratic" managers are waiting. They declare in advance that his success is sure if only he is let alone, in order to whet popular exasperation if the fortunes of war goes against him. Should GRANT succeed, these managers will present him as the man who has saved the country both against the arms of the rebellion and the impotence of the Government. Should he fail, they will present General MCCLELLAN as the man who represents a new and more promising policy, counting for support upon the same popular disappointment and disgust which elected Mr. SEYMOUR Governor of New York.

This is the little game; and every man plays into the hands of its managers who abandons himself to exulting and unreasonable confidence.

Let every faithful citizen bear steadily in mind that the Government and the Generals are now in accord; that any secession from the unity of the Administration, no General can have a patent of victory; that if the rare military good fortune of the Lieutenant-General should desert him, it will neither be his fault, nor that of his soldiers, nor of the Government; that his want of success will not change in the least the character or the necessity of the final issue of the contest; that General M'CLELLAN's position toward the war and the cause will be exactly what it is now, and that his devotion to any influence in the country would be the practical abandonment of the struggle and the betrayal of the cause—not because he is a bad man or a traitor, but because he does not or does not comprehend the struggle, as his own Report and letters show; and because he is in the hands of designing men without comprehension of any kind, the recent political allies of the rebels, and the present silent or very doubtful friends of the Union in extremity.

Three years of fierce civil war, as they have made us sadder, should certainly make us wiser men. Editors may declare, as they did three years ago, that we shall dine in Richmond on the 4th of July, and that General GRANT needs only to strike one blow and he will break the back-bone of the rebellion. But events turn on such fine periods. We are to have varying fortunes in the war hereafter as heretofore. Its progress and promise are to be marked from month to month in the steady course of events and the growth of opinion, not by the issue of any single battle or even isolated campaign. Summer does not leap at once politics from the winter snows. There are warm days in March, and then chill winds and frosts in April. Even May may have its biting air. But through frosts and chills and storms the summer is surely coming. O ye of little faith, could ye not watch one hour? Let us be men, not children, and then we shall be equal either to present victory or defeat.

MR. LONG AND MR. HARRIS.

THE principle in the case of these gentlemen is perfectly clear. There is a vast conspiracy against the Union and Government of the United States. Mr. JEFFERSON DAVIS and his associates sworn to support both. They declare frankly that they are in favor of allowing them to be overthrown: for Mr. LONG says that we cannot recognize the Confederacy. Mr. HARRIS frankly hopes that we shall not succeed in the war. Now, if these gentlemen are honest in saying so they ought to be shot as traitors, and do not wish to keep their oaths. For how can they legislate for the maintenance of what they declare can not be maintained at all, and ought not to, in any case, to be maintained by force? They acknowledge the success of the rebellion. They are, practically, rebels, since they propose measures for the defeat of the Union, which is all that the rebels wish. If they are honest, and that may be granted, why should they not be taken at their word?

They do not, indeed, as yet bear arms against the Government, nor did BRECKINRIDGE when he made similar speeches in Congress after the war began; for he did not take arms until October, 1861. But if, as even Judge BARNARD allows, a man who discourages enlistments is traitorous, and ought to be properly punished, a House of Representatives, which is the judge of the qualifications of its own members, may surely expel two of them who honestly justify the attempt to overthrow the Government by force, that consent to the overthrow may not be so culpable as by force of arms to attempt it. But neither these circumstances nor any moral distinction between the acts disappears. The accessory to a murder is hanged equally with the murderer himself. Nor, if they are expelled, are they punished for words spoken in debate, but for a practical complicity with the conspiracy, which, except for that speaking, could not be known.

The question becomes one of time and of expediency. But surely they should be expelled or left alone. In refusing to expel and at the same time declaring them to be unworthy members—that is, worthy of expulsion—the House stultifies itself. Suppose that either of the members had said upon the floor, "I have sent arms to our Southern brethren." They would be merely words spoken in debate. But would the House content itself with voting that the gentleman were unworthy of their seats, and then proceed, with these gentlemen still voting, to legislate for the suppression of the rebellion? Now Mr. LONG and Mr. HARRIS deliberately acquiesce in the overthrow of the Government as a foregone conclusion. Can a House which really means to put down the rebellion by force, and which has a discretionary power of expulsion by a vote of two-thirds, suffer such members to remain for the sole purpose of retarding and perplexing its action lest, if they are expelled, the right of free speech should seem to be violated?

The famous case of Mr. QUINCY and Mr. CLAY in the debate upon the war of 1812 has been cited. But Mr. QUINCY, with all his bitter vehemence, professed himself as devoted as Mr. CLAY to the defence of the integrity of the country, and the maintenance of the Government in fact. If he had declared his acquiescence in the overthrow of the Government, does any body suppose that Speaker CLAY would not have moved his expulsion, and been supported by the common-sense of the whole country? It is not the policy of the war for the Union, nor the details of its conduct, nor the corruption and weakness which they might declare attended it; but it is the object of the war, namely the maintenance of the Government and the Union, which Mr. LONG and Mr. HARRIS abandon. On what they, under their oaths, continue to be members of that Government. If the President should declare that he was convinced of the impossibility of success, and that he would sign no more bills for the prosecution of the war, ought the honesty of his intention and the frankness of his speech to save him from removal? So in this case; it is not a question of freedom of opinion or of speech. We are engaged in a war which must be prosecuted or abandoned. Congress represents a people which wishes it to go on. Its members swear to do all they can to promote that purpose. Those of them who assert honestly, "I have changed my mind, and I can not keep my oath, because I believe success to be impossible, that we shall lose it only, and ought not Congress to insist, that the question be referred to his constituents? Then, if he were re-elected, it would be evident that he spoke their opinion. Until then it must be assumed, in such a crisis, that he does not. As for making them martyrs if they are expelled, and creating sympathy for the rebellion through sympathy for them, the case of VALLANDIGHAM shows that loyal men need not be troubled. That case is perfectly well understood by the people of this country, and this would not be less so.

JUDGE BARNARD'S CHARGES.

JUDGE BARNARD'S name has been lately brought before the public by a charge to the Grand Jury of the Oyer and Terminer, and by another charge against one of the editors of the Evening Post. The latter was immediately branded as false by the journal assailed, and we presume nobody believed or believes it, because character in our case convicting has some vehement assertions even from the bench.

The other charge, that to the Grand Jury, contains expressions of wholesome truths which, had they not been hitherto uniformly despised and outraged by the political allies of the Judge, would have saved us from the war. The learned Justice declares that the right of free discussion is a cardinal condition of a republic. Nothing is truer. And because slavery can not coexist with it, they are incompatible with a republic. We congratulate the magistrate upon his perception, although it be somewhat tardy, of an elemental political truth.

But the Judge's perception was not so carefully pondered as it should have been. When a learned jurist announces that white is white, he should remember that not to say that it is black before he sits down. His Honor says, and very truly, in one part of his essay: "This is essential to the political freedom of a Republic that every citizen should have the full right to express his views on any political measure or any act of administration, and endeavor, by argument or persuasion, to bring others to adopt his views." But presently after he says that it is a traitorous act to induce and persuade men not to enlist. Why so? If a man thinks the war wrong, and the acts of the Administration in prosecuting it unjustifiable, why, upon the Judge's own ground, may he not say so to his fellow-citizens in the hope of persuading them not to support those acts by enlisting in the army? The learned Judge is guilty of a gross and absurd inconsistency.

The muddle in his Honor's mind is occasioned by his failure to remember that the Constitution provides for war as well as peace; and that many things are lawful in the one condition which are not in the other. The most fundamental right of personal liberty, for instance, is arbitrarily suspended in time of rebellion or when rebellion or invasion requires its suspension. And the greater includes the less, your Honor. If your Honor's self may, in time of war, be constitutionally and summarily suspended by General DIX without the relief of the habeas corpus, not less may Mr. VALLANDIGHAM be silenced at the discretion of the military commander. It is very sharp practice, if the Court please; but such is the nature of war, and such is the provision and the provision of the Constitution.

The men who made the Constitution had just emerged from a war. They knew its necessities and conditions. They laid down the cardinal principle of citizenship; but they were much too wise not to foresee that those rights might be appealed to in war to overthrow the very system which permanently secured them. They foresaw VALLANDIGHAM and the whole gentle tribe of Copperheads, and they prescribed for the case.

The learned Judge is right in saying that to discourage enlistments for the Government when it is struggling in civil war is traitorous. But it is only because in such an emergency the citizen has not the full right to discourage by argument or persuasion to bring others to adopt his views." Of course this formidable but necessary power of summary suppression must be exercised with discretion, for the people watch it closely, and hold the authorities responsible. But not the less is it expressly Constitutional, and a fundamental necessity for every government at war. By our own Government it has been wielded so temperately and honestly, that even in Ohio, where its exercise provoked the loudest opposition, the Government was sustained by an enormous majority of a hundred thousand voters.

THE AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

On the 8th of April, 1864, at the close of the third year of a civil war produced by the logical and futile effort to unite in one peaceful government the principle of the fullest popular freedom and of the most abject despotism, the Senate of the United States, by a vote of thirty-eight to six, proposed to amend the Constitution in the manner itself provides, for the purpose of prohibiting slavery in the United States. That nothing might be wanting to the moral grandeur and dignity of the occasion, the resistance offered to this vast American act was the petty sun-American advocates of human slavery was as contemptible as the system itself is revolting.

Of the six Senators who voted against the resolution four made brief speeches. Mr. POWELL, of Kentucky, said that if there had been no Abolitionists there would have been no rebellion: an historically too immodest claim. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, proposed to secure liberty of speech and of the press, and re-establish the principles of the Missouri Compromise—which was a proposition to feed a fire with water. For how can slavery and free speech coexist? Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky, declared the constitutional abolition of slavery a wicked and unjust act, against which he was aware the protest of an angel would be of no avail; forgetting that the only angel to whom he would have talked to protest was named LUCIFER, and fell from heaven. Mr. M'DOUGALL, of California, announced that he was devoted to human freedom, and therefore, as a true friend of man, should vote in favor of slavery.

And this was the expiring gasp in the United States Senate of the infernal principle by whose service the clear, cold casuistry and subtle sophistry of CALHOUN was formerly devoted; before which WEBSTER used to bow from whose snare the human-hearted CLAY could never break away; which, by the universal obsequiousness of the American people, had succeeded in coiling its horrid folds around all our liberties, and from whose fatal embrace this war is the struggle of the national life to escape. Yet that final escape is won in the war. The innumerable hearts that are broken, the countless homes that are desolate in our own land, and the earnest friends in other countries who understand the scope of the struggle, will see that when the great act initiated by the Senate is completed, the costly sacrifice of youth and hope and love is not in vain, and that the future of equal justice which this measure secures is well bought by all the blood and sorrow of the war.

The issue is at last openly joined. If the House fail to concur by the necessary two-thirds vote, the Congressional elections of next autumn will turn upon the question of the Constitutional Amendment, and the vote of this spring shows what the result will be.

"MEAN PETTIFOGGING."

THE feebleness and poverty of the Opposition in Congress are in nothing more conspicuous than in the tacit recognition of Mr. COX as its leader upon the floor. He is entirely unfitted; for as the Opposition clings to the defense and the protection of slavery, so its orator displays in debate, whatever may be the amenities of his private life, an unqualified insolence of the plantation rantes; and it is surprising that the Union members should suffer themselves for a moment to be badgered and dragooned by this gentleman, the personal offensiveness of whose manner in debate is not relieved by any weight or power of argument, or the least impression of any profound patriotic conviction.

Why should a man like General GARFIELD, for instance, whose devotion to the Constitution and the country has been tried and proved by fire, bandy words for an instant with Mr. COX upon the question of their comparative regard for the Constitution? Mr. COX was the chief supporter of Mr. VALLANDIGHAM for Governor of Ohio. Could his position be more clearly defined? Or could any amount of loud talk in Congress about his overpowering regard for the Constitution obscure that position? What was the last object for which he obstreperously professed his respect for that instrument? It was to shield from expulsion a member of Congress who openly professed his wish that the Constitution may be overthrown. Is this the kind of gentleman upon whom it is worth while for more soberly engaged in defending that Constitution to waste words? When Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, said that he had risen to expose the mean pettifogging of the champions of secession upon the floor of Congress, he did not characterize by too strong an epithet the speeches to which he triumphantly replied.

AUTOGRAPH LEAVES.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ALEXANDER BLISS, of General WALLACE'S staff in Maryland, has prepared a unique and most valuable contribution to the Sanitary Fair which is to open in Baltimore upon the 30th of April, a day of peculiar interest in the history of the city. He has obtained manuscripts of ninety American authors, including all the most distinguished, living or dead, each manuscript the autograph copy of some famous poem, or page from some noted work of the author. These have all been lithographed in fac-simile, so as to reproduce the originals perfectly. The originals are to be bound in a volume and sold, either by raffle or otherwise (if they are more religious in Baltimore than in Boston), and there is to be an edition of the fac-similes for sale, bound in the same splendid style, with TUCKER'S Life of Prescott. The book will be called "Autograph Leaves of Our Country's Authors," and will have a small history by JOHN P. KENNEDY, author of "Horse-Shoe Robinson," and one of the staunchest of Maryland patriots, of course in fac-simile autograph. The two opening autographs of the volume, after the preface, are KEYES'S Star-Spangled Banner and President LINCOLN'S speech at Gettysburg, the most perfect piece of American eloquence, and as noble and pathetic and appropriate as the oration of Pericles over the Athenian dead. Dr. JAMES DIXON is on the volume is the autograph of "Home, sweet Home!"

Among the other autographs which we remember from a cursory glance, are a page of the Life of Washington by IRVING; the opening lines of Gray's Elegy by COOPER; the character of William the Silent by MOTLEY; a letter of PRESCOTT'S; the Excelsior by LONGFELLOW; "Evangeline" by LONGFELLOW; the Army Hymn by HOLMES; The Maricby BAYARD TAYLOR; the passage describing sunrise from the Sunday Observatory Journal by EDWARD EVERETT; Rosalie, a poem by WASHINGTON ALSTON; a page of DR. CHANNING'S; Thy will be done, by WHITTIER; a charming poem by MRS. H. B. STOWE; some pages from One of the Twice-Told Tales by HAWTHORNE; a translation from the Spanish by GEORGE TICKNOR. These are but a dozen from the host. There could not well be a more interesting book, and Colonel BLISS has done a service to all his race. The happy thought of multiplying it. Whoever wishes to secure a copy, to have his sake and to aid a good cause, will send his name either to CESHNUS & BAILEY, or to Lieutenant-Colonel ALEXANDER BLISS, Baltimore.

MRS. KIRKLAND.

THE death of MRS. KIRKLAND is a loss even to those who did not personally know her, and who had never read her books; for so strong, even, a cheerful a nature is an elevating and purifying public influence. We are all better for the lives of such persons, as the air is clearer and more healthful long around us because of the steady winds that blow elsewhere. Her ample sympathy, her remarkable sagacity, her moral intrepidity, her fine wit and exquisite tact, blended with the most feminine loveliness, made her a power in our society and time, and we shall miss her the more now that she is gone. And yet a great, generous nature like hers impresses itself so deeply upon all who are brought in personal contact with it that it destroys the idea of death. It interprets the phrase, "Though dead, he yet speaketh." Richly gifted in character as in mind there is a completeness in MRS. KIRKLAND'S career which, although her life ended so suddenly, will always present its seeming to be a finished. Steady and faithful, ready for every moment and every duty of life, whenever death may strike, such souls are ready and ripe, and life and its harvest over. Almost until midnight she was busy with heart and hand in devotion to the work by which this nation is to be saved, and material helped forward, the work of the war, and with her hands, as it were, still lifted, she passed forward out of sight. Her work in this world was truly prayer. Her life was a benefit. Her memory is an inspiration. Early and always a true Father's business, with the meaning she old words have, as we think of her, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!"

WASHINGTON AND NAPOLEON.

AMONG the timely and valuable publications which the great Fair has occasioned none is more instructive than the "Washington and Napoleon: a Fragment," by DR. FRANCIS LIEBER: an exhaustive and striking contrast of the two most conspicuous men of the last century. The little paper is terse and complete. DR. LIEBER'S admirable scholarship furnishes him all the data, which he reports in precise and analytic. It is his fine comprehension of the true character of American institutions that has made the author so efficient an ally in the great causes upon our political and social development which is identified in the comments of the most foreign observers; while his domestication for many years in South Carolina peculiarly fitted him for experimental criticism upon the social spirit which is attempting our national destruction.

We can not quote copiously from a little paper of such uniform excellence, but we hope that this word may serve to direct attention to the "study" before the Fair closes, for whose benefit it has been printed and prepared. Ten thousand or a hundred thousand copies distributed as a tract in the army would be a good service to the good cause. We commend the good sense of this passage as a timely lesson:

"Washington was not personally popular; his power consisted in the universal conviction that he could be confided in; an almost unlimited trust in his integrity and wisdom by soldier and by citizen was his strength; but no endearing name was bestowed on him by his soldiers; and if it ever was done it did not adhere, and has not become historical. Napoleon was worshiped by his soldiers, and received the soubriquets of the Little Corporal, as old Fritz, Marshal Forward, and old Hickory were bestowed on FREDERICK THE GREAT, on Prince BLUCHER, and on General JACKSON, and adhered to them so that the names passed over into history and into the songs of the Béranger and the Arndts."

WILLIAM D. TICKNOR.

We have to record, besides the death of the distinguished authoress, MRS. KIRKLAND, that of WILLIAM D. TICKNOR, formerly of the firm of TICKNOR, WHICH was equally sudden. Authors and publishers will bear equal testimony to the courtesy and business skill of Mr. TICKNOR, while his name will be always pleasantly associated with the publication of many of our standard works, in a form which will give the books with the imprint of his house a special reputation. Every visitor of the old Saturday-night house at 135 Washington, corner of School streets, in Boston, will long miss his cordial greeting; and regard with a sincere regret the place which knew him so long and will now know him no more forever.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—April 6. Mr. GRIMES presented a bill repealing the joint resolution authorizing the transfer of men from the navy into the army. Referred. Referred, on the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Speeches were made by Messrs. HOWARD and Hale in favor, and by Messrs. M'Dougall and Powell against it. Mr. POWELL proposed an amendment to the resolution, providing that the President and Vice-President shall not be elected for more than two years, which was rejected, 12 to 21. The bill then passed to a third reading.——April 7. Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a resolution to return to their homes men who have served nine months or more in the army, from Indiana Territory, or so much of the rebellious portion of it as is now occupied by it.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution, the question being made by Mr. HENDRICKS and Mr. SHERMAN, the former opposing and the latter advocating the resolution. Mr. SHERMAN'S Saturday offered but did not succeed in introducing a resolution declaring that the resolution now under debate in the Senate should observe its 11th daily substitutions.——April 8. Mr. TRUMBULL introduced a bill to amend section 3 of the rules of the Senate requiring nominations to be acted upon in open session. Referred.——Saturday night's bill to not pass: the report was adopted.—Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill to provide for the payment of claims arising by the pledge of United States stocks, and to provide for the circulation and redemption of the notes issued to him proposed by Mr. Hooper in the House, without material change.——Mr. HARLAN introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of securing the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 11. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 11. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 12. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 13. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 14. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 15. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 16. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 17. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 18. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 19. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 20. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 21. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 22. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 23. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 24. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 25. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 26. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 27. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 28. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 29. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 30. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 31. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 32. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 33. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 34. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 35. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 36. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 37. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 38. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 39. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 40. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 41. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 42. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 43. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 44. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 45. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 46. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 47. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 48. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 49. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 50. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 51. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 52. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 53. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment. Messrs. Powell and Davis spoke against it. Finally the amendment was adopted—yeas 38, nays 6. A motion to adjourn was lost.——April 54. Mr. CLARK, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. It appropriates $30,000 to make good the losses of the friendly Indians who remained loyal in saving from the massacre many whites in 1862. It was unanimously passed.——Mr. Hale called up the bill to repeal the first section of the joint resolution of February 24, 1863, relating to the transfer of persons from the military to the naval service, which was passed.——The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution amending the Constitution. Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in BOOK DEPARTMENT.

BOAT-BUILDERS' DEPARTMENT.

SKETCHES OF THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.

We continue this week our illustrations of the METROPOLITAN FAIR, which for a fortnight has engaged the attention of all New York and its environs. In every respect the Fair has been a success, and thousands of our brave defenders in the field, in days of suffering in camp and hospital, will gather benefits from the munificent charity which has poured, through this Fair, into the treasury of the Sanitary Commission. And tens of thousands who are to-day preparing for the shock of conflict will carry themselves with a grander heroism and robuster faith, in the white heat of battle, because of the assurance this Fair gives that the people at home remember and care for the soldier, and delight to soften the rough places of his experience. On the first page we give a view representing

THE COSTUMES OF THE LADIES IN ATTENDANCE AT THE FAIR.

This illustration, aside from its prominent presentation of the ladies' costumes, gives a very accurate idea of the general appearance of the Fair interior, showing its magnificence of display more conspicuously, perhaps, than any illustration yet given.

In the Fourteenth Street Buildings BIERSTADT'S has been constantly crowded by visitors desiring to study the habits and peculiarities of the aborigines. Several entertainments have been given daily by the Indians. Our sketch represents a WAR DANCE, as given on several occasions to the intense gratification of all spectators. Historically, no feature of the Fair has greater interest than this in which the life of those who, only a little while ago, held undisputed possession of our continent, is reproduced by a handful of the once absolute tribes for the pleasure of the pale-faced race, whose ancestors pushed them into obscurity and historical oblivion.

INDIAN WIGWAM

THE BOOK DEPARTMENT, of which we give a view on this page, forms a most attractive feature to all persons of a literary turn, and a very considerable part of the receipts of the Fair will be derived from this source.

THE BOAT-BUILDING DEPARTMENT,

also in the Fourteenth Street Building, is full of interest not only to nautical visitors, but to the general public, who can not but be concerned, just now, in whatever relates to naval architecture and that branch of the public service, which, in this war, has achieved so many triumphs for the National cause.

Much interest in

THE DEPARTMENT OF ARMS AND TROPHIES

is manifested, and considerable speculation has been indulged in as to who will become the recipient of the two handsome swords—one of which is to be presented to a navy and the other to an army officer. The swords cost $1000 each, and as the subscriptions are without limit a handsome sum will be realized by the zeal of the friends of military and naval officers to secure the prizes for their favorites. Every person who pays one dollar has one vote, which he indicates on a book opened for the purpose. For the army sword the strife is between the admirers of General GRANT and General M'CLELLAN. For the navy sword the favorites are Admiral FARRAGUT and Commander ROWAN, of the New Ironsides.

WAR DANCE—INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

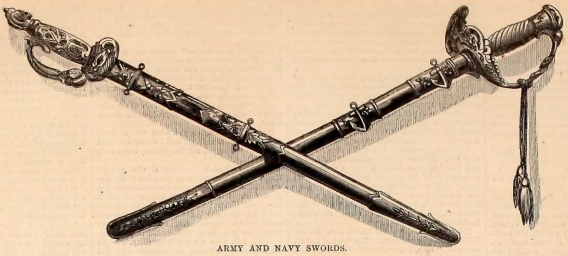
The Museum of Flags, Trophies, and Relics in the Union Square Building, contains a wonderful collection of rare and curious articles. The whole number of relics on exhibition is one thousand and twenty-two. There are old guns, old uniforms, old swords, old pistols — relics of the Revolutionary fight, and specimens from the battle-fields of the present war against rebellion — balls, hand-grenades, shells, tomahawks, rapiers, Sandwich Island daggers, and Indian arrows — battle-flags and guidons — regimental colors that went through the Mexican war and reappeared in this one — Ellsworth memorials, and relics made sacred because Washington used them — a mere description of which would fill a volume. Among the more interesting momentoes of the present war are two or three dozen of BATTLE-FLAGS of NEW YORK REGIMENTS,



ARMY AND NAVY SWORDS.

The Mexican trophies consist of a Mexican flag captured at Mazatlan, pieces of flag-staff, sword, etc.—all illustrating the heroism of our army in the Mexican war.

Our artist also presents an illustration of the spur worn by Major ANDRE at the time of his capture, and the sword carried by LAFAYETTE while in the service of the Colonies. The original bowie-knife—the first of its kind—is also exhibited. It was forged in a common blacksmith shop on the Red essor in gratitude for kindness to him when wounded. The relics of the war of 1812 consist of the flags of the British ships Cyane, Frolic, Penaced, and Highflyer—all contributed from the collection of the United States Naval School at Newport.

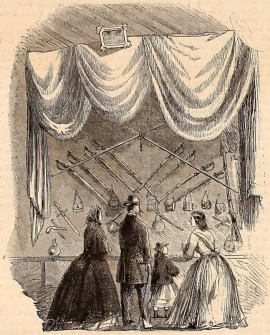
Among the rebel curiosities on exhibition are two flags bearing the "Southern Cross;" a piece of the flag that was found flying on the State House at Baton Rouge; and another flag captured by a naval officer, bearing this motto:

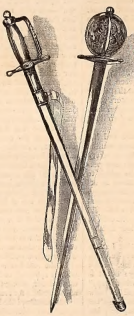
"Our cause is just, our duty
we know;
In God we trust, to battle
we go."

There are also bits of shell, grape-shot, round projectiles, hats and caps, over-coats and [illegible]-rolls, telegraph-wires, [illegible]ording-pikes and mail-[illegible]gs—all of which were once rebel property, and now speak to the fathers and mothers of our brave volunteers of the dangers through which they are passing in defense of liberty and good government.

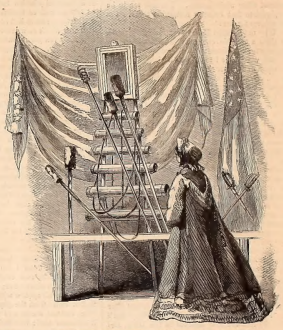
Several views of the interior of Libby Prison and of



DEPARTMENT OF ARMS AND TROPHIES—MEXICAN FLAGS CAPTURED AT MAZATLAN, MEXICO.



1. SWORD SURRENDERED BY GENERAL BURGOYNE TO GENERAL GATES.—2. HIGHLANDER'S SWORD.



DEPARTMENT OF ARMS AND TROPHIES—PIECES OF FLAG-STAFFS.

some of which have been riddled by the enemy's shot, their staffs splintered, their bearers killed, but were still saved from the rebel clutch. We give on this page a view of these flags as they appear at the Fair.

sword surrendered by BURGOYNE to General GATES on the battle-field of Saratoga, and another of a Highland sword found in a house in Cherry Street after the evacuation of New York.

Among other relics in this department are the River, by James Bowie, who subsequently lost his life at the Alamo in 1836, and was used by him in the celebrated running-fight at Natchez, in 1828, where half a dozen persons were hacked to pieces. This knife was given by Bowie to its present possessor in gratitude for kindness to him when wounded. The relics of the war of 1812 consist of the flags of the British ships Cyane, Frolic, Penaced, and Highflyer—all contributed from the collection of the United States Naval School at Newport.

Among the rebel curiosities on exhibition are two flags bearing the "Southern Cross;" a piece of the flag that was found flying on the State House at Baton Rouge; and another flag captured by a naval officer, bearing this motto:

"Our cause is just, our duty
we know;
In God we trust, to battle
we go."

There are also bits of shell, grape-shot, round projectiles, hats and caps, over-coats and [illegible]-rolls, telegraph-wires, [illegible]ording-pikes and mail-[illegible]gs—all of which were once rebel property, and now speak to the fathers and mothers of our brave volunteers of the dangers through which they are passing in defense of liberty and good government.

Several views of the interior of Libby Prison and of the exterior of Ligon's Tobacco Factory at Richmond, the Jail at Columbia, South Carolina, and Castle Pinckney, at Charleston, have a similar interest to visiters, many of whom, no doubt, have had friends in those habitations of rebel cruelty.

DEPARTMENT OF ARMS AND TROPHIES—FLAGS OF NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.

THE GOVERNESS AT SHANNON-LEIGH.

I.

"WHAT is her name, did you say? Oh! Katherine, you mean? a K. Humph."

"Oh, you think that is sentimental, fanciful, I suppose! I think it is good taste. Why shouldn't we go back to the pure old English when we can?"

"That's all. Let's have a lecture at once here, in this ball-room, upon æsthetics."

Duke, what a villainous mood you are in to-night. Come, let me introduce you to Miss Rothes. I'll promise that she'll exercise the demon you've got behind your eyes, though her Katherine is spelled with a K."

"My demon won't be exorcised to-night, then."

"Eyes won't be introduced."

"No, I won't be introduced."

"Doesn't she please you; don't you think her hand one?"

"Ish! doesn't she please me; don't I think her hand me? It is edifying to hear you high-minded, tr, unconfined fellow talk sometimes; you do yours: we quite on a par with us sinners. Doesn't she please me now, and don't I think her handsome! Indeed, I had offered up some dark-eyed houri to you in that manner, George, wouldn't you have opened upon me with bursts of my satanic way of appreciating women? Wouldn't you have asked me if that was the chief charm—the first, the final attraction—the pretty flesh and blood of her?"

"Duke, the demon is particularly unruly tonight. What ails you, old fellow?"

"What ails me? Poverty ails me, and twenty thousand other wickednesses. You ask me to be introduced to that Princess Katherine there. I'm a fit subject for it, truly."

"Why not? Miss Rothes is a fashionable girl, but she's a sensible one; she doesn't chocker her company for the sake of their possessions."

"Sid, what have I to do with such lovely things as women and flowers? They are the luxuries of life. I can't afford even the contemplation of luxuries now; it isn't good for me."

"You are morbid, and exaggerate, Duke."

"Oh, do I? Just as likely. You am I, five-and-thirty to-day, with four children on my hands, and just means enough to keep their bodies and souls together, and provide a second-rate governess to teach them manners, morals, and religion. You'd advise me to lower my lance at this Princess Katherine, I dare say, and ask her if she wouldn't like to bestow her hand and fortune upon a fellow in need; to go down to the shingle of those four young ones, who are like so many young savages; to help restore order and harmony to Shannon-Leigh, where there is nothing but decay and ruin and poverty. You wouldn't like to make me a visit now, Sid, at Christmas. We keep but one servant—Mr. Gill, who manages everything. One servant and one boy. How many of both were there, Sid, when you spent the holidays there? You'd back your own boots if you went over now, and if the Collyns should invite you over to a Christmas party, you'd look in vain for flowers in the conservatory to carry to Miss Lucretia. Mr. Gill—you remember Mr. Gill?—she was the housekeeper then, and calls herself a servant now. She's my best friend after all. I believe she'd make me the best wife. She's a faithful creature who believes in her Bible, and mends the children's clothes and their bad ways at the same time. Why shouldn't I ask her the question, some fine morning, that Robert Hall, the famous English divine, had asked his housekeeper,"

"Eh, what was that? I have forgotten."

"She came in with the breakfast things, and he bowed her with—

"'Betty, do you love the Lord Jesus?'

"'Yes, Sir.'

"'Betty, do you love me?'

"'Yes, Sir.'

"They were married forthwith."

Sid Chalmers, gay, happy, and prosperous, could scarcely understand this bitter, scornful talk. He knew well enough the facts of the case: that Duke Shannon, chief of the Scrandale Shannons, had met with serious misfortune. That he had lost his wife, a beautiful, brilliant creature Sid remembered well —not by much, for by that greatest tragedy of domestic life, flight with another. And almost at the same time a fine property had suddenly melted away in the Chancery keeping of his man of business, and Duke Shannon, of Shannon-Leigh, who had spent all his life as he listed, with books, and art, and wit, and social intercourse, with but never concerned himself about the making of money, only the spending of it; found himself brought to the limits of a slender pittance, and all his houses and lands but one remaining for the shelter of himself and his deserted children. These were the facts—bitter facts enough; but young Chalmers was disqualified from judgment of their effect, as well as from excitement as by circumstance. He, serene, easy, tranquil-natured, could never have been so hard and sardonic under any trial of life. He might have suffered acutely under misfortune, but he never would have known such savage discontent as this of Duke Shannon. Katherine Rothes, flying down the room to the musician in the waltz, caught the glances of these two as they discussed her.

She thought: "I wonder who it is that Sid Chalmers has with him to-night."

Katherine, who had met people to think of that she could well remember, could not help thinking of this stranger Sid Chalmers had with him. And it was little wonder, for Duke Shannon was a remarkable-looking person. Specially striking as he stood there in that brilliant ball-room, where even the men in their dark broadcloth had a fête appearance in the freshness and finish of their apparel; for in contrast, this gloomy face glowered out from the heavy tossed matted of hair that fell upon his forehead; and the stalwart figure, that by every movement betrayed the grace of an accomplished gentleman, was clothed carelessly and coarsely, roughly in an ordinary traveling suit. The hands, too, which now and then brushed back the falling hair or made slight gesture, were ungloved, but they were carefully kept, white and elegant as they might have been when Duke Shannon sat at noblemen's tables, and pledged his hostess over the costly wine; for in so far was Duke Shannon the native gentleman, that no degradation, no misfortune could have interfered with these simple services of refinement.

As he stood there he not only looked surly and bitter, but he had a dissolute appearance. The eyes were sunken, and the whole expression and aspect of his face was dissipated. But the first question she asked was: "Who is that dark man?"

And she made no bid for the whole story. "And why don't you introduce him to me?" she asked, looking at Sid inquiringly.

Sid looked at her and bright Kate Rothes, looking at him, understood. She laughed and bit her lips. "I see, I see," she said: "you have been supposing me for the twenty-first time the penniless duclines." Her head nodded once or twice in conclusion, as if she were fixing the fact in her mind.

Then Sid tried to make her comprehend how this unfortunate man, with his cares and struggles and griefs, had no part in any of their acquaintances. It is doubtful whether Sid Chalmers comprehended half so well as Katherine Rothes that this Duke Shannon's nature had many of the fine, delicate elements which go a great way in bringing compreliension, even about matters where experience has been lacking. "He is a man of genius, a man under Government, or something of that sort," went on Sid, "who, by-the-by, is a minister to a foreign court. He'd represent the country splendidly," Sid kept on, warmly. "But no: he's so bitter and proud, he just takes himself away and buries himself in a shanty brickerage in Wall Street; and he's no more made for business than a flag is made for singing. He doesn't understand it, and has no interest in their thousand-and-one ins and outs."

And Katherine, with her kind heart and her pure relish for art and literature, and her contempt of fashionable life, listened interestedly to every thing Sid said about this curious story; and perhaps the best proof of the power of the man over her of one of their friends, she would listen as attentively, and forget Duke Shannon and his history, and his slights and his griefs, and his misfortunes occupied her thoughts. As she stood while Sid Chalmers put on her white silk cloak, she said to him, archly, "Sid, you have been slow to look at him, as he bent over her:

"I'm convinced that some time or other I am to have this magnificent friend of yours in spite of his refusal. You know I am very prophetic. Don't go and tell him now every word I say: but it is about that we shall meet, remember what I say."

This was all spoken with a laugh; and Sid knew that in an hour's time the high spirits would fall, the hour, and the scene, and the music inspired; but it somehow made him feel grave. Long after he remembered and thought of the last time Sid had but the very look of her bright face, with its least tinge of pride, which her prosperous, happy fortune had never given her. He was the last time Sid ever saw her that season. But he little conjectured it to be the last. He thought as he had said: "I shall see you soon again."

But that to-morrow found Katherine Rothes hastening to the summons of her dying father. The season at Newport was over for her. She did not return to those lovely shores for many and many a day.

II.

"IT is my only opportunity, Sara. I must go."

"Come with me and wait a while, Kate."

Katherine Rothes looked at her friend.

"I have waited, Sara; it is six months since I began to look out for a situation. If I wait much longer I shall not have money enough to bear the expenses of the journey."

"Oh, Kate!"

Katherine knew well what Sara Fielding meant by that vehement exclamation, but Katherine was too proud to be helped when she could help herself; too proud for Sara Fielding to offer more than hint and suggestion.

"And you ought to get a better salary, Kate. To think of your being at the head of children's table, and such a Bluebeard for the master of it, too."

"Who told you so much about the master, Sara?"

"Mary Kingston. She visited somewhere in the neighborhood last summer, and heard all about him. She says he never comes to his own house, and sometimes when the neighbors called upon him, he was actually rude; positively rude, and quite plainly intimated that he preferred to be left alone. He comes tearing down from the city every Saturday night, and instead of going to church with his motherless children, he goes riding about the country with a parcel of dogs at his heels, and sits up half the night when he is back again, drinking and smoking. And more than all, there is a report that he is going to marry one of the servants. Now, Lady day, I think! Why, it's a title for a book or a piece—I wouldn't. Why, Mary said that the last governess there didn't get enough to eat, and they never have been enough to drink."

"Sara, did you ever know a man or a woman to live much to themselves without Mrs. Grundy's taking offence, and making mountains out of mole-hills in her stories about them? I dare say this is something of the case in the present instance."

But though Katherine offered such calm explanation of the difficulty, she by no means felt the same self-control and confidence. She felt the truth she was really disturbed and depressed, and a little dismayed at the prospect before her; but she was, nevertheless, determined to go. As she had said, it was six months since she had made up her mind, or rather since she had come to the knowledge that it was necessary for her to work for her daily bread.

"Has she come to that?" was the curious query of one of her summer-time friends when they heard that Katherine Rothes was seeking for a situation as governess. Yes, she had come to that—she, the gay, brilliant heiress of last summer, had come to this dire necessity for a woman!

Hastening from the sea-shore at the summons of her father, she had arrived in time to hear him say:

"Kate, I am leaving you when you need me most—three months longer and I should have had every thing arranged, and the property would have been doubled."

He got no further, the agony of what he contemplated for her brought on the crisis of his disease, and in half an hour after these words she was an orphan. When his affairs were examined, it was found that some new and splendid venture, which his clear, calculating intellect had planned and would have executed successfully if life had been spared, was now, by its inextricable involvement, bringing ruin upon the whole property. When Mr. Scranton, the lawyer, told Katherine this, she knew what he and every mourner in the house felt in words. But it took months to settle every thing, and to bring Katherine, who had never known any thing but the most luxurious life, to a knowledge of her situation. As she sits there talking with Sara Fielding, one of those rare persons who do not, through either envy or meanness, or any other motive, lose sight of friends who have "ceased to sit in the sun"—she fully realizes her situation; fully realizes that she is about to pledge herself to a life of unknown toil amidst strangers. And Sara, with the best intentions, only puts another stone in her stepped path, and gives another pain and fear when she tells her dismal story of the place and its master. But it does not move her determination. For six months she has advertised, she has made applications, and answered both; the result of all is, that only this one has come under discussion with them seems in the least feasible, the least objectionable. It was an advertisement that she had read in the city papers, a simple statement that a governess was wanted for four children, who could teach the common English branches, with French and music. The salary was $200 per annum. The address given was: "Mr. Shannon, firm of Shannon & Greaves, Wall Street. Now as Katherine read this, she could not once recall that summer night so many months ago when she listened to Sid Chalmers's story. Forgetfulness of events was one of the peculiarities, and in the intervening time had been so crowded with bitter loss and trial that it was enough of itself to overlay under possession the story of Chalmers's; and she did himself was not near to recall it for her. Directly after that summer season he had sailed for his appointment abroad.

So she sent her letter with its references to the address specified, and received a brief but satisfactory reply—namely, that Mr. Shannon approved, and directions for reaching it.

She examined the handwriting of this letter with a good deal of curiosity. It was very unlike a business-hand, open and clear—the strokes were firm and decisive; there was no waste of ink; and the free, flowing, connected style suggested more an elegant man of letters than one whose pen was employed at a counting-house desk. The letter-paper, too, was that of a gentleman, formal though it was. Katherine caught at this indication of civilization as a straw of comfort. She was, laughed at even her for it, suggesting "that a domestic fiend could have the exterior of a polished gentleman. Indeed the worst of persons that we are afraid of are not those who had fallen from a high place." But not even this moved Katherine from her decision, though it made her pause a little.

It was a dark, dull day in February when she arrived at the last station. The rest of the journey was to be by private conveyance—only a few miles; but night was fast closing in, and every thing was so new and strange to poor Kate, who had never in all her life been more than a social companionship. She found, too, that there was no carriage in waiting for her, and that it was rather unusual for a stranger to arrive at that station to Shannon-Leigh.

"Shannon-Leigh?" and the ticket-master looked curiously at her. "Well, I dunno. Jim, go down to Bates's, and see if he can send a lady over to Shannon-Leigh. Any baggage, mum?"

He looked at her again as she told him the number of her trunks, and Katherine felt her face flush uncomfortably. It was quite dark when the carriage appeared, and the whole way she tried to reason herself out of the timid forebodings that assailed her. Why hadn't she listened to Sara's warning voice, was her first thought as she entered the carriage? But that was followed by the calmer and more powerful reasoning without much success. And in this manner the journey was accomplished, and she finds herself at Shannon-Leigh. She dimly discerns a great house as they drive up the wide avenue, but no sign of light and cheer to give it warmth and cheer. But as the driver gives a vigorous ring at the bell there appears through the great ground-glasses of the side-window a faint radiance, which presently develops into the glaring flame of a candle as the door opens. It was a large, hard-visaged woman who stood before her, and her face was full of curiosity.

"I am the governess; did you not expect me?" as Katherine asked, abruptly, and with some hauteur, for she was getting her spirit roused by this time.

"Mr. Shannon didn't say when you were coming," was the explanatory answer; and she turned civilly enough for Katherine to enter, and was observing her where to go, when Katherine stopped her with:

"Will you tell one of the men-servants I should like my trunks in my room immediately?"

"There's no men-servants now at Shannon-Leigh, Miss; I'm the only one, man or woman," was the sharp reply to this request.

And then Katherine heard her giving directions to her charioteer outside, and presently saw her assisting him, in a strong, helpful way, about the trunks.

There was only a single candle left her to light her room, and in the open wood-grate there was no vestige of fuel, and the register at the side of the fire-place was cold as a stone.

Katherine's spirits, which had roused at the carelessness of her reception, fell now at this desolate prospect. Chilled, and weary, and faint with hunger, she at last broke down, and burst into tears. A knock at the door startled her. She turned her back to the light and Mrs. Gill entered with towels.

"Could I have a fire in my room?" asked Katherine, as composedly as she could.

Mrs. Gill stared at her; and the grim visage grew more forbidding.

"A fire! Miss McCann hadn't a fire the whole winter she was here."

"But I must have a fire every day," answered Katherine, quickly.

"Every day? Miss, I don't know where 'twill come from. I've had the last stick cut from Shannon wood; we never cut, and what money we get will never go far if we make fires out o' it every day for the bedrooms. You've come to a poor place, Miss; you might as well know first as last. I'wasn't always so. Shannon-Leigh was kept up in the fashionablest, but every thing's changed now; the money's gone, and I do what I can with what I get, and that's all any body can do."

This was said with a scowling defiance that took away half the force of truth, which would have given it the dignity of simplicity.

Katherine could not know whether to pity or dislike this strange, unprepossessing speaker, but said to her less hastily and indignantly than before:

"I must have a fire, and will pay for it myself. I will only trouble you to give the order to some countryman for a supply of wood."

The woman gave her a scrutinizing look and left the room. By-and-by, as she stood brushing her hair, another knock came upon the door; and there entered a boy of perhaps eleven or twelve, large of his age, and roughly clad in coarse, grey cloth, but with an air like a young prince, as he flung his arm down and deposited the basket of wood he carried upon the hearth. This uncovering of the head was the only recognition of her presence that he gave; and Katherine watched him curiously as he proceeded to build a fire in the grate. As the flame sprung up the boy involuntarily held out his hands, which were then arrested by outdoor exposure, but shapely in form and graceful in gesture.

He was going, when Katherine detained him by asking: "You are Master Shannon, I presume."

A pair of dark eyes lifted to her turned it slowly for a moment, then took an inventory of her figure, before he answered that he was Ralph Shannon. The voice was cold, the manner haughty, but Katherine could not help being interested in him, he was so haughtily handsome, and with that singular, unboy-like tinge of the pride of broken fortunes.

She was presently summoned to tea by Mrs. Gill herself, who ushered her into a room whose depth and space looked gloomy and desolate by the light of the one candle, which flared from a stately silver candlestick in the centre of the table. It had been a handsome room once, with its crimson draperies and damask-laid furniture; but constant use without any renewing had worn and marred its pristine elegance. But Katherine gave these details only a cursory glance. What interested her were the four faces that were clustered about the fire. Ralph's first, locked and haughty in expression; next him, a girl a little younger than he, with a frank and in a dark woolen gown, but as active and talkative as her brother was moody and silent. Her straight figure, her delicate face, round which a mass of fluxen hair curled in disorderly ringlets, looked pretty even in her dark, ill-made dress; and a little flippant tongue was busy in some fashion as Katherine entered. Down on the hearth a smaller girl, dark as Ralph, was busy thrusting splinters into the fire, and the buzz of the girls' voices mingling beside her was another boy, a pale, thin elf, whose insignificant blue eyes were the sole relief from non ugliness. They all turned as the door opened and Mrs. Gill entered with Katherine, and the two girls sprung forward to meet Miss Catherine, as by way of introduction, what they had known before, that this was their new governess.

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" hastily whispered the elf upon the hearth to his sister.

"My name is Miss Rothes," answered Katherine, smiling in spite of herself.

"Every one we've had before had a Mac to her name; there was MacCann, and MacNeil, and MacLeod," remarked the little dark girl, without looking up.

The fair girl giggled and tossed her head, whereat the little dark one muttered something under his breath.

As they took their places at the table, Ralph at the head and his eldest sister opposite, Katherine noticed that they did it in an easy manner, as if such was their accustomed custom. The table, too, was well appointed; there was both silver and glass, and the china was of India. There was also plenty of food, of a plain, substantial character; and Mrs. Gill, whom the children called Gilley, waited in grim propriety.

This scene was a pretty good indication to Katherine of what she might expect. They were confidential, sympathetic, companionable to each other as their tempers were; they seemed to have no distrust among themselves, no enmities or quarrels beyond a little teasing; but to an outsider they were cold, or sullen, or flippant—in a word, unapproachable. They seemed to look upon her specially, or upon her office, as one to distrust.

That first week was a sore trial to her—gently tired and gently cared for—and at the end came the master of Shannon-Leigh.

III.

It was Sunday morning, and Katherine went down little thinking whom she was going to meet. She opened the door of the breakfast-room, which was the only room, besides the kitchen and her own room, where fires were kept, and which was consequently breakfast, dining, and school room; and, thanks to Mrs. Gill's vigorous efforts, always in remarkable order.

As Katherine opened the door that Sunday morning she saw standing by the fire a gentleman, whose dark haggard face, whose careless grace of figure, struck her as oddly familiar. His head was bent, back heavy masses of black hair, and came forward. For a moment, as he greeted her with the habitual manner of common courtesy, his eagle eye scanned her with closest scrutiny. Then the children came trooping in, and he turned to them. Arriving late the previous night, this was his first meeting with them. Katherine was curious to see this strange family salute its head and master. Ralph, who was before the others, went up to his father and put out his hand. There was an eager, excited look in the boy's face, Katherine could not tell then whether of pain or pleasure. Mr. Shannon held the smaller hand in his own a second; then, with half a smile, said, "I've brought down a new body for you, Ralph."

Floy, the graceful golden-haired girl, here stepped up, her innocence a trifle subdued, and looking more womanly and lovelier than Katherine had ever seen her yet. There was a beautiful bright color in her rounded cheeks, and her soft silk hair was put back simply in order. She had put on, too, over her dark dress, a white cambric apron, with cross-caps, whose line ruffling gave her an indescribably arch womanly decoration. As Mr. Shannon's eyes met this pretty picture his face grew cold and hard, and with the least touch of her hand he turned from her to the two younger, Maud and Richard. These two only he bent and kissed, especially observing that Maud, the little dark girl, who chattered, without the least fear of him, when it pleased her, about her rabbits, her cats, and the fine white dog Floy's uncle had brought her. As she talked, and Mr. Shannon answered her in a half-jesting, sarcastic manner, which would have daunted some children, Katherine, looking at him, wondered vaguely. Suddenly he ceased this banter, raised his eyes to Floy, who was playing off her pretty teasing and bent upon sullen Ralph. With a stern look which spoke plainly as a command. Floy desisted with painful blushes and tears of vexation. Ralph's glance seemed to meet his father's in deprecation, but it was met by another glance and a gesture of the white, elegant hand, which put even all deprecation to the will. That gesture, that stern, half-savage look! As Katherine met them the mist of forgetfulness rolled away, and she knew the meaning of a German waltz, and met the blue eyes of Sid Chalmers beaming beside a darker, gloomier pair. Then, too, that strange sad young lord over again, and remembered with wonder her last words to Sid as they parted. It was impossible to tell which of the proudly self-confident man Who sat before her remembered her as well. He was politer; but his cold, absent manner, unless he made some observation directly to her, which was seldom, seemed utterly forgetful of her. He passed the day mostly in his room, and walking over the place with Ralph. Early on Monday morning he was off before they were down stairs. So week after week went by, bringing the same presence, almost the same routine of action. To Floy, who grew day by day in beauty, his conduct was inexplicable from Katherine's quick observation; and more than once she had been roused to some expression, either by manner or her treatment of the child when her father was present, to harsh or oppressive. At these times Mr. Shannon's eagle glance would fall upon her with piercing intensity; but Katherine did not blench.

Once, as the spring approached, Floy came in from a walk home from church, where she had been alone that morning, and Katherine, sitting by the window, saw that she had a companion with her—a stripling of fifteen perhaps, who paid her boyish admiration of Maud for whom Floy was putting on all her little graces and airs—a miniature woman in every gesture and expression. Katherine looked up, waiting, but the view she caught of Mr. Shannon's face, who from the other window was also observant of this scene, struck her with indignation. It was full of passion—bitter, angry passion—and a certain shuddering scorn. But as the girl came into the room Katherine's indignation broke bounds while she listened to the scathing severity of reproof which was administered. The words were not only severe, but humiliating. They seemed to accuse the child of worse than childish vanity. Scared and bewildered, poor Floy burst into passionate tears, and ran sobbing from the room.

In her happiest tone, with something of that old manner of power which once used to rise up on occasions, Katherine said:

"Pardon me, Mr. Shannon, this child is yours, but she is also under my care; and I can not see such injustice like this done without a protest."

"You think I have been unjust to her?"

There was that in his tone, a mocking devil of sarcasm that roused her still more. She burst out vehemently:

"I think, Sir, that you are cruel and ungenerous to her!"

He stooped down from his height and picked up the review he had dropped. When he lifted his face again to view it was cool and passionless, and he said, coldly: "I am the best judge of her character." His tone and manner seemed to dismiss the subject. Katherine was so incensed against him, so sympathetic with the wild burst of grief that had sent poor Floy away, that she could have cried herself. Her thoughts following the culprit, she rose up with the object of going to comfort her in some way. Mr. Shannon must have read her purpose in her face, for as she moved to the door he stepped forward and put a detaining hand upon her arm, saying, as he did so,

"Miss Rothes, I must insist that you will not interfere by any consolation with my management of Florence."

"I had no intention of interference, Mr. Shannon," she returned, haughtily; "I trust that I can discriminate between needful kindness and partisanship, and I hope that I should never be guilty of the sin of alienating a child from its parent."

There was meaning asperity in the concluding sentence which struck home to her hearer. He drew back, his dark, haggard face more haggard than before, and only said: "You do not understand."

After this, for some weeks, there was a better atmosphere. Either Mr. Shannon saw no cause for reproof, or he was waiting for an occasion for the outbreak of that Sunday. Gloomy and abstracted as he was, Katherine could see by accident that the children were more or less attracted to him and fond of him; and as she saw more of him she perceived that beneath his rough or jeering manner there was somewhere good. Proud and fastidious as he was, fond of all refinements and elegance, she saw him wear coats and breakfast garments while he brought home to Ralph some costly book into whose mysteries of Latin or Greek he himself inducted the boy; and once, when the eight-years-old Maud had wept the loss of her only doll, he had remembered to bring home to her a pretty Parisian substitute at the end of the week.

To Katherine herself he had relaxed something of his silence—nothing of his coldness. But pacing the hall with the room, or in the parlor, he would gravely enter into conversation with her about books, or any abstract question, never a word of which to society had been his habit. Rare occasions she got glimpses of a mind original and cultivated, and now and then flashes of wit and humor that indicated a nature which might have been born, under happier influences; of Mary Kingston's account of him, and had her own estimate when she first met him, the saw little corroboration. Gloomy, stern, and unjust she had seen him, but never mean, brutal, or fiendish.

June at length came, making the desolate fields and the wild neglected garden of Shannon-Leigh full of blossoming beauty. Two days ago approached the master of Shannon-Leigh fell into the habit of coming home in an earlier train; and was daily about the whole of the time, or under under the soft spell of the days; and his mood relaxed a little of its gloom and bitterness. At times he would appear to Katherine as a man who has at present astonizing under some old elm; and the remarks or suggestions he would make were invariably full of keen, subtle knowledge.

Up to this time Katherine had seen no visitor enter the house; but one night, as she strolled home from a late walk, she met Floy and Ralph watching himself to her, she heard new tones floating from the open window. New yet familiar. She went in, and somebody came forward in the twilight with outstretched hands.

"Why, Sid Chalmers!"

"What, Katherine Rothes!"

And he held her hands for a moment, looking down upon her face out of his height with an expression of sympathy that made Katherine think of all the time since she had seen him last. When lights were brought Sid scrutinized her. The honest way,

"How thin you are, Katherine!"

She colored under all the thoughts his words brought, and, turning away, met the keen eyes of Mr. Shannon fastened upon her. Hastening to turn the conversation she asked,

"Did you know Sid was here?"

"Know? To be sure. Sara Fielding told me." Then he looked from her to his host in a speculative sort of way.

"How odd it all is!" was his remark, after a moment. Here Mr. Shannon walked out of the room, to Katherine's great relief; and in her joy at first with Sid he was made to understand how utterly she had forgotten his fears and his talk about him, until she found herself an inmate of his house.

"I came unbidden, you know, Katherine; Duke is too proud to write poste to me, but I heard that you were here, and I meant to see you."

This unbidden guest brought brightness and gayety with him. In his genial presence Katherine found something of her old spirit. With him she talked about the people they knew. With him she sang again. Floy came over to her study to ask the sweet measures of her old songs. With him she walked through the woods of Shannon-Leigh, coming back with her hands full of wild flowers and cheeks. Mr. Shannon came home now every night while his guest staid, but his mood was gloomy, and he looked quite capable of discovering that he was as a lady, and her heart had melted gradually to her with this discovery, and still more when the children, one by one, came over to Katherine to hear Mrs. Gill was as faithful as Birk the mastiff. She had lived in the Shannon family for years, and known Ralph from his birth. Many of her fortunes went down she stepped without loss of dignity from her sole position as housekeeper and took up all the cares of the household; and nothing could move her from her purpose. She was a strong, hard-featured woman, but her heart was of gold.

"The master's running down," she said to Katherine. "There's a hungry look in his eye, and his head not getting as high."

Katherine went back to the parlor and looked to see these signs. He was standing listening to his guest, his dark face fully revealed in the sunset glow. As she looked Mrs. Gill's words seemed prophetic.

Sid ceased talking as she approached. Putting out his hand as she was passing, with one of those gentle, gracious movements of his, he drew her arm in his and kept her there.

"Sing," he said, in a tone that made it entreaty. "I am going in the morning."

"In the morning?" she exclaimed, her voice expressing startled regret.

She sang; and leaning against the instrument, Sid Chalmers stood listening, his soul in his eyes. She had lost herself in memories as her voice went floating down "Agatha," when a child's long-drawn, gasping sob smote her ear. She lifted her head and saw a vision that made her voice falter. Floy, scarlet and quivering under the stern eyes, the severe words of her father, who stood before her in the hall beyond the parlor, his face expressing so much bitter pain that Katherine felt Katherine's soul sickened. In a moment she obeyed an impulse, and rising from her seat left the room, with a hasty "Wait for me, I will come back soon," to her companion. The feeling that had sickened her soul caused her to close the door between him and the scene she was approaching. Mr. Shannon was unobservant of her until she stood before him. Then he looked down upon her in a hoarse voice and with an authoritative gesture, he said,

"Go to your room, Florence, and remain there until I send for you."

As Floy disappeared he wheeled round to Katherine with bent brows. "Miss Rothes!" Katherine shrank from him with an involuntary motion, and burst into tears. He flung his head up. "God! Heaven! have I been such a brute, then?" he exclaimed, in horror-struck tones. "But you do not know. Come in here for a moment." He opened the door of an apartment she had never seen entered, and motioned her to pass in. It looked like a lady's boudoir, long since deserted; for on the mirrors and work-stand there was thick dust, and the flowers on the vase of mildew and mould. He walked across the room to a picture that hung shaded by a piece of damask, and turned it to the light. It was a woman's face, of whose likeness was the exact resemblance. There was a moment's pause while Katherine made her observations. Then he went on hastily, as though a necessity urged him: "You know my history—all the world well knows it; but you do not know. Others knows it!" with a bitter emphasis of stung pride. "You are at no loss, then, to conjecture whose face this represents. Look for yourself where the resemblance lies, but you do not see the deeper and more fatal points of resemblance. You do not see them with your eyes, nor with the head, every trick of vanity, every taste for decoration and display, even the pretty wiles which win you so affection, I detect those with the keen signs of weakness which led her mother to her ruin. God knows, I may be faulty in my treatment of these evidences in the child; but I see them, and I see their forbearance once; and now, if I err on the other side, Heaven help me!

"Do you wonder that I bring you here, when no one but myself has been for years—that I tell you what I have never told before? Do you think it is to exonerate myself before him, to make you believe I am not cruel? Pshaw! I am harsh because I care for blame or exoneration from you as Miss Rothes, the governess of my children; it is because I care for you as Katherine Rothes, and not the heart of Katherine Rothes, because it adds the last drop of bitterness to my life to think that she should have any cause of blame for me. Katherine Rothes—go back to where your lover and my friend awaits you. Go away from my accursed house—as I cannot make this man's happiness. I do not complain; it is my fate. I told him long since, when he proposed your acquaintance, that there was danger in it. Some instinct warned me even then."

His look did not seek her now; he only turned to gaze upon the face. But Katherine had forgotten to rise, forgotten what was expected of her by any womanly caution. A white dizziness of emotion had come over her, blinding her eyes with tears. He caught that look; caught that vivid color which she suffered her soft cheek with its scarlet, and the next moment he was bending over her, his dark face glowing with surprised emotion.

"Is it so, Katherine? is it so? Has this heaven of love come to me?"

At first she could but the heaven of love in his accents; then, in the last sad emphasis, the remembrance of his narrowed life, the cares, the struggles, the bitterness of which those rose up as impassable barriers. But he held her clasped closely against his breast while he said: "So—stay with me for a moment before you go. Say you do."

The passionate pathos of his voice aroused her to his sorrowful meaning. She lifted her head; her eyes met his, and he broke softly the sweet line of her lips. Eyes and smile, what new meaning did they give him! What hope, and strength, and determination did they awaken from that pall of pride which had shut him in!

"What! Katherine Rothes married to Duke Shannon? I thought he had turned misanthrope, and had shut himself up from his species. Not a year ago he was lost to interest of any kind. Stunned, as it were, by his bitter misfortunes, he would not put out his hand to seek or take. Now—well, you know that he had got that appointment to Munich? It's a fine thing for him, I am told."

But Sid Chalmers, setting there calmly viewing the distant sails, told no one that he had rejected this very appointment to suggest "one who would fill it much more creditably"—those were his generous, modest words; and Duke Shannon, when he thanked him for this suggestion, believed that Sid was glad to escape the pest to which he was hastening. Yet not a year ago Sid Chalmers had made bright gaiety in Shannon-Leigh here; and forced himself hastening away as eagerly as Duke Shannon, and in the self-same company.

But as he sits there viewing the distant sails he does not think of what he has done; he thinks of Katherine and that other summer when, in the pride of her beauty and fortune, she laughed at the avoidance of his gloomy friend, and, half in jest, made her playful prophecy thereat. And he thinks: "So the governess of Shannon-Leigh has the power to restore what Katherine Rothes the heiress could never have accomplished. And Katherine is happy—glad!"

And the distant sails fade out upon the far sea-line, and still others come and go, watched by those wistful eyes.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

MAXIMS BY OUR CLERK.

A sore dog isn't generally straightened by a course of bark.

He slip on water when it is frozen, and on whisky when it isn't.

Be careful of your table-talk. Do all your biting at table in biting your food. Don't be biting in your remarks.

It is often a grievous and unseasonable thing that contains of three-quarters wife and one quarter husband.

Quilp is a great admirer of children, and says he likes the crying one best. A unisex wife is a baby in her arms smiled at his odd fancy, and asked him the reason of it.

"Why, you see, Mrs. Quilp," observed Quilp, "I have observed in well-ordered families as soon as a child cries it is taken out of the room."

In a village church-yard in England there lies buried a young man who was killed by the fall of a piece of ice. His tombstone bears this inscription:

"Here lies I, A. L. I. S.,
Here he lies,
In a cake of ice,
Killed by an icicle,
The 1st day of January Domini 1717."

An old bachelor says, of all the solemn hours he ever saw, that occupied in going home one dark night from the Widow Bloom's party, when he had by her own baby that he "couldn't come again," was the most solemn.

Why does the letter B hold an enviable position?—Because it is never found in sin, but always in temperance, industry, virtue, and prosperity. It is the beginning of religion and the end of war.

Two WISHES DUTY.—Help yourself and pass the bottle.

The long bead is never headless.

Do you indorse a scoundrel when you make your mark upon his back?

A slow pulsation is the sign of a long life, not only in individuals but in lawsuits.

A cross wife, like the bird of Minerva, does most of her flying at night.

A lady in Brooklyn is known to be so extremely humane that she will not allow even her carpets to be beaten; and the other day, hearing a noise in the entry, a boy, who was relating a story about a donkey, tell his companion to cut his stick and leave. The supposedly biased away when a relative said he had been killing time.

Dr. Jacob Main, who lived in the reign of James I. of England, was distinguished as a scholar and a wit. He displayed through life a strong propensity for innocent raillery and practical jokes. Not being able to afford but one servant, who was sadly addicted to intemperance, that he might have him something that would not be stolen. The servant, as soon as his master was dead, impatiently awaited the hour of expecting, of course, to find a heap of treasure; but, alas, his disappointment was great in finding nothing but a red herring!

A passage-at-arms between a police justice and a strongminded woman has thus been condensed in rhyme:

"The brass upon your face," he said,
"Would make a famous ribbon."
"Your Honor's head," the wench replied,
"Is brass enough to fill it in."

One man is as good as another, if not better. One woman is as bad as another, if not worse.

A crusty old bachelor, not liking a way his landlady's daughter had of appropriating his property, filled his pipe with liquid glue the day before a ball to which the girl was invited, and she staid at home in consequence. It was a sticktion.

A country editor, praising a successful politician, called him "one of the cleverest fellows that ever lifted a hat to a lady or a foot to a backguard."

"Willy," said an interesting young mother to her youngest hopeful, "do you know what the difference is between body and soul?" "No, ma," says the child, in a voice like the body carries you about." "This is your body," sounding his little belly with his knuckles; "but here's something deeper in. You can feel it now. What is it?" "Oh, I know," said Willy, "that's the bath of intelligence in his eye; that's my flannel shirt!"

A man seeing an oyster-vender go by, called out, "Give me a pound of oysters." "Will you have a measure, not by weight," was the oysterman's reply. "Very well," said the other, "then I'll take a yard of them."

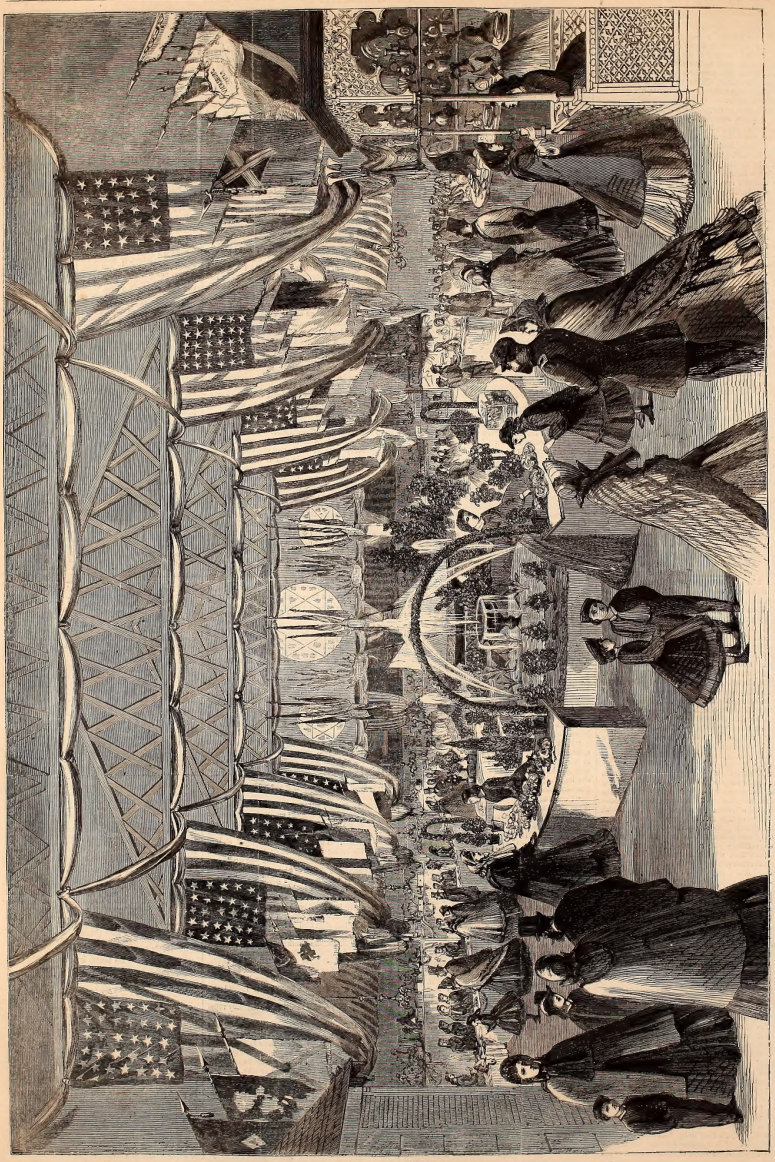
THE REAL TRIAL BY JURY.

Called away from avocations,
Worried by a dev'l vexation,
Dragged from home to go a distance,
From appearing in business;
No day's pay for that day's working,
Have to pay ten pence for dinner,
Can not make the court prove brains,
Though one may be self-incriminated;
For your loss of occupation
Not the slightest compensation;
Packed in box with dust that smothers,
Matter with clients abuts,
Coughing, wheezy, damp, and sneezy,
Space confined and fusty airy,
Doomed to question and replying,
Temper all those hours trying;
Bored by speeches long and prosy,
Thinking of your dinners cosy
These are things that, I assure ye,
Make a real Trial by Jury.

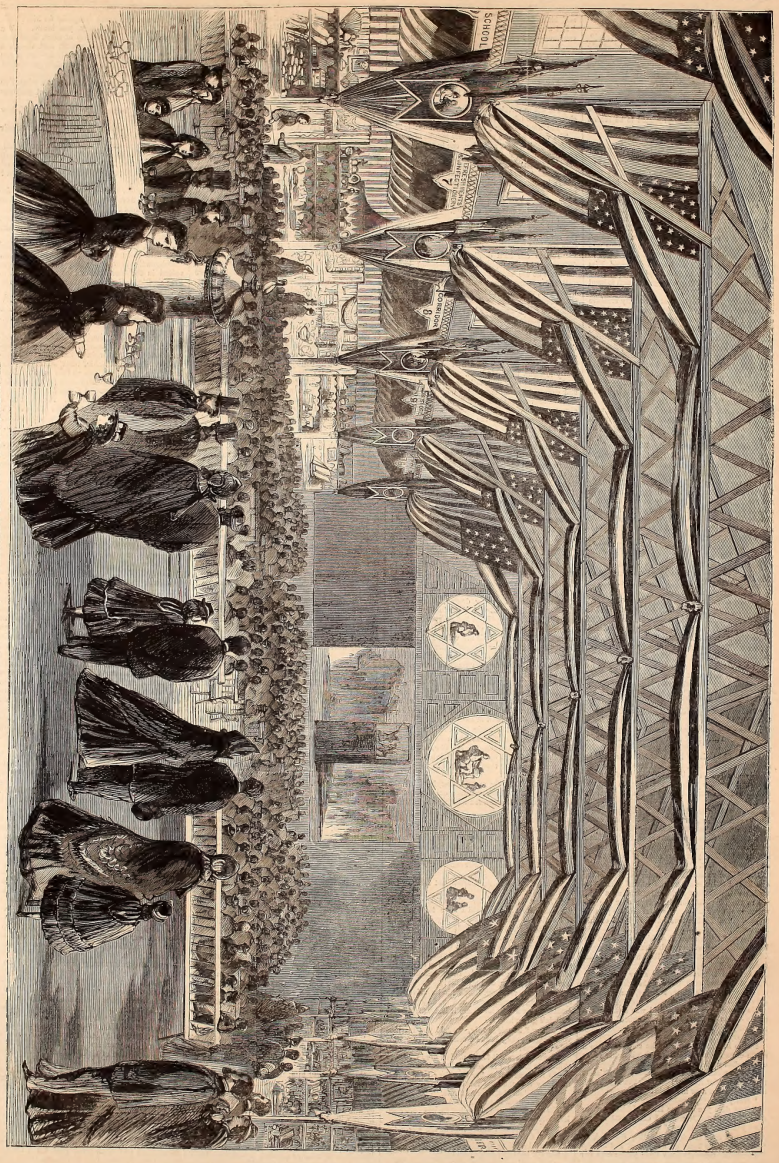
A lady occupying room letter B at a hotel wrote on the slate the following: "Wake letter B at seven; and if letter B is not up at eight, wake letter B again, for even if letter B be, letter B will be unable to let her house to letter A, or to call at half past seven." The porter, a better book-than orthographist, did not know at seven whether to wake "letter B" or "let her be."

An Irishman, in describing America, said, "I am told that you might roll England thru it, an' it wouldn't make a dint in the ground." Another fresh-water emigrant said that ye might drown Gold Ireland in; and safer Scotland to swim in than a canny Scot. Another said that he left it out, except it might be by the smell o' whisky."

The best adhesive label you can put on luggage is a stick to it yourself.



INTERNATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.



THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.—THE CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT, UNION SQUARE.—[SEE PAGE 260.]

LEAP-YEAR.

"Nothing but a private—a common private!"

It would be in vain to attempt to portray the Lady Macbethian scorn which curved Harriet Deane's lip as she spoke the sentence. John Carlyle, aloft he was quite conscious of not deserving the keen-edged contempt, quailed beneath it, nevertheless.

"But, Harriet—"

"Hush!" said the imperious beauty, holding up a warning finger. "I can't understand this matter. Gilbert Armour was promoted to be second lieutenant, was he not?"

"Yes."

"And you are his equal in all respects?"

"Yes."

"Might you not also have shared his honors?"

"I might, I suppose, Harriet," said the young soldier, fixing his calm dark eye upon her fair, flushed face, "if I had chosen to share them at the expense of poor Talcott, who earned his shoulder-straps long ago. They should have been his by every right, months since, but poverty and obscurity are not the best place-winners. Either Gilbert Armour or I must stand aside to see a younger man righted. He did not choose to sacrifice promotion to a scruple. I did, Harriet—was I wrong?"

"Oh, of course, it's nothing to me," said Miss Deane. "You were perfectly right in consulting your own choice. Will you be good enough to hand me that work-basket?"

John Carlyle sat looking at the pretty creature around whom the love of his strong nature had been entwined with a fervor rare enough in these matter-of-fact days, in wistful perplexity. Shining auburn hair parted waved from a low, pearl-pure brow—deep blue eyes, like the velvety dark of a pansy, and a mouth whose intense crimson reminded you of the inside leaves of a Lent lily. Certainly she was by no means disagreeable to look at, and Mr. Carlyle was quite sensible of the fact.

"Harriet," he said, with an unconscious tremor in the syllables, "I came—"

"Excuse me, Sir," interposed Miss Deane, with studied contempt, "I am particularly busy counting these stitches—if you would be so obliging as not to interrupt me!"

All women and he was in the devious windings of feminine nature, John Carlyle instinctively felt that this was no auspicious season for the furtherance of his suit.

"I'll try again to-night," he mused, walking homeward. "She won't be doing crochet-work forever, and I can get away in such torrents of sunshine as this. She is vexed about the shoulder-straps; I wish, for her sake, I had them, yet I could not wear them tarnished by the faintest stain of injustice or dishonor!"

The clear, bright sky was jeweled with frosty stars, and the solemn old church-clock had just chimed nine from its dim belfry, when he entered the bright room with its many blue curtains and hangings of azure silk, and Parian statuettes hidden by vases of vivid crimson roses.

It was not gloomy, however, as he had hoped and expected. Lieutenant Armour stood in the middle of the apartment, decidedly conscious of his fine new shoulder-straps, and gratulating half a dozen pretty girls. He nodded laughingly to Carlyle, and went on with the sentence which the new arrival had interrupted.

"Leap-Year! to be sure it is. And I may as well state at once that I'm quite ready to receive any propositions my ladies may have to make."

"Nonsense, Gilbert!" said Mary Elphinstone, his cousin.

"Nonsense, eh? Well, I'm glad you consider it in that light—I don't! I think it's a great shame the girls can't help themselves of their privileges, when we men are ready with our blushes and timid glances!"

He looked at Harry Deane as he spoke, half in earnest, half jestingly. John Carlyle's eye followed the direction of his, as by a sort of fascination, and saw the rose-tint mounting to Harry's cheek, and the purple-blue eyes hidden by their white lids.

How long he stood there, with a giddy pain surging through his brain, and a chill at his heart, as of a cold hand grasping at its fibres, he did not know. It might have been five minutes, or it might have been five hours; but he was roused by the breaking up of the little party, the sound of merry voices, and playful adieus.

Harry Deane was standing under the chandelier, one light hand resting on the carved back of a Gothic chair—Gilbert Armour lounged on a sofa where the blue silk curtains swept over the entrance to a recessed window. As John Carlyle pressed forward, Miss Elphinstone laid her hand on his arm softly.

"No," she whispered, archly, "don't you see it's an understood matter with Gilbert and Harry? Give me your arm home, for Gilbert will never think of me again."

John Carlyle turned silently away with white lips and clenched teeth, blind to the wistful glance that stole through Harry's lashes, the uncertain quiver of her lip!

He was gone. Yes, the field was clear for the newly-made Lieutenant. He advanced, a little nervously.

"Harry—"

But to his horror and surprise she burst into a storm of passionate tears, through which her violet eyes flashed with ominous sparkles.

"Don't speak to me!" she sobbed; "don't come near me, Gilbert Armour! I wish you'd go home, and never come here again!"

"Harry!"

"How dare you call me Harry, Lieutenant Armour? Not another word; I don't want to hear what you are going to say!"

She held open the door, imperially dignified, although the tears hung on her lashes, and the arabesque braids, escaping from their pins, swept her shoulders; and Lieutenant Armour walked out, crest-fallen.

"Well, I've got my dismissal!" quoth he to himself, biting his long mustache in impotent wrath. "But who would ever have thought she was such a confound—ed little vixen!"

"You might take off the upper arm just here, without—"

"What's the use? He won't last out the day any way, and we may as well let him go easily, even if we had time to waste in unnecessary operations!"

"I'm not so certain about that. Give the man a chance for his life. Where's the ether?"

"You want no ether; he is totally insensible!"

The words fell like meaningless jangles of sound on John Carlyle's ear as he lay, one in a multitude of wounded and dying men, in a weather-beaten old shed. The busy doctor and the hard-hearted young cadet made no impression on his failing mind; he heard what they said as if they had been talking of some one else. There was no volition—no intellect. Life seemed ebbing away from him as the sparkling tide goes creeping—creeping from the sea on the strand-boat!

All at once there came a sudden, sharp pain as the surgeon's keen instrument cleft the arm, and then followed insensibility.

"Ten to one he'll die," said the surgeon, indifferently, as he replaced the glittering tools. "There's no use bandaging it so carefully."

But the young cadet I left down to flatten the wrappings, wondering in his heart what the man would ever come when he stood, should speak so carelessly of a fellow-creature's life, Got-given!

John Carlyle did not hear the grim old surgeon to the contrary notwithstanding.

There had been a glorious thunder-shower. Along the west hung heavy purple clouds, with a dark cloud, edged with dazzling fringes of gold, while the blue zenith, smiling through its brief tears, seemed literally to wear a coronet of stars. The air full of apple-orchards pink with billows of tossing bloom, and sunny slopes all empurpled with wild violets, came in warm sweeps of fragrance on the city winds, carrying the Wall Street jobbers and shrivelled money-changers back to their country homes, and boys, looking for the first strawberry blossom under the rosy canopy of the old apple-trees!

But Harry Deane, in her widowhood, went into the wide, open hotel window, lifted the damp masses of hair on John Carlyle's wasted forehead as he sat in the easy-chair beside the couch, and passed its cool fingers softly over his burning temples, as if it fain would whisper, "Don't repine say longer! Look out on the glad day, and feel Heaven's healing sunshine on your cheek!"

As if man ever heeded Nature's silent monitions! John Carlyle was no exception to the general rule!

"A common private!—those were her very words," he murmured to himself, with a faint crimson flushing on his wan cheek, "and I am crippled now for life! Ah, it was well that I drew back into the shadow of the curtain that night, or you should have let me die that dismal night in the hospital, when the ligatures slipped off and the red life-stream welled slowly from the severed artery, and the cold, when fever throbbed in all my veins, and I madly fancied I could feel Harry Deane's tears drooping on my cheek. If I had died—never awaking from that delusion! But now—a common private with only one arm!"

He laughed bitterly as the perpetually-recurring conviction pressed itself upon his mind—a laugh that was almost a sob. Only twenty-six, and weary of his life; it is not to be wondered at and hope die out of a man's breast at twenty-six.

And the clustering domes and the spires of the great city, looming against the last and purest blood-colonized of the sunset, grew dim, and seemed to reel, as he looked upon them, through the mist that was more bitter than the tears of salt brine.

"John!"

She turned listlessly around, fancying that the word had syllabled itself somehow out of the vague imaginings and unspoken fantasies that were whirling in his brain.

But it was not fancy.

A slender little figure in a dress of pale pink—the very dress he had seen her in a month ago—and she was kneeling on the carpet beside him, and Harry Deane's auburn hair, gleaming golden in the sunset, fell over the arm of his chair where the fair head drooped.

"Harry! Not there, dearest—not there. Let me raise you."

"Oh, let me kneel here, John!" she sobbed; "let me hide my face here, where I have told you all. If I could but call back those days when I felt I was so heartless, so cruel toward you; and you have suffered so much since then! Indeed, indeed I loved you all the time, John, even when I was most willful, and I love you still! And oh! if you will only let me be your little wife, I will nurse you so tenderly and care for you so fondly! Don't send me away from you now, John, or I shall die!"

The sweet, pleading face, with its velvet-blue eyes shining through tears, and quivering scarlet mouth—what a new loveliness it had won to John Carlyle's pale vision!

"Harry," he said, softly, "would you sacrifice your bright young life to a common private with only one arm?"

"I would devote it to the noblest hero who ever spilled his blood for his country!"

She could fall on her shoulder; he was sick and dizzy with the flood-tide of happiness.

"Harry," said he, after a minute, "do you know that I fancied you liked Gilbert Armour?"

The superb scorn on her arched lip was very comical, and not unpleasant to behold.

"Gilbert Armour, indeed! You are worth ten thousand Gilbert Armours!"

"Even including his shoulder-straps?"

She put her hand softly over his lips.

"You need not suppose, Sir," she said, with a pretty defiance that became her better than the tearful humiliation of a minute before, "that I should have come here courting you, if you hadn't been so sick and worn, and if—"

"Well?"

"If it hadn't been Leap-Year!"

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by HARPER & BROTHERS, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

Printed from the Manuscript and newly Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER XIV.

AT GAMRIDGE'S.

It was very late, or rather very early, and Gamridge's was in full conclave. There was laughing, and there was swearing; bets were laid, and taken, and booked; straws were told; and jokes were created; and scandals were, not covertly buzzed, but openly roared about. There was much sincerity at Gamridge's, toward two in the morning. A few of the dandies were drunk, and their candor was, consequently, somewhat doubtful; but the others, older and more seasoned vessels, were quite as sincere, being simply cynical. They did not, perhaps, wear their hearts upon their sleeves, the majority of the possible wearers not being troubled with centres of vitality; but they wore, instead, an impudent shrug of the shoulders, and an insolent contempt for all that was good or pure—or stupid—which was the Gamridgian synonym for goodness and purity; a bold, defiant, almost chivalrous, and completely diabolical pride—pride of birth, pride of rank, pride of person, pride of dress, pride of intellect (there were some fools there, certainly, and they were proud of their folly, and plumed themselves upon it as upon a virtue or their lisp), pride, in fine, of the power of doing evil, and of impunity in wrong-doing. When a very vicious man has very much wealth, he becomes, indeed, the roaring lion, raging up and down, and seeking whom he may devour. It is only when his combustibles is languid, and his limbs grow shaky, that he begins to crawl in the dust, like a serpent, and wind his body round trees, and whisper counsels of perdition to the silly.

So most present spoke their minds at Gamridge's. There was no concealment. Every vice had its votary, and his neighbor. At two o'clock in the morning there was no need for concealment. In the day time, at the clubs, at Greenwich, in the park, at the theatres, you saw the beautiful Gobelins tapestry, marvelous in the minute finish of its work, suffused with glowing and tender color. But at two o'clock in the morning, at Gamridge's, the tapestry was turned up and pinned against the wall. You saw the reverse of the picture—the web that was behind the exquisite work and the glowing tints. A multitudinous confusion. Full of knots, and loops, and cobbles, and dams, and dead frayed ends of dirty worsted protruding from a coarse canvas ground.

A roar of acclaim broke forth as Blunt entered the room. He was a great favorite among the dandies. The eccentricities of those days thrust forward his shoulder-of-mutton palm and squeezed Blunt's delicate hand. Francis Blunt, Esquire, was the only frequenter of Gamridge's who kept his mask on at two o'clock in the morning.

The dandies crowded round him, for he had a renown for saying things which, if not brilliantly clever, were at least spiteful, and consequently were liked. Mr. Blunt, on this morning, in no mood for venting epigrams or retailing scandalous anecdotes. He could ill conceal his preoccupation.

"Is Debonnair here?" he asked.

"Been here and gone, Sir Francis," answered the colleague he addressed, Captain Langhorne, of the Guards. "Been drinking oceans of soda-water, and looking very spoony. Mountshawington says he's in love. I say it's lush."

In the reign of King William the Fourth the aristocracy were not ashamed to use habitually the language of costermongers. In these days, the writer believes, the superior orders never soil their lips with the vulgar tongue.

"Will he play?" Blunt whispered to the Guardsman.

"Whom d'ye mean? Mountshawington?"

"He play? A hundy-gurdy, perhaps. I don't mean him. He's not worth playing beggar-my-neighbor with; for nothing, Mountshawington says, he is beggared already. I mean Debonnair."

"I tell you he's spoony. He'd do any thing you told him to do. He is the soft and wretched spinach, and sighs for the due accompaniment of gammon. Debonnair is the rope across the room he'd dance upon it like Madame Saqui—till he tumbled off tipsy. He's game to play any thing, from blind hookey up to chicken hazard. He's very spoony, and decidedly sprung."

"Will you see that he doesn't drink too much? Keep him off Mr. Hardy's ale. It's five hundred. Keep him on his soda-and-B. That won't do him any harm."

"Do you want him, then, that you've so very anxious about his precious health?"

"My dear fellow, I want him between this and five in the morning, for as much as ready money and I.O.U.'s payable within four-and-twenty hours will give me."

The Guardsman whistled. "You've been hit rather hard, Blunt, lately," he remarked, "and you want your winnings, I suppose? Well, Debonnair is as good as another, I suppose. Only don't knock him down as though you were pitching into a fellow in the Broadway. Let him down softly, poor lad. Let him fall on a feather-bed."

"Have you so much sympathy for him?"

"Well, he's only a boy, you know. It's a pity to knock him down all at once, because, because, you know, he's young, and there's a good deal more plucking about him—and if you skin him alive all at once, he might get sick of the thing, and turn steady."

"I see. Well, you shall have him when I've done with him. There'll be plenty of pickings left, I'll promise you."

"I know dashed well. Do you want any fellow to-night in with you?"

"Thanks, not one. Lord Henry Debonnair and self; that's all."

"And old Nick as double dummy. Well, I've no wish to spoil sport. Good digestion wait on appetite, and health on both, and a pull of ready on all three. What do you go in for? The bones?"

"No, not for serious business. We must, for form's sake, have an hour at Crockey's, but the real affair must come off at the count's. I want him at King Alfin, in a side room, where the rest of you fellows are deep at bazzard. Debonnair, how are you, old fellow?"

All this, save the concluding salutation, had been uttered in the discreetest whisper; but, "Debonnair, how are you, old fellow?" was voiced in the loud and cheery tone of which Francis Blunt, Esquire, was an admirable master.

"The Griffin means mischief to-night," Mr. Langhorne, of the Guards, cursorily remarked a few moments afterward to Lord Claude Mountshawington.

"Oh! confound him," replied the dandy addressed, who was a younger edition of his guardsman, and had been ruined too early: "he always does mean mischief after midnight. He has had me pumped a time, and for many a thousand. How in the world does he manage it? He plays on the square, I s'pose?"

"Not a square inch of square. A perfect cube. He's the soul of honor, my dear fellow. I'm pecking, and want some oysters and stout." And Mr. Langhorne of the Guards passed on.

"Debonnair, old fellow, how are you?"

Lord Henry Debonnair blushed like a child "old fellow." He was very young. He was a boy. He had a fair round smooth face, quite innocent and blooming. His cheeks were pink and white as unfurrowed brow. His blue eyes were cloudless. His pretty lips seemed quite untainted by contact with blasphemy. How should they not? If the inclinations of his secret soul had been laid bare the discovery that he was still fond of lollypops, and sometimes passed an agreeable hour hanging to pilfer a couple of the rosy-cheeked fruit of the doting Irishwoman to whom they belonged, might have been made. He blushed, and the act of fumigation made him very sick; but he continued to smoke, almost without intermission, because his other fellows did so, and it was the thing.

It was likewise the thing, in those days, to drink; so Lord Henry Debonnair drank—Champagne, Moselle, Tokay, soda-and-B, and not unfrequently a dose fortifying but paralyzing dog's-nose, with the friendly cabman, or the enlivening but poisonous Geneva with the convivial gladiator, the bruising ranger-or of the prize-ring. It was the thing in the reign of King William the Fourth to associate with cabmen and pugilists. Lord Henry was a little head sore next day, inexistence, in its most demonstrative form, was of by no means rare occurrence with him; and he had been at least half a dozen times locked up in various metropolitan station-houses, and the next morning fined five shillings. It was the thing to be locked up at nights, and banter the police magistrate in the morning.

He had always—from reason's first dawn, at least—experienced considerable difficulty in stifling, to his own satisfaction, that two and two made four. But he kept a voluminous betting-book, and backed the favorite, and against the field, for all sorts of events, double and single, to the extent of some thousands of pounds yearly.

He betted as he gambled, as he drank, as he did worse, as he went to prize-fights and cock-fights and bear-baitings, as he drove a four-in-hand (he who was hardly out of a go-cart), as he kept race-horses and bull-dogs, not because he cared much about those amusements, or those luxuries—for next to lollipops his most pronounced taste was for boiled mutton and turnips, underdone beef, and gingerbread—but because it was the "thing" among the "set" to which he belonged. He was very lazy, very thoughtless, very good-natured, because it was the thing to be so; and he had never done, and never intended, any harm to any living creature. Lord Henry Debonnair belonged to a class common enough in the reign of William the Fourth, but whose type in the reign of Queen Victoria is unique.

Francis Blunt, Esquire, had twisted this young nobleman round his finger. He had passed a silken string through his nose, and led him by it, with perfect ease and comfort to both parties. He was far too clever to be easily the young lord. He patronized him. Lord Henry looked up to him, with implicit trust and confidence, as schoolboy, schoolmaster, and friend. He recognized all the attraction of Griffin Blunt's brilliant depravity. He felt, in his boyish mind, quite sure I know as experienced a profligate, as cajoler and a master of nefarious arts. It was the respect a youngster at school pays to an eldster. Blunt was too wary to borrow ready money of his protégé. It was not the thing to be in need of a five-pound note. But Blunt obtained the noble name of Debonnair as acceptor, as endorser, as drawer, to innumerable bills of exchange, and all kinds of dates. His lordship was never troubled to part with ready cash when he became due. He had only to sign his noble name to a piece of paper, and the interest was paid, the bills were renewed, and Francis Blunt, Esquire, was flush of cash, and would be able even to give Jean Baptiste Constant a trifle on account of his wages. Oh, the wonderful power of paper-money, and how wide-spreading are the wings of Iscariot until the wax melts off! Then he comes down plump; as Law did; as Turgot did; as the latest edition of Chevy CHASE will do.

Frank Hurst drew his arm through that of Lord Henry, and soothed, and flattered, and told gay stories to the noble boy he meant to cheat before midnight, whose brains he would have been, under any circumstances, glad enough to blow out: believing, as he did, that Debonnair admired him very much. Poor boy! If there not been seen, ere now, a little spaniel puppy dog frisking about in the den of a Bengal tigress? Hurst allowed no trace either of his design or of his resentment to show itself. He was a diplomatist villain, not a mere pocket-dam one. Friendly with my enemy first, and murder him afterward, if there be occasion for it: so ran the cautious current of Francis Hurst, Esquire's, reasoning.

As fate would have it, he was destined, that night at any rate, neither to win nor to kill Lord Henry Debonair. For, just as the boy and he had quitted Gamridge's hospitable roof, and were mounting the former's cabriolet, en route for Crockey's, two men of mildewed, slightly greasy, decidedly shabby, and unmistakably Jewish, mien, took their appearance in the lane, each one on either side of the aforesaid cabriolet. A third man, who was older, and shabbier, and greasier, and more mildewed, but not Jewish, appeared, with pantomimic suddenness, at the horse's head.

"Good Heavens, Blunt, what is the meaning of this?" cried Lord Henry.

"It only means," replied the dandy, with well-assumed coolness, but with a very pale face, "that I am taken in execution—arrested, as it is called—for about several five hundred pounds, and that, instead of going in your cab to Crockford's, I must take a hackney-coach, with these respected gentlemen, to Chancery Lane."

CHAPTER XV.

GETTING UP.

The morning broke very sadly and dreadfully to the little child left, quite alone, at Rhododendron House, by the servant-maid, with whom she had been put to sleep, had risen at six o'clock, for her work was of the hardest, and her pabulum of evil indifferent. So when, about half an hour afterward, the bold sun came hammering through Lily's eyelids, preaching to old and young alike, that eternal sermon against Sloth, the girl's place beside her being yet warm, but deserted, it is not, I hope, to be taken as a very wonderful event if Lily began immediately to cry. It does not take much to bring tears from the eyes of a little child. The infant weeps instead of capitating; and the result arrived at is about as logical in the one case as in the other. Lily's sleep was out of no very outrageous kind. It was less a fractious roar than a meek wail of expostulation. Her sorrows dawned with the day: the moment of misery was to come. She had but a very faint idea of where she was, and a fainter still of how she had come there. Every thing was strange to her. Her memory was naturally short. The events of the previous day had been rapid, crowded, and unusual. The upshot was hopeless confusion. So she betook herself to tears. The sun, however, after vindicating his dignity and potency before stirring her up so roughly, seemed to relent. He condescended to console her. He was a generous giant after all, and acknowledged that to stir up a little child might stir up some pleasure in the stirrer. There was time—hard and cruel time enough—for trials of strength, and petty rising. So murmuring (if the Sun indeed can sing) that beautiful burden to the old nurse's ballad,

Wee nut, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
When thou grows big thou'lt quite enough for thee,

he, too, began to smile on Lily, and to show her wonderful things. He had a phenomenal nature, and a rich, and a rare; and the child smiled in his company. The sun's beams dried her eyes. She looked, with round dazzles dancing in the golden rays; the strip of druggist tessellated in a bright pattern, the knobs on the chest of drawers gleaming in the sun-rays, outside, some early creeping green plants, stirred by the morning breeze, chose, with a merry fluttering, to peep in upon her through the lattice; and the sun waxed warm to all kinds of colors. Her mind was yet as light as a leaf: volatile, and carried hither and thither as the wind listed. She laughed, and forgot her little woe, and found herself playing with the pillow, which, to her, speedily became animate, and a thing to be fondled, dandled, chidden, and apostrophized. It is the privilege of very little girls to be able to say thing after the puppet; as it is of very little boys to make any thing into soldiers. I once knew the small daughter, aged three, of a tinker, who nursed for a whole hour a dead rat for a doll.

As nobody came, however, and the painful fact of the pillow having no legs became apparent, and the sun went in (to cast up his yesterday's accounts, maybe), after showing for a moment his jolly face, the door of his druggy, gloomy cane again to overshadow Lily's soul. The sun's beams were very soon darkened, and the rain-drops began once more to patter. She felt very lonely, very friendless, very hungry; and though the sun, in his back parlor, leaving her sobbing, looked up from his ledger, and opening a casement, drove a lively beam across her bed, she was inconsolable now, and wept with unassuageable bitterness.

All at once there came a dreadful bell. It must have been made of Chinese gongs melted down with revolutionary tocsins, fire-alarms, jarring chimes from brick chapels in grim towns of the shoddy country, peals from jails and work-houses, bells on men-of-war where discipline was rigid, and whose captains were Tartars: the whole hung in the Tower of Babel furnished with a clapper forged from Xantippe's tongue, and finally cracked and flawed under the especial auspices of Mr. Justice Q.C. It was a most appalling bell. It elected, first, to creak and groan, and then to emit a frightful rasping clangor that set your teeth on edge, and made your bosom's lord sit so uneasily on his throne as to seem in danger of tumbling off. The bell could hear the hand that was tugging at the rope, and the thud of the outer rim of the bell against the brick wall by the side of which it was hung. It was a terrible bell, and, long, banging of the clapper itself. It was a campanile of evil omen, a sound of doom, a most abominable bell—the school-bell of Rhododendron House.

The five-and-thirty boarders in Rhododendron House knew well enough, from long and sad experience, what the bell meant. It signified Get up! Get up this minute! Get up this instant! Get up, you fiery little sinners, under pain of ever so many bad marks, extra lessons, and diminished rations of bread-and-butter! what. It made her cry more than aught else that had previously excited her emotion; and if, at the end of five minutes, the bell-rope, the horrible instrument had not surceased in its uproar, it is not at all out of the range of probability that the terrified child might have fainted from sheer fit of a fit.

"Hoity-toity!" quoth Miss Barbara Bunnycastle, entering the room at this juncture, "what's all this noise about? No crying allowed here, miss! Fie, fie, for shame!" She had been up and dressed half an hour ago, little one.

She was quite another Miss Barbara Bunnycastle to the lady who had left the child Lily the night before. Her voice was sharper, her gait firmer, her manner more determined. She seemed to forget that she had any such persons as parents, and spoke only to pupils. Cake and wine existed no more in her allure; she was suggestive only of bread-and-water and sky-blue. The holidays were a million miles and ten centuries away. She was not cruel, quite: not severe, only what you please—was still the guide, philosopher, and friend of her young charges; but she was, above all, their governess.

Miss Barbara had at first some difficulty in reconciling herself to the gross infraction of scholastic discipline which the sight of the bald-boarder, who had not only neglected to leave her couch at the "getting-up" bell, and apparel herself in her everyday garments, but was also so ignorant of the arts of the toilet as to have left untouched the many dingy corridor, dignified with the name of a lavatory, where the five-and-thirty matutinally fought for the possession of two jack-towels and three squares of yellow soap. Miss Floris was not even competent to hook-and-eye another young lady's frock, or to adjust, or to fasten, to tie her pinafore. What was to be done with a pupil who could not even part her hair, and knew nothing of the mysterious mystery of a comb bag? But, by degrees, it dawned on Miss Barbara that Lily Floris was a very little, little child—actually, in fact—and that she had been a plenty of time to break her into the manège pursued at the Stockwell academy of female equitation. Even the education of Caligula and Theodora, those paragons of judicious training, must have had a beginning. Again, it occurred to Miss Barbara that the little one represented so much good money, already paid in her behalf, and that, as to her, there was no expense much more equally good. Accordingly, bowing to the force of circumstances, she shrugged the shoulders of her mind, and considered that the affair, although dreadfully irregular, must be made the best of; and, in pursuance of this same resolve, she undressed the child in spite of Floris's trunk, and to array the new inmate in the garments provided for her. Nay, she even went so far as to take the child upon her lap, and to frictionize and slouch, in alternate douches and dry rubs, the face and hands of her protégée.

Lily by no means liked this. She missed the warm bath, the soft sponge, the soothing words and merry chatter of Floris, to which she was used to make the ordeal of the tub tolerable. Now the tub was replaced by the servant-girl's washing-basin, the soothing words by cracks, not much bigger than a pie-dish. She was dreadfully afraid—she knew not why—of her instructress; but attend the earliest assault of stifled sobbing. When, added to anguish of mind, you happen to have some soap in your eyes, it is hard to refrain from lamentation.

Miss Barbara observed the child's grief, and, as she washed her, chid her.

"You naughty cry," she said, sharply. "It's wrong and foolish; and besides it'll prevent your learning your lessons. Do you know what a bell means, little one?"

"Es," replied Lily, who had once or twice essayed to put a doll through a course of elementary instruction, but, for the rest, had no more idea of lessons than of the Teleogoo language.

"That's right," quoth Barbara. "You'll have plenty to learn while you're here, I can tell you. Idleness is the parent of vice; and you'd better be dead than a dunce. Above all, no crying; it's wicked. Do you understand me?"

"Es," replied Lily again, feeling that she was called upon to say something, but understanding about as much of the drift of the query as of the primordial organization of matter.

"Then dry your eyes directly. You mustn't look as if you were unhappy. Nobody is allowed to be unhappy here. You're to be brought up under the law of kindness. I've washed and dressed you this morning, and, till you're able to do it yourself, the servant will see after you. I'm not a nursery-maid; understand that. Now come along."

"Es," replied Lily again, bewildered between the exposition of the law of kindness and the soap still smarting in the aqueous humors of her eyes.

"Then why don't you do as you're bidden?" pursued Miss Barbara, giving a very slight stamp with her foot.

Somehow Lily couldn't do as she was bidden. She saw no reason for crying—only distressed. But in her helplessness, and with this terrible personage, who spoke so sharply and scrubbed so hard, towering over her in an indefinable feeling of insubordination took possession of her small frame. She was a very tiny leveret to stand at bay; but she clenched her fists, and crammed them into her eyes, and stammered out, "I won't," sat down in the middle of the floor, and began the rest very inarticulate incoming.

Here was a fine piece of work! The logical Miss Barbara felt that it would be a lamentable desolation of the law of kindness to have recourse to slapping; on the other hand, the child only responded to commands by more passionate outcries. So Miss Barbara took a middle course, and seizing the recalcitrant by one arm, shook her.

"Will you come now, you ugg,ravating little thing?" she exclaimed.

The shaking was slight enough, but it was quite sufficient to subdue the aggravating little thing—she who, up to that moment, had never had a finger laid on her in anger. Miss Barbara had not clutched her with any extraordinary vigor; but she was muscular, and her fingers had left their marks on Lily's baby-flesh. The child looked at these marks, and acknowledged at once the presence of superior force, of irresistible force. An extinguisher descended quickly, and for good, on the flickering flame of revolt. She gave in—rose—suffered Miss Barbara to smooth her rumpled frock—and very meekly followed her down stairs, clinging to the bombazine skirt of her instructress.

Miss Barbara Bunnycastle had probably never perused the famous work on Education written by Mr. John Locke, author of an Essay on the Conduct of Human Understanding, in which that profound philosopher relates a light-hearted anecdote of a most affable maternal person, and an ornament to her sex, I am sure—who whipped her little daughter on her coming home from church times in succession, in the course of one morning, before she could subdue her obstinacy. "And had she stopped at the second whipping," opines the great Mr. Locke, "the child would have been ruined." Fortunately Lily's little mother had been got under by the first sort of coercion. I am not prepared to surmise what the result might have been after eight shakings.

So down she went, passing through the lavatory before mentioned, when two or three lagging boarders, who had been late in obtaining a hold on the jack-towels and the yellow soap, or were still dallying with the comb-bag, or vainly endeavoring to find eyes for their hooks, did, half suffering from Miss Bunnycastle's face, like chaff before the wind. Then they descended half a dozen brick-stairs, and having passed a damp hung with bags, and cloaks, and playground hats and bonnets, behind them, entered a long, low, whitewashed room, barely furnished with desks painted black, and wooden forms, and a few maps, and a closed book-case strongly resembling a confessional-box, and at the upper end of which, at a raised rostrum, sat Mrs. Bunnycastle, with a pile of open volumes before her. She was another Miss Floris in this. Mrs. Bunnycastle in the House of Lords, by lower chairs of estate, occupied by Miss Celia and Miss Alice Bunnycastle, the two English and the French governesses, or "teachers," as they were less reverently called by the pupils, occupied the first two forms in the school-room, and Miss Floris found a kind of roving commission all over the weaker-nerved portion of the house, to look, and to reprove. Her eye was every where, and her body was in most places.

It would seem that the solemn service morning, the whole pomp and state of the establishment of Rhododendron House had been brought out to impress the new pupil—although she was such a very little one—with a due sense of awe and reverence. It was rarely, under ordinary circumstances, that Mrs. Bunnycastle made her appearance in the school-room until after breakfast; and as seldom did more than two of the pupils at a time attend the earliest assembly of the pupils. However, on the first appearance of Lily in the school-room, she found herself in the face with the whole dread hierarchy of her future home—to say nothing of the five-and-thirty boarders sitting at their desks, whose gaze she was to be diverted toward Miss Floris with the concentrated force of one eye.

"Here's a new pupil, ma'am," whispered Miss Barbara to Lily; she had to stoop a long way down to whisper. "Little girls shouldn't stare. It's an idle, wicked habit. Now kneel down and be very quiet."

Happily Lily needed but slender instruction in this particular. She had been taught to pray. She plumped down on her little knees, and, folding her hands with edifying decorum, bent her fair head, and began to murmur God knows what. Emphatically He knew what.

There was a shuffling, rustling noise, as the girls, at a signal, rose from their desks to kneel upon the forms. Then Mrs. Bunnycastle read prayers in a mild bleating voice, taking care to pronounce "knowledge" with an omega. After the orthodox orisons she read a lengthy homily from a thin dog's-eared book, which, according to a tradition among the girls, had been written by a dean, who was Mrs. Bunnycastle's grandpapa. The homily was full of very hard words, and composed with most wholesome and improving; but its arguments seemed to have a direct reference to some by-gone theological controversies that in the immediate spiritual wants of the five-and-thirty boarders. However, there was a beautiful passage about the idolatries of Rome—which Mrs. Bunnycastle, according to classical precedent, scrupulously pronounced Room —and the homily was accompanied by at least one gratifying circumstance, that every body seemed very glad when it was over. The girls, who had joined in the responses to the prayers with great zeal and apparent zest, and in divers degrees of shrillness, now rustled and shuffled into their places again, and Mrs. Bunnycastle proceeded to promulgate divers bills of pains and penalties, in the shape of lessons and bad marks for offenses committed between the rising of the sun on the previous evening and the rising of the same that morning; and then, when one young lad had been taken into a dismal level and being condemned to learn by heart a whole page of Télémaque, and another had been relegated to the penal study of a cheerful geography of Genesis, and a third had seen the prospect of the after-dinner play-hour dashed from her lips by the stern fiat that she copy out three pages of Décobir, and when all the inculpated young ladies had vehemently denied the sins of omission and commission reported to them, and when the governesses appealed to had emitted lava floods of crimination and recrimination, and when Mrs. Bunnycastle had rapped her desk several times in a minatory manner, with the dean's volume of homilies, and somebody's ears had been boxed —for the law of kindness did not exclude some occasional commentaries and marginal references of a storm—Miss Barbara took the Lily of Rhododendron House, who, to all appearance, had been lying in wait below till the climax of shrill outcry and general uproar had reached, suddenly burst upon the assembly, not in person, but vicariously, by ringing the bell for breakfast. A very bad person was the cook. She would bend over her sauce-pans in the kitchen till she strained, as it seemed, a red heat, and would then rub up stairs into the dining-room and tug at the bell till she was cool: thus triumphantly vindicating the principle of counter-irritation.

MORNING.

Fresh-rounded hills and dimpling vales
Bright blushing shine—Morning hails
And the lonely star of morning pales,
And the mists are lifted from the dells.

Soft zephyrs are breathing from the west
Over the rippling corn,
And the sun is rising in the east
On the white brow of the morn.

The flowers shall look their every sheen,
And their petaled eyes unclose
With innocent looks on the calm blue deep,
That curtain their vapors.

From nestling homes, all leaf-embowered,
The lively song-birds arise,
And fields and river banks are showered
With sweet-notes insect-lauds.

All things are glad at the wakening breath
That heralded the day,
When weep, or sadly sigh to death,
Passeth upon its way.

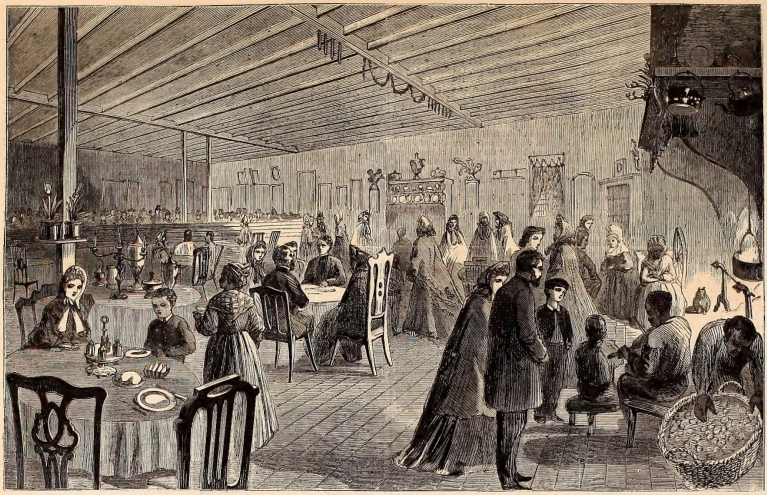
The sweet foreshadowing of that waking
What under heaven? Who knows?
While the morn of another life is breaking,
We shall open there darkened eyes.

THE EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN AND HIS WIFE.

FERDINAND MAXIMILIAN JOSEPH, Archduke of Austria, and Emperor of Mexico by the intrigues of LOUIS NAPOLEON, whose puppet he has become, is the son of Archduke FRANCIS CHARLES and of Archduchess SOPHIA, Princess of Bavaria, and is the younger brother of the present Emperor of Austria, FRANCIS JOSEPH I. He was born July 6, 1832, and is now consequently just in the fresh summer of his years. He holds the rank of Admiral and Commander-in-chief of the Austrian Imperial Marine, having worked his way up from the lowest grade of his profession, aided very materially, of course, by the fact of his exalted birth. He is described as a remarkably plain and republican sort of gentleman, and has certainly enjoyed more popularity in his rule over the people of the Lombardo-Venetian and in every place where he has filled a station he probably his greatest weakness.

The offer of the imperial crown of Mexico was made to the Archduke by a Mexican deputation on October 3, 1863, and was accepted by him under the condition of the election being ratified by the Mexican nation. The latest advices from Europe represent that the Emperor was about to sail for Mexico to take possession of his throne, in occupancy of which he is to be supported by a force drawn from two sources—1. A Foreign Legion, in the service and pay of MAXIMILIAN; 2. A force of 30,000 men, such as can be hired to uphold the usurpation. The Foreign Legion, which is to consist at first of 6000 men, including up in part from the army of Paris, and the first installment of 500 men were embarking at Cherbourg three weeks ago.

The wife of MAXIMILIAN is Princess CHARLOTTE, daughter of King LEOPOLD I. of the Belgians, to whom he was married July 27, 1857. Princess CHARLOTTE was born June 7, 1840, and is consequently twenty-four years of age, and is said to be a woman of many charms of character.



THE KNICKERBOCKER KITCHEN, UNION SQUARE.

SKETCHES OF THE METROPOLITAN FAIR—CONTINUED.

In the Union Square Buildings the

KNICKERBOCKER KITCHEN

—illustrated on this page—attracts a large share of the attention of visitors. Meals are served up in the old Knickerbocker style to all who wish them; and old Knickerbocker gentlemen visit the place nightly to smoke their pipes and chat pleasantly together in the corners. Several of the ladies having this department in charge appear in the apparel of the old times, made of the most costly and elegant materials. Some of the visitors to the Kitchen, according to the reports of the daily papers, carry extensive appetites. One day "one youthful gormandizer boasted that he had 'put away upward of fifteen Dutch cheeses' in the course of a tolerably long meal. An old gentleman from Ulster County appeared early in the day and called for breakfast. Soon after he returned and inquired for a little lunch. That having disappeared, he retired apparently satisfied. Not many hours elapsed, however, before he again turned up craving for dinner. At 9 o'clock he was enjoying a little something once more before retiring for the night."

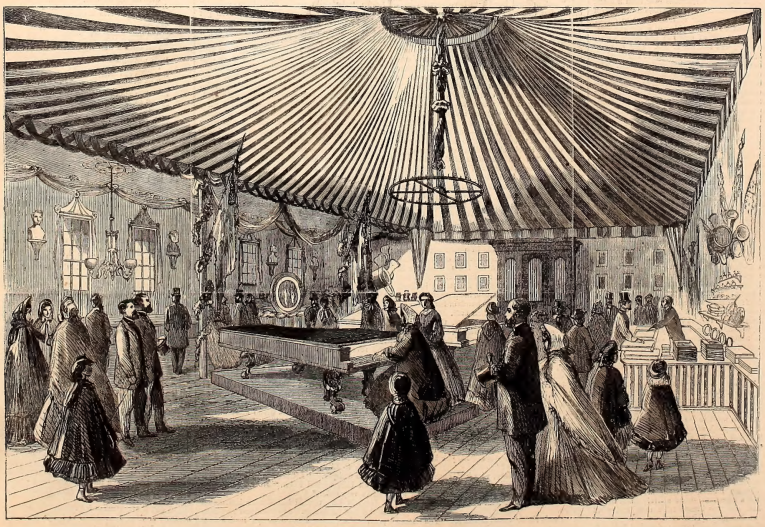
THE MUSICAL DEPARTMENT

is a most delightful resort, in which lady visitors find especial pleasure. The instruments are all of the first class, and have been sold at large prices. There is also a select assortment of sheet music, musical books, etc., and at all hours of the day some performer discourses sweet sounds for those present.

Another point of great interest in the Union Square Buildings (illustrated on page 261) is the

INTERNATIONAL DEPARTMENT,

which is crowded with rare selections of Science and Art contributed from different countries. One of the principal ornaments of the department is a fountain in full play, margined by vases of flowers. The sales here have been very large.



THE MUSIC HALL, UNION SQUARE.

METHODIST TABLE.

INTERIOR OF IRVING COCKLOFT.

A main point of interest in the Fourteenth Street building is

COCKLOFT HALL,

or the Salmagundi Summer-House, in the New Jersey Department. This house abounds with relics of IRVING, to whose memory it is consecrated. Copies of every portrait ever taken of him are to be found there, together with the table on which he wrote, sketches and paintings illustrative of his life and works, original manuscripts and editions, etc. Here are also exhibited a scarf of ROSE STANDISH, worn in 1620, and many other things equally interesting—among them the flag of PAUL JONES, when in command of the Bon Homme Richard. The interest which visitors manifest in every thing about this house furnishes an eloquent testimony of the power of a great name, and the reverence all men feel for a good and noble life. Our sketch gives an interior view of Cockloft Hall.

One of the most attractive of the miscellaneous stands in the Fourteenth Street Building is that of the illustrated on this page. At this stand—No. 26—nineteen churches of the Methodist denomination are represented. The contributions consist of camp-stools, library-chairs, silk sofa-cushions, cloaks, Afghans, a large assortment of embroidered goods imported from Paris, infants' clothing, wax and other artificial flowers, mechanical toys, dolls of all sizes and colors, shell-work, and perfumery. The assortment is one of the largest in the Fair, and is presided over by one of the ladies.

METHODIST UNION,

In the Union Square Building

FLORA M'FLIMSEY.

THE CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT,

referred to last week, has proved a great success, not only affording the little folks an opportunity to do something for the soldier, but furnishing a constant source of amusement and profit to visitors. The sales in this department have been very large; but all vacancies created by purchases have been promptly supplied, so that the display has been uniform and complete throughout. The profit derived by visitors to this department has not been merely of the pocket or the eye. In thousands of hearts the spectacle there presented has revived sweet reminiscences of childhood; and many a withered, weary face has grown bright again, no doubt, in the presence of the memorials of that time, when the winds of June blew along their paths, and the birds of spring warbled in the green boughs of their young lives. Our sketch of this department represents one of the entertainments which have been given nightly, to the delight of thousands of visitors.

The view entitled "FLORA M'FLIMSEY" on this page represents a Doll contributed to the Fair by a lady and her daughter, with twelve complete sets of dresses, etc., all of the finest description, and made entirely by the hands of the contributors. The wardrobe thus provided for the miserable Flora includes every garment and accessory the richest taste or heaviest purse could suggest, and yet the whole is offered at a price which would not, probably, pay for the material at present rates. As a triumph of womanly patience and skill "Flora M'Flimsey" must challenge the admiration of all visitors. "Nothing to Wear" never had a more perfectly satirical illustration than this.

MAXIMILIAN AND WIFE.—[SEE PAGE 267.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HONEST ABRAHAM LINCOLN.
1,000 AGENTS WANTED TO SELL
LIFE, SPEECHES, LETTERS, ADDRESSES,
PROCLAMATIONS, AND MESSAGES,
OF
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
with a Complete and Authorized
HISTORY OF HIS ADMINISTRATION.
By HENRY J. RAYMOND, Editor of the N. Y. Times.
One large Octavo Vol. Price $1 50.
For further particulars, apply to
DERBY & MILLER, Publishers, New York.
, Copies sent by mail on receipt of Price.

Dyspepsia and Costiveness cured.

D. J. TENNY'S CASE.—New York Mercury, January 14, 1860.—Whether the Brandreth Pill is ever conducive into blood, we will not now discuss. But our chief objects in view, is to give a statement of a gentleman who says he has taken one of the Brandreth Pills, for at least sixteen months, daily, or about 480 days in succession, and who says that at the end of that time he considered himself cured of Dyspepsia, attended by a constant costive state of the bowels, which had troubled him for a long time.

This gentleman, Mr. Daniel J. Tenny, resides at the Astor House, in this city, and has been in the employment of excellent health ever since he was cured by this treatment. He is an intelligent man, and there is no doubt of the truth of his statement. This proves, at least, this as many as one of the Pills prepared by Dr. Brandreth can be taken for nearly 500 days in succession without harm, and at the end of that time a dyspeptic and costive habit of body may be perfectly cured. This could not be said of any of the remedies in use by those who only relieve the Regular Faculty.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicine.

12 Card Photographs for $1. Also of the best material, and will be sent assorted to any address on receipt of price in U. S. Currency. Address
J. U. ROLLINS, Box 670, Haverhill, Mass.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE.

Col. Charles Anderson (Lieut. Governor elect of Ohio) writes:

In a letter of July 10th, 1863, acknowledging receipt of a "Ridgewood Case," says: I thank you heartily for the friendship which directed this present to me, but more heartily for the comfort and pleasure which it hourly affords me. Every soldier in the parties soon ought to have one of these cases, as a constant Campaign Companion, and adds: If I were rich enough, owner and officer of the 924 O. V. ("of God bless them all!") should have one forthwith.

Sincerely your friend, &c.

Compact and portable as a Cheer Case, it is offered in various styles at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, $3 00, $3 75 and $5 00, the two last being gold plated and engraved.

☞ Single Cases sent by mail, free to the Army, and every soldier can procure one through his friends. A liberal Discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Also the

Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

of superior quality and flavor, put up in Packages to fill the Case, and in various sizes for the General Trade. Also half pound packages of this FINE TOBACCO, full weight, carefully put up, sent by Mail, Free, on receipt of $1 25. All Orders promptly filed.

OFFICE RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
479 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, New York.

BADGES. BADGES. BADGES.

SOLDIER'S COMPANY PIN.
" CORPS BADGES.
" CAVALRY BADGES.
" ARTILLERY BADGES.

Send for our Illustrated Catalogue. Address
C. L. BALCH & CO., 206 Broadway, New York.

Ask your Sutler
To show you one of
Howard's Patent Money Belts.
They will not sweat or wet through under any circumstances. They are light, durable, and elegant, and are made with compartments for
LETTERS, GREENBACKS, and PHOTOGRAPHS.
If your Sutler does not get them, you can have one sent you by return mail (postage paid) by sending Two Dollars to the
Howard Belt Co., 464 Broadway, New York.
Sutlers, Agents, and Peddlers wanted in every Camp, Hospital, and City.

Enameled Chamber
FURNITURE
The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, walnut and chestnut, plain and ornamental, in suits, wholesale and retail. Also Mattresses and Feather beds. WARD, 317 Canal St., N. Y.

DEMOREST'S N. Y. ILLUSTRATED NEWS, a Weekly Journal of Illustrations on all live subjects, and a National and Family Newspaper in its most comprehensive sense. Published 90 Beekman Street. Sold everywhere.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications. Novels: No. 1. The Hunters. 2. The Trapper's Retreat. 3. The Patriot Highwayman. 4. The Hunted Outcast. 5. A Cruise with the Pirate Sommes. 6. The Man-Eaters. 7. Charlotte Temple. 8. The Death Fiend. 9. The Indian-Slayer. 10. The Turtle-Catcher. 11. The Hunter's Triumph. Send, post-paid, on receipt of price, 10 cents.
GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 128 Fulton St., N. Y.

A New Song
By the Author of
"Who will care for Mother now,"
"Mother watch the Little Feet," &c., &c.,
Entitled,
"He was not Afraid to Die."
Words and Music by
Charles Carroll Sawyer.
(The Colonel of one of our Regiments has concludes a letter written to the family of a noble soldier, who was killed in battle: "You will never have these cheering words to console you—"HE WAS NOT AFRAID TO DIE!")

The Music of this beautiful Song is published by S.W. YER & THOMPSON, 70 Fulton Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y.
☞ Sent to any part of the United States on the receipt of the Sheet price, 30 cents.

To Learn Piano Playing Easily,
Correctly, and thoroughly, use "Richardson's New Method." Ten thousand copies of this work are sold every year. Its easy progressive lessons, its attractive Exercises, and its general plan of leading the pupil gradually from a knowledge of the simplest rudiments to an ability to perform difficult music, have made it a universal favorite with teachers and pupils. Obtain it every place where it has been introduced. Price $3 00. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

ARMY BADGES.
SOLDS SILVER AND GOLD BADGES of every description constantly on hand, and NEW STYLES to order. Also a Souvenir Ring, with Coat of Arms, Regt. beautifully engraved on the outside, in solid silver, at $2 50; 18 karat gold, $5 50. Send for Price List. Address HENRY HAYS, $1 00 each. Sent by mail. Agents wanted.
No. 4 Astor House, Broadway, N. Y.

The Printer's Devil; a handsome, illustrated, literary family paper, will be sent six months on trial for 25 cents. Address "THE PRINTER'S DEVIL, 113 Fulton St., New York." This offer has never been equaled.

50,000 AGENTS WANTED.
B. T. BABBITT'S
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.
I will send a sample of either of the New Artillery, Cavalry, Engineer, Infantry, Navy, Zouave, Rifle, or U. S. Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Division, or Company Badge with pocket pin, on receipt of $1. Beautifully engraved thereon, for $1. Send for Wholesale Illustrated Circular.

5000
Agents Wanted,
TO INTRODUCE OUR
NEW GOLD PEN.
This gold pen is something entirely new, and is now offered to the public for the first time, and is made by an entirely new process, enabling us to offer them very cheap. Every pen is warranted one year, and to be genuine diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity and writing qualities of the highest priced gold pen made. Single pens sent by mail on receipt of the following prices:
WITHOUT HOLDERS.
No. 2. Medium Pen, each 40 cents.
No. 3. Large " 50 cents.
No. 4. Engrossing Pen, " 65 cents.
WITH SILVER-MOUNTED EBONY HOLDERS, IN MOROCCO CASES.
No. 2. Medium Pen and Holder, each 90 cents.
No. 3. Large " " " $1 00.
No. 4. Engrossing Pen and Holder, each $1 15.
Great Inducements to Agents and Clubs. Send for our Circular. GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 181 Broadway, New York.

Grays Patent
Molded Collars

HAVE now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best fitting collar worn.

The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles noticed in other collars.

The corset causes no puckers on the inside of the turn down collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the neck.

The Gentlemen Collar has a beautifully finished edge on both sides.

These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOLDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.

They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down style), in every height from 12 to 17 inches; also in "Gentlemen" (or Gretzel), from 13 to 17 inches; and packed in "solid sizes" in one dozen cartons, numbered from 12 to 17, or in smaller ones of 10 each—the latter a very handy package for Ladies, Gents, and Navy Officers.

☞ EVERY COLLAR is stamped

"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."

Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire St., Boston.

J. S. LOVERIN & CO., 27 Warren St., New York; VAN DENSEN, Buchanan & Co., 627 Market St., Philadelphia; HODGE, Sill & Hodge, 8 Hanover St., Baltimore; Bradford, Smith & Co., 329 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Arnold, Beers, Nye & Co., 161 Vine St., Cincinnati, O.; J. von Bertele & Co., 434 Main St., Louisville, Ky.; A. Hendricks & Bro., 10 Main St., St. Louis, Mo.; Bradford, Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Weed, Witters & Co., 74 to 82 Tthoquibuska St., New Orleans.

CARPET WARP.
WOOL TWINE.
Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

Homeopathic Observer. Monthly, at $1 per year. Send stamp to "Homeopathic Observer," Detroit, Michigan, for sample number.

8 NEW BOOKS FOR ONE DOLLAR.—Gulliver's Voyage to Lilliput, Hoppfrog Brothers, by Miss Alcott; On Picket Duty and Other Tales, by the same author; The Vendetta, by Balzac, the French Thackeray; England and America, by H. Ward Beecher; Tickets. A Tale of the Lottery; Bachelor Life; The Battle of Waterloo, by Victor Hugo; The Morals of Epictetus, by Thomas Jefferson. All the above books will be sent by mail, postage paid, securely put up—over 700 pages, with 8 illustrations—on receipt of ONE DOLLAR, or sent by express, C. O. D., on receipt of ONE DOLLAR, by JAMES REDPATH, Publisher, Boston. Agents wanted. Send for Circular.

U. S. 10-40 BONDS.

These Bonds are issued under the Act of Congress of March 6, 1864, which provides that in lieu of so much of the loan authorized by the Act of March 3, 1863, to which this is supplementary, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, on the credit of the United States, not exceeding TWO HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS during the current fiscal year, and to prepare and issue therefor Coupon and Registered Bonds of the United States: and all Bonds issued under this Act shall be EXEMPT FROM TAXATION by or under any State or municipal authority. Subscriptions to these Bonds are received in United States notes or notes of National Banks. The Bonds will be REDEEMED IN COIN at the pleasure of the Government, at any period not less than ten nor more than forty years from their date, and until their redemption FIVE PER CENT. INTEREST WILL BE PAID IN COIN, on Bonds of not over one hundred dollars annually, and on all other Bonds semiannually.

The interest is payable on the first days of March and September in each year. The semi-annual Coupons are payable at those dates, and the annual Coupons on the 20 and 100 dollar Bonds are payable on the 1st of March. Subscribers will receive either Registered or Coupon Bonds, as they may prefer.

Registered Bonds will be issued of the denom. nations of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), One Thousand Dollars ($1000), Five Thousand Dollars ($5000), and Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000), and of any other of the denomination of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), and One Thousand Dollars ($1000).

Subscriptions will be received at par, exclusive of accruing their Bonds draw interest from March 1, by paying the accrued interest in coin—or in United States notes, or the notes of National Banks, adding fifty per cent. for premium), or receive them drawing interest from the date of subscription and deposit.

As these Bonds are exempt from municipal or State taxation, their value is increased from one to three per cent. per annum, according to the rate of tax levies in various parts of the country.

At the present rate of premium on gold they pay over eight per cent. interest in currency, and are of equal convenience as a permanent or temporary investment.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as the various descriptions of U. S. Bonds. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties or corporations, or separate communities, has only to be pledged for payment. But the faith of the United States the whole property of the country is holden to secure the payment of both principal and interest in coin.

These Bonds may be subscribed for in sums from $50 up to any magnitude, on the same terms, and are thus made equally available to the smallest lender and the largest capitalist. They can be converted into money at any moment, and the holder will have the benefit of the interest.

The fact that all duties on imports are payable in specie furnishes a fund for like payment of interest on all Government Bonds largely in excess of the wants of the treasury for this purpose.

Upon the receipt of subscriptions a certificate of deposit therefor, in duplicate, will be issued, the original of which will be forwarded by the subscriber to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, with a letter stating the kind [registered or coupon] and the denominations of bond required.

Upon the receipt of the original certificates at the Treasury Department, the bonds subscribed for will be transmitted to the subscribers respectively.

Subscriptions may be addressed to the Treasurer of the United States at Washington, and the Assistant Treasurers at New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, and by the

First National Bank of New York, No. 4 Wall St.
Second National Bank of New York, 191 St. and Broadway.
Fourth National Bank of New York, Pine St.
Sixth National Bank of New York, 6th Avenue and Broadway.
Tenth National Bank of New York.
National Exchange Bank of New York.
First National Bank of Albany, N. Y.
First National Bank of Auburn, N. Y.
Second National Bank of Utica, N. Y.
First National Bank of Syracuse, N. Y.
Third National Bank of Syracuse, N. Y.
First National Bank of Binghamton, N. Y.
First National Bank of Buffalo, N. Y.
First National Bank of Washington, D. C.
First National Bank of Philadelphia.
First National Bank of Boston.
First National Bank of New Haven, Conn.
Second National Bank of New Haven, Conn.
First National Bank of Hartford, Conn.
First National Bank of New London, Conn.
First National Bank of Portland, Me.
First National Bank of Providence, R. I.
First National Bank of Boston, Mass.
Second National Bank of Boston, Mass.
First National Bank of Worcester, Mass.
Second National Bank of Springfield, Mass.
First National Bank of Worcester, Mass.
First National Bank of New Bedford, Mass.
First National Bank of Cleveland, O.
Second National Bank of Cleveland, O.
First National Bank of Cincinnati, O.
Third National Bank of Cincinnati, O.

And by all National Banking Associations throughout the country. All respectable banks and bankers throughout the country will furnish further information on application, and afford every facility to subscribers.

The Sum of Disease
Reduced.
By the operation of Brandreth's Pills, the sum total of disease is reduced, and their continued use, according to printed directions which accompany each box of new style, is certain to cure, in all cases where the life-principle is within their recuperative powers.

Beware of Brandreth's Pills Curative Qualities.—The whole curative effect may be placed in this light. If the stomach and bowels are out of order, the general health is effected. If any disease exists in any part of the body, whether local or general in character, that disease will more or less affect the stomach and bowels. Now, Brandreth's Pills, by removing promptly from the bowels, and cleansing the stomach and bowels of matters that interfere with their healthy action, restore and keep in order these important and governing organs of the economy of man.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicine.

LACE CURTAINS
New Spring Styles for 1864.
G. L. & J. B. KELTY, 359 Broadway, N.Y.

WATCHES.
A Heavy Hunting Cased Silver Composite Watch, fine movement, full jeweled, lever escapement, make the appearance of Solid Silver, sold by the case at $75 00. Sample Watches sent free, on receipt of $25.
The Great English Army Watch, in heavy handsome gold composite hunting cases, beautifully engraved, is highly finished and partially jeweled, and in running order. These cases will wear for a great length of time. Sold by the case at $75 00. Sample Watches sent free of expense, on receipt of $25.
The Great New Jersey Watch, especially for Soldiers, in heavy and handsomely finished solid gold hunting cases, genuine Lever movements, ruby jeweled, and warranted as a representation, and a perfect timekeeper. Constantly on hand Watches of every description. Send for Circular, without the expense of a visit to our circular. Sample Watches sent free. Postage, by the case, $1 Registering, 25 cents.

WARRANTEE.
We warrant every Watch to be as represented, or money refunded. A written warrantee given if required.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Importers,
No. 181 Broadway, N. Y.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at $1 for each article, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods worth from 7$ cents to $300 each. Circulars giving full particulars sent to any address. A dollar bill or ten sending 25 cents we will inform them in advance what article they will receive, giving a description of the same, with the price as sold at retail. Any article ordered, if it does not prove as described, we will refund the money.

For further particulars, address, with 3c. stamp,
ANDREWS & CO., 108 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.

The Kerosene Lamp Heater Co.,
206 Pearl St., New York.
MANUFACTURERS OF FISH'S PATENT COOKING LAMP, WITH WHICH
WATER IS BOILED AND FOOD, ARTICLES OF FOOD COOKED AT ONE TIME WITH ONE BURNER with one cent's worth of oil.
The greatest Household Economy ever offered. For Descriptive Pamphlet, address WM. D. RUSSELL, Prest.

AGENTS, for best chance in the world, address
A. D. STEPHENS, Providence, R. I.

OLD ABES JOKE'S:
FRESH FROM ABRAHAM'S BOSOM.
Comprising all his issues, except the "Greenback," being the late and only edition of the Original.
Sold by Booksellers and News Agents everywhere. 400, 16th St., N. Y.
T. B. DAWLEY, Publisher, 13 & 15 Park Row, N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, sold by HARPER'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Before and Behind the Curtain.—12 Photographs, showing the actresses in their dressing rooms and changes of the Stage box. Introduction; Subscribers' Privilege; Rescue; Behind the Curtain; The Actress' Reward; At Dressing Room; Gentlemen's Dressing Room; The Lobby; The Private Box; Behind the Scenes, and last picture by Richard Parker & Co., cor. Ann and Nassau Sts., N. Y.

ASTHMA.
WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA is a sure cure. Ex-President Martin Van Buren was relieved from distressing paroxysms by its habitual use. It is not injurious.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The Spring number of Demorest's Mirror of Fashions is now ready, presents a brilliant display of beautiful novelties for the season. Numerous engravings, new and extraordinary attractions, among which is a large Double Diamond Fashion Plate, twice the usual size, and the most beautiful Fashion Plate ever offered in a magazine in the world. The Spring number also contains 248 Fine Size Patterns, an elegant Bead Sheet, with much valuable information, &c., all for only 30 cents, or yearly subscription, $1, with a premium of One Dollar's worth of extra Patterns. Do not fail to obtain a specimen copy. The Agriculturist and Mirror of Fashions, furnished together, for $1 75. Address Mme. DEMOREST, Publisher and Mirror of Fashions, $2 92; Godey's Lady's Book and the Mirror of Fashions, $2 75, both one dollar less than the cost of Splendid premiums for Clubs. Address Mme. DEMOREST, No. 473 Broadway, N. Y.

SOMETHING NEW
IN PLAYING CARDS.
LOVE SCENES.
Designed from French Artists.
The above new Card has fifty-two beautiful pictures, of elegant design, which, when one side is bent the same as ordinary playing cards, thus combining pleasure with amusement. Packed in morocco case and two red stamps, and for sample pack, $5 per dozen. Liberal discount by gross to dealers. H. A. CASWELL, 60 Nassau St., New York.

J. H. Winslow & Co..

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$125 00 each.
100 Gold Watches	70 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches	18 00 each.
3000 Vest and Neck Chains	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " "	3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Breast Pins	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Ore., and Opal Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 5 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sleeve Buttons	2 00 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets	2 50 to 10 00 each.
6000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'nted Holders	4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittances amount to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

269 Broadway, New York.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 50 enameled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shield, Stars, and Stripes the suits, and two can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The trade supplied. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,

14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 265 William Street, N. Y.

MME. DEMOREST'S IMPERIAL DRESS ELEVATOR, a very durable, convenient, and perfect arrangement for raising the dress in graceful festoons; the fashionable style, uniformly all around, and letting it down at will. Price 50 cents. Sold at all the fancy and trimming stores, or sent by mail free on receipt of the price. No. 473 Broadway. Dealers supplied on liberal terms.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 31x51. Price $2500.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts. Call and examine, or two samples sent free by mail for 50c. Reside for $2, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Onguent will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price 50c., sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 209 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Silver Watches of all Descriptions,
From FIFTEEN, TWENTY, and TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS to SEVENTY DOLLARS each.

Fine Gold Watch Chains,
Now Styles—for LADIES and GENTLEMEN, FIFTEEN, TWENTY, TWENTY-FIVE, to ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS each.

Fine Gold Ear-rings and Pins.
New Styles —SEVEN, TEN, TWELVE, FIFTEEN, TWENTY, TWENTY-FIVE, to ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS a set.

American Watches.
GOLD and SILVER of all DESCRIPTIONS.

Ladies' Fine Watches.
FORTY, FORTY-FIVE, FIFTY-FIVE, SIXTY, to ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS EACH. Warranted.

For sale by GEO. C. ALLEN, 415 Broadway, New York, one door below Canal Street, formerly and for twenty-two years in business in Wall Street.

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS, THE LIVE PAPER OF AMERICA.—Everybody and his wife are in ecstacies, and are complimenting DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED NEWS, as the most spicy, interesting, and live illustrated paper ever published. It needs only to be seen to be appreciated.

HEALTH OF AMERICAN WOMEN.

From the age of fifteen to forty-five years, women are, owing to their physical organization, subject to a long train of distressing symptoms, which render them unfitted to enjoy life. These troubles are known by the general name of "FEMALE WEAKNESS"—needing positive or reliment affords no exemption—and they were deemed incurable until the discovery of

The Graefenberg Company's Uterine Catholicon.
(Marshall's).

This medicine has received the sanction of the medical faculty and the public, and it may be relied upon with the Utmost Confidence.

Its value is so well known to our readers that we will only offer brief testimonials.

☞ I can speak positively in favor of the Graefenberg Uterine Catholicon (Marshall's). In fact, it is infallible in cases of female weakness, and has effected many remarkable cures.

MASON R. LYONS,
Edinburgh, Ohio, March 21, 1864.

☞ I have taken the Graefenberg Uterine Catholicon, and think it a great medicine.

MRS. E. JACKSON,
Warsaw, Ills., March 19, 1864.

☞ For all complaints peculiar to females (irregularities, obstructions, &c.), use the Graefenberg Uterine Catholicon (Marshall's) as here proved a most certain and valuable remedy.

H. GURLEY,
New Hampton, Iowa, March, 1864.

☞ The above Catholicon ☜
Is a certain cure for all female irregularities, weakness, tumors, ulceration, inflammation, whites, falling, and other local complaints peculiar to the sex, as well as the constitutional troubles arising from them.

Price $1 50 per bottle. FIVE BOTTLES FOR SIX DOLLARS.

The Graefenberg Vegetable Pills.

The best Pill in the world for family use, and for all Bilious and Liver Complaints. Price 25 cents per box.

Address all orders to J. P. BRIDGE, M.D.,
Resident Physician, GRAEFENBERG COMPANY,
No. 139 William St., near Fulton, New York.
☞ Inquire if dealers sell Dr. Bridge's Pills.

Attention Company!

Clark's Cogwheel, a powerful stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of whiskers or mustache in six weeks without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using it can wash it off without, as well as with the aid of a hairdresser. Sent to any part of the country, by mail, on receipt of 50 cents. Address,

CLARK & CO., 15 Dwyer Hl.
Albany, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
Bridge & Co., Biddeford, Maine.

"Good Looking."

ETHNOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHRENOLOGY, Physiognomy, and Psychology, with characters of nations and individuals, given in the ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. 15 cents a No., or $1 50 a year. For 50 cents the Phrenological Journal for January, February, March, and April sent by first post, by FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

In Press, "The Soldier's Happy Return," musaka descriptive, 20c. EXERCISES Music Book, No. 1 and 2, 50c. each. Either of the above pieces sent for violin, flute, or cornet. Just published, Nos. 1 and 2 Solos for Violin Music Book, 25c. No. 1 contains Nos. 1 and 2, mailed. "FEDERAL'S WALK." "WHY I LOVED HER." "NATIONAL INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, every description. Price list sent on receipt of stamp. F. DEDERAL, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 213 Broadway, New York, want Agents in every county and every regiment, for the sale of their new styles of Watches, on which very liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

$11 Watches. $12

"AN ELEGANT WATCH."

Sit in very lovely Silver hunting cases of splendid finish. Silver cases, with beautiful Enamel Dial, Jewelled, pure white dial, and steel polished hands, Jewelled movement, and guaranteed perfectly correct, forward, together with a very handsome gold-plated chain and key, to any address in the country, on receipt of twelve dollars, or eleven dollars without chain.

C. E. CLARKE & CO., 208 Broadway, N.Y. P. O. Box 5630.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm.

This remedy has been used in the family of the proprietor and his friends for many years, and they have relied upon it to effect it for sale to the public, feeling confident, after a trial, that they will consider it a public benefactor.

In cases of Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism it is invaluable; and if, after a fair trial, it fails to cure, the money will be returned. Price $1 per bottle.

PERSONAL DEPOT: No. 154 Tenth Street, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price.

EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTIES continually appearing in Demorest's New York Illustrated News, the most spicy, interesting, and live newspaper, now ready, universally acknowledged the most spicy and live weekly now published.

Watches and Jewelry.

American, Swiss, and English

WATCHES

In every variety, in (my own) superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the trade or army, large or small, promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years. T. B. SYNNER, 175 Broadway, New York.

Grover & Baker's
Highest Premium
Elastic Stitch Sewing Machines,
495 Broadway, New York.

THE PRACTICAL SHEPHERD,

A COMPLETE TREATISE ON THE BREEDING, MANAGEMENT, AND DISEASES OF SHEEP.

By Hon. Henry S. Randall, LL.D.,

Author of "Sheep Husbandry in the South," "Fine-Wool Sheep Husbandry, &c., &c.

PUBLISHED BY D. D. T. MOORE, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

This work, first published last fall, has already reached its Fifteenth Edition, and the demand has thus far been extraordinary. A new and revised edition is now ready, and others will follow in such rapid succession that all orders can hereafter be filled promptly. No volume on any branch of agriculture or husbandry ever had so rapid a sale or gave such universal satisfaction. The work is a timely one, and unquestionably the best and most complete Treatise on Sheep Husbandry ever published in America. It is cordially received and highly approved by both Press and People. Witness the following extracts from a few of the numerous Reviews and Letters the work has elicited:

From the New England Farmer, Boston.

THE PRACTICAL SHEPHERD.—In a work that has long been needed by our agriculture, Mr. Randall is the hand and head of every person owning sheep.

From J. H. Klippart, Sec'y Ohio State Board of Agr.

I shall with great pleasure recommend the "Practical Shepherd" as being the great American work, if not really the best work in the English language on the subject.

From Hon. I. Newton, Commissioner of Agriculture.

I beg to thank you for the very interesting work "The Practical Shepherd," which you have sended, and fully supplies the wants of the farmer.

From the Maine Farmer.

The name of Hon. HENRY S. RANDALL is a guarantee of its completeness and reliability.

From Col. B. P. Johnson, Sec'y N. Y. State Ag'l Society.

It is the best American Sheep Book, I think, ever published, and does credit to Dr. RANDALL.

From the Ohio Farmer.

The reputation of Mr. RANDALL, who ranks as the authority in this country upon all that pertains to the breeding and management of sheep, will induce a large and continued demand for "The Practical Shepherd."

From the Michigan Farmer.

Mr. RANDALL has made the very best book extant on American Sheep Husbandry.

From the Country Gentleman and Cultivator.

As a whole, this book is unquestionably in advance of any thing of the kind now before the public.

☞ THE PRACTICAL SHEPHERD is sold only by Agents and the Publisher. It comprises 464 large duodecimo pages, and is printed, illustrated, and bound in superior style. Price $1 50. Those not supplied by Agents can receive copies by mail, post-paid, on forwarding the price to

D. D. T. MOORE,
Editor Rural New Yorker, Rochester, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED for the above work.

FLAX AND HEMP CULTURE.

Just Published, the "FIFTH EDITION OF A MANUAL OF FLAX CULTURE, &c.," containing full directions for Preparing the Ground, Sowing, Harvesting, &c., &c., also, Rules for Making Cloth on HEMP AND FLAX in the WEST; Modes of Cultivating, Rotting, Scutching, &c. With Illustrations and Directions."

This work, first published last season, is in handsome style, pamphlet form. Price only 25 cents—for which a copy will be sent to any part of the United States, U. S. or Canada mails. Address

D. D. T. MOORE, Rochester, N. Y.

MOORE'S RURAL NEW-YORKER.

The second quarter of Vol. XV. of this valuable and interesting journal commences with APRIL. HORTICULTURAL, ENTOMOLOGICAL, BOTANICAL, AGRICULTURAL, LITERARY and FAMILY WEEKLY, commences April 2—a good time to subscribe. The Rural is known and admired in all sections (outside of Rebeldom) from Maine to Minnesota and Canada to Texas. It comprises over a dozen distinct departments, including Agriculture, Horticulture, Sheep Husbandry, Domestic Economy, Literature, News, &c., &c., and employs the BEST TALENT. Among its Editors and Contributors are Hon. H. S. RANDALL, author of "The Practical Shepherd," &c., who conducts the department devoted to Sheep Husbandry, and P. BARRY, Esq., author of "The Fruit Garden," and former editor of The Horticulturist, who will treat upon Horticultural affairs. Indeed as the N. Y. Farmer said years ago, The Rural New-Yorker "excels all other weeklies in every city." Taste and use. Terms only $3 a year—less in clubs. Two specimen numbers sent gratis, on receipt of each insertion. Address D. D. T. MOORE, Rochester, N. Y.

Great Chance to make Money!

$650.000 of WATCHES, JEWELRY, &c., given away with our Subscription Prize Packets. Every Agent purchasing 100 Packets will receive free a GENUINE SILVER WATCH. We also publish SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, by which $10 received will yield $50. More money to be made selling our Family Engravings than in any other business. For particulars of SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS, send for New Circulars, to G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 & 38 Beekman St., N. Y.

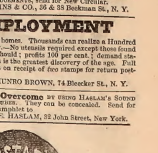
EMPLOYMENT

At your own homes. Thousands can realize a Hundred Dollars Weekly.—No stencils required except those found in every household; profits 300 per cent.; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage.

Address C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Deafness Overcome by using HASLAM'S SOUND RESTORING DRUM. Can be worn unseen. Send for a descriptive pamphlet to

F. HASLAM, 39 John Street, New York.



For Rats, Mice, Roaches, Ants, Bed Bugs, Moths in Furs, Woollens, &c., Insects on Plants, Fowls, Animals, &c.

☞ Sold by—

ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

DR. B. C. PERRY, DERMATOLOGIST,

49 Bond Street, New York,

Formerly of 29 Winter Street, Boston, treats successfully all Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair, and Premature Blanching. Also, removes Moth Freckles, and other Discolorations from the face, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultations free.

For particulars address stamp for Circular.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

For May, 1864.

CONTENTS:

LIFE WITH THE ESQUIMAUX.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Arctic Sea.—Burial of Kollak.—Kodlugo.—Kodlugo's Monument.—Esquimaux Sledge.—Esquimaux Snow-House.—An Interior.—An Incident.—Celebrating the King's Birthday.—Bathed Iceberg.—An Ice Cathedral.—Esquimaux Fish-Spear Sketch.—The Full Moon: Nature on a Spree.—Frobisher Bay and Grinnell Glacier.—Death of Nakerton.—Death of John Brown.—Inuuit Fire-Lamp.—Storm-sound: Disruption of the Ice, by the Sun Beam-Hunt.—Blind Esquimaux.—Chewing Boots.—An Arm of the Grinnell Glacier.—Frobisher's Relics.

FEVERFEW.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Girl in the Garden.—The Sculptor and Model.—The Interview.—The Revelers.—The Refuge of the Church.—Psyche.

SOLD FOR A SONG.
ONE OF THE "DOGS OF WAR."

A VISIT TO THE CONVENT OF SITTNA (OUR LADY). DAMIANE.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Convent of Our Lady, Damiane.—Avid.—The Siesta Boat.—The Shadoof.—The Sakia.—A Fierded Wheel.—Head-Dress of Egyptian Girls.—Dress of the Egyptian Lady.

THE GOAL, AND AFTER.
HOW I OVERCAME MY GRAVITY.
THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON.
CHAPTER XI. Not very far from the 25th.
CHAPTER XII. Showing how Mr. Crosbie became again a Happy Man.
CHAPTER XVII. Lilian Dale vanquishes her Mother.
THE PRINCESS OF PARMA.
POLLY.—(With Illustration.)
HOW MR. PENNYFEATHER OF THE DYREDALE LIVING.
ILLUSTRATION.—Thinking and Winking.
THE MOON'S WANDERINGS.—(With Illustration.)
THE LAST NIGHT.
ILLUSTRATION.—"Say, have I not done it bravely?"
DENIS DUVAL. By WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.
CHAPTER IV. Out of the Depths.
CHAPTER V. Denis Duval at Bow Bells.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—M. de Suverne.—Little Denis Dances and Sings before the New Year's Company.
THE SECOND DIVISION AT SHILOH.
PEGGOTY PLIMPTON'S CHOIR.
A SUPPRESSED PHILOSOPHER.
MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.
EDITOR'S LITERARY GOSSIP.
EDITOR'S DRAWER.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—What Auburn goes to Market.—Private Facie Evidence.—At a Railway Station.—Wanted, an Heir.
FASHIONS FOR MAY.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Promenade Dress.—Torn Toilet.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $3 00
Two Copies for one Year 5 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of TEN. SUBSCRIBERS, at $3 00 each, or Six Copies for $15.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months $1 00
One Copy for One Year 3 00
Two Copies for One Year 5 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 75 each, or Twenty for $37 50. Payment invariably in advance.

VOL. I. of HARPER'S WEEKLY, VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $3 00 each, are now ready.

☞ The Publishers would give notice that they employ no Traveling Agents to solicit Subscriptions to "Harper's Magazine" and "Harper's Weekly." Persons wishing to subscribe to these Periodicals should remit direct to the Publishers, or they may be sure that they are not the Agents of known responsibility.

Postmasters will receive Thirty Dollars per line for inside, and One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for outside Advertisements in HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

THE INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

COMMITTEE-MAN. "No, no, WALK-IN-THE-MUD! You mustn't go and scalp those ladies. We don't do so here! And your Great Father wouldn't like it!"

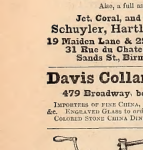
WALK-IN-THE-MUD. "Scalpee 'em! Me no want scalpee 'em!—They so nice me want go hug 'em!"

COMMITTEE-MAN. "Oh, is that all! Then you may go. They have a partiality for Distinguished Foreigners."

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Brokers of Government Securities.
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,
FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.
Also, a full assortment of
Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.
Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street, N.Y.
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

Davis Collamore & Co.,
479 Broadway, below Broome St.
IMPORTERS OF FINE CHINA, WEDGEWOOD, PARIAN, &c., &c. ENGLISH GLASS to order to avoid scarcity.
COLORED STONE CHINA DINING SETS.



Putnam Clothes-Wringer.
TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. JNO. W. WHEELER, of Cleveland, Ohio, and John C. Leffert, of New York.
PUTNAM MFG. CO.
GENTLEMEN: I know from practical experience that iron will galvanized with zinc will not oxidize and rust into particles. I can safely say, after several years experience in the manufacture of chain, for chain-pump and waterdrawers, in which I have tested the affinity of iron and zinc, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect void of the two.
Nearly one year ago my family commenced using one of your Wringers. It now performs all of its functions as well as it did the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article with us. I have closely observed several other kinds of clothes-wringers, the modus operandi being different, trying to produce the same results as the Putnam Wringer, but in my judgment they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is as near perfect as possible, and I can cheerfully recommend it to be the best in use.
Respectfully yours, JOHN W. WHEELER,
Manufacturer of Machinery in the galvanizing business replies up to the above is the exact statement in all particulars.
New York, January 1863. No. 500 Jackson Street.
Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Licensed to receive in every town.
No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. A, $8.
Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by
The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 33 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.
S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is in size, pocket, for $2 75; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $5; with 24 Objects, $8, by
HENRY CRAIG,
No. 218 Broadway, New York.
Also, for sale by mail, pre-paid, the Bible-type, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Rack Pieces, measuring, folding all size, for $3 00; with 12 assorted Views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

A Bad Breath.—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is so delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentrifice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.
The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 165 and 167 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metallic. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Clincher," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

Dyspepsia Tablets.
For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 267 Centre St., New York, second floor. Sent free by mail for 60 cents.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 25 CENTS, or FOR $1 00.
Address P. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

The Beard &c.
IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the person is over 18, by its remarkable nourishing and stimulating power, Dr. Batchelor's Celebrated Hair Dye Shrub has been found to excite the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.
JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N.Y.

$100 Per Week $100 Made Clear,
And a Gold Hunting-Case Watch given free to all agents who sell our Original and only Genuine Extra Size Stationery Prize Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. We can offer the only manufacture of the Celebrated Aurora Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. We permit Free to every one who acts as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Lever Watch, "Genuine English Movements." These watches are sent with the first order for goods. A copy of our Wonderful Inventions containing more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Another surprising article of each package will be found "Prize Stationery," Pens, Pencils, Lovelocks, Gentlemen's Companions, Ladies' Companions, Needle-work, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Autograph Albums, Games, Fancy Amusements, Gold Pocket Calendars for 1864, Union Emblems, Games, Rare Jewelry, Army Plug Tobacco, Gold Pens, and Pencil Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. Smart agents can sell 100 Packages in a few hours. This is the greatest money-making business of the age for Agents. Agents wanted in every town. Send for Circular. Extra Terms for 1864, explaining Extra Premium Inducements, free. Address the Sole Manufacturers, GOLD PRIZE CO., 169 Broadway, New York. Only Original, and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

CEDAR CAMPHOR
"DON'T LOSE YOUR CLOTHES BY MOTHS. Cedar Camphor (CEDR' Cedar, CAM'FOR Camphor) is speedily death to all bugs breathing through their holes. All druggists sell it. HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston, only no box. Cheap, Durable, Certain, Fragrant, Best. Write for a Circular.

Croquet Sets—Implements for this favorite Game, made of well-seasoned wood, in neat cases: prices from $16 to $40. Also Field Rules for playing the game, price 50c., postage paid.
WALTER LOW, 823 Broadway, New York.

$50 AMERICAN $50 LEVER WATCHES.
TRADE MARK, P. S. BARTLETT, WATERBURY, MASS., PELL JEWELED, WARRANTED, IN 4 OZ. COIN SILVER HUNTING-CASE, GOLD DIGGITS, FANCY TUBE PIN, FOR $50.
Also every variety of gold Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on delivery.
J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches.
205 Broadway New York.

Card Photographs.
A splendid assortment. Catalogues sent free. Address B. W. HITCHCOCK, Manufacturer, 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

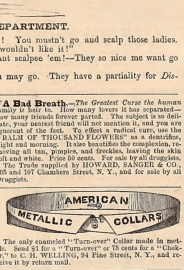
A Great Success.
The New Novel, Cudjo's Cave, is not a sensation book for the low order. It is a work that the New York Tribune remarks, that will retain a durable hold on public interest by means of its earnestness, vitality, and truth to nature. It is for sale by all principal booksellers and newsmen, and sent, post-paid, by the publishers,
J. E. TILTON & CO., BOSTON. (Price $1 50.)

IVORY JEWELRY.
A fine assortment white and imitation of CORAL and JET BROOCHES $1 50. BALL EARRINGS, $1 00 pair. IVORY INITIAL BUTTONS, 75c. pair. NEW Patterns Pearl $1 00 pair. Sent free on receipt of the price. For sale at WELLING'S, 267 Centre St., N. Y., Sign of the GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

Soldiers to the Rescue!—Young men, rushing into the camps—care and danger of a soldier's life, should prepare themselves for the fatal Fevers, the Dysentery, the Sores and Scurvy, which are almost certain to follow. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, used occasionally during the campaign, will insure sound health to every man. Only 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 per box.

BENJAMIN'S RUPTURE CURE defies challenge the world to equal it in retaining and perfectly curing rupture. No. 1 Dutsky St., opposite the Astor House.

To Army Sutlers.
One most important addition to your stock in trade is PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER. It is known and appreciated by men in all ranks in life, and it will be more appreciated by the volunteer, who is exposed to disease of all sorts. It will cure his sore throat, his colic, his neuralgia or bruises, his diarrhœa, his cough, and will be his friend in time of suffering and pain. Keep a supply. Mr. "Sother," and the soldiers will bless you. It is sold by all druggists everywhere.



TROPICAL BALSAM OR COCOA NUT OIL.
Prepared by Carroll Brothers and Co.
This celebrated and unequalled medicine, composed entirely of vegetable gums, is the most wonderful discovery of the age for the hair. It will restore it to the bald head in from three to six months, and make it grow upon any part of the face where it is desired. It will prevent the hair from falling off in all cases, and will make it grow upon the most delicate head in a few days. It will keep the head free from dandruff, and all diseases of the scalp. It will make the hair curl beautifully, and keep it in curl. It will prevent the hair from turning gray, and restore it to its original color. It will make the hair soft, pliable, and glossy. It will prevent headache, nervousness, and all diseases of the head. It will cure the most violent cases of humors in from one to three bottles. It will cure the most violent cases of humors in from one to three bottles. It will cure the most violent cases of humors in from one to three bottles

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 383.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

APRIL 20, 1864.

BY PRIVATE MILES O'REILLY.

THREE years ago to-day
We raised our hands to heaven,
And on the rolls of muster
Our names were thirty-seven;
There were just a thousand bayonets,
And the swords were thirty-seven,
As we took the oath of service
With our right hands raised to heaven,

Oh 'twas a gallant day,
In memory still adored,
That day of our sun-bright nuptials
With the musket and the sword!
Shrill rang the fifes, the bugles blared,
And beneath a cloudless heaven
Twinkled a thousand bayonets,
And the swords were thirty-seven.

Of the thousand stalwart bayonets
Two hundred march to-day;
Hundreds lie in Virginia swamps,
And hundreds in Maryland clay;
And other hundreds, less happy, drag
Their shattered limbs around,
And envy the deep, long, blessèd sleep
Of the battle-field's holy ground.

For the swords—one night, a week ago,
The remnant, just eleven,
Gathered around a banqueting board
With seats for thirty-seven;
There were two limped in on crutches,
And two had each but a hand
To pour the wine and raise the cup
As we toasted "Our flag and land!"

And the room seemed filled with whispers
As we looked at the vacant seats,
And, with choking throats, we pushed aside
The rich but untasted meats;
Then in silence we brimmed our glasses,
As we rose up—just eleven,
And bowed as we drank to the loved and the dead
Who had made us THIRTY-SEVEN!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1864.

THE NEW EMPEROR.

THE arrival of an Austrian Prince to seat himself under French protection, upon a throne built upon the ruins of the Mexican Republic, is one of the most significant events in the history of this Continent. Somewhat less than fifty years ago the chief Powers in Europe allied themselves against constitutional governments. They enforced their will by arms in Naples and Spain. Great Britain, which, under CASTLEREAGH, at the Congress of Vienna, had gone near to a civil war, pronounced the alliance to be a conspiracy against the liberties of mankind, and asserted the rights of constitutional governments. The Holy Alliance, France taking the lead, restored the "grace of God" monarchy in Spain, and proposed to compel the Spanish American colonies to return to their old allegiance to the Spanish crown. CANNING proposed to Mr. RUSH, then United States minister in England, to recognize the independence of the colonies, if the United States would join in the recognition. Mr. RUSH had no instructions, but upon being surprised, pressed he consented to unite in the declaration; and in the next Message of Mr. MONROE the doctrine was laid down by the President, which has been known ever since as the Monroe doctrine; the substance of which is a declaration by the United States that any effort upon the part of any European power or powers to extend their system to any part or portion of this Continent would be regarded as dangerous to our peace and safety. We would not interfere with existing colonies, but an attempt to control the destiny of American States whose independence we had recognized would be considered an unfriendly act.

The reason of this action was evident. The Holy Alliance had assumed the political dictatorship of Europe. They wished to grasp that of the world. They denied the right of constitutional government, and they had overthrown them by force of arms. They designed to extend the same policy to this hemisphere, and naturally and properly the United States, seated here, and the chief free popular government in the world, declared that it assumed the championship of all the established free governments upon this Continent. Absolutism was triumphant in Europe and threatened America. Europe threw down the gage. America picked it up and replied, "You strike at your peril." This was the Monroe doctrine, the league of Liberty against the Holy Alliance and despotism.

Although never formally allowed, it has been practically recognized by the European Governments, until, under cover of our civil conflict, the declaration of forty years ago and our constant policy have been disregarded. A European army lands in Mexico; subdues the country; overthrows the Republic; establishes an Empire; and calls and escorts an Austrian Prince to the throne. Thereupon the United States Congress, passing in the midst of the fiercest party conflicts in a civil war, unanimously declares that the feeling and purpose of the people have not changed, and that they can not acknowledge a government so established upon this Continent.

If the original declaration of 1824 were wise and necessary, and we can not think any man familiar with the history of that time will deny that it was, its reassertion to-day is even more necessary, for we are menaced by the same danger against which it was leveled. The attack of France upon Mexico was made under the convictions that our Government was distracted. Its occupancy of that country will depend upon our division. And, unless it means to retire, the cardinal object of its policy upon this continent must be the destruction of the Union. No European monarch, and least of all LOUIS NAPOLEON, supposes that if the United States were at peace they would look placidly on at the establishment here, in the person of the Austrian, he becomes, politically, a party to the war. From that moment, and especially after the late resolutions in the House, it is in every way its interest that we should not succeed.

Meanwhile what is the actual position of our diplomacy upon this question? On the 31st of October the Secretary of State writes that this Government does not consider the Mexican Government, which it has forcibly driven from power, namely the Republican Government, overthrown; but that it will recognize whatever political action the Mexican people may "freely" take. Whether the progress of the French occupation, since November has brought the authorities to regard the Mexican Government as overthrown, we do not know. But whether it is, or is not, it is very clear that the Mexican people, voting for an empire in the presence of a French army sent to impose an empire (for ALMONTE and the priests were in Paris to ask MAXIMILIAN to be emperor before the army left, as appears from the diplomatic correspondence of 1861) are not acting "freely."

MAXIMILIAN will arrive. He will be enthroned. He will invite diplomatic recognition of his empire. The United States Government will politely defer and delay, or it will gravely decline. Is LOUIS NAPOLEON likely to fall to sucking his thumbs until our war is over?

Shall we, then, make war upon France? asks an impatient reader. But the question rather is, whether France will make war upon us. Is it likely, in view of the recent vote of the House and of public sentiment upon the subject, that France will remain in Mexico unchallenged by us? If the probability is that she will not, is LOUIS NAPOLEON likely to wait until we are better able to oppose him?

It is unfortunate that MR. CORWIN's treaty was not approved in the summer of 1861; but much may be forgiven to our sister's inexperience and incredulity. We thought we had our hands full at home. There are many who think so now, and who therefore advise that the Monroe doctrine can should be, and in fact does, exist. But it is too practical a question to be evaded. It is not whether we have not our hands full now, but whether they will not be fuller when MAXIMILIAN arrives. The ostrich is not the symbol of wisdom. Sooner or later we must decide the question whether the Monroe doctrine shall be maintained or abandoned. If the moment for decision has not yet arrived, and if we mean to decide wisely when it comes, we must consider meanwhile how we ought to decide.

THE SPIRIT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

THE opening of the campaign by the rebels leaves the spirit in which it is to be conducted. The massacre of the black soldiers at Fort Pillow; the burning of the Quarter-master of the Thirteenth Tennessee Regiment; the ferocious tone of the rebel papers; the brutal mutilation of Colonel DAHLGREN's body, are all indications that in their fierce extremity the men who have been so long barbarized by Slavery have virtually raised the black flag, and propose to dash themselves with the fury of despair upon the stalwart Union armies.

The immediate consequence of this will be the most terrible fighting. The loyal Union soldiers in Virginia and the West who read the accounts of rebel inhumanity will undoubtedly grow more grimly to their work. The true men at the North, as they see more clearly the spirit and scope of the rebellion, will concentrate their forces and concentrate their energies upon the support and supply of the armies. The plain declaration of the rebels that they count upon the aid of Copperheads and traitors at the North, will but confirm the conviction and the knowledge of all thoughtful citizens. That they are the open enemies and assassins of the rebels will remove the doubts that any man may have entertained of the necessity of the summary measures which the authorities have occasionally taken.

Every month simplifies the contest. It is between the haughty aristocracy of the South allied to the Northern Democracy, to build on that aristocracy, try to excite discontent and trouble among ourselves, and the great body of the American people in the free States. They see the American people in the free States. They see the American people in the free States. They see that the basis of peace and peace man is a pander to the party at the South, which is fighting for the principle that capital ought to own labor, and that laboring men are a servile and unintelligent ought to be slaves and treated like cattle. Men like ANDREWS, who led the rioters last summer; like FERNANDO WOOD, who openly threatens about "the laboring classes," and who carried the taxes of the city of New York nearly to nine millions; like HARRIS and POWELL in the House of Representatives, who openly scout free men and women, are the champions of a system which would degrade and imbrute every laboring man in the country. The men who take their way they would make peace with JEFFERSON DAVIS and his faction upon DAVIS's own terms. What do laboring men think they would gain by a peace which would place every Virginian to sell his slaves in New York? For the war will end either by opening every State in the Union to the introduction of slave labor, or else by the establishment of a system in which the laboring men of the North of every color and race will be treated exactly as the laboring men of the South have been. The demagogues, the Copperheads, and Peace men will say that it was not so before the war. But every intelligent man in the land knows that the war was made by the slaveholders upon the country because their effort to accomplish this result was resisted. And the most intelligent of the Peace men were the most conspicuous abettors of that effort.

It is no wonder, therefore, that the rebels openly confess these leaders to be their friends. Do they not know that if they can get to Maryland MR. HARRIS, for instance, will not oppose them? He prays that we may not succeed. Do they not know that he will thankily welcome them? Yes, they know it, and we know it. The war as it progresses clears our eyes and strengthens our hearts and hands. Every such incident as the massacre at Fort Pillow reveals more plainly to the true spirit of this rebellion, and the true character of the Northern sympathy with it.

RETALIATION.

WITH the fine tact of simple honesty the President, in his little speech at the opening of the Fair in Baltimore, said exactly what we all wished to hear. The massacre at Fort Pillow had raised the question in every mind, does the United States mean to allow its soldiers to be butchered in cold blood? The President replies, that whoever is good enough to fight for us is good enough to be protected by us; and that in this case, when the facts are sufficiently known, the rebel authorities, in what way we can retaliate it is not easy to say. There is no evidence from Richmond, and there will be none, that DAHLGREN's body was mutilated by order of JEFFERSON DAVIS. On the other hand, we must not forget that the same papers which brought the President's speech proposing retaliation brought also the return of the rebel General in Florida, containing, for the relief of friends at home, the names and injuries of our wounded men in his hands, and that he included the colored soldiers of the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Massachusetts regiments.

But if public opinion has justified a stronger policy from the beginning—if the criminally stupid promises of M'CLELLAN and HALLECK to protect slavery and to repel the negroes coming to our lines, had never been made, we should not now be confronted with this question, because the rebels would never have dared to massacre our soldiers in surrender. But yet to be deterred from retaliation from fear of still further crimes upon the part of the rebels is simple inhumanity. Let us either at once or cease every effort and the officers of their regiments from duty, or make the enemy feel that they are our soldiers. It is very sad that rebel barbarity should be shot for the crimes of FORREST. But it is very sad, no less, that soldiers fighting for our flag have been buried alive after surrender. And it is still sadder that such barbarities should be encouraged by refraining from retaliation. Do we mean to allow MR. JEFFERSON DAVIS, or his man FORREST, or QUANTRELL, to dictate what shall, and who shall not, fight for the American flag? The massacre at Fort Pillow is a direct challenge to our Government to prove whether it is in earnest or not in emancipating slaves and employing colored troops. There should be no possibility of mistake in the reply. Let the action of the Government be prompt and terrible as it will be final. Then the battles of this campaign will begin with the clear conviction upon the part of the rebels that we mean what we say, and that the flag will protect to the last, and by every means of war, including retaliation of blood, every soldier who fights for us beneath it.

ANNA DICKINSON.

IN his speech in the Senate in favor of human slavery, the other day, POWELL had a great deal to say about the freedom of the press and of speech. He was haranguing in favor of a system which denies and annihilates every kind of liberty whatever, and intentionally degrades and imbrutes human nature, and the Senator exclaimed, "Before God, I shall advise the people of my State to have their throats cut" the degradation of having free speech, a free press, and free ballot taken from them, to strike the usurpers to the ground." If MR. POWELL had but known it, he says this boastfully declares that he is a slaveholder—that he not only takes free speech, a free press, and free ballot from those of the negro race, but claims as his property, but deprives them of their personal liberty, buys them, sells them, sells their children; holds them fast in a system by which they are regarded as of cattle—and then stands up in the Senate of the United States and declares that milder usurpers than he ought to be struck to the ground! MR. POWELL seems to be prepared to take the first steps in that road which led his late colleague, BRECKINRIDGE, from his seat in the Senate of the United States to the camp of the rebels.

Nor is this all. But that the miserable subterfuge of this slaveholding Senator, bewildered by the loss of the power he sought by made perfectly transparent, Senator HARLAN quietly read from the record of the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress that he had introduced a bill to alter freedom of speech and of the press on the question of Slavery and all other subjects—a right expressly guaranteed by the Constitution—and to punish "every such act." Of course he did, and he would vote nay to-day, if a proposition were gravely made to allow the same free speech in New York. And yet in reply to this exhilarating citation of MR. HARLAN's was that free speech in the Slave States would make the slaves rebel. Very well. Were his own words not warm in his mouth that rather than submit to the degradation of having free speech taken away he would advise striking the usurper to the ground? and does he not see the exquisite absurdity of gravely confessing in a republic that you have an institution which is too dangerous to discuss?

MR. POWELL's speech was only an expiring gasp of the hydra in whose folds our liberties have been suffocated for thirty years. But we will owe MR. HARLAN the heartiest thanks for his neat extinguisher.

ART-CRITICISM.

SEVERAL recent articles in the Tribune upon the pictures in the Fair Gallery and elsewhere lay an imperative hand upon all the fine lariel wreaths which we easy-going "gentlemen of the press" have been so industriously weaving for the heads of our friends the painters, and cast them upon the ground. Naturally there is much excitement, both among the artists and the critics, and we are glad of it, for the discussion is sure to lead us all to reflect a little more carefully what a picture ought to be. It was impossible that we should not feel in this country, sooner or later, the influence of the spirit known as Pre-Raphaelitism, of the originality of TURNER's criticisms, and of the powerful and detailed care of the modern French and Belgian schools. The progress of that influence has been for some time evident upon the walls of our exhibitions; and now it appears, fully ripe and ready for the contest, in the articles of which we speak. Their attack blazes all along the line. The critic plays at bowls with the pates of the luckless artists from which he strips the curls. And yet he has no positive principles, and so clear an understanding of what he means and what he likes and dislikes, that we congratulate our art and our artists and ourselves, the spectators, upon the vitality of interest which such criticisms evince. For whether our art be mannered, conventional, and false, or not, certainly our criticism has never before been weak, unintelligent, and flat, and as little independent or sincere as an ordinary book-notice.

But while we heartily rejoice at the unconventional spirit of these criticisms, and can easily see that their sharpness springs from the natural strain of a conscientious resolution to do something which is known to be disagreeable, and we by no means agree with all their verdicts. The philosophy set forth by the critic is that Truth is the end of art, and not "a something called beauty." If, not to reply that in art it is a fair question whether Truth is not necessarily Beauty—or, as GOETHE says, "whether every work of art must not necessarily please, whatever the character of the subject may be—we admit that Truth should be the end, and that picture-making and the study of art are not truthful. But is there any other criterion of this truth than individual experience? Can it be so absolute, palpable, and universal as to offer a tremendous vociferation of any individual judgment as of necessity the true judgment?

For instance, the critic defends a picture, by MR. FARRER, of An Hour after Sunset in the Catskills, against the jeers and mirth of the crowd which is peculiarly provoked by the adds that not other painters have so befogged our minds with falsehood that we can not recognize a true picture of Nature when we see it. Now what is the substance of this remark? Surely it is nothing more than this, that the impression which MR. FARRER has received from MR. KENSETT, for instance, in another; and that the critic sees it with MR. FARRER and not with MR. KENSETT. If our observation is correct that this is the way she looks under this aspect." MR. KENSETT says, "I have observed Nature and studied for many years these effects, and this is not the way she looks to me under this aspect; and MR. FARRER's picture is therefore false and feeble." The critic reply that it is not a matter of opinion, because the facts of Nature are so and not otherwise? But how is any man to know that he is not except by reference to his own experience? Thus he merely completes the circle and ends where he began.

Is it not true that Nature looks very differently to different men? By what right does one man assume that another does and say, "I see that she really appears and you do not, consequently this picture is true and that is false." Criticism of picture is the result of such absolutism. WORDSWORTH ran a tilt at CLAUDE. He might as well have decried the love of roses. "Those trees, why, they are not trees at all, they are my foliage," says RUSKIN. "Yes, and I neither know nor care whether they are oaks, elms, or pines, while I admire the ANNUAL BLOOM of the hedge."

The artist can but represent Nature as he sees her. The critic can only express how he enjoys what she will say? There is no other test than its acceptance by the general assent of mankind. Do not the universal popularity is no test whatever. PETER goes to the one hundred and seventeenth edition, and BROWNING sticks fast at the first; for this is the difference between the poetry of the people of the most renowned. There may be the truth represented in poetry or in many ways than BROWNING'S. Portrayed in Nature, but it is not a poet. The truth of nature may be told in other pictures than those of the Pre-Raphaelites, of the French school, or the Belgian, fine and faithful as they are. It certainly does not follow that MR. KENSETT is not a sincere artist because MR. FARRER is, nor that Shakespeare and ADDISON's style is bad because CARLYLE's is good. Does our friend the critic recall the picture that MR. MACREADY in the character, by the supper of the French Guard (we do not remember the exact title)? How carefully studied! How sensitively and even subtly rendered! How it conveys the same moral, although in no different a manner, with the Good Friend of BROWN'S, which, instead of seeking to be too indecent to mention, is not without a startling strain of Rabelaisque satire and warning.

Or look at HENNESSY's Mother by the Cradle, in the National Academy Exhibition; how tender! how sincere! how beautiful! And yet the various landscape works of MR. KENSETT we find no less sincerity, fidelity, and care. Last evening the New Jersey heights toward Morristown were tanked in solid purple against the "orange sunset waning slow," and it was not difficult to understand MR. FARRER's picture. To-day the same hills burst and glimmer in sunny haze, and KENSETT is justified. Last night the mazourkas of CHOPIN filled the room—to-day with the vague figures of "dear dead women" in Venetian palaces. This morning it is Mourir pour la patrie that rings through the sunshine. The truth of nature? Yes: but how infinitely various in spirit, in influence, in form!

THE WASTE OF WAR.

As an illustration of the inevitable waste of war, and in connection with the song on our first page from the pen of Miss O'Brien, it may be mentioned that one of our New York regiments re-entered the service after the first battle of Bull Run nine hundred strong. After participating in the toils and battles of the Peninsula, it carried over the Rappahannock into the battle of Fredericksburg 240 enlisted men and twenty officers. Two of the fullest companies, after crossing the river, were detailed on a duty which kept them out of action, leaving the regiment with but 180 men and 15 officers to take part in the storming of the heights. At the close of the day, 2 of the 15 officers were dead and 14 wounded; and of the men, 142 out of 168 were either killed or wounded. This regiment belonged to a brigade which left this city 3460 strong, there being four regiments in it; and which returned not many months ago, the four regiments having been consolidated, reduced to a battalion of 620 able-bodied men, under the command of a Lieutenant-Colonel.

Facts like these exhibit with sad emphasis the lamentable waste and exhaustion of life which the rebellion has occasioned. But while the holy war goes on, and homes are made desolate, and lives are stripped of their bloom, let us remember that through all Freedom is winning new triumphs, and that every heart that bleeds for her sake shall somewhere find its compensation, and every life that is bruised in her defense shall find brighter blossoms among its leaves than ever grew there before.

THE NATIONAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

Not only the critic, of whom we have elsewhere spoken, has been stirring the placid waters of our art life, but Mr. Frank Pentland writes a second letter to the Hanging Committee of the National Academy; and the friends of Mr. NEILSON declare that the same gentlemen excluded his picture work by his; and it is evident to every body that MAYER'S picture of the Sick Soldier and the Sister of Charity should not have hung upon "the line," while we have our own protest to make to the same gentleman that his striking and beautiful picture of DU NAST'S "Faithful unto Death" should have been hung high in a corner out of sight, while MR. HAYS'S Dove of the Ark, a broad daylight effect, which hangs upon "the line" below MR. NAST'S, could have been as well seen and studied had it been placed just above, and the small landscape been hung in the high corner.

Of course the Hanging Committee can expect to be assailed. That they are. If the favorites of some autres, the critics, are not well placed the Committee must pay the penalty. They lay their account with the misappreciation of the artists and their friends. But why not be courteous? If you are ah A. M., why not also be a gentleman? Mr. NAGEL, or Mr. SWAIN, or Mr. PARTON, or whoever he may be, who is neither, shall have the place of honor? If the Academy Exhibition be designed merely to show the works of members of the Academy we do not complain, and we go thankfully and look at the pictures. But if it be meant for an exhibition of new pictures, often by fresh hands, then we go and ask that some of the new men shall have some of the best places.

The Exhibition this year is not large, but it is very good, notwithstanding the sharp rivalry of the Fair Gallery. MARY MAPES'S "Consolation" (192), NAST'S "Faithful unto Death" (144), THORNTON'S "Wayside Inn," M'ENTEE'S "Woods and Fields in Autumn" (147), CHURCH'S "Venetian View" (106 and 254), HUNTINGTON'S "Mother" (41), the rocks in Kensett's "Rock-bound Coast of Maine" (153), LA FARGE'S "Fog blowing in" (54) are among the pictures which struck us upon a rapid glance through the gallery; others as interesting, doubtless await us. M'ENTEE'S landscape is peculiarly beautiful and noble; while NAST'S dead soldiers, where the golden moon sees ground uncured the gun faithful unto death, is a true ballad of the war.

There are not too many pictures for careful observation and study in detail. It is clear that the average excellence is much higher than that of previous years, and the influence of the best contemporary European art is felt in our own. The new names that have vindicated their claim to honorable mention are many. LA FARGE is among them, who takes his place at a bound among our most promising artists. There is no slavish copying and traditional work than heretofore, although the works of the distinctively Pre-Raphaelite school are not many.

Next week we shall look at some of the newest names upon the catalogue.

THE OPERA.

THERE is something in the pertinacity of Mr. Manager MAETZEL which is truly admirable. Other managers come and go. Their dazzle for a season. They are meteoric. But here, certainly for the sixteenth consecutive season this year, the indefatigable conductor takes his seat, and gives us the best opera we have had for many a day. We are very glad to know that he is here. We shall be still more glad to know that his success is equal to his deserts. In Brignoli he has the best and richest tenor we have had since Mario. We may say so much for an old servant of the public without pointing the other admirable singers. Miss KELLOGG has created Marguerite in Faust, which has been more popular than any opera since the Trovatore. Give us, once or twice, the Sonnambula, Mr. Manager, and Lucrezia, and, somehow, let us hear again the Barber. ROSSINI has been feasting PATTI in Paris.—Let this friends of PATTI in New York honor the old maestro in cheering his music.

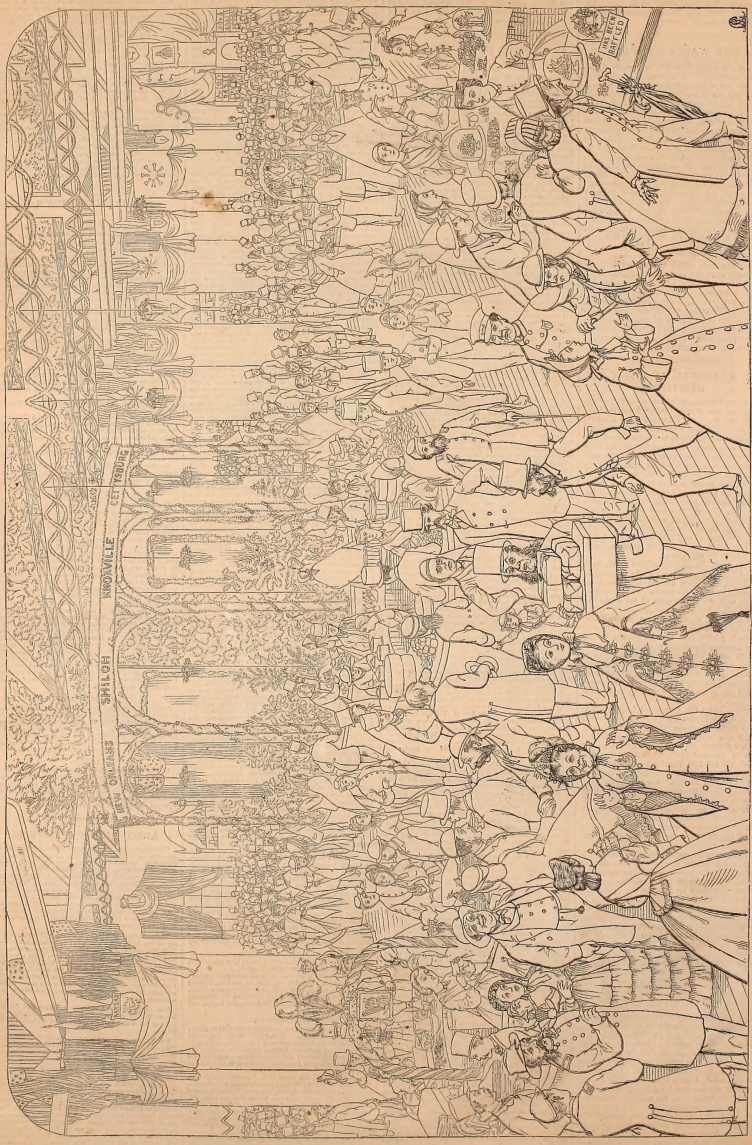
DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

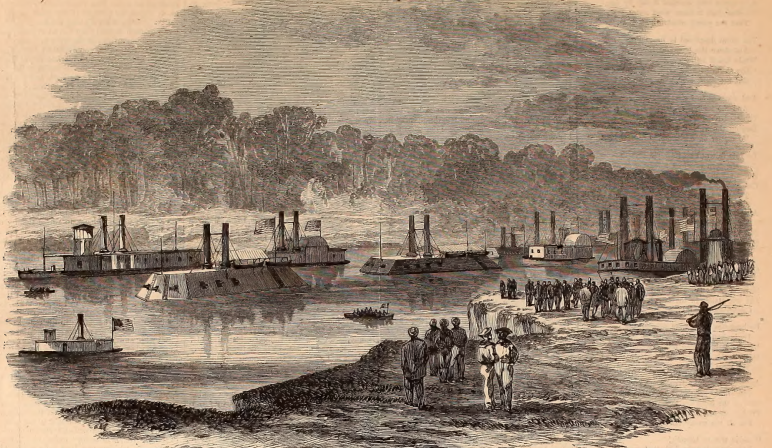
SENATE.—April 14. The Bill to enable the people of Nebraska to form a State Government, and be admitted into the Union on the Naval Appropriation Bill, repealing the fishing bounties, but afterward withdrew it.—The bill was then passed with the amendment offered by Mr. Grimes to the effect, that no land, or loan, or delivery, of gold or exchange at the Treasury shall be made to any person, company, or corporation for the payment of differences, etc., are prohibited under the name of the Howland-Aspinwall Steam Ship Company, until contract be entered into.—The bill further forbids dealing in gold and exempts the Government from the purchase, and confines all transactions and contracts in gold to the Treasury, Assistant Treasurers, and Depositaries, under the same penalties as above.—April 15. The senate was unanimously adverse to the proposition of Mr. Sherman's bill to prohibit speculation in gold. Several amendments were proposed to the bill, but the bill was postponed without taking a vote on the proposition.—

April 16. The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the act to prevent frauds upon the Treasury of the United States. It provides for the appointment of a special commissioner, holding office, who may willfully neglect to or refuse to detect or bring to punishment any person, etc., who, in his opinion, shall be guilty of felony.—The bill relating to donation lands in Oregon and California was discussed. The bill granting lands to aid in the construction of railroads in Wisconsin was passed.—Mr. Grimes introduced a resolution which was adopted, that the Committee on the Conduct of the War inquire into the late explosion of powder-mills at Fort Pitner, and report soon as possible.—The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill providing for the gold and foreign exchanges. An amendment was adopted, making a subtreasury in the city of New York with a capital of from $1000 to $10,000. The bill was then passed, 23 to 19.—April 18. The Senate passed a resolution calling upon the private land claims in California, and to aid in the speedy settlement of the titles to property in that State.—Mr. Fessenden reported the Army Appropriation bill, with numerous amendments. Among them are those for appropriations being the specific enumeration of items in accordance with the estimates, and the following clause of $8,326,045.—The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill to amend the act of July 17, 1862, for the organization, and judicial expenses of the Government. The amendments were adopted, providing that the clerks and employés of the War Department soon $500,000 as security to be given by the Secretary of War, and that increasing the pay of messengers and others to an amount not exceeding $1000 per annum, at the discretion of the head of the Department.—The bill was not completed in Committee of the Whole.—April 19. The Senate passed the Army Bill, as reported with amendments.—A bill was passed to incorporate the Columbia Fire Insurance Company, in the District of Columbia.—The House bill to amend the Enrollment act so as to raise the whole, or any part of the quota of any State, by draft, was referred to that of a Brigadier-General was passed.—The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation bill. An amendment was adopted providing for the publication of the laws in places contiguous to the rebellious States, that may be discovered to be necessary for the due execution of the accord. After a few unimportant amendments the bill was passed.—April 20. A resolution was offered by Mr. Wade for the restitution of persons to service or labor. The bill was passed by a short majority.—April 21. The bill of Mr. Sage was called up on its passage. Mr. Sumner said he should vote against the bill, which was a bill for the sale, as the multiplication table, a diary, or the Ten Commandments. Mr. Hendricks moved to amend the bill by striking out such an amendment to the Constitution as this. Mr. secretary's report of the Treasury Department was presented, and had no objection to his request now. He doubted the propriety of coming back at the end of the session to the loyal people of the South all their rights. The States, to which the Constitution of the United States belongs, were for themselves rapidly perfecting measures of entire emancipation. Mr. Wade said he should vote for the bill "except the act approved February 25, 1793, for the recovery of persons from service or labor." The amendment was adopted. Without rescinding a final vote the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—April 14. The House resumed the consideration of the Senate bill to amend the act of July 17, 1862, from Mr. Rogers in opposition to the resolution, Mr. Colfax moved to lay the resolution on the table, and demanded the yeas and nays. The motion was agreed to.—Mr. Dawes, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with amendments, the bill to amend the act to provide for the collection of duties on imports, and to create additional collection districts.—Mr. Dawes moved the previous question, which was seconded, and the bill was passed.—Mr. Dawes moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill to provide for the collection of duties on imports, and to create additional collection districts. Mr. Dawes explained the bill, which



IN THE FAIR.



ADMIRAL PORTER'S FLOTILLA.

SKETCHES OF THE RED RIVER EXPEDITION.

We give on this page three sketches illustrative of the Red River Expedition, which has so far been attended with such marked success. FORT DE RUSSY, which is here accurately presented, was captured by our forces on the 14th of March last. The fort was a formidable work, quadrangular in shape, with bastions, and bomb-proof, covered with railroad iron. A powerful water-battery connected with the fort, the casemates of which were considered capable of resisting the heaviest shot and shell. It is said, however, that the gun-boat Essex tried some of her guns on these casemates, and succeeded in sending her shot straight through them. About 800 negroes were employed a year in constructing the fort and adjacent works, all the guns of which, upon its capture, fell into our hands, including one belonging to the Indianola when she was captured by the rebels.

Our sketch of the celebrated ram Switzerland, belonging to the Mississippi squadron, represents her as she appeared in "full dress" on the 22d of February last. This ram will be remembered as having attempted, with the Lancaster, to run the Vicksburg batteries on the 25th of March, 1863, when the Lancaster was sunk and the Switzerland badly disabled.

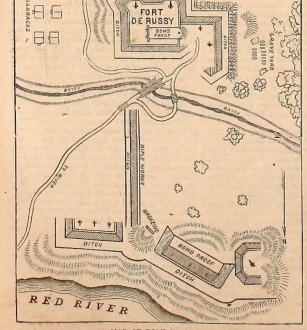
Admiral Porter's flotilla, which has done excellent service, consists of twenty-two gun-boats, together with several supply steamers, hospital-boats, etc. Among the vessels are the following: Fort Herman, 7 guns; Cricket, 8 guns; Lafayette, 9 guns; Neosho, 3 guns; Ozark, 2 guns; Eastport, 9 guns; Choctaw, 8 guns; Osage, 3 guns; Chillicothe, 4 guns; Louisville, 14 guns; Carondelet, 14 guns; Benton, 16 guns; Pittsburg, 14 guns; Gazette, 8 guns; Mound City, 14 guns; General Price, 4 guns; Lexington, 8 guns; Ouachita, 3 guns; Black Hawk, 13 guns. Of these, the Osage and Ozark are turreted. The Lafayette, Eastport, Choctaw, Chillicothe, Benton, Carondelet, Louisville, Pittsburg, Mound City, and Essex are iron-clads. The Lexington is one of the three wooden boats first put in commission on the Mississippi. The Ouachita and Black Hawk are formidable wooden vessels partially plated. The others are denominated tin-clads. Our sketch was taken as the vessels were lying near Alexandria, preparing to go up the river. At last accounts they had passed the obstructions placed in the channel by the rebels, and were approaching Shreveport.

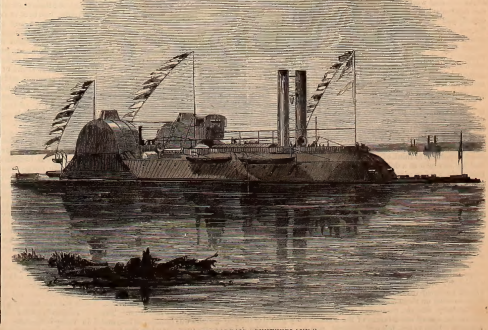
The opening of the Red River region has placed within our reach a vast amount of cotton, which the enemy had stored away for export or sale. On the 17th 800 bales from near Fort De Russy reached Cairo, and large quantities were still awaiting transportation at the date of our last advices. In the vicinity of Shreveport thousands of bales are believed to be hidden away; and should our army arrive in time to prevent its destruction a large sum must be realized from this source. While thus weakening the rebels in the seizure of one of their main elements of strength, the advance of the Federal forces has also achieved a vast positive advantage in delivering the loyal people from the oppression which has so long restrained them. The moment the old flag was restored hundreds of citizens seem to have come forward rejoicingly to testify their devotion to the cause it symbolizes. Many who had been exiled from their homes hastened to resume their old places, and aid in the necessary work of social and civil reconstruction; all animated, according to the newspaper accounts, by an intense hostility, not only to the rebellion, but to slavery, as its great cause and principal source of strength. Thus Freedom is every where achieving its own revenges.

THE PRESS ON THE FIELD.

We give on pages 280 and 281 a view illustrating a very important department of every army—namely, the NEWSPAPER BRIGADE. Every large camp in the present war has had in it some representative of our leading journals; and the country is more indebted to these industrious, energetic, and courageous reporters for early and authentic accounts of battles and important movements than the mass of our people usually admit. But for these enterprising and adventurous spirits, who penetrate into all sorts of dangers, and sketch, with the hail of battle falling around them, the scenes and actions in which the public has so great an interest, we must very often have remained in ignorance for days and weeks of events vitally affecting our interests and happiness. Nor is this all; the materials for the history of this great conflict are furnished almost entirely by these gatherers of "things great and small" on the field, and posterity would be wholly ignorant, but for them, of that vast body of incident and adventure which finds no mention in official reports, and which is absolutely necessary to a proper appreciation of central facts and events.



MAP OF FORT DE RUSSY.



THE STEAM-RAM "SWITZERLAND."

THE SOWING OF THE SEED.

THE seed of Liberty was sown
Upon our soil long years ago,
And strong men watched it day by day,
To clear each noxious weed away,
That the young plant might grow.

The storm descended in its might,
And down the heavy hailstones fell;
While far-off nations smiling, said,
"The storm prevails—the seed is dead!"
But the earth kept it well.

And when at last the sun shone out,
And the tempestuous time was o'er,
The seed unfolded to a tree,
Bearing the fruit of Liberty
To scatter on our shore.

Tyrants frowned on its rapid growth—
Their stern rivalings filled the air—
But up from North, South, East, and West,
Came the wise men, and the oppress'd,
To see a tree so rare;

And beg some of the precious seed
To plant in lands beyond the sea,
Till where'er stood a tyrant's throne,
The seeds of this young tree were sown,
Bidding the world be free!

Once more the fierce storm rages round,
Once more the rain falls thick and fast,
Stripped of its foliage, grim and bare,
The tree stands in the tempest's glare,
Careless the blast.

It branches sway from side to side,
Its broken limbs bestrew the ground;
But from the raging of the storm,
Deep in the earth, secure and warm,
The roots lie safe and sound.

And still above the friendly soil
The sturdy trunk unyielding stands,
And on the branches that remain,
Fresh buds are swelling out again
For all the weary lands.

O noble tree of Liberty!
The world's a vain doth theft avail;
In vain thy foes may gather round
To rend thee quivering from the ground,
For thou shalt still prevail!

Still tower aloft thy giant form,
Abroad thy lusty branches wave;
Scatter the good seed far and wide—
On lonely heath—on mountain side—
On every patriot's grave!

Bid the whole earth the lesson learn,
That where'er Freedom's seed takes root,
Though often sown in doubt, or haste,
Not one shall die, nor turn to waste,
Not cease from bearing fruit.

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

☞ Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER XVI.

LILY BEGINS TO LEARN THINGS.

RHODODENDRON HOUSE was to Lily a mysterious monster, a dragon that devoured children. For the first "getting-up bell, the first prayer-meeting, and the first school breakfast, he gobbled her up; and she, a very small Jonah indeed, became absorbed in the fish, and dwelt in his immensity. Of the great boiling, turbid sea of the external world she could know nothing—the dragon's jaws formed the only entrance to the school, and were garnished with many fangs. So she abode within, and at first trembled, but gradually grew accustomed to the darkness, wards, and ribbed sides, and vast viscera of the monster; and as it was her nature to love things when she became accustomed to them, the school dragon lost at last all his terrors for the child, and Lily became that exceeding rarity, a little girl who was fond of her school.

Quite alone, she had nothing else in the world to be fond of. The people who had brought her to school had forgotten to put any toys amongst her neddements. Her exquisite papa had, probably, never heard of such vulgar frivolities, and Jean Baptiste Constant had, perhaps, matters more important to think of at the moment. Lily had not so much as a doll. The rough old playthings she used to potter about with in the plasterer's house soon faded into the nothingness of oblivion. So, too, did the plasterer himself and his wife her old nurse, and their little boy her foster-brother. First, she forgot their names, and only bore them in mind as the good people far away, who used to be fond of her, and rump with her, and hear with her little tempers. Then, the plasterer's face and form began to be a matter of doubt, and she could not tell whether he had red hair or black hair—whether he wore a beard, or whiskers, or both, or neither. Curiously, she remembered latest his rough ribbed corduroy trowsers—probably because she had careered on them so many times cock-horse to Coventry, and she connected with these garments the strong acrid fumes of the tobacco he smoked. Blue vapor, hot and pungent, was always curling from that excellent man; without his pipe Lily would have lost her last definite conception of her foster-father. But the pipe went out at last, and the smoke mingled with the clouds, and drifted away into space. The boy, her playmate, she forgot in one sudden landslip of recollection. He was there, for a moment, with a rough head she used to tousle, a top he used to spin for her amusement, a hack that was always at her service. He was her horse, her dog, her coach, her ship, her steamengine, but all at once his fastenings loosened, and he tumbled down into the gulf forever. And then, last of all, poor nurse went. Lily clung to her image as long as ever she could, and straggled hard to retain it, but the inevitable law asserted it, and nurse melted away. He came to have two faces, like Janus, and then none at all. Her hands and feet disappeared in a wreath of long mourning. Long after she had her checked apron remained—the apron on which Lily used to sit before the fire, warm and dry and glowering from her back, turning like a kitten—the apron which had strings to be pulled, and twisted, and untied by her uncertain little fingers, to the great discomfort, but never-failing delight of the good woman—the apron to whose corner Lily used to cling in her first venturesome excursions into the back garden. But the apron was doomed. The records of that court of exchequer crumbled into decay, and away went nurse, apron, and all, to be remembered again on this side death, when—oh! joy for some, and woe for invisible to others—we shall remember every thing.

This last holiday being taken away, what remained? Rhododendron House, and nothing more. The apparition of the two strange men who had brought her by night to school had scarcely ruffled the calm of the lake, but scarcely breathed upon the mirror. They could scarcely have been forgotten, for they had never been remembered. When the Miss Bunnycastles spoke to Lily about her papa, and told her that he was a perfect gentleman, and brought a man-servant with him who was almost as great a gentleman as he, she could respond only by a vacant stare. She knew no papa. Little by little there came over her a vague consciousness that she ought properly to have one, for most of the young ladies were continually vaunting their possession of such a parent; and when she was absent six, she toddled up one day to Mr. Dyas, when he was paying one of his periodical visits, and with a very grave and knowledge-seeking visage, asked him this alarming question: "Missa Dyas, have you got a papa?" The discreet medical practitioner was dreadfully disconcerted at this crude interrogatory. Old Mrs. Bunnycastle bleated, "Lor's a mercy—what next?" Two of the Miss Bunnycastles tittered; but the third, Miss Barbara, told Lily, severely, that she would never be any thing better than a little idiot.

Meanwhile she had set herself, first intuitively, next of her own volition, to learn things. I don't mean lessons. For the first year all the resources of the law of kindness were powerless to teach her even her lessons; and although Miss Barbara had a dim impression that she should properly by this time be deep in the mysteries of Mangnall, the foremost, and Lily was left to her tasks which she could not by any possibility grasp even the remotest meaning of, and consoled herself with the thought that there was plenty of time to rescue her from the perilous condition of a dunce. So Lily was left to few books that had pictures in them, and her first attempts were made to drum the significance of the accompanying letterpress into her head. She was too small to stand up in a class—too small to have copy-books, or good marks, or bad marks to stop small for any thing. She was left to creep or trot about as she listed, from house to playground, from play-ground to school-ground—now lulled to the fantastic tune set to the teachers—now listening, with demure astonishment, to the eloquence of Mrs. Bunnycastle, which was Greek to her—to the exhortations of the governesses, which were Hebrew to her—and to the monotonous drone of the young ladies, as at appointed times and seasons they repeated their lessons. In fine, she became as much a pet and plaything in the establishment as any very tiny domestic animal that could be kept in a conservatory spiteful, but very playful and very affectionate, might have been. Miss Barbara was of opinion that she should be kept "down;" but at last even she joined in the general concession, and seemed to be fond of Lily as every one else in the house was.

But all this time Lily was learning things. She knew the sea-shore by heart. She had almost a pre-Raphaelite acquaintance, mentally, with the bricks, with their various hues, now red, now russet, now pallid, with the mortar which encovered some of them, with the small beetle that did wonderful acrobatic feats on their acclivities, rivaling the soldiers of Astley's people, who marched up rocks that were quite perpendicular. She knew the tears which the strong mortar had shed on first being laid between the courses—and which the trowel had forgotten to scrape away—tears which the air had hardened into impenetrable durability. She knew the spider's web in the southwest angle, by the holly-bush. She was on speaking terms with the earwigs in the scrutous glutton, who died at last of delirium tremens, brought on by eating a blue-bottle who had fortified himself with a preliminary fermentation of fivepence-halfpenny moist at a grocer's shop in High Street, Clapham, and so had staggered to Stockwell, to be devoured and die). She knew that the spider did not always dwell in his web, but that he lay in wait, sometimes, in a little cavern or niche in the bricks, where a French bean peg once had been. The crowd of the peg-grooves was familiar to her, and a thrill of delight came over her when she found among the pebbles one day a broken shell. She knew all about the miniature allotment gardens which the most meritorious belligerent five-and-thirty were permitted to cultivate, and where they cultivated mustard-and-cress, to be afterward consumed on half-holidays afternoons at tea-time—mustard-and-cress which tasted hot as ginger to the tongue, and was rather uncomfortably gritty to the teeth. Into these garden-beds the young ladies frequently emptied the proceeds of their pocket-money, in the guise of small brown paper packets of seeds, presumably containing the germs of rare and gorgeous flowers, but which generally ended in disappointment, coming up in various forms of weakness or scrubbiness, but never turning out to be geraniums, or heaths, or any thing worth having. Then was there not the speculative Miss Newton, who was always planting acorns in the fond hope that some time hence a mighty plantation and fine group home for the holidays they would sprout up into giant oaks? Was there not Miss Close, the miserly hoarder, who, whenever halfpence, any fourpenny pieces even, in her two flower-pots? And then Miss Barbour, the draper's daughter, had a family set of garden-tools, all shining in iron and newly-turned wood—tools which excited the bitter envy of her companions, who had usually nine and ninepence-toothless rake, and one bent spade with a broken handle, to half a dozen horticulturists—tools which she didn't know how to use, and which probably at last led to signs grief and mortification?

All these things were noted by Lily; likewise the grim little back-door, fast bolted and barred, which, in former times, had communicated with Miss Jaggs's garden. Hence, was nothing more. That door was as much an object of grave and wistful contemplation to Lily as the Mahatmy door of Ali Baba to some queer people. Would it ever open? Why was it closed? What was there behind it? Mr. Jagg hated the Bunnycastles, but the Bunnycastles hated Mr. Jagg. He spoke scornfully of the five-and-thirty boarders as "a pack of young hussies," and spiteful hints of the Miss Bs. spending branches of his butt cherry-tree because a bough overhung the wall of the Bunnycastle play-ground. Whereupon Miss Celia Bunnycastle called us a cunning worker in iron, and caused him to erect a formidable palisade of spikes on the wall, as though to repel any attempt at midnight escalade by nefariously amative purposes by Jagg. Jagg denied the legal right of the Bunnycastles to erect this defensive work. There was much acrimonious correspondence; the solicitors of the rival houses were consulted; Jagg only refrained from going to law with Rhododendron House because Rhododendron House had him in the big, in the case of one of the maid-servants making solemn asseveration that he was not only in the scandalous habit of winking at her when she went for errands, but had on one occasion had the unmanly brutality to tell her that she was a "duck." Had justice taken cognizance of the woman's misdeeds it would have been an aggravated assault case at the very least —supposing, at least, that wholesome stature to have been in the period. The feud at last was compromised, and the chevaux-de-frise was suffered to rust in peace. They were not very fierce by that time, for the boys contrived to over into Jagg's garden: who avenged himself, let us hope, by forthwith disposing of them at marine stores.

There had been, of course, a primary cause for this envenomed quarrel. It was wrapt in uncertainty. A poacher who had gone away knew all about it, but to the existing generation it was a myth, and Lily knew it not. Mr. Jagg, a widower with one daughter, had wished the Bunnycastles to take her on reduced terms, but that they had declined, and sent her off at last that washing, music, and sent at church, should be extras. Others declared that the ladies of Rhododendron House had manifested an almost unseemly anxiety to secure Miss Jagg as an inmate; but that her unevil parent had contumeliously declined to let her be educated and be to a charity school than to the Bunnycastles. Finally, it was darkly bruited about among the older girls that Miss Jagg, many months before, a treaty of alliance offensive, defensive, and matrimonial, had been in contemplation between the houses of Jagg and Bunnycastle—Miss Celia being the high contracting party of the instituted female. But the treaty had come to nothing—it was often do—nothing; and this was why, perhaps, the Saint Scholasticas of Rhododendron House were always on the most ferocious terms of monster, a villain, and a base wretch; while the unfeeling Jagg, on his side, and with characteristic coarseness, was always laying a scornful finger by the side of his ribald nose, that he had found out the whole thing was a Plant, and had declared off the Match.

This was not among the things that Lily learned; but the mention of the barred-up door reminded me that the Bunnycastle and Jagg vendetta. It is time, however, to go indoors. There, the things that the child learned were manifold. Into the drawing-room and the superior parlor beyond she was but rarely permitted to peep, but she stayed all the afternoon in Mrs. Bunnycastle's imposing chamber to the less pretentious apartments occupied by the Miss Bunnycastles. Sometimes, however, she went one to five, where the five-and-thirty boarders slept on seventeen and a half iron bedsteads. This half was a mere nominal one—and temporary by day an escritoire. The law of kindness had, somehow, omitted to enact that the pupils should not sleep two in a bed; and Miss Barbour, the draper's daughter, was the only young lady in status pupillari privileged to have an entire bed —it was the half one, the impostor—to herself.

There were all kinds of things to be learned in these bedrooms—grammars, and things gey. There were hours of musing evoked from huge chests of drawers—as to whether they grew there, and what they held. Rows on fruitful speculations as to the birds and flowers on chintz draperies, and dreadful images conjured up of what, or who, might be hidden behind heavy curtains, or under Mrs. Bunnycastle's four-poster, or within the parapet of the great canopied tester. There were looking-glasses to be fortivily glanced in, and then run away from; portraits and engravings on the walls to study; Misses in the Bairnbles, and Jephtha's Rash Vows; Abraham's Sacrifice, and his Visit from Highness the Duke of York in full regimentals; the Temple of Concord in Hyde Park, and the Horse at the Gennetry of Sutton as formed in the East Indies; the Reverend Mr. M'Quashie, Editor of the Paris-Baptist's Missionary Chronicle, and the Land of Corfe; with other works of art, to be pondered over. There were gowns and shawls to be detached, in imagination, from their pegs and peopled with flesh and blood. There was the great tumber-room, where all the fivepandthirty boarders' boxes were deposited when they came home for the holidays—a very extravaganti full of trunks. There was the maidservant's room, where Lily had been wont to go the sun, and half-terrified to death by the hell, on the first morning after her coming. There were chairs to jump on, and hearth-rugs to lift the corners of, and clocks to whose ticking an attentive ear was lent. There were books in cases, and books in hanging-shelves, and plated candlesticks, and snuffer-trays, and two great old china mandarins, ready, on the slightest encouragement of a little finger, to loll out their tongues, and wag their peacock's feather and blue-haired heads in a manner wonderful, though somewhat awful, to behold. All these objects of research were, to Lily, beautiful, but perplexing, and during the long hours of study, while the girls here pent up in the school-room, droning and gabbling, and the governesses squabbling with a pending at them, Lily was permitted, whenever she grew tired of school—which was generally about five minutes after she had taken her seat on the little chair appointed to her—to slip out, and wander up and down the house: whose contents gave her, spoke by speak, a little glimmering light. And then, in the play hours, she would ask questions innumerable, both of the girls and of the teachers, with a little of the artlessness natural to the former. Who were generally warmed off from the premises of inquisitiveness as being "unladylike," and so by degrees, without book-knowledge, Lily Floris began to learn things.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE YOUNG LADIES.

CÆSAR and Pompey were very much alike; especially Cæsar, by which I mean in the days at Rhododendron House. For weeks, for months, from half year to half year, they knew scarcely any change. It was a well-ordered school, and the management most methodical. The result was a dead level of uniformity, distressing to erratic minds, but wonderfully enough to those who loved regularity and appreciated discipline.

The "getting-up bell" was the same every day; the five-and-thirty took amidst the same yawning, stretches, and inarticulate grumblings; there were the same peevish washings and ablutions, factory toilet in the lavatory; the same prayer-meeting, the same homilies; that is to say, when Mrs. Bunnycastle had reached the end of the dean's volume she began again at the beginning and read the salutary tome through again. The boarders should properly have learned by some families by heart; but I question whether any three of them could have repeated, without book, four consecutive sentences of any one of the dean's discourses. The fact is, the time occupied in this lecture was the time chosen by the young ladies for composing notes to their chums on those minor cases de Espana, the affairs of schoolgirls: for passing surreptitious articles of mercantile traffic, and for hand-shaking in masse, and for "having out" sundry trifling disputes of the previous evening or the interning. By the interchange of sighs and pinches, nudgings and respings of boots against ankles. They were "a devil of a temper"—was it not then that this young lady, being suddenly roused to ungovernable ire by a pinch from Miss Linscombe, the prophet, or had a remarkably ingenious knack of holding flesh between her finger and thumb, that she fell upon that young lady, as to the fell upon that young lady, as to the fell upon that young lady, as to the lore to the establishment, opined that Miss Dallwallah was mad, and that sooner or later Miss Liberambe would be seized with hydrophobia.

"She'll bark like a dog," quoth Miss Miller, "and run about biting other girls, and then her father and mother'll be obliged to have her smothered between two mattresses."

"What nonsense!" exclaimed Miss Tallboys, the eldest of the parlor-boarders, and the cognatiness, indeed, of the school, for she was nearly seventeen years of age. "Smothered between two mattresses indeed! What next? Why, the magistrates wouldn't allow such a thing."

"I tell you it would be done. It's the law."

"I think I ought to know," retorted Miss Tallboys, loftily. "My papa is in the commission of the peace for the county of Kent, and I'm sure he wouldn't allow such cruelty."

"Your papa is only a brewer," Miss Miller went on, in great wrath, "and magistrates are gentlemen."

"I remember his beer," little Laura Smit-ker broke in, maliciously. "Tallboys & Co.'s Creaming Rochester Ales. My papa used to have it till he said they put gall instead of hops into it."

"You're an impudent little—!" was beginning, in great indignation, the insulted county magistrate's daughter, when the footsteps of Miss Dallwallah came lounging into the room—it was a half-holiday, and the elder girls were gathered chatting round the stove—in her usual lady-defiant manner.

"Miss Miller says you're mad," broke in a chorus of shrill voices.

"Perhaps you'd like to bite me, Miss Miller," herself continued, tossing her curls, which were flaxen, and turning up her nose, which was snub.

"I don't want to bite any body," replied the Indian, quite humble now. "I am a mad, passionate creature, and I ought to have said I was sorry I bit Lizzy Libby. I'm sorry I bit her. Only she vexed me. I'm sorry she's gone away, and if I could find out where she lived I'd take her my little enamelled gold watch, and ask her on my knees to accept it and forgive me. But she shouldn't have vexed me."

"She was a vulgar little thing," Miss Tallboys remarked, disdainfully.

"But it was very wicked of me to bite her," went on the repentant Begum. "And Mrs. Bunnycastle ought to have punished me. I deserved to be locked up in the coal-hole, with bread and water for a fortnight, only I'm papa's so rich, and I've always been brought up to do as I like."

"She says her papa's a magistrate," resumed the malevolent Smiker, giving a turn to the conversation.

"My papa's a judge, and is the head of a district twice as big again as Yorkshire," reclaimed Miss Dallwallah, with renewed dignity.

And, forthwith, all the young ladies plunged into emulous vauntings of their respective parentage, as is the custom of young ladies from middle-aged Indies, and old ladies—to say nothing of gentlemen—with or without encouragement: and when we are old, and can see and brag of our parents, we brag of our children, or, haply, being celibate, of our parrots or our lapdogs, our port or our pic-nics, as the case may be.

Miss Tallboys, whose Christian name was Grace, and who was a slender and elegant blonde; Miss Dallwallah, otherwise Juggernaut, otherwise the Begum, otherwise Lallah Rookh, otherwise the Sultana Scheherazade, otherwise a hundred other fantastic sobriquets culled from Oriental sources, and specially applied to her by her comrades, who loved her very dearly when she did not bite; and Miss Thrupp, whose parents were commercial (Thrupp & Calliper, ship-brokers, Mincing Lane), who was nearly sixteen, and who was amiable, but afflicted with red hair; were the three senior pupils at Mrs. Boddenron House. Their relatives were all wealthy, and they were, consequently, held in much consideration by the Bunnycastles. They did pretty much as they liked. They "studied," instead of learning lessons, and filled exercise-books with indifferent caligraphy, instead of repeating set tasks. They had masters for all the accomplishments, and acquired as many, or as few of them, as senior pupils in middle-class schools—remember, I am writing of the aristocratic period—generally do. They were proud of their liberal allowance of pocket-money as they chose; and I hope young ladies, who have left school, will not accuse me of libel, or satire, when I record that the major portion of their revenues went in sweetstuff. Now and then a servant-maid was bribed to smuggle in a novel from the circulating library; but, as a rule, a plentiful supply of almond rock, chocolate drops, and candied horehound, was held to be a more satisfactory palliam than sentiment in three volumes. At happy sixteen a girl can dream novels, and invent a hero every day, perhaps, but it is not enough to dream of almond rock. Sweetstuff is a thing that must be bought.

Mesdemoiselles Tallboys, Thrupp, and Dallwallah, then, condescended to take into high favor and affection the little girl who was by no quite alone, in that scholastic desert. They made a pet and a plaything of Lily Floris. Had she been a little pauper her petty pocket-money less heart, and winning ways would have made her a favorite, even with the work-house matron; but Mrs. Bunnycastle's parlor-boarders were predisposed in favor of the baby pupil by mysterious hints from Miss Bachara, who, in her occasional unbosoming of gossiping confidence with the seniors, was wont to descant upon the very grand folks whom she imagined Lily's parents to be. The dazzling diamonds, and scarcely less dazzling teeth of Mr. Blunt were still fresh in Miss Bunnycastle's recollection, and she spoke of the daughter of the possessor of those valuables full of credit for them. Miss Barbara's unbosomings were quite enough to make Lily, in the eyes of Miss Tallboys and her companions, a little heroine. There was something mysterious about her they were glad to recognize. She might be a nobleman's daughter; the offspring, perchance, of a foreign prince. She could tell nothing about her mamma. Poor, little, deserted innocent! They were it all. A forced marriage; an infant torn away from her agonized parent; an obscure retreat found for the heiress of prodigious London domains! They wanted even three volume novels smuggled in from the circulating library than ever, for Lily was a veritable subject of fiction in herself. But if they required less romance they stood in need of more sweetstuff, for they had more sympathy to share in it. The three friends solemnly adopted Lily and at once proceeded to make much of her to the no small content of the young person, who, as the child was too small to stand up in a class, and was occasionally, though not often, given to fretting if no notice were taken of her, was sometimes puzzled to know where and how to bestow her little profit, not only physically but intellectually, by the generosity of the "great girls," as the three redoubtable parlor-boarders were called: for Miss Tallboys, shocked at her backwardness in learning, had taken her under, and before she had been at Rhododendron House a year had contrived, by kindness and caresses, to instill into her a very fair acquaintance with great A, and little a, and with the alphabet. Miss Thrupp must needs undertake to teach the mite of a thing to read, which meant that she romped about with her in most making-game fashion; and certainly, as a recreational mission, gravely proclaimed that she was about to "ground her" on the piano. A great many music-books and a backgammon-board, falsely purporting to be Hume's History of England, had to be piled on the stool before Lily, mounted thereupon, could be brought to a position on a proper level with the key-board of the rickety old practicing piano (Popkinson, Great Swallow Street, Piccadilly, and Brighton) and her "grounding" did not extend beyond her being allowed to thump the keys, which were worn, and skewed, and generally like the teeth of an old horse, till she began to crow with delight at the noise she made, or her instructress, laughing, and stopping her ears by the din—though a quarter of the battered clefs were dumb—bade her, with a kiss, desist. As for the Begum, fingerwant was quite behindhand in activity of patronage to the little darling. She hung strange ornaments of barbaric filigree round her neck. I believe she would have pierced her ears—and her nose too, so the mischievous girls said—to hang jewels in it! In, had not that surgical operation been expressly inhibited by the scholastic bone government. Debarred from the exercise of this cherished Orientalism, she let Miss Dallwallah's chief delight to curl, to brush out, and to curl again, in all sorts of ringlets, tapers, ramages, and fantastic devices, her brown locks. The child's hair curled naturally, and wanted neither tissue paper nor irons; but Miss Dallwallah was passionately addicted to curlers, and nothing seemed more to delight her than when Lily's hair, after half an hour's elaborate frizzing, or compression, with the whole head-gear, reassumed the appearance of a highly ornate mop. The child submitted, and was pleased. Once, only, she gave way in a short fit of pique, when Dallwallah inadvertently touched the tip of her ear with the curling-tongs in general to be regarded the philocomic ordeal as a rare game and sport. However, one day, she thought fit to remonstrate against that which was decidedly a work of supererogation.

"My hair curl with water, Miss Lally," she said, looking up into the hairdresser's face with her large blue eyes.

"What a great stupid I am!" cried Miss Dallwallah, looking into the hairdresser's face with (whose petit nom among her familiars was "Lally"). "There, I've half spoilt your hair with these nasty hot irons. I'll put it right in a minute, my dear, now, of course. It's just like me. I never can do any thing properly. I wonder I haven't bitten you into the bargain. And Miss Dallwallah, who was of an impulsive, and not a very strong-minded temperament, and who latterly remembered her self-control only with Miss Slocombe, would have taken refuge in tears, had she not been diverted from the paroxysm by surprising hand in hand with one or the other of her three protectresses, was Lily the source of enormous pride and gratification. She was very good in church, although she sometimes swung her small legs, when the sermon was long, to the foot of the ground—in a manner to endanger the stability of neighboring hassocks; and once or twice, on the way home from church, she went to sleep, and would have tumbled off but that Miss Tallboys caught her. But take her for all in all, she was a most devout congregationist, and it was very pleasant to behold her gazing with a rapt wistfulness at the clergyman in the pulpit, and with interest not much less at the clerk in his desk; or nodding her head smilingly to the Indians if I am dreadfully afraid that she manifested a desire to converse (very thirty-third), or sitting with a very big prayer-book, of which she could not read one line, open and clutched in her hands.

"MASSACHUSETTS! MASSACHUSETTS!"

THE golden sunshine gleams o'er hill and glade and wave,
The blue sky every eye to studied thick with stars.
Ah, sunshine fails to delightly on a new-made grave!
And God's blue banner never is furled for our wars.

The summer come and went among the Berkshire hills,
Where weary watches kept true hearts as brave as stone.
Whose throbs were hero-marches, till the deathly chills
Hushed heart and lip and eye into a long repose.

But Charlie still was safe—thank God!—through many a fight;
At last he wrote (Ah me, such strange and feeble scrawl!),
"Don't fear for me—I'm wounded, but 'twill all come right;
Our boys have had tough work at terrible Fair Oaks.

"Perhaps when golden autumn lets the woods ashame
I may get home to show the tattered flag I bore.
You'll have your soldier back—a trifle thin and lame—
But dead or maimed, I'm sure you won't get one more!"

Poor fellow, brave and hopeful, how he stood the pain,
The torture all those weeks! They brought him North at last,
And fever laid her ganging hand on heart and brain,
Yet still in grim bore him to the happy Past.

He mean though heated days and through the moon-lit nights
Was "Massachusetts! Massachusetts! Take me there!"
Sometimes he rushed in memory into fondly fights,
Has always with the pleading, homesick prayer.

Strange nurses, doctors chilled by death to seeming cold,
Whose faces bent unmoved o'er many a bed to bend,
By Charlie's bed were touched of gentle mould,
And tender as their mothers' were the words they said.

Yet still that cry, "My home! the hills! the sea-let trees!
Oh only take me there, before it is too late!
Now bring a little home from my father's barn,
A little home-made bread upon a fair white plate!"

No name except the Saviour's made him still and calm.
But when we spoke of Jesus how his dark eyes filled,
As if there He, the wounded, was a friend to all,
And in the holy peace each thought of strife were stilled.

"Oh Jesu! Know Him? Yes! He is my Only Friend, He's all around me everywhere." Then his eyes grew dim
With unshed tears. "He says He loved you once, and I couldn't stand the waiting if t'wasn't now for Him!"

"He won't forsake you, Charlie!" How his face grew bright!
"He says so, and I'm sure." "If even death should come?"
No matter! 'Tis the ending of the long long fight!
So take me home!" The wildness came again with "home."

Poor shelled harp, whose every string was out of tune,
Except the one that answered to the Deathless Love!
The earthly craving passed when Heaven's higher boon
Brought him in gladness to the Hills and Home above.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

DON'T CRAVE NON SENSE.—Professor Neumager says that in 1863 a census will come as close as to enlarge the earth, and should it not attach itself to us one globule in a thousand, we shall be sensible of the shock—a theoretical alternative, the effect will be very beautiful (we should think so). Professor Neumager adds we shall have no sickness, but be bathed in the brilliant light of the blazing truth—can expect nothing more, and it is to be observed that the Professor avoids the use of the word tail. We don't, let us spell it fale, and apply it to the Professor as a bit of a wag.

"All is truisky," saith the Preacher. Yes; but what does the preacher mean by this question occurring on a fine day ago, when we are on episcopal equipage literally passing with the bishop, etc., etc., and we are actively help reflecting that a bishop should be more easily recognized by his surroundings than his carriage?

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

As sure as Sol will rise to-morrow,
So sure will sin conduct to sorrow.

A certain quack calling one day on an invalid, asked him "how he felt?" "Why," was the sufferer's reply, "I feel as "Then," cried the indignant disciple of Galen, "it must have been your conscience." With this he pocketed his fee, but never returned to the house.

At a recent party one of the candles was burning slightly. Mr. Griffiths, who boasts of his geography, remarked that it represented the Tower of Pisa. "Yes," said facetious Mr. Bliss, "and George Rex is a tower in Italy, and another is a tower in grease."

An over-curious person thinks the antediluvian life must have been a pleasant one for the ladies, and gleans from Genesis "Only fancy having two dried whales hanging in your house, and a cold shoulder of mutton always on the side-board. Shall I help you to a bit of the ichthyosaurus? Or, perhaps, you would prefer a slice of pterodactyl? Stewed plesiosaurus! Levitation à la crapaudine. Imagine a bill, and a tertiary mouth, and two hundred years, and a fellow who carried off your plesiosaurus getting sent to the lunatic asylum for twenty summers. Consider an elderly gentleman, with a liver complaint of only one hundred years' standing, wearing out four sets of false teeth, and finally carried off, after a brief illness of three hundred and ten years, by a lingering consumption!"

How sure able laughter is to flare was shown when Rubens, with a single stroke of his brush, turned a laughing child in a painting to one crying—and our authority without being great judge of painting, also brought in, in like manner, from joy to grief by a single stroke.

Denmark is to be called the "Champion of the light of Europe," and to be girt, of course, with the little belt.

Why is the letter R very unfortunate?—Because it is always to be found in trouble, wretchedness, and misery; it is always the beginning of sad ruin, and never found in peace, innocence, or love.

The gentleman who attempted to cut his throat with a table joke, a few days since, has again made a rash attack by stabbing himself with a point of humor.

What comes after cheese?—A mouse.

"I hope it may be long," as the schoolboy said to the lesson.

The earth is exceedingly dirty, but the sea is very tidy.

Wanted, some stamps of indignation and one of true nobility.

"I say, Sam? Yah, yah!" (Laughs identically.)
"Well, Nigger? Yah, yah!" (Laughs more identically, and relative like a stereotype.)
"Yar's a Conundidrum. Lookee yar. If I tells you a lie, why's dat like my ole arm-chair?" "Fys gib it up? Cos it am de seat dat I use."

"Well, how do you like the looks of the varsity?" said a Southwester to a Downeaster, who was getting with round-eyed wonder, and evidently for the first time, at a mass of buildings, with wide-open doors, in the small burg of the Mississippi.

"Why, I 'spect," replied the Yankee, "she ain't what your call a handsome critter, but he's got a great deal of openness where he stands."

If you want to be a "credit" of the first water get the drapey.

A cynical fellow, who can't muster the cash for a sleighride, thinks that the best reason for the necessities is in the ball: "a your night-clothes, with both doors open, it take you not a quarter of a minute; you will get rid of tooth-water; drop the front-door key down your back; hold an little in one hand and ring the tea-bell with the other." He says, "You can't tell the difference with your eyes when you call it a grand dress circle!"

What do we seek redress for?—Injuries. Where do we find it?—In juries.

The "native gentlemen of the jury" sometimes exhibit a stupid fatality that is quite astounding. The following is a case in point. The jury were sitt'n' upon the case of a man found dead in a sand-pit. "I," (for return) a verdict of manslaughter. The coroner recapitulated the testimony adduced, and then like this: "Now he re-entered the court with 'We find that the deceased was still-born.' For 'n thint time they were dismissed, with Lord Campbell's well-known formula, 'Gentlemen, you will retire to consider your verdict—this man was found dead in a sand-pit.' So they avoided technicalities, and came out with the following: 'We find that the said Robert Trelawney is dead, and died of said!'"

"What is the reason that men never kiss each other, Mr. Jones?" asked a young world of inquiries the other day said the Captain to Gussie the other day. Gussie cogitated a minute, and then answered, "Because they never have something better to like, and the women haven't." The Captain "saw it" immediately.

A farrier, wishing to inform the public that he would make up firm in a fashionable manner out of date when ladies have at home, appended the following to his advertisement: "N. B.—Cows, sheep, etc., made up for the ladies in fashionable styles out of their own skins."

"Your quite welcome," as the purse said to the thrilling.

THE EXPOSITALION.

Now, Charlie, don't be cross,
Would have married you, dear,
Had I known of your passion for smoking:
Of that horrible habit
You've had quietly enough—
Put it down—I'll not have it in my drawing-room!

I've sat by your side
Till I feel choked
To speak, for the vapor is choking;
Is smoke the ladies' need—
You puff! puff! at the weed,"
As if a man were created for smoking!

That 'stitching old pipe,
I'm half tempted to gripe,
And cast in the fire I am poking,
And would, too, but bother,
It still that matter,
And cleave to the habit of smoking.

Ah, well I'll give way,
For, perhaps, as you say,
No husband in love love to be teasing;
You wed us "to cherish,"
And, for we should perish,
Like plants, we must suffer a smoking.

An Oxford student joined without invitation a party dining at an inn; after which he boasted so much of his riches that the host asked him how much he was not enough of what you can do; tell us something you can do well." "Sack," said he, "I can put my share in the reckoning."

A story is told of a German who attempted to court in the English style. He began by having a translation by an interview with an English lady, who, having received his proposals, referred him to her papa to whom he addressed the business thus:

"High born madam, since your husband have kicked de bucket—"

"Sir!" interrupted the lady, astonished and displeased.

"Oh, portion—nine, ten thousand pardon! Now I make new beginning. Madam, your husband, poor thing, since your husband have cut his stick—"

It may be supposed that the old not used matters; and residing as many in the lady's countenance, he said, forgiving all, "Madam, your husband have raised fire!"

"Madam, since your husband has gone to kingdom come—"

This he said benevolingly, but the lady was past propitiation by this time, and rapidly moved toward the door, when he hurried back at his discretion by the German flow after the lady, crying out in a voice of despair:

"Madam, since your husband has gone to expected husband, have hopped de twig—"

This was the last straw, and as she was "came home," of course the poor man was totally wrecked. It turned out that the gentleman had been dead for days the verb sterben (to die) with the following wrenched parse of speech: "Madam, since your husband is, To engage in a single stroke of his brush, turned a laughing child in a painting to one crying—and our authority without being great judge of painting, also brought in, in like manner, from joy to grief by a single stroke.

Denmark is to be called the "Champion of the light of Europe," and to be girt, of course, with the little belt.

Why is the letter R very unfortunate?—Because it is always to be found in trouble, wretchedness, and misery; it is always the beginning of sad ruin, and never found in peace, innocence, or love.

The gentleman who attempted to cut his throat with a table joke, a few days since, has again made a rash attack by stabbing himself with a point of humor.

What comes after cheese?—A mouse.

"I hope it may be long," as the schoolboy said to the lesson.

The earth is exceedingly dirty, but the sea is very tidy.

Wanted, some stamps of indignation and one of true nobility.

"I say, Sam? Yah, yah!" (Laughs identically.)
"Well, Nigger? Yah, yah!" (Laughs more identically, and relative like a stereotype.)
"Yar's a Conundidrum. Lookee yar. If I tells you a lie, why's dat like my ole arm-chair?" "Fys gib it up? Cos it am de seat dat I use."

"Well, how do you like the looks of the varsity?" said a Southwester to a Downeaster, who was getting with round-eyed wonder, and evidently for the first time, at a mass of buildings, with wide-open doors, in the small burg of the Mississippi.

"Why, I 'spect," replied the Yankee, "she ain't what your call a handsome critter, but he's got a great deal of openness where he stands."

If you want to be a "credit" of the first water get the drapey.

A cynical fellow, who can't muster the cash for a sleighride, thinks that the best reason for the necessities is in the ball: "a your night-clothes, with both doors open, it take you not a quarter of a minute; you will get rid of tooth-water; drop the front-door key down your back; hold an little in one hand and ring the tea-bell with the other." He says, "You can't tell the difference with your eyes when you call it a grand dress circle!"

What do we seek redress for?—Injuries. Where do we find it?—In juries.

The "native gentlemen of the jury" sometimes exhibit a stupid fatality that is quite astounding. The following is a case in point. The jury were sitt'n' upon the case of a man found dead in a sand-pit. "I," (for return) a verdict of manslaughter. The coroner recapitulated the testimony adduced, and then like this: "Now he re-entered the court with 'We find that the deceased was still-born.' For 'n thint time they were dismissed, with Lord Campbell's well-known formula, 'Gentlemen, you will retire to consider your verdict—this man was found dead in a sand-pit.' So they avoided technicalities, and came out with the following: 'We find that the said Robert Trelawney is dead, and died of said!'"

"What is the reason that men never kiss each other, Mr. Jones?" asked a young world of inquiries the other day said the Captain to Gussie the other day. Gussie cogitated a minute, and then answered, "Because they never have something better to like, and the women haven't." The Captain "saw it" immediately.

A farrier, wishing to inform the public that he would make up firm in a fashionable manner out of date when ladies have at home, appended the following to his advertisement: "N. B.—Cows, sheep, etc., made up for the ladies in fashionable styles out of their own skins."

"Your quite welcome," as the purse said to the thrilling.

THE EXPOSITALION.

Now, Charlie, don't be cross,
Would have married you, dear,
Had I known of your passion for smoking:
Of that horrible habit
You've had quietly enough—
Put it down—I'll not have it in my drawing-room!

I've sat by your side
Till I feel choked
To speak, for the vapor is choking;
Is smoke the ladies' need—
You puff! puff! at the weed,"
As if a man were created for smoking!

That 'stitching old pipe,
I'm half tempted to gripe,
And cast in the fire I am poking,
And would, too, but bother,
It still that matter,
And cleave to the habit of smoking.

Ah, well I'll give way,
For, perhaps, as you say,
No husband in love love to be teasing;
You wed us "to cherish,"
And, for we should perish,
Like plants, we must suffer a smoking.

An Oxford student joined without invitation a party dining at an inn; after which he boasted so much of his riches that the host asked him how much he was not enough of what you can do; tell us something you can do well." "Sack," said he, "I can put my share in the reckoning."

A story is told of a German who attempted to court in the English style. He began by having a translation by an interview with an English lady, who, having received his proposals, referred him to her papa to whom he addressed the business thus:

"High born madam, since your husband have kicked de bucket—"

"Sir!" interrupted the lady, astonished and displeased.

"Oh, portion—nine, ten thousand pardon! Now I make new beginning. Madam, your husband, poor thing, since your husband have cut his stick—"

It may be supposed that the old not used matters; and residing as many in the lady's countenance, he said, forgiving all, "Madam, your husband have raised fire!"

"Madam, since your husband has gone to kingdom come—"

This he said benevolingly, but the lady was past propitiation by this time, and rapidly moved toward the door, when he hurried back at his discretion by the German flow after the lady, crying out in a voice of despair:

"Madam, since your husband has gone to expected husband, have hopped de twig—"

This was the last straw, and as she was "came home," of course the poor man was totally wrecked. It turned out that the gentleman had been dead for days the verb sterben (to die) with the following wrenched parse of speech: "Madam, since your husband is, To engage in a single stroke of his brush, turned a laughing child in a painting to one crying—and our authority without being great judge of painting, also brought us

THE PRESS
OUR ARTIST
TAKING NOTES
CONTRABAND NEWS.
NEWSPAPERS AT HOME.
IN SKETCH

THE FIELD
SKETCHING
A CONVALESCENT
RELIABLE INFORMATION.
Th. Nast.
ACTION.
THE NEWSPAPERS IN CAMP
BOOK.

SPRING HERALDS.

A softer murmur in the leafless woods,
And over meadows wide;
A joyous rushing of long-frozen floods
Down furrowed mountain-side.

A fitful sunbeam lighting up the scene,
Too dazzling bright to last,
Gilding storm-riven forest boughs between,
A waif of summers past.

Some star-bright snow-drops, winter's pretty flowers,
Fresh from their snowy fold;
A daisy smiling through the long, lonely hours;
Or crocus-cup of gold.

Sweet clustered primroses in forest-nooks,
Where dead leaves strew the ground;
And daffodils bent over purling brooks,
As listeners love to sound.

The glad new song of winged chorister,
The earliest of the grove,
Breaking the winter silence of the air
With gushes of love.

Soul-stirring impulses of recent birth,
Which round the heart may cling;
An all-pervading influence on the earth—
The spirit of the Spring.

MY SON AND BUT A FARMER.

I.

"My poor boy—poor Calvert!" sighed Mrs. Brande, dropping the letter she had been reading to look after a pair just sweeping past her window on horseback. He was a gentleman in the prime of life—a handsome, stately-looking gentleman—who bent much to his saddle-bow from time to time, as he turned with unmistakable glances of admiration toward his companion, a girl in the freshest bloom of youth, and beautiful as June blossoms are.

The face was regularly, yet sweet, with a lurking flash in the dark hazel eyes. There was something of pride, too, in the short upper lip, that was curving now with smiles as she talked, and shook back from her cheeks the intruding curls.

"I knew it," sighed Mrs. Brande—"I knew all the while that a girl like Katharine Vaux, so pretty and so good, and with so many chances in society, would never be contented to have a man with his way to make in the world, as my Calvert has. Poor boy! He's coming home to-night, and she a galloping over the country with George Hawley, a man old enough to be her father."

Crossing the room, Mrs. Brande stood mournfully, and slowly folding Calvert's last letter previous to putting it away.

"Well, mother!"

Two strong hands upon her shoulders, and a brown but handsome face close to hers.

She started, for he had come in softly—stolen over the threshold to surprise her, just as he had used to do when he was a little boy; and now he was a man grown—a tall, stalwart, strong-limbed young fellow as one could wish to see.

"Oh, Calvert!" she cried, putting her arms round his neck, "I'm so glad you've come."

"So am I, mother." And shaking back the heavy darkness of his clustering locks, half bashfully—

"How's Katharine?"

The widow shrunk a little; but either Calvert did not or would not notice it, and putting her motherly hand on his hair, she looked fondly yet sadly up at him, saying,

"Have you not seen you have grown, Calvert?"

"Have I?" with a little flushing of the frank, brown cheek. "Hope Katharine'll think so."

Then: "But such a little palace as I have been building, mother! All rigged up inside and out—all but the weather-vane, you know; Kathie'll lend to that. But you don't tell me how's Kathie?"

The widow's lip quivered a little; but she was by this time busy with some household task, and she pretended not to hear the question.

"Ah!" she said—"so you've got your house done?"

He ran on for a moment in reply, talking of his house; saying that he would rather be something else than a farmer if he could, and that Katharine would no doubt like it better if it could be so, but that he meant, nevertheless, to do well the work he had undertaken; and then, coming back to the one thought, asked again,

"How's Kathie lately?"

"I saw her this afternoon," said Mrs. Brande, with a stern setting of her lips.

"Oh! did you? Good girl! She promised me she wouldn't let you get lonesome." And Calvert's fine eye had a tender gleam in it.

"Katie hasn't been over this threshold in more'n three weeks," Mrs. Brande said, shortly.

Calvert looked anxious and puzzled. Then a bright smile broke into sunshine over his face.

"She's sensitive, you know, mother; and I dare say the proud little thing got afraid of coming to see Calvert's mother so much for fear of talk. Women are so foolish that way."

"Katharine Vaux is not, at all events. She staid away for a better reason than that, Calvert."

She lifted her head and looked steadily at her son.

The look had been more than the words had—more than with a vague and pained wonder.

"What do you mean, mother?" he asked in a low voice, coming toward her. "What is the reason Katharine staid away—is she sick?"

"Sick!" the widow said, contemptuously. "Not she; she never was in better health in her life—never had a merrier laugh, or a lighter heart, than since you went away. I don't believe she's thought of you half-a-dozen times since you went away, Calvert."

"Oh you, mother; she has written me more letters than that. I see how it is; you never liked Katie very well. She's a little wild, and high-strung, and—I see, mother."

"It is not that at all, Calvert. She's a most ridiculous young girl! That is, she is; and the reason she hasn't come here is, I believe, because she didn't like what I said to her about her goings-on the last time she did come."

"Kathie's what? Oh, mother!" Calvert said, almost angrily, "I told her not to mope while I was away, but to be gay, and do any thing to enjoy herself. What did you say to her, mother?"

"I gave her my opinion of her goings-on. She had no more right to do as she did than though she had been your wife all the time, and I told her so."

"Oh, mother, how could you?"

Looking at him with tender sorrow she said,

"Well, well, Calvert, we won't talk of it. Go and see Katharine for yourself."

"Why should Kathie break her promise to me? Is there any one she cares more for? I sha'n't hinder her if there is." His cheek grew pale through its bronze as he said it.

"I've an idea that there's somebody's money she likes better if she don't like him," said Mrs. Brande.

"Who is it, mother?"

"It's George Hawley!"

"Ah!"

He was standing at the window now, with his face to the street and Mrs. Brande could not see how he set his teeth as he said it, and how his eye flashed. It is bad enough to have another man win the woman you love, but to a man like Calvert Brande to find himself rivaled in the heart of the girl he worshiped by money the thought was unutterably humiliating—bitter.

Even as he stood there the music of a low, sweet laugh came trilling through the roses at the open casement, and in a moment more the same pair that Mrs. Brande had seen pass an hour before came riding slowly by, the bridles of their horses hanging loose, and their heads bent low. Hawley was bending, with a deference that was almost tender, to catch the whispered words that were for his ear alone—the sweet, bright, roguish face. Calvert saw it all—the dark floating curls, the uplifted face, the laughing eyes he had once been believ'd in six months, and now to see them thus under another's glance; his son, and clenched his hands till it seemed as though the nails would pierce the palms.

As the two came opposite—they could not see Calvert for the roses that grew at the window—Mr. Hawley moved his head nearer to Kathie's, with the emphasized with a gesture toward the house.

From even that distance Calvert could see the girl's dark eyes flash and sparkle. Then she never looked toward the house, but drew her little form up like the proud Kathie Vaux she was, and touched her horse sharply with her whip and gave Mr. Hawley a haughty little nod and dashed on.

He was by her side in a moment. And Calvert Brande, parting the rose-bushes, sprang through the window, and went trampling away—any where, so that he was where he should see his enemy and humiliation, and pain.

His Kathie! his Kathie! and she had written him such fond and loving letters, and had been true, and been gone; such frank, merry, loving, girlishly sweet letters, and—what falsehoods girls were. He wouldn't ever think of her again—no, not if Kathie Vaux were a lie no other woman could be true.

II.

In the low doorway of the porch at Woodbine Cottage stood Kathie Vaux that evening, little dreaming that he lover was so near. The sunset blaze was full on her face, making up a picture as one could wish to see. A deep setting of vines and blossoms framed her in, and some sprays of sweet-brier had caught in her hair, and others still drooped from her little hand and trailed beside her. June-lights were in her soft, dark eyes; and some thought, tender and bright as the young June itself, shed rare bloom upon her face as she stood.

George Hawley had just left the house, and she did not look after him. Her red-lip had curled with something very like scorn as he bowed his Good-evening to her from the road, and rode off, with his face cloudy and his brows knit. But that expressiveness had passed away now, and the fair and lovely embodiment of that June twilight, thinking of what? Calvert Brande wondered after he came toward her up the pretty flower-bordered walk.

Whatever her thought was it must have been a very entrancing one, for the low, eager whisper of his approach till he stood almost beside her. Then she turned swiftly, with an eager cry, and the flushes trooped over her face.

"Calvert Brande! Calvert Brande!" she cried, with a movement of her snowy arms that sent scarlet petals shivering about her. Then a sweet and lovingness looked out of woman's eyes they did out of Kathie Vaux's.

But for a moment Calvert would have caught her to him and sealed those tender eyes with kisses. Then coming a little to himself—there, he had seen George Hawley just passing away from Woodbine Cottage, and the sight had made him grind his teeth, and his heart had been trampling madly as he in the porch did not tranquilize him. "He has been standing there with her ever since he came home from that city, and she has been so unconscious of it—and while I was trying to strangle my jealousy and find excuses for her, she was looking in his eyes as she'd like to look in mine now. No, Katherine! No!" He had just said that to himself as he came up beside her, and he took the gave him, and that tenderness in the eyes that had been clinging he remembered six months ago, almost broke him cast away his anger as though it had been a serpent.

Not quite, for he recoiled as she bent toward him, and standing erect, and with folded arms before her, looked at her out of eyes hard with scorn and anger. The blushes died out of Katharine's face slowly; her arms drooped to her side again while she looked at him; and then, putting a little hand upon his shoulder as he stood upon the step below her, the girl said, faintly,

"Why don't you speak to me, Calvert?"

He thought her pallor was the pallor of a guilty and accusing conscience, and he said, speaking for the first time, and speaking scornfully, as though her deceit seemed, as it did, unutterably contemptible to him,

"If I had come a little earlier I should have enjoyed the pleasure of seeing and congratulating my successor."

Kathie understood him. She had been just enough wrong, just enough what Mrs. Brande said, during his absence, to be angry at his tone and words, which the more she deserved the less inclined was she to submit to them. Besides, Mrs. Brande had represented her in language that rankled still, and the more conjecture that she had repeated these very reproaches to Calvert was almost unendurable. He was looking at her as these thoughts passed through her mind. Her hand had dropped away from his shoulder, and color had come into her cheeks again.

I thought something terrible had happened, to come to me, that I found you in this way," Kathie said to herself; "but he is only jealous, and jealousy is a very hateful thing, and I don't deserve to be treated so at all!" and with this mood of her head Kathie broke off a spray from the vine beside her and carelessly drew it through her white fingers, while she said aloud, and without looking at him, "When did you get home, Calvert?"

"I came about three hours ago; I was at the window when you passed."

"Were you?" Her eye flashed a little, and she swept a torrent of the blossoms down with her impatient hand. She was trying to herself. He has been away from me six months, and the first word he says is an unkind one."

"She is glad to get rid of me so easy," Calvert was thinking with paling eyes, for he had looked against hope that Kathie would have something to say to herself. And Kathie, the more she thought the longer he was silent, the more hurt and angry she grew at his coldness. "Is an angry enough to—" was the thought; "but I won't. To think that he should come to me this way after so long; he might at least be right and civil, and get a say, and give me a chance for myself. I'm sure I haven't done any thing so very dreadful. But he knew well enough how I loved him, and he would not have done if Calvert had been able to see all.

"Will you come in, Calvert?" she asked, after a long pause.

"Thank you, no," Calvert Brande said, haughtily, and setting his teeth; "I only came to tell you, Kathie, that I have been a fool for me, free as the wind, that's more like you than any thing else is."

The girl's face grew deep snow, but she only drew the green leaves about it, and without lifting her white eyelids said, quietly,

"Very well, Calvert."

He raised his hat with a look at her that she could not see, and strode away down the walk with a single muttered utterance, "So that dream is dead!"

Katharine's dark eye flashed as she looked after him. "Calvert Brande!" she murmured; but even as she said it conscience smote her a little, and clasping her slender hands upon her bosom, she said almost resolved to call to him, and beg him to forgive her.

But pride forbade still, and she reassured herself that he would be glad to ready stay away from her long. He would come back if she waited, and if would be all right again then.

But he did not come back at the next day, and the next, and Katharine's heart grew heavier and heavier, till she could hardly carry it about.

The third day, at evening, she put on her hat, and stealing affrighted glances about, crept away by a path through the fields to the vicinity of the house in which Mrs. Brande lived.

There, shrouded among the trees, she stood and watched a long time, but saw no one save Mrs. Brande passing in and out. She went nearer, so that she even saw into the little sitting-room, and observed great deal, but no sign of Calvert. It still she saw no form save the widow's.

"Where can Calvert be?" she moaned to herself "If I could but see him one minute!" and then she fled away home again, thinking he might have come during her absence.

But he had not, and the next day she heard through a servant that Calvert Brande had been home and gone right away again—gone back West again.

Kathie waited for no more; seizing her hat, she stood very panting and breathless in Mrs. Brande's doorway.

The widow was sitting by the window, and as she looked up Kathie saw that she had been crying.

Kathie hesitated, her large eyes wandering over the room away from, and then back to Mrs. Brande, with a half-fierce expression. Then clinging to the door-post, and pushing back her curls with one little hand, she asked, in a low voice,

"Has Calvert been here again, Mrs. Brande?"

"Yes, he's gone," said the widow, shortly; "my boy's gone away again as quick as ever he can, I want's my fault his going though." She looked sternly through the window.

"What can you think it was mine?" questioned Katharine, timidly, advancing a little and lifting her dark eyes to Mrs. Brande, with a world of woe in their place. "That's why he went away again so soon, if you want to know.

Once such words would have angered Katharine terribly. Now she only lowered her head over her eyes, and drew paler than before. "Has he gone clear away?—he has he gone clear away West? Oh! I didn't mean to—he's him so angry as that."

"You shouldn't have done so then. Yes, he's gone back, to live alone in the house he built for you and him, and his heart was so bitter about it that he didn't even ask his old mother to go with him. You'll never find a kinder heart to love you, said, faintly, Katharine Vaux, than Calvert Brande's was."

"I know it," Katharine said, and drooped against the wall, covering her blanched face with her hands.

Mrs. Brande even was touched by the hopelessness of her tone, and the went on to tell her in her sympathy what tortures would not have wrung from her pride. "He was like a crazy man that night after he left you," she said; "he never slept a wink, and he walked the floor, tramp, tramp, all night."

Presently she added, "Some men now would be for forgiving you; but Calvert ain't one of that sort."

"But he'll forgive me—he must forgive me, Mrs. Brande," Katharine said, clinging to Mrs. Brande's dress; "he used to love me so, and I loved him all the time—and—and, indeed I did. I know he'll forgive me!"

The widow shook her head. "I doubt it, child. But I'm go to go to meet him somewhere on the way in a few days; he didn't ask me, but I told him I should; and he's got business on the road that'll keep him back a while for me to get ready. But you don't mind what I was going to say. I was going to say that when I see him I'll tell him how sorry you are. It won't do no good, but I'll tell him. I guess you do feel bad, and like you was the better for it. I didn't think really that you had got so much heart as that." Mrs. Brande had a great deal of heart, and the sight of Katharine's distress touched it to compassion. "It's a pity, too," she went on, "but what you and Calvert should make up. He's laid on a night's work on that house you and he was to live in. He said it would be all covered up with vines by another spring, just like Woodbine Cottage. How fellow! He won't care whether it's done now."

It was too much. Pride and resolution had kept Katharine hitherto from tears, but these last words of Mrs. Brande's were too much. She gave a wild glance around her, and, dropping upon the floor, burst into such a passion of weeping as frightened Mrs. Brande terribly. The girl's hat had fallen off, and her head, shaken by her, Mrs. Brande touched the soft bright curls and begged her not to cry. But the sad heart would not be comforted.

The poor girl had had a little conscience-smitten and self-reproachful herself. She never had quite liked Katharine, just as Calvert had said, and she was afraid she had been a little too proud of Woodbine Cottage. She suspected, too, with pretty good reason, that if she had not irritated him so before he saw Katharine Calvert's quarrel would not have taken place.

"But what made him most angry, Katharine," she said, "was seeing you and George Hawley ride by together, and looking so taken up with each other."

"I wasn't taken up," sobbed Kathie, "and I don't like George Hawley a bit. He tried to be very witty and clever, and I was very polite, just as we were passing the house, and I got so angry I wouldn't talk to him all the way home, and not much when we got there. He would go in, and I went off and left him to talk to father; and—and he asked me to marry him before he went away, Mrs. Brande, and I refused him, myself. That did you tell him, Kathie?"

"I told him something he didn't expect to hear. I can't tell you what it was."

"Maybe you told him you'd have him if you couldn't get Calvert," the widow said, thoughtfully.

"I didn't!" Katharine said, indignantly. "Calvert's worth a thousand like George Hawley, and more too."

"Well, I don't know why you need make such a secret of what you said if you ain't going to have him," Mrs. Brande said, with a lurking jealousy in her tone.

Katharine did not answer. She got up after a while and put on her hat, and, bidding the widow a tremulous "good-night," went away.

She came back the next morning with a face that blushed constantly, and had a tint of brightness in it.

Mrs. Brande was in the little back garden tying up some morning-glories when Kathie came through the house to her, and put her red lips to the widow's cheek. There was something very pleasant in the touch of those young lips. There was many more as she kissed Mrs. Brande, and though she was well aware that the kiss was more for Calvert's sake than her own, Mrs. Brande liked it, and thought, as she stole admiring glances at the lovely face, "that it was a pity but what Calvert and Kathie should make it up."

As she proceeded with her work, she said:

"It seems like lost time to tie 'em up when I'm going away so soon; but I can't bear to have my poor things dragging in the dirt and looking up at me reproachful like."

Kathie's little fingers fluttered about among the morning-glories, and she helped the widow fasten them all upon the frame, taking sometimes, but in subdued tone for her, when she looked up, as she did rarely, there was a gleam in her dark bright eyes that was half tears, half something else, that Mrs. Brande could not make out, and was a little afraid of. She understood it after a while.

"Wouldn't it be nice to go over to Ashley and tie up Calvert's vines for him before he gets back?" said Kathie, with a sly look at Mrs. Brande.

"Y—s," said the widow, hesitatingly. Somehow she suspected that speech meant more than it said.

"Mrs. Brande!" A white arm stole round her neck, and a white little hand patted her cheek. Mrs. Brande felt uneasy; but the hand was so soft and coaxing that she was not at all alarming. "Mrs. Brande, let me go with you out to Ashley, won't you?"

She lifted her eyes as she said it, and Mrs. Brande saw that the brightness that had puzzled her was a sad kind of roguery. The widow felt somehow very much shocked—pitiful, but shocked.

"Why, child," she said, bluntly, "you wouldn't go out there and ask me to have you, after all, would you?"

"I'd give him a chance to ask me, and I'd tell him how sorry I am that I treated him so."

Mrs. Brande shook her head. "I don't believe it would answer at all, Kathie. Calvert's very nice in his notions, and I don't think he'd like it at all. No, no, child; just you be patient, and I'll tell him, and I'll make it all right, if it can be made right. But I doubt it myself."

"So you won't take me with you?" said Kathie, with a queer smile, still patting the widow's cheek with her soft fingers, and looking at her out of thoughtful, dark eyes.

"I'd like to, my dear; indeed I would. I'm getting to like you wonderfully well myself. But it wouldn't do at all to take you out there with me; I wouldn't dare to do it."

"Can you tell me where to write to him, then?"

"No, I can't, my dear; and I doubt if he writes me at all. He won't feel much like writing now, poor fellow!"

"Then I'll do the other thing," said Kathie, with a half-defiant look.

"What other thing, dear?" asked Mrs. Brande. She was suspicious in her innocence tha' Kathie might mean to drown herself, or got lost in the woods, or marry Mr. Hawley, or something of that desperate sort. So her eyes opened very wide as she asked, "What other thing, dear?"

"A very sensible thing indeed, and you'll say so when you know," said Katharine, solemnly. "Good-morning, Mrs. Brande."

"What! you're not going? Well, don't do what you're thinking of, dear. I wouldn't. Just be patient a little while, and who knows what may happen? I wish you would tell me what you're going to do, Kathie, child?"

"I'll tell you when I tell Calvert, dear Mrs. Brande." And with a low laugh and her eyes full of tears, Kathie ran away.

III.

Mrs. Brande got ready in due time to follow her son. She heard, meanwhile, with some consternation and some relief, that Katharine Vaux had gone to visit some cousins in another part of the State.

"She might have come to bid me good-by, after all," she said, considerably piqued.

When she met her son afterward, at a point agreed upon previously to journey with him to Vaux Ashley, she found, at the first opportunity, to say something to him about Kathie.

"I know, mother; I won't hear a word," he said, sternly. "Her treatment of me was enough, and it don't matter how sorry she is now. A woman who could let me go so easily as she didn't care much about me, and that is the end of it. Don't mention her name to me."

Perhaps it for her pique at Kathie's not coming to say good-by Mrs. Brande would have persisted some longer. It is impossible to say or to know whether Calvert Brande would have relented if she had.

Meanwhile Katharine had got a very daring project in her small head, a project which she kept all to herself, even coaxing a suspiciously-large sum of money out of her papa, without telling him the secret.

She was not very accustomed to traveling alone, and Mr. Vaux was of the opinion that she was taking an immense amount of baggage for the shortness of the time she pretended she was going.

"Maybe it won't be so short," she replied to him. "I may take a fancy to go to the moon or to California by-the-by."

"Oh! I thought you were going to your Aunt Mayhle's," said indulgent Mr. Vaux.

"Well, I may go there," said Kathie, nonchalantly. And never suspecting that she could go any where else, Mr. Vaux saw her off, laughing, at the gate.

With very vague geographical ideas of the country she was going to, and the route to be taken to get there, Kathie yet made a pretty direct way to Ashley. She never stopped to think whether she was doing an improper thing or not. She was a spoiled child, used to having her own way and carrying out the strangest whims. She wouldn't allow herself even to imagine what Calvert would say. She got to Ashley about the last of June, and found it a new, rather pretty, and quite small country village.

She knew that Calvert's farm was on the outskirts of the town, and, with some ado, found the snug little house on which her lover had expended so much labor for her.

A charming little nest it was to0, with green grass all about it, and a grove behind it, two immense shade trees in front, and a perfect wilderness of flowers.

The windows of the house were curtainless, and peeping in, Katharine saw fresh marks of her lover's hand.

The doors were all fast, but she found a window that she could open, and, blushing guiltily, she raised it, and after much poising of herself on the window-sill, and much hesitating whether to go out or in, she got in, laughing and crying in the same breath as she stood up in the room that Calvert's loving hand had fitted up for her. It seemed almost sacrilege to stand there thus alone, and having stolen in to the Eden from which she had voluntarily expelled herself.

The rooms were all simply but very prettily furnished—carpets down in all of them excepting the snug little kitchen, the floor of which was painted, and in a corner of which stood a new cooking-stove with the wood placed in it ready to light.

Kathie sat down and cried again when she saw that. She thought he should bring his wife back with him, and he got every thing as ready as he could."

She had a long cry in a good many of the rooms, where so many things reminded her that Calvert had studied her desires.

She found that the back door fastened with a bolt on the inside, and she opened it to pass in and out.

She had found plenty of places for a woman's hand to put in order. Calvert had done his best; said a very good "best" it was. But he had been shy of asking any woman into the little household shrine he was offering to his wife (if Katharine to see it first), and he himself was but a man, and, though a very wonderful man, of course couldn't be expected to know about such matters as a woman would. Kathie went round with her deft little hand and put the finishing touch upon every thing.

She hung snowy draperies at the windows, and put some dishes in the pantry that Calvert had never thought of. There wasn't a mirror in the house till she put them there, nor a picture on the walls.

She hired a man to help her trim up the yard from the few weeks' luxuriance of grass and over growth, and she tied up the "said" vines that had begun to clamber over the walls of the house.

That was the beginning of a difficulty that no previous lien unselfless than Kathie Vaux's could have conquered.

She had been careful hitherto of being seen in her operations; and the house having been neutral tired, she had escaped observation till she went into the yard to work. The afternoon of the first day that she did that she found a man watching and helping by, and seeing what was going on stopped in some surprise.

"Hallo!" he cried, riding up to the fence, "Calvert Brande hain't come back, has he?"

The man, whose assistance Kathie had obtained, said he "didn't know nothin' about it," and gave a nod toward Kathie, who pretended not to hear.

"Well, you'll find out if you please," said the townsman, sharply. "Calvert has left the key of his house with me, and gave strict orders that I wasn't to let no one enter his house or yard during his absence. If he's come, it's mighty odd he hain't bin after the key; and if he hain't come, I should like to know, why."

Katharine heard every thing, and after an instant's frightened hesitation came forward.

The man started at the appearance of the fine that lifted itself toward him—Kathie wasn't unconscious of that; and she bewildered the man still more by looking straight at him with a pair of large, bright, darkest eyes it had ever been his lot to encounter, while she asked him, with a sufficiently demure air, after the weather.

With some stammering the man repeated what he had previously said. He stammered, but he evidently meant what he said, and Katharine had got to account for her presence there or quit the premises.

She was ready to cry with vexation. She might have told the man that she was Calvert's sister. Doubtful if he would have believed her though, even if she had not scorned to tell the lie.

Desperate emergencies call for desperate expedients. Kathie Vaux was just the rash, impulsive girl for such an emergency.

Dropping her long lashes, she watched the man from under them, while she said, gravely:

"If I had known you had the key I should certainly have been after it before now."

"Ah!" the man said, with a tolerably mystified look.

"Yes," Katharine said, with the same grave demureness, "it has been a matter of importance to me not having the key—it has really;" and her bright eyes bewildered the man again. He gave a short, embarrassed laugh, and said:

"I don't want to be impertinent, Miss, but should like to know why you're after the key?"

"My name is Vaux—Miss Vaux, Sir."

"Then you ain't Brande's sister."

"Oh dear, no! I'm just going to be his housekeeper, you know."

Katharine couldn't help blushing as she said that, and she with great difficulty kept from laughing at the man's astounded "Ah!"

"Why didn't Mr. Brande tell you where to find the key?" he asked, presently.

"It was singular, wasn't it? But he never said a word about it, nor I. We didn't either of us think of it. I dare say he can have it with you, Sir."

The man looked bewildered still, but he said he'd send the key over, and rode away, wondering what Brande wanted of such a housekeepers as that. However, he sent the key at last, and Kathie, and she or another day's interval came himself to see how things were going. He had his misgivings about letting a stranger, though a woman, step into Brande's house without better warrant than any Kathie had ever given him, when he came to think it over.

Katharine had vanished, however, probably anticipating something of the sort, and the house was locked. The man went away, and Kathie sang anxious frame of mind, and was not at all relieved when he got home and found a letter from Brande, saying he should be there the following day, and not mentioning the housekeeper.

Back he posted, and this time found Kathie, who had not expected him to come so soon. She had been expecting such news as this, however, and was prepared for it. The complete way fraid with which she received it relieved the man's mind some, and he went away and left her to her fate.

IV.

It was about two hours before sunset that Calvert Brande and his mother drove slowly up to the house.

He had called for the key as he came through town, and received the somewhat mystifying intelligence, from the man, that his wife had been and had left, that it was down at the house.

However, he was devoured by too many conflicting emotions to notice the trifling circumstance.

An altogether different coming home was this from the one he had pictured when he went away, and he felt the difference to his heart's core.

Here, he had thought as he unhasped the gate, Kathie would have turned toward him, with loving tears in her bright eyes, to say, "O, Calvert!" as she always did when she was glad at something he had done for her.

Had he by any possibility been unjust to Kathie? He had half a mind to write to her, and see what she would say. But no; he had trusted her to an unlimited degree, and she had carried matters so far with another man, that he had dared to ask her to be his wife (he knew that from his mother). She must have encouraged George Hawley very much, or he would never have gone so far as that; and then, hadn't she let him come away, scorned to offer him any explanation of her conduct? Oh, she hadn't any! She was married to Hawley perhaps, by this time. Hawley was rich, and he wasn't a farmer. Kathie didn't like farmers.

He passed upon the step, with his hand upon the door-knob. It seemed to him that he could not bear to enter into the scene of so many happy dreams, now forever blasted; for, as his mother had said, he was very unforgiving; and having lost her, he felt as if he had thought would stand all tests, he was not likely to make the first advances toward reconciliation, or to forgive easily if such were made to him.

He stood a moment, and finally, opening the door, stepped in, and without looking within, and suffered his mother to enter first.

"Why, Calvert," said Mrs. Brande, "I thought you said there was no curtains to the windows—you didn't put them up, I'll be bound. Calvert, I say!"

Mastering his emotion with a strong effort, Calvert entered in reply to his mother's call.

"You don't mean to tell me you did them yourself?" she questioned, pointing to the curtains that swept mowily down.

Calvert looked, and his eye lightened.

"I guess not; and he no one was to be suffered to enter here during my absence," he said, angrily. "And this is not at all as I left it!"

He passed on to the next room, noting every where the indescribable change that had come upon every thing, and noting it with an eye that flashed with surprise and anger.

The sound of a retreating footstep, light though it was, did not escape his quick ear, and he passed instantly into the next room, his cheek flushing to think that strange hands had been upon any thing in these rooms that had been so sacred to him.

No one was in the room he entered—a glance showed him that—but there was a small closet opening from it. He crossed instantly to it, wrenched opened the door, which at first slightly resisted his efforts; wrenched it open—and started back as though a heavy blow had fallen at his feet!

A but too familiar form was that drooping there and drooping so low that the soft, bright curls trailed the floor.

Poor Kathie had kept her courage very well until almost the last moment. Many a time, as something like a realization of what she had done came over her, she was ready to fly, to leave the house and Ashley; but the memory of her unwomanly conduct always, laughed at her own weakness, and staid. When she saw them drive up to the gate, however, every particle of courage suddenly left her.

She had never planned how she should meet him; she had vaguely meant to tell him all, how wrong she had been, and to ask to forgive her. Of course he wouldn't be able to resist such an appeal as that; and she had imagined how romantic it would all be.

But now from a point suddenly to drop from her eyes, and she saw herself, when it was too late, convicted before the man whose loving esteem she prized above all else convicted before him of a course so forward and unmaiden that it would be impossible for him to offer any thing but despise her all the days of his life hereafter.

Mrs. Brande, who had followed close beside Calvert, understood, and put a glance, and only a look of deprecation at her son—shocked as she was herself—passed between him and poor shrinking Kathie.

"Go out, Calvert, please, and leave her to me," she said.

Calvert Brande hesitated a moment, and then, with a strange light in his eyes, and a grave sweetness settling about his mouth, he said, gently, "Come, mother, you must go, too, and leave to the door.

"Don't be hard on her, poor thing; don't be hard on her, Calvert!" Mrs. Brande said.

But he only looked steadily at her, and shut the door.

Going back to Kathie, though she shrunk and would not lift her head, he took her quite up in his strong arms and went and sat down.

He does not seem to be afraid to let her hide hers yet a little while he questioned,

"What does all this mean, Kathie?"

No answer.

"Does it mean that you love me?"

She tried to writhe away from him, and would have knelt upon the floor, but he held on, crying:

"It means shame, humiliation, self-reproach, all unhappy things for poor Kathie! I wasn't satisfied with what I had to offer you to make you hate me, and I had to come here. I was mad to come, I know it now. Let me go, Calvert, let me go!"

But he held her and would not let her go. Forcing her face to uncover itself to him, he read an instant through all its humiliation and scarlet shame the old reverence he had for Kathie Vaux. And then he kissed the little face several times gently, and let her hide it in a strange and rapturous wonder upon his shoulder.

It was long before he could make her entirely comprehend that he loved her just as much as ever, and a great deal more.

"After this, too?" she questioned.

"After this," he said, smiling: "it was a wild, strange thing to do, but it was just like Kathie Vaux to do it; and while I disapprove—because she did it out of love for me—because I should not have her here in my arms now if she had not done just as she has—I am glad."

They had no other explanation than that. Calvert Brande had not reason to forgive, but he was fairly taken by surprise, and in a weak moment when his heart was tender with memories of her.

One day, when they had been married some weeks, Mrs. Brande suddenly brightening up, said,

"I declare I had forgotten! Kathie, you never told me what answer you made George Hawley; and seeing you made such a secret of it, I should like to know what it was."

Kathie colored, and glanced at her husband.

He only smiled. He could afford to smile now at mention of George Hawley or George Hawley's money.

Kathie hesitated so long, however, that it made him curious.

"Well, what was it?" he asked.

Kathie stole a hand within his and said, bashfully,

"He said something while we were out riding, about Calvert being nothing but a farmer. It made me angry at the time, and when he asked me as they I would not marry him, I said I was going to marry Calvert Brande, if he were nothing but a farmer."

Mrs. Brande said "Oh!" with some significance, and Calvert put to his lips the little hand that nestled in his, and whispered, "My darling!"

LOVE AND WAR.

I.

He stooped and kissed her again and again—
Oh, it was hard for the two to part!
Her tears fell fast as the summer rain,
And her bosom heaved with its weight of pain
As he held her to his heart.

She watched him pass down the village street,
Where the elm-trees cast cool lines of shade,
Moving along in the ranks while beat
The echoing fifes, on the mountain of feet
Kept time with the tune it played.

Oh, lovers, now is your time to kiss!
Kiss and embrace while yet you may,
For there comes an end to all human bliss;
Ah, never was cruel war like this!
Which darkens our land to day!

II.

See flash from afar those tongues of fire!
Hark to the din of the savage fight!
They summon our maid, and yet she cannot sire
That through the battle's terrible ire
Great God will defend the Right!

The sunset's gold in the burning west
Is deepening now to twilight's rod;
And fades the light on the mountain's crest,
While down in the vale, where the shadows rest,
Sleep the suburied dead.

And one is there whose unconscious eye
Seems with wonder fixed on the evening star;
No more shall his heart breathe a fond "good-by,"
Nor burn with a lover's ever new sigh—
And this is Love and War!

THE MASSACRE AT FORT PILLOW.

We give on page 284 a sketch of the horrible Massacre at Fort Pillow. The annals of savage warfare furnish no parallel to the cold-blooded, fiendish butchery than this, perpetrated by the representatives of the "superior civilization" of the States in rebellion. It can not be wondered at that our officers and soldiers in the West are determined to avenge, at all opportunities, the cold-blooded murder of their comrades; and yet we can but contemplate with pain the savage practices which rebel inhumanity thus forces upon the service. The account of the massacre as telegraphed from Cairo is as follows:

On the 12th inst. the rebel General Forrest appeared before Fort Pillow, and Colonel Columbus Lowenstein, finding it with considerable vehemence. This was followed up by frequent demands for its surrender, which were refused by Major Booth, who commanded the fort. The fight was then continued for about 3½ h., when Major Booth fell dead, and the rebels, in large numbers, swarmed over the intrenchments. The fort was then comparatively few of our men had been killed; but immediately upon occupying the fort the rebels commenced an indiscriminate butchery of the whites and blacks, including the wounded. Both white and black were shot down in cold blood, even dead bodies were horribly mutilated, and children of seven and eight years, and several negro women killed in cold blood. Soldiers unable to speak from wounds were shot dead, and those who could plead were thrown into the river. The dead and wounded negroes were piled in heaps and burned. Men and women, children, were hunted out for protection, were killed or wounded. Out of the garrison of six hundred only two hundred escaped alive. Three hundred of those massacred were negroes; five were buried alive. Two negroes were nailed to the walls, and carried off, including two 16-pound Parrotts, and two 12-pound howitzers. A large amount of stores was destroyed or carried away.

THE WAR IN GEORGIA.

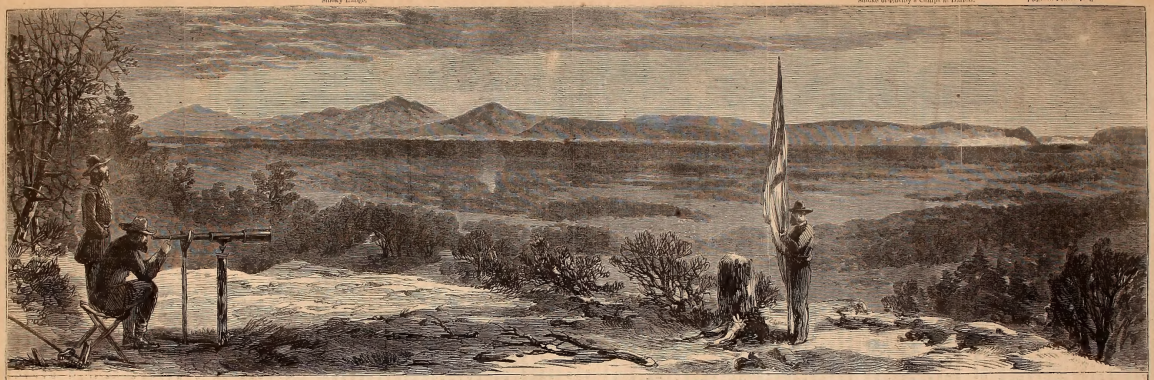
We give on page 285 a view of a Signal-Station of the Army of the Cumberland, whose advance is at Ringgold, Georgia. This town was formerly a place of considerable importance, but is now a scene of desolation and ruin. The mills, factories, and store-houses are a mass of ruins, having been destroyed during the retreat of the rebel army.

Of his sketch, Mr. Theodore R. Davis writes:

"From the Signal-station of Captain Howgate on the Ridge which was so gallantly carried by the troops of General Hooker just after the Lookout and Mission Ridge fight, the smoke of the various camps of the rebel army near Dalton can be clearly seen. The dark mountain in the distance, on occasional picket, and Buzzard's Roost—the Gap at which the late reconnoissance ended—are also visible, as presented on the right of the sketch. As showing the rugged nature of the country in which our Western army has operated with such distinguished success, and something of the nature of the signal-service, our illustration has a marked interest.

Ringgold, of which we also give a view, is positively nearer the centre of the Confederacy than any other point now occupied by our troops.

THE MASSACRE AT FORT PILLOW.—[See Page 283.]



THE ADVANCE SIGNAL-STATION NEAR RINGGOLD, GEORGIA.

RINGGOLD, GEORGIA.—[See Page 283.]

REFUSED!

"Nor yours the fault," you say—not yours?—
You women keep some bitter cura
For our proud spirits. How I long
To think you have not done me wrong.
Believe me, this is half my pain
To feel I can not give again
Respect and trust, which were your due
When I believed you wholly true!

The words of love you said one day,
"You meant the next day to unsay.
And if I thought of them—what then
I must in fealty like other men:
Must learn to woo is not to win:
That women's falsehoods are not sin:
Must lear what other hearts have borne:"
—I give you, lady, scorn for scorn!

It was for love I vainly sued!
It was a woman that I vowed!
Not something in a woman's guise,
To make my trusting heart a prize—
Rejoice to feel me in her power—
Play with me, vow to for an hour,
Then fling it down, with cruel jest,
And mocking scorn at my request!

No! it was something kind and true
I fancied that I saw in you!
Before a high ideal shrine
I laid this human love of mine.
I woke to find that shrine a dream—
That maidens are not what they seem.
Henceforth I, too, will share their mirth,
And take their love for what it's worth!

LOVE AND ENTERPRISE.

So small a thing as the scratch of a nail sometimes affects the history of a lifetime.

We had ridden all day at a smart pace, passing only now and then in the shade of wayside forest stretches to breathe our horses, jaded and worn by long travel. We had set out, with high hopes and resolute purpose, to inflict a blow at the very vitals of the Confederacy; and under Grierson's gallant lead we had, so far, swept every thing before us, scattering in dismay the bands of rebel troopers marshalled to retard our progress, and leaving on every side the evidences of our avenging presence. Inspired by success, running over with the love of adventure, crowded along—past thrifty fields, past scattered houses with affrighted inmates peering from door and window, past villages too contemptible for notice—singing, laughing as we rode, careless of present danger, indifferent altogether to the probable hazards of the future.

While, above all, we had so far been successful at all points, we had not escaped conflict and slight loss. At several points in our excursion we had been charged upon, and while many of the enemy had been made to bite the dust, a few of our own gallant troopers had been left to keep them company on the field. But notwithstanding all this we swept gayly forward, spreading terror every where, even with smiles on our faces and laughter on our tongues.

We had ridden smartly all day long and when in the twilight a detachment of us were sweeping into Enterprise, Mississippi, to the left of the route pursued by the main column. We knew the enemy had concentrated there in some force; but that only heightened our interest in the place, and with firm and steady columns we charged straight into the town. Before we had a half dozen shots we had fought and vanquished the rebels, and, with our horses pricked to the streets, were foraging for such cheer as we could obtain from the inhabitants. In the main, they were by no means the hospitable people we had expected to find them; but we managed, notwithstanding their coolness, to make ourselves very comfortable, taking some liberties, it must be confessed, which probably a strict construction of army regulations would hardly have permitted.

But we could not loiter long—it was a long way yet to Baton Rouge—so, after resting our horses and refreshing ourselves, we prepared to mount and be off. I had taken supper just on the edge of the town, with an aunt and his daughter, occupying a neat little house, and had been treated with great kindness. I said my adieux, therefore, in my very politest style, and started for my horse, out of my comrades having already mounted. But I was to ride no more that time, under Grierson's banner, lead. As I leaped toward my horse, in my haste to join my comrades, a nail projecting from the side of the gate caught my coat. Stooping hurriedly and with a sort of blind impatience to extricate myself from the annoying duress, another sharp point struck me straight under the eye, and with a howl of pain I fell back stunned and bleeding, being blind indeed, for the moment, from the agony of my hurt.

An hour after, opening my eyes, I found myself in a pleasant little room lying on a faded lounge, with the old man whose hospitality I had shared sitting by me. A candle, standing on a table, gave a feeble light, which made my face seem spectral in the little looking-glass just opposite.

In a moment I comprehended the "situation," and inquired, nervously,

"Where are my comrades? Have they all gone?"

"Yes, an hour ago."

"And left me here all alone?" Then in a moment I added, fretfully, "And among enemies?"

"All alone, Sir, but not among enemies. They didn't know, perhaps, you were not with them. It was dark, and they didn't move in much order. Then, as if to reassure me, he continued: "But you needn't be afraid, Sir; we'll take care of you."

"But my horse," I said; "what has become of him?"

"I cut him loose and let him go some time ago; it would be a bad case for any of the neighbors to have found him picketed before my door. No doubt he has followed the others."

Here was a fix indeed. Left alone, half blind, with a stinging pain in my face and eyes, with not a loyal man, probably, in all the town, liable at any moment to be taken out by some gang of rebel cannibals, and hung up, or quartered, or buried alive. I had started to ride through the bowels of the Confederacy to Baton Rouge, but I was likely only to ride into the bowels of some rebel Hades.

The old man evidently comprehended my thoughts.

"Don't give yourself any uneasiness," he said. "We haven't forgotten the old flag in this house;" and a glow came over his face, "and we will be glad to keep all harm from one of its defenders! June!"

"Here, father!" and a moment after the daughter stepped into the room. I looked at her more carefully now that I was likely to be her guest for a season. She was a round, rosy little body, with clear black eyes and thick wavy hair falling over her face, and a soft, cheery tone in her voice that was like music.

"June," the old man said, as she came into the room, "where is the flag?"

She slipped out a moment, and then, coming softly back, held out to the father a little flag with all the stars upon it. He fondled it a moment.

"We have kept it, Sir," he then said, "hidden away out of sight for two long years. I look at it every morning before I go out; it keeps fresh in my heart the memory of the good old times before treason had tried to blot out its stars. You see, friend, you will be safe with us if you will only keep out of sight.

Well, I was safe for a time—safe from the rebels, civilians and soldiers, swarming all around us, but not safe from the little minx, Jane Weston, who sat with me every afternoon in the little upper room where they had stowed me away. My eye was too much inflamed to permit of my reading, so Jane read to me an hour or so every day. Of course I fell very soon in love. I hadn't any thing else to do, in fact; and if I had been ever so busily employed, I couldn't have kept my heart from making "that" result! It pleased me to observe Jane saw at last what state I was in, and grew shy and reserved. Then I grew more enthusiastic, and she alarmed at that. I just took her one day in my arms, told her I loved her from the crown of her head to the sole of her foot; that I couldn't ever fight another day for the Union if she did not consent to be my wife; and, strange to say, the sly little creature, overcoming her reserve, accepted my right out, saying, roguishly,

"Not for your own sake, John—I only take you on patriotic grounds, as a brave soldier to the country—for no other reason, I assure you."

Of course I had my revenge for this imperti nence; that is to say, I thought I had.

Late one afternoon the old man—his name was James Weston—came hurriedly home with a troubled look.

"Somehow," he said, "it has been found out that you are here, and I have been threatened with the house over my head for giving you shelter, and to hang you forthwith."

I had always expected to be discovered sooner or later, and the old man's communication did not startle me.

"All we have to do, then," I said, "is to leave at once."

"That is easier said than done," he replied. "Pickets are every where, and it will be impossible to get away."

But I thought differently, and after a time with many tears, the father and daughter determined to attempt with me to reach our lines. How much it cost them to abandon their home and all the precious belongings, to turn their faces toward a strange land and people only those who have suffered as they have can know. I can only say that was more than estate, and that was in peril every hour they remained.

That night we stole out under a starless sky, and with such light effects as we could carry, set our faces Northward. Patrols were all around us, but I dodged them all, by the aid of my guide, and we traveled on, following unfrequented roads, sleeping often in forests and fields, telling such tales as we could in the daytime to every one we met. Finally, with poor Jane half wild with fever, reached the Tennessee, crossed over in a scow found ready on the bank, and, in the midst of a thunder-storm, that rolled with the noise of a thousand guns along the heights of Lookout, came into Chattanooga.

There, very soon, kindly hands soothed our weariness, nursed Jane into health, and rubbed from our eyes all the dust and stain of our long journey. Then, one day, I said to Jane,

"We are under the old flag now, darling; I am ready to become its defender again; shall we be married?"

With a blush she said Yes: and a week after we stood up before a chaplain, and with General Thomas looking on as a witness, were married; the flag hanging over us, its stars seeming to shine down with benedictions upon our union.

Thus it was that the scratch of a nail got me a wife, and as fair and sweet a wife as any soldier ever won.

Three months ago, when Sherman dashed into the heart of Mississippi, pushing columns in every and arteries, and one day paid his compliments to the town of Enterprise, I rode with others in the van. Old James Weston's house I found standing unmolested still, though weeds were growing thriftily about its door, and disorder appeared every where. They told me a rebel colonel occupied it now as his own; but I managed to save it from destruction, thinking that perhaps some day, when Mississippi is wholly redeemed, the rightful owner may return and set up his altars afresh, with grandchildren of the name of Smith prattling to him as the years grow old.

Already one grandchild is his, for only last week he wrote from the Rapidan, announcing that my dear ones abide, "A fat, bouncing boy dropped into Jane's arms yesterday; and she says his name is to be Enterprise Smith."

My name is John Smith. But Enterprise and a rusty nail gave me a wife; and it is only fair that my boy, crowing in his mother's arms away up there in Vermont, should be called Enterprise Smith, in memory of the day that brought me my fate. Besides, the name may serve him as capital when he comes to man's estate.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE HERO OF DONELSON, VICKSBURG, and CHATTANOOGA.

THE CAPTOR OF 100,000 Rebels, 500 Cannon, 200,000 Small Arms.

Just Published,

THE LIFE AND CAMPAIGNS of LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT.

By JULIAN K. LARKE.

Illustrated with an authentic Portrait on Steel, with views of the surrender of Fort Donelson, Vicksburg, and the battles at Pittsburg Landing and Chattanooga.

One large duodecimo volume, price $1 50.

Single copies sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. 1000 Agents wanted to sell the above. Good wages can be made. For further particulars apply to DERBY & MILLER, Publishers, 5 Spruce St., N. Y.

The Best Genius and Newest Setter for all Sewing-Machines, price $5 00 each. Sent free by mail, with directions. J. W. BARTLETT, 442 Broadway, N. Y.

American Needle Co., 442 Broadway, N. Y., Needle Manufacturers for the Sewing-Machines, Bartlett's Burnished Elastic Needle, Hinds's Pins, &c.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To Wounded Soldiers.

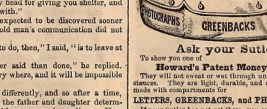
The Bounty of $100 due to Soldiers discharged for wounds received in battle will be paid by presenting the Discharge at the U. S. Army Agency, No. 94 Beecker St., opposite Pay Department. The editorial statement in the New York Sun, under date of 14th and 15th inst., also the advertisement of the so-called Protective War Claim Association, No. 59 Chambers St., that these Bounties are not being collected and paid as advertised, is false, and intended to deceive. Soldiers of their business or of all pledges to impose to others that which they would seem to be most guilty of themselves, viz., attempting to impose upon the poor wounded soldier. All such claims on file in that office should be at once withdrawn and presented to the office.

U. S. ARMY AGENCY,
No. 94 Beecker St., opposite Pay Department.

Broker's Stock of Unredeemed Goods for sale at $1 for each article, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods worth from $2 to $300 each. Circulars giving full particulars sent to any address. Any person sending 25 cents, we will inform them in advance what article they will receive, giving a description of the same, with the price at which it retails. Any article ordered, if it does not prove as described, we will refund the money.

For further particulars, address with 2 cent stamp enclosed,

J. ANDREWS & CO., 108 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.



Ask your Sutler

To show you one of

Howard's Patent Money Belts.

They will be found cheaper and safer than any circumstances. They are light, durable, and elegant, and are made with compartments for

LETTERS, GREENBACKS, and PHOTOGRAPHS.

If your Sutler has not got them, you can have one sent you by the mail (postage paid) by sending Two Dollars to the

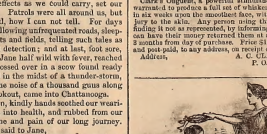
Howard Belt Co., 458 Broadway, New York.

Sutlers, Agents, and Peddlers wanted in every Camp, Hospital, and City.

Attention Company!

Clark's Ongoent, a powerful stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of whiskers or moustaches in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongoent, and finding it not as represented, by informing me of the fact, can have their money returned them at any time within 3 months from day of purchase. Price $1 05. Sent sealed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money.

Address, A. C. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 118,
Albany, N. Y.



Grover & Baker's

Highest Premium
Elastic Stitch Sewing Machines,
495 Broadway. New York.

The Printer's Devil a Monthly, Illustrated, literary, family paper, sent six months on trial for 25 cents. Address "Printer's Devil, 113 Fulton St., New York." This offer has never been equaled.

BADGES BADGES.

Solid Silver Company Pins (engraved to order), $1 60 ea.
" " Corps Badges " " $1 60 "
" " Brigade Badges " " $1 60 "
" " Artillery " " $1 60 "

Send for our Illustrated Catalogue. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO., 329 Broadway, New York.

1864 RATS, ROACHES, &c. 1864

As Spring approaches,
ANTS and ROACHES
From their holes come out;
And MICE and RATS,
In spite of CATS,
Gaily skip about.

For Rats, Mice, Roaches, Ants, Bed Bugs, Moths in Furs, Woolens, &c. Insects on Plants, Fowls, Animals, &c.

☞ Only infallible remedy known.
☞ Free from Poisons.
☞ Not dangerous to the Human Family.
☞ Take none out of the bottles in Stock.
☞ Sold by all Druggists everywhere.
☞ BEWARE! of all worthless imitations.
☞ See that "COSTAR'S" name is on each Box, Bottle, and Flask, before you buy.

☞ Address HENRY R. COSTAR,
☞ Principal Depot 403 Broadway, N. Y.

Great Chance to make Money!

$650.000 of WATCHES, JEWELRY,

&c., given away with every purchase of Pins, to Advertising Agents purchasing 100 Packets will receive free a Genuine Duplex Watch. We also publish Popular Sheet Music, by which $10 invested will yield $50. More money to be made doing our Business on Lincoln than in any other business. For particulars of Outfit, Instructions, send for New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 56 & 58 Beekman St., N. Y.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW

all about the many ailings of the human system, diet, air, marriage, &c., &c., read revised and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE,

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Sapphic Resentment, Dyspepsia, Piles, Habits, and Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Affections of the Urinary Organs, Diseases of the Sexual System of Generation, Barrenness, Impotency, Sexual Weakness, Dogmas, Bath Rheum, Cancer, Purulent Fever, Fits, Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and Throw Aside Spectacles, Marriage and Sexual Philosophy, the Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Pregnancy, Philosophy of Child-rearing, Duties of the Married, and a thousand of values to married and single, never-written hints, making altogether a unique book for curious people, and a good book for every one; 400 pages 100 illustrations. To be had of all the Agents. Contents tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTIES continually appearing in Demorest's New York Illustrated News. Do not be deceived by weak, monotonous, new reply, which only camouflaged the most spicy and dangerous weekly now published.

12 Card Photographs for $1. Made of the best Stereoscopic Views. Sent free by mail or express on receipt of price in U. S. Currency. Address

J. C. ROLLINS, Box 479, Haverhill, Mass.

Enameled Chamber FURNITURE

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, with and without chestnut, gold ornaments, in suite, wholesale and retail. Also Mattresses and Palliasses. WAREROOMS, 343 Canal St., N. Y.

DEMOREST'S N. Y. ILLUSTRATED NEWS, a Weekly Journal of Illustrations on all live subjects, and a Newspaper of Literature unsurpassed in the most comprehensive sense. Published 99 Beekman Street. Sold everywhere.

Grays Patent Molded Collars

HAVE now been before the public for nearly a year, and it is generally acknowledged that we manufacture the best fitting collars extant.

The vapor process secures a perfect curve, free from the angles noticed in all other collars.

The round corner so prominent on the inside of the turn-down collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTside—and the perfectly free and easy fit, are unique features.

The Gazette Collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge on print sizes.

These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are scientifically adapted to wear the neck.

They are made in "Novelty" or turn-down style, in every ballstan from 13 to 17 inches, and in "Gazette" or Gazette, from 13 to 17 inches; and padded in "Cavalier" in neat blue cardcase, containing 100 each; also in number nine of each—the latter is very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.

Sold by all dealers. Retail at wholesale.

"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."

Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire St., Boston.

J. S. Lowrey & Co., 37 Warren St., New York; Van Deusen, Boehmer & Co., 607 Chestnut St., Philadelphia; Edgar Bros., 73 Hanover St., Baltimore; Wall, Stephens & Co., 823 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Lewis and Bro., 57 Fourth St., 59th and 61st, Louisville; J. von Berries & Co., 434 Main St., Louisville, Ky.; A. Frankenthal Bro., No. 3 Main St., St. Louis; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Weed, Wilters & Co., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas St., New Orleans.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$115 00 each.
100 Gold Watches	70 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches	18 00 each.
2000 Vest and Guard Chains	6 00 to 10 00 each.
2500 Gold Band Breast Pins	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " "	3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
1500 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 5 00 each.
2000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 4 00 each.
5000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 4 00 each.
5000 Sets of Room Studs	2 50 to 4 00 each.
2000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 4 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 4 00 each.
6000 Lockets	2 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mounted Holders	4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

208 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

at Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, must be sent by HARDINGE'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Subtlers charged low rates.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for Klug, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 60 enameled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The most discreet of the trade. Send for a Circular.

Depot AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 165 William Street, N. Y.

BRANDRETH PALE MOUSTACHE, 50 cents and $1 a pair. Sent by mail. Address C. W. FELLO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts. Call and examine, or ten samples sent free by mail for 20c. Retails for $3, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm.

This remedy has been used in the family of the proprietor and his friends for many years, and they have induced him to offer it for sale to the public, feeling confident, after a trial, that they will consider him a public benefactor.

In cases of Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism it is invaluable; and if after a fair trial, it fails to cure, the money will be returned. Price $1 per bottle.

PRINCIPAL DEPOT: No. 194 Tenth Street, near Third Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price.

"More enchanting than a Fairy Tale, more exciting than a Novel, its greatest charm is yet that every word is true."—LONDON NEWS.

SPEKE'S AFRICA.

JOURNAL

OF THE

DISCOVERY OF THE SOURCE OF THE NILE.

By JOHN HANNING SPEKE,

CAPTAIN H.M. INDIAN ARMY,

FELLOW AND GOLD MEDALIST OF THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, HON. CORR. MEMBER AND GOLD MEDALIST OF THE FRENCH GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, ETC.

WITH MAPS AND PORTRAITS, AND NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

Chiefly from Drawings by Captain Grant.

8vo, 590 pp., Cloth, $3 50.

☞ LIBERAL TERMS TO AGENTS AND CANVASSERS.

Sent by Mail, Postage-Free, on Receipt of Price.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS,
FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK.

New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 212 Broadway, New York, want Agents in every county and every regiment, for the sale of their new styles of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

Allcock's Porous Plasters.—These wonderful Plasters have a soothing effect upon all neuralgic and rheumatic pains. In pains of the back, heavy weight about the loins, and in all cases where a strengthening plaster is needed, the Porous Plasters will surely give relief.

In rickets, applied over the loins of the child, soon restores the health.

Principal Depot, BRANDRETH HOUSE, and sold by all Druggists.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell the largest and most attractive assortment of PRIZE PACKAGES in the world, ten kinds. Old hands at the business will do well to try a sample lot. Send a red stamp for circular.
JOHN GREEN, Box 22 Rochester, N. Y.

OLD ABES JOKES:
FROM FROM ABRAHAM'S DOMAIN.
Comprising all his best sayings, "Greenbacks," being the Jests and Squibs of Franklin Lincoln.
By Bookseller and News agents, post-paid, 25 cents.
T. B. DAWLEY, Publisher, 13 & 15 Park Row, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

Watches and Jewelry.
American, Swiss, and English
WATCHES
In every variety, in any sort; superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the trade or others, large or small, promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years. T. B. DYNNEB, 179 Broadway, New York.

Albums for the Army.
Our New Pocket Album,
holding sixteen pictures, and sold at
Seventy-five Cents,
is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.
Sent by mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of Seventy-five Cents.
SAMUEL BOWLES & COMPANY,
Photograph Album Manufacturers,
Springfield, Mass.

$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines. We will give a commission on all machines sold, or employ agents who will work for the above wages, and all expenses paid. Address
D. B. HERRINTON & CO., Detroit, Mich.

ARTICLES
Of real worth are worth their value. Such is the case with Burnett's Preparations.

Whiskers produced in 3 Weeks by the use of my prescription, which I send by mail for 25 cts. Address, H. J. KENNEY, Chicago, Ills.

TO SOLDIERS.

A new Ring, made expressly for soldiers, with Name, Co., and Regt. beautifully engraved on the outside, in 18 karat gold, $6 50; solid silver, $2 00.
A liberal Discount to Agents. E. KEITH, 208 Broadway, N. Y. Dealer in all kinds of Army Badges, Gold Pens, &c., &c.

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS, THE LIVE PAPER OF AMERICA.—Everybody and everywhere is talking about the great Illustrated paper, DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED NEWS, as the most spicy, interesting, and illustrated paper ever published. It needs only to be seen to be appreciated.

ARMY BADGES.
DROWNE & MOORE,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.
BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100, or 1000.
SEND FOR A CATALOGUE.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The Spring number of this magnificent Fashion Magazine, now ready, contains a brilliant display of beautiful novelties for the spring Fashions, and some unusual and extraordinary attractions, among which is a large Double Mammoth Fashion Plate, twice the usual size, and the most beautiful Fashion Plate ever offered in a magazine in the world. The Spring number also contains Six Full Size Patterns, an elegant Braid Sheet, with much valuable information, &c., all for only 25 cents; or yearly subscription, $1, with a Premium Chart, worth of extra Patterns. Do not fail to subscribe immediately. The Agricultural and Mirror of Fashions, furnished together, for $1 75. Arthur's or Peterson's Magazine and the Mirror of Fashions, $2 25; Godey's Lady's Book and the Mirror of Fashions, $2 75, less than the cost of Godey's alone. Splendid premiums for Clubs. Address MME. DEMOREST, No. 473 Broadway, N. Y.

C. H. & J. B. KELLY'S
WINDOW SHADE
MANUFACTURERS,
559 BROADWAY.
White Holland for Shades. Only Agents for Bray's Patent Fixtures.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications. Novel No. 12. THE OCEAN ROVERS; or, THE FREEBOOTERS OF THE MAIN: a thrilling story of sea and land, by Novel No. 3. The Patriot Highwayman; or, Jack Sheppard in America. This unrecognized popularity of this tale has induced the proprietors of one of the theatres to have it dramatized, and it will be performed before Booth or any other big enthusiasm. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, 10c. each.
GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 117 William St., N. Y.

DEMOREST'S N. Y. ILLUSTRATED NEWS.—This spicy and valuable Weekly will give some startling Novelties this week. Send for it. See it. See ready.

WATCHES.
A Heavy Hunting Cased Silver Composte Watch, fine movement, and is perfect running order, has the appearance of Solid Silver, sold by the case at $7 50. Sample Watches, post free of expense, at $14 00.
The Great English Army Watch, in heavy handsome gold composite hunting cases, beautifully engraved, highly finished and perfectly jeweled, and in running order. These cases will wear for a great length of time. Sold by the case at $7 00. Sample Watches sent free of expense, at $15 00.
The Great New Army Watch, especially for Soldiers, in heavy and elegantly finished solid silver hunting cases, genuine Lever movements, ruby jeweled, and warranted an improvement on the best time-keeper, only $18.
Constantly on hand Watches of every description. Agents wanted throughout the country. Send for our circular. Sample Watches sent free. Postage, by the case, $2 28; Registered, 50 cents.
WARRANTED.
We warrant every Watch to be as represented, or money refunded. Remittances promptly if required.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Importers of,
No. 191 Broadway, N. Y.

MME. DEMOREST'S IMPERIAL DRESS ELEVATOR, a very durable, convenient, and perfect arrangement for raising the dress in graceful fullness, the fashionable style, uniformly all around, and letting it down at will. Price 50 cents. Sold at all the fancy and trimming stores, or sent by mail free on receipt of the price. No. 473 Broadway. Dealers supplied on liberal terms.

Printing-Press for Sale.
One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 32x51. Price $3500.
Apply to ADAMS BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Congonut oil force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any part of the country on receipt of order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 199 Nassau Street, N. Y.

CARPET WARP.
WOOL TWINE.
Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

"Good Looking."

ETHNOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIognomy, and Psychology, with characters of nations and individuals, given in the ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, for MAY, No. 5, at 15 cts a year. For 60 cents the Pictorial Double Nos. for January, February, March, and April sent by first post, by FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

5000
Agents Wanted,
TO INTRODUCE OUR
NEW GOLD PEN.
This gold pen is something entirely new, and is now offered to the public for the first time, and is made by an entirely new process, enabling us to offer them very cheap. Every pen is warranted one year, and to be genuine gold round points, and to possess all the elasticity and writing qualities of the highest-priced gold pen made. Single pens sent by mail, on receipt of the following prices:
WITH SILVER-MOUNTED EBONY HOLDERS. In MOROCCO CASES.
No. 2. Medium Pen and Holder, each 90 cents.
No. 3. Large, " " each $1 00.
No. 4. Engrossing Pen and Holder, each $1 25.
Great inducements to Agents and the Trade. Send for our Circular. GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 191 Broadway, New York.

50,000 AGENTS WANTED.
H. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.
I will send a sample of either of the New Artillery, Cavalry, Pontoniers, Infantry, or Naval Pins for $1 50, or a Company Pin with or either Army Corps, Division, or by engraved thereon, for $1. Send for Wholesale Illustrated Circular.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,
Have Just Published:

SPEKE'S AFRICA. Journal of the Discovery of the Source of the Nile. By JOHN HANNING SPEKE, Captain H. M. Indian Army, Fellow and Gold Medalist of the Royal Geographical Society, Hon. Corr. Member and Gold Medalist of the French Geographical Society, &c. With Maps and Portraits, and numerous Illustrations, chiefly from Drawings by Captain GRANT. 8vo, Cloth, uniform with LIVINGSTONE, BARTH, BURTON, &c. Price $3 50.

THE SMALL-HOUSE AT ALLINGTON. A Novel. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Barchester Towers," "Doctor Thorne," "Framley Parsonage," "The Bertrams," "The Three Clerks," "Orley Farm," "Castle and the Spanish Main," &c. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, $1 75; Paper, $1 25. (Next Week.)

ANNIS WARLEIGH'S FORTUNES. A Novel. By HOLME LEE, Author of "Sylvan Holt's Daughter," "Kathie Brande," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

LYMAN BEECHER'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND CORRESPONDENCE. Autobiography, Correspondence, &c., of Lyman Beecher, D.D. Edited by CHARLES BEECHER. With Two Steel Portraits and Engravings on Wood. In two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth. (First Issue ready. Price $1 75.)

THE WIFE'S EVIDENCE. A Novel. By W. G. WILLS. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

A POPULAR HAND-BOOK OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By GEORGE CUMMING MCWHORTER. 12mo, Cloth, $1 00.

THE RING OF AMASIS. From the Papers of a German Physician. By ROBERT BELMER LYTTON (OWEN MEREDITH). 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

VERY HARD CASH. A Novel Sounded on Facts. By CHARLES READE, Author of "Love me Little, Love me Long," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $1 50; Paper, $1 00

HISTORY OF THE RISE AND SUPPRESSION OF THE MASSACRES OF 1803 AND 1860. By ISAAC V. D. MEADE. With Portraits and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 00.

A MANUAL OF THE INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT OF EUROPE. By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D., Professor of Chemistry and Physiology in the University of New York; Author of "A Treatise on Human Physiology," &c., &c. 8vo, Cloth, $3 50.

LADY LISLEBY. A Novel. By the Lady EMILY PONSONBY, Author of "The Discipline of Life." 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

LUCCHESIANA. A Series of Essays on Life, Literature, and Manners. By SIR E. BULWER LYTTON, Bart., Author of "The Caxtons," "A Strange Story," "My Novel," &c. Second Edition. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00.

JOHN MARCHMONT'S LEGACY. A Novel. By MRS BRADDON, Author of "Aurora Floyd," "Eleanor's Victory," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THACKERAY'S ROUNDABOUT PAPERS. Roundabout Papers. By W. M. THACKERAY, Author of "The Four Georges," "The English Humorists," "Vanity Fair," "Pendennis," "The Newcomes," "Adventures of Philip," &c. With Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 50.

FIVE YEARS OF PRAYER, with the Answers. By Rev. SAMUEL IRENÆUS PRIME, D.D., Author of "The Power of Prayer," "Thoughts in Europe, Crete, and Italy," "Life of Rev. Dr. Murray," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

RACHEL RAY. A Novel. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Orley Farm," "Framley Parsonage." "Doctor Thorne," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

☞ Any of the above Works sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year	$3 00
Two Copies for One Year	5 00
An Extra Copy will be given for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 75 each, or 11 Copies for $27 50.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 50.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months	$1 00
One Copy for One Year	3 00
One Copy for Two Years	5 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 75 each, or 11 Copies for $27 50. Payment invariably in advance.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI., and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863, of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.

☞ The Publishers would give notice that they employ no TRAVELING Agents to solicit Subscriptions to "Harper's Magazine" and "Harper's Weekly." Persons wishing to subscribe to these Periodicals should remit direct to the Publishers, or pay their subscription to some Dealer or Postmaster of known responsibility.

☞ Specimen Numbers, Two Dollar per line for inside, and One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS,
FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK.

OLD GENTLEMAN FROM THE COUNTRY. "And so you've bin to the Great Fair? And what did you see there that you liked most?"
SHOE-BLACK (promptly). "The Big Shoe, with the Little Woman in it!"

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metallic. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to S. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

Dyspepsia Tablets,
For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 94 Centre St., New York, second floor. Send for mail for 63 cents.

TROPICAL BALSAM AND COCOA
Prepared by Carson, Brothers and Co.
Have since the valuable remedy has become successfully established, been extensively counterfeited, and the public are cautioned against the many worthless imitations now offered, which are put up in bottles of the same size and shape, and labelled so closely as to deceive the unwary. For reliable testimonial letters, pamphlets, &c., see pink wrapper. For sale by druggists generally throughout the United States. Principal Depot, 21 and 23 Liberty st., New York. General Depot and Wholesale Agency, 48 Dey st., New York. Beware of all imitations.

Davis Collamore & Co.,
479 Broadway, below Broome St.
IMPORTERS OF FINE CHINA, WEDGEWOOD, PARIAN, &c., &c. ENGRAVERS GLASS to order in great variety.
CROCKERY STORE CHINA DINING SETS.

FISHER AND EGGLESTON FANCY GOODS.
Also, a full assortment of
Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.
Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street, N.Y.
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

250 Rare Receipts.
17 Sanford Electrotype Engravings.
TELLS WHAT TO DO, AND HOW TO DO IT.
Both sent free for 25 cents.
HUTCHISON & CO., Publishers,
443 Broadway, New York.

To Consumptives.
Consumptive sufferers will receive a valuable prescription for the cure of Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung affections (free of charge), by sending their address to
Rev. E. A. WILSON,
Williamsburgh, Kings Co.,
New York.

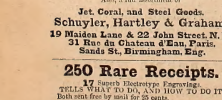
A Beautiful Complexion free from Tan, Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For clearing it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey, and other valuable articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.
The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 103 and 107 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

Patent Army Pipe, just out. Can be carried in the vest pocket, is self-cleaning, and an elegantly finished pipe; retail price 50c. each. One doz. sent free on receipt of $3 25. Agents make over $10 per day, and receive as a premium from us a superb gold or silver Watch. Send quick, and get the control of a State. Circulars sent to all in every full regiment. Circulars of 20 new patented articles sent free.
RICHARDS & CO., Box 3131, 37 and 39 Nassau St., N. Y.

Shults' Onguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—You will get the Recipe for a sure cure for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, and all lung complaints, by sending One Dollar to Lewis Hunt, Box 2051, New York. He sends it free. Write for it.—It has cured thousands.

$15 Per Day, $20
And a Gold Hunting-Case Watch given free to all agents who sell our Original and "only Genuine" Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Packages. We are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated American Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. We present free to every one who acts as our agent a Gold Watch or Silver Hunting-Case Lever Watch, "American Sportsman Movements." These watches are neat with fine gilt dials. One of our Wonderful Packages contains more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the varying contents of "each package" will be found large quantities of "Prize Stationery," Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, "Sporting Articles," Leather Portfolios, Designs for Needle-work, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Letter-Writers, Narrative, Poetical, Amusements, Gents's Pocket Calendars for 1864, Union Panorama, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars, for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. One hundred different kinds of jewelry and gilt set of a superb watch, show-bills, and sole right for a town or county, sent anywhere on receipt of $25. Smart agents can sell 100 Packages in a few hours. This is the greatest money-making business of the age. Agents wanted in every town. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements, &c. Address the Great AMERICAN PRIZE PACKAGE CO., 102, Nassau and Ann St., New York. Only Original and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.



Don't buy your Gaiters
or Shoes without Fogg's
Patent Lever Buckle.
They are self-adjusting, and require no holes punched in the strap. Dealers or manufacturers can engage TEN CENTS currency, and I will mail sample of ten patterns.
THEODORE FOGG,
210 Pearl Street, New York,
and
68 Kilby Street, Boston, Mass.

$11 Watches. $12
"AN ELEGANT WATCH."
Set in very heavy Silver hunting cases of splendid finish, silver escaped, ruby jewelled, fine English movements, pure white dial, and steel polished hands. Warranted a correct timekeeper, and promptly forwarded, together with a very handsome gold-plated chain for $12, by express, postage paid, on receipt of twelve dollars, or eleven dollars without chain.
C. C. CLARK & CO., 208 Broadway, N.Y. P. O. Box 5680.

$50 AMERICAN $50 LEVER WATCHES.
TRADE MARK, P. S. BARTLETT, WALTHAM, MASS., FULL JEWELLED, WARRANTED, IN 4 OZ. COIN SILVER HUNTING-CASE, GOLD JOINTS, FANCY TURN PIN, FOR $50.
ABY every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the present Campaign will not take bills for collection on soldiers.
J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway New York.

Good News for the Army.
Hereafter we will send, post-paid, any of our PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS ordered by soldiers for themselves or friends, giving an Album of the full value of the money sent.
Our Albums have the reputation of being superior to all others in beauty and durability, and range in price from 50 cts. to $70.
Our catalogue of
CARD PHOTOGRAPHS
now embraces about 5000 officers, army and navy, statesmen, actors, actresses, copies of works of art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.
Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.
Our assortment of these is very extensive, including a great variety of views of the present war.
Catalogue sent on receipt of stamps.
E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

SOLDIERS'
Pocket Photograph Albums for 16 pictures, morocco gilt, sent, post-paid, for $1. A. F. GARDNER, Greenfield, Mass.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—There is a traitor in the camp; they have been counterfeited! But a sure test of genuineness exists in the water-mark, "Holloway, New York and London," which is discernible as a water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions accompanying each pot or box. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 18c., 88c., and $1 40 per pot or box.

STAMMERING
And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For Circular containing full description Pamphlet and Drawings, address H. C. L. BEARS, 377 W. 23d St., N. Y.

WASHINGTON, March 28, 1864.
GENTLEMEN:—You may use the sentence about "Child's Care" which I wrote to Mr. Trowbridge. The book has been unusually PRACTICAL; I have heard it highly praised by discerning judges.
Yours very truly, S. P. CHASE.
MESSRS. J. E. TILTON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

What Secretary CHASE says of the New Novel.
"The inflamed condition of my right eye has prevented my reading or writing much lately. "Cudjo's Cave" I read all through, however. It interested and impressed me profoundly."

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.
HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.
HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.
HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.
Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore the hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, regent of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Sold by druggists generally.

Hoyt's Imperial Coloring Cream.
Superior to any Hair Dressing in use. Oils and Colors the Hair in the most natural manner. Changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.
Ladies will find Mr. Hoyt hair-dresser in attendance to apply the Hiawatha.
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 19 University Place, N. Y.

The Rev. Charles E. King
Will send FREE Free of Cost the Prescription which he successfully treated, while in charge of the Vermont State Prison, thousands of cases, and great ends of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.
The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma. Catarrh. Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lungs. Throat and Air-Passages: while in the early stages of Consumption it speedily arrests, and energizes the deranged functions of the Stomach. Liver and Bowels. Address, with stamp,
Rev. CHARLES E. KING,
Station D, Bible House, N.Y.

Sundries.
Leading articles: SODA ASH, PALM OIL, COCOANUT OIL, CAUSTIC SODA, CAKE SODA, Saltpetre and "Prize's Candles," SAL SODA, foreign and domestic. LONG LYE, finishing soaps; SAL GLAUBER, Epsom Salts, Jargon, MADDER, FLOR. SULPHUR, BORAX, ALUM, TARTAR, and pure or crystal CREAM TARTARIC ACID, powdered or crystals; ARGOLS, SALERATUS, "Parsons" YEAST POWDERS. Buy of us, we are first hands! THOS. ANDREWS & CO.,
Importers, 136 and 138 Cedar Street, New York.
Established Seventeen Years!

Chemicals, Soda Ash.
The following brands: Johnson's, Kurtz, J. Hutchinson & Co's., Garratt's, Marsh's, for Soap, Glass, or Woolen Mills, constantly on hand, various lots. For sale by
THOS. ANDREWS & CO.,
Importers, 136 and 138 Cedar Street, New York.

The Universal Clothes Wringer

Was pronounced superior to all others at the Metropolitan Fair in London, 1862; received the Bronze Medal (highest premium) at the Great Fair of the American Institute in New York City, 1863; also the Silver Medal and Diploma in 1861, and Diploma and Certificate in 1862 at the New York State Fair (a thing the highest premium is not given to any other machine in the United States at the State Fairs, in 1861, in Vermont, Pennsylvania, Ontario, Illinois, and Iowa, and at the principal County and Institute Fairs throughout the country. A good strong wringer in every town. Liberal inducements offered and exclusive sale guaranteed. E. C. BROWNING, General Agent, 347 Broadway, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, neatly finished dial, cut hunter, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper.
A single one sent free by mail in neat case, for only $7.
A FINE SILVER WATCH, same as above, specially adapted to the ARMY.
Sent free by mail, for only $7.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15
OR, COMPASS WATCH.
A Superb "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved or engine turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Concave English Jeweled or Nickel Movements," "A 1 Timekeeper," Independent Action, Self Balance, and has a very MINIATURE COMPASS sunk in the cap and attached to the movements, making it a "Correct Guide to the Absent or Traveler. Perfect time-keeper, "warranted one year."
WILL SUIT ARMY AND NAVY.

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch,
Used by the British Army Officers.
Sent for $9 by mail, in elegant Case. Same as sold by $25.
Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and it certainly will meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated Times says, "Correct timekeeper; and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."
Address CHAS. T. NORTON & CO., Importers, 24 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Kindly made or to measure, at $33, $39, and $45 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts sent on application free.
FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3 00, $3 75, and $4 50 each. A cut one yard long. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 25 cents postage for each shirt.
Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years, and are now to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.
Price 75 cts. each; or send by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 99 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD, 367 Broadway, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 times. Mailed to any part of the country for 25 CENTS, OR FOUR FOR $1 00.
ADDRESS E. C. BOWEN, Box 376, Bristol, Mass.

LIFE OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.
JUST published THIS DAY, and for sale by T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS, Box 376, Bristol, Mass.
THE LIFE, SPEECHES, PROCLAMATIONS, LETTERS, MESSAGES, ACTS, AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
Sixteenth President of the United States.
A FULL AND COMPLETE HISTORY OF HIS LIFE; HIS CAREER AS A LAWYER AND POLITICIAN; HIS SERVICES IN CONGRESS, WITH HIS SPEECHES, PROCLAMATIONS, LETTERS, MESSAGES, ACTS, AND SERVICES AS President of the United States and Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States up to the present time. Complete in one large volume of 700 pages, with a portrait of President Lincoln. Price Fifty Cents in paper, or Seventy-five Cents in cloth.

General McClellan's Life and Reports.
THE LIFE, CAMPAIGNS, BATTLES, REPORTS, AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF MAJOR-GEN. GEORGE B. McCLELLAN; the HERO of WESTERN VIRGINIA, ANTIETAM MOUNTAIN, and ANTIETAM, with a full history of all his CAMPAIGNS and BATTLES, as well as his REPORTS and CORRESPONDENCE WHILE IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT AND THE PRESIDENT in relation to the Peninsular Campaign. Complete in one large volume until he was finally relieved from command after the Battle of Antietam. Together with his VISITATIONS TO SOLDIERS, etc., up to the present time. New and Enlarged Edition. Complete in one large volume of 700 pages, with a Portrait of General McClellan. Price Fifty Cents in Paper, or Seventy-five Cents in Cloth. Agents want everywhere, free of postage, on receipt of price.
A liberal discount to the trade. Single copies will be sent to those who cannot procure them of their booksellers, with cash enclosed, at once, for whatever quantity you may wish, by mail, free of postage.
T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS,
306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
And they will be sent to you within one hour after receipt of the order.

DONT LOSE YOUR CLOTHES
Secure against ravages of
MOTHS
by Cheap, Reliable, Durable, Sweet-Odored
CEDAR CAMPHOR
Sold by all Druggists. HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Sole Facturers, Boston.

The Reputable Toilet Articles of the
SOCIETE HYGIENEQUE OF N.Y.
Send for a prospectus as below.
VINAIGRE DE TOILETTE, Rendering Cosmetic, Restorative and Sanitary, $1 25 and $2 25 per bottle. LAPIDOLA FOR THE HAIR, ELEGANT, CERTAIN, but safe beyond a question, $1 and $2 25, per bottle. HERB PILLOLA, cure the DEBILITATED, 75 cts. MAGNOLIA PHEBOLINE, THE EXQUISITE PERFUME, 75 cts. One sixth off to the trade. If your druggist has not these articles, inform him that they are for sale by VICTOR E. MANGIN, 135 Chambers St., N. Y., who agent for the Society, and you will receive carefully packed.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. VIII.—No. 384.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

UNION SCOUTS IN LOUISIANA.—[SEE PAGE 294.]

OUR DEAD ARMIES.

Two hundred thousand rank and file are they,
Under the Captains of fulfilled renown,
Led to immortal triumph since the day
On which they won the hero's perfect crown.

They march in silent lines compact and strong,
Unfreighted from all human deeds and deed;
No mortal trembers through faint pulses throng
In the unshrinking armies of the dead.

No straggler sinks away in pallid fear,
No ashy smells before the battle day—
No mixed and broken columns throng the rear
When on the front war's booming engines play.

They are invincible in hand and heart;
Before his final victory is sure:
From elbow-touching comrade none shall part—
None shall the after-thirst of wounds endure,

No cry for help from front ranks pressed and sore
Rises above the storm of fire and hail;
They hold gaps forward post forevermore,
And no supports are needed lest they fail.

The fortresses they guard shall never yield
To gnawing famine or to bursting shell;
No widening breach shall ever be unsealed,
No pallid flag its tale of shame shall tell.

They ask no furlough ere the next campaign;
Through the dark winter hours of storm and frost,
Fixed as the earth's foundation they remain,
The whole two hundred thousand, at their post.

Their term of service with no time expires;
The hidden future need shall see them stand
With changeless front to guard the altar fires
Set up to Freedom on a ransomed land.

Oh, Armies of the Dead! In tears and pain
They were enlisted for the eternal years,
To keep humanity's fair name from stain,
To lay forever all its rising fears.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1864.

UNION FOR UNION.

THERE are three classes of persons engaged in manufacturing opinion hostile to the Union Convention called at Baltimore. They are the enemies of the American Government and human liberty known as Copperheads. Second, the declared opponents of Mr. LINCOLN'S nomination in any case whatever. This class calls the Baltimore call "insolent" and criticises the Administration with all the acridity of the fiercest rival politician. Third, the class which is wholly devoted to the country and to liberty, but is dissatisfied with the influences that surround the President, and are persuaded that MR. SEWARD and MR. BLAIR are almost as dangerous to the good cause as JEFFERSON DAVIS or LEE. This class wishes the Convention had been postponed until after General GRANT has fought, and, in any case, asks that the terms of the call may be so changed as to include War Democrats and all other loyal Union men.

As to the first part of their objection, it is clear that under no circumstances whatever could the policy of a man like the President be altogether agreeable to them. It will always be a more cautious and patient policy than they approve. The practical point, therefore, for them to decide is, whether, looking at the whole course of his administration, the cause will be imperiled by its continuance; or whether, all the circumstances considered, any other man known to us is more likely than he to accomplish the great work. If they know such a man, clearly it is their duty to persuade the country to adopt him. If they merely wish that there were such a one, do not the times require something else than expressions of regret and dissatisfaction? If they believe the continued influence of MR. SEWARD and MR. BLAIR in the Cabinet to be detrimental to the country, let the attack upon those gentlemen be made openly, fairly, and incessantly. But let it be based upon facts, and not upon rumors nor bald assertions. Where the President is personally not the cause is injured by any of his advisers, and that public opinion demands their removal, we are very sure they will be removed. But a dumb dissatisfaction is of no use. Why should a few men go to Washington and privately decry any secretary to the President? The public has a right to know, at such a time as this, why any great change is made in high public officers, and therefore the discussion should be as open as possible. The treatment of General BUTLER was formerly one of the chief charges against what was called the influence of MR. SEWARD. Well, MR. SEWARD remains, and General BUTLER declares himself to be entirely satisfied with his present treatment. We are not defending MR. SEWARD nor denouncing him; but our friends ought to bear in mind that it is very easy to overestimate the influence of an obnoxious person.

Now in the matter of the call to the Convention. It is surprising that any man who has carefully read it should call it narrow, partisan, or exclusive. It is as comprehensive as patriotism, and as little tainted by party-spirit. Indeed we do not understand how a better call could have been issued. It is addressed to "all qualified voters who desire the unconditional maintenance of the Union, the supremacy of the Constitution, and the complete suppression of the existing rebellion, with the same thereof, by vigorous war, and all apt and efficient means." Such voters are requested to elect delegates, "in this and in all other districts where loyal Union man can stand, Generals BUTLER and DIX, MR. DICKINSON and Senator JOHNSON equally with General FRÉMONT and BANKS, MR. WEED and Senator HOWARD." How could it be simpler, broader, better?

Every man who wishes to see good popular rights established in all the States, and the final overthrow of the oligarchical spirit which generated the rebellion, and is a perpetual insurrection against our national institutions and freedom, is invited to take part in the elections to the Convention by the very terms of the call, "the complete suppression * * * of the cause of the rebellion." Its complete suppression is its total destruction by the establishing of equal rights. To change the form of the call to "all who are in favor of the people against an aristocracy" does not change its nature, nor make it broader or stronger. It is already addressed to those very persons and to none other. It certainly is not addressed to gentlemen like the SEYMOURS, VALLANDIGHAM, the WOODS, LONG, and HARRIS, nor to JEFFERSON DAVIS and his Confederates. But to every loyal Union man who wishes to establish peace upon equal liberty it is addressed with a directness that he can not avoid.

And how is it a party call? It is issued, indeed, by the Chicago Committee; but that is a necessity of the case. That Committee is the recognized representative, in a great mass of voters, and speaks by their authority. And by that authority a party platform is repudiated altogether. Had a few gentlemen of the several late political organizations combined in a call, it would have had the force of their personal influence, but it could not have had the weight—if they had been by consent of the voters, their representatives. And it is obvious that at this time the fact of the late party ties of the Committee is of no importance when it is seen that the entire absence of partisan character in their call. They propose nothing but the salvation of the country by every possible means, specifying the destruction of slavery as one of them. Can this, in candor, be stigmatized as a party call or a narrow call? Is there a loyal citizen of whom the least possible amount of the true enemies of the rebellion to refrain from hypercriticism upon the terms of a call which was intended and is framed to include every earnest and unconditional Union man in the country?

The Union men are unquestionably the mass of the people of the United States. They must not forget that every spring and autumn the elections are not unanimous. They must remember that last November Pennsylvania was carried by less than twenty thousand majority for the Union, and that if the summer campaign in the field is unsuccessful we shall need all our unity and all our patriotism to the November when will ensue. Let us seek, then, rather for grounds of union than of difference. We can not all be satisfied with everything. Shall we not take counsel of our patience and faith in justice and the people rather than of impatience and distrust?

THREATS.

IT is a very important question how far the menaces of refusal to abide by the nomination of the Union Convention at Baltimore which are uttered by the immediate friends and supporters of General FRÉMONT are authorized by him. Has General FRÉMONT interests different from those of the country? Is his nomination so essential to the national cause that the cause itself may be risked in order to secure it? We are unwilling to believe that he would acknowledge it. We do not willingly aware that he privately and publicly asserted that he means to be a candidate in any case; that those who declare their intention under no circumstances to vote for MR. LINCOLN, are to be considered to use the name of FRÉMONT as their rallying cry; and that his continued silence under such circumstances is to be taken for his acquiescence. Certainly if General FRÉMONT should declare that he means to abide by the decision of the Convention, he would neither decrease the favor of the Convention toward him nor the respect with which so many Union men, who intend to support the Baltimore nomination, have been encouraged to regard him.

Those who speak in his name repudiate the action of the Union Convention in advance, because they declare that it will not represent the people, but the politicians; and they propose to obviate this difficulty by calling another Convention. Quis custodiet custodes? How is the new Convention to be purged of politicians? These gentlemen object that the Baltimore Convention will be packed to nominate MR. LINCOLN. And what is their remedy? To pack another at Cleveland to nominate General FRÉMONT. But which is the more promising alternative?—an unpledged assembly called to nominate the best candidate, whoever he may be, or one which is called to defeat the nomination of a certain candidate? The friends of General FRÉMONT have as fair a chance to send delegates to the Baltimore Convention as the friends of any other candidate; and when they declare that they will have nothing to do with it, they say very frankly that, as they can not hope to control it, they will repudiate it.

If this is the spirit which animates them—if the interests of one man are dearer to them than the welfare of the country—if they are seriously resolved to rend the nominations of the Union Convention, if it should not be that of their favorite, and to bring a third candidate into the field, the inevitable consequence which may befall the country in consequence will be justly attributable to them. When the order relieving General FRÉMONT of the command of the Western Department reached him in camp near Springfield, Missouri, more than a hundred officers came to his tent, threw their swords upon the ground, and declared their intention to retire with him. "Take up your swords, gentlemen," said FRÉMONT; "remember that you are not soldiers of a cause, nor of a man." Has the General himself now ceased to be the soldier of a cause?

RELUCTANT JUSTICE.

THE Senate has at length done its duty in providing for the equal payment of the colored troops, and the full fulfillment of the promises made by authority to those already enlisted. The House ought not to delay for a day to agree to the bill. For nothing is clearer than that the policy of employing colored troops should be renounced altogether, or that we should treat them honorably. Professor PECK, of Oberlin College, who has investigated the condition of these troops on the Atlantic coast, reports that the difference of pay between them and white soldiers is rapidly demoralizing them. Chaplain CONWAY writes to the same effect. At PORT ESPERENZA, in Texas, a colored battalion of the Fourteenth Rhode Island Artillery refused to receive their pay, and declared themselves out of the service; and the sad case of Sergeant WALKER in Florida, who was shot because he would not submit to be put on the authority of the United States, is fresh in our memories, and will always be shameful for our name. And while we refuse to treat them with justice, probably the rebels massacre them like dogs. The rebel conduct is fiendish, but at least it is consistent. If men, because they are of a certain color, may justly be deprived of liberty and all the other rights of human nature, they may certainly be deprived of life at the will of their captors. Indeed, humanity, the most shocking inhumanity, are to be expected in a people who have been unfortunately bred under the slave system. But we have the right to require manliness and honor and justice of those who have been more fortunate. Shall we sacrifice the good name of our native land to the indulgence of a wretched prejudice?

"Well," says some reader, "I think they had better be paid—but what a pity that we had to call upon the Negro to do it!" Why so? Why should the Government be dearer to any one class of citizens than to another? When it is threatened why should not the call for its defense be universal? We don't think it a pity to call in the aid, as soldiers, of foreigners of every race; why is it so that native Americans of every tint should be discriminated? The result is only an evidence of the far-reaching taint of the slavery from which our troubles spring. For, except for the slavery, the hundreds black men as pariahs, it would be as natural, and as much of course, that they should fight for the Government which protected their rights in common with all others, as that Germans and Norwegians should fight together for France, or Scotchmen, Welshmen, and Yorkshiremen for England.

Of all the nations which contend with the earlier days of the war were rife none was more ludicrously silly than the exclusion, "Well, a white man can't go down this rebellion if he had better succeed." It might as wisely have been said, "If the men with pug noses, or red whiskers, or who are five feet high, or the bluest eyes, or who have mustaches, can't suppress it, it had better not be suppressed." The spirit which makes this kind of discrimination is one which entirely apprehends the character of our Government. It is not a Government of any class of men whatever, but of all the people, of every descent, complexion, or race they may be. The great object of the United States is the cause of human nature, said JAMES MADISON, speaking for the Continental Congress. And in the inaugural address of the PRESIDENT, just published by LIPPINCOTT, MR. JOHN C. HAMILTON records with emphasis the well-known sentiments of WASHINGTON: "All men have one common original: they participate in one common nature, and consequently have one common right." His son said editor adds, "He meant the whole human race, and looked to the emancipation of the blacks as part of the great sacrifice to be laid by the side of Christ upon the altar of freedom." If we had always believed and acted as the fathers of our Government believed we should have had no war. Long ago the purely arbitrary distinctions between citizens would have been destroyed. And when we fully believe our own principle, and bring the Government to conform, we shall have permanent and prosperous peace, and not before.

ART CRITICISM.

LAST week we welcomed the art criticisms of the Tribune for their sincerity and ability, however we might differ with the judgments they expressed. This week we wish to speak of the utterly unfair way in which those criticisms have been attacked. They use the plainest opinions of pictures founded upon principles plainly stated, and they are denounced as "personal injuries." The critic is insulted, if not threatened, in private speech and in published communications, for a faithful performance of his duty. But the insult is addressed to every man who discusses art quite as much as to the individual critic, and every journalist ought to take up the gage thus truculently thrown down.

The only open question in this whole matter is, whether there has been any personal attack made by the critic; a question which the most exasperated artist will not dare to answer in the affirmative. Their names are used merely as representatives of familiar things, as we say "a Titian," "a Raphael," "a Teniers." When, for instance, the critic says that the promise of MR. KENSETT is fading away in such pictures as the October AMERICAN from Lake George and the Massachusetts Coast, you may not agree with him; but it is perfectly clear that he in no more insulting MR. KENSETT than if he should say that he thought MR. FARREN had a truer eye for nature than MR. KENSETT. And even if there had been personality in the criticism, probably the account has been balanced by the petulant, and contemptuous, and, we must add, contemptible personality of the rejoinders.

But what right has the critic to write as he does? Simply the right that every man has to express his opinions. If he have insufficient knowledge—if he be merely presumptuous, shallow, and conceited, he writes himself down an ass as much and as emphatically than any one else can write him by calling him so. If you ask what right he has to have an opinion, you ask a question not worth an answer. Or, again, if you demand what he knows of pictures, the reply is, that the articles themselves answer. If they show that he knows nothing, why all the exasperation? MR. LUETZE, for instance, paints a picture of Washington Crossing the Delaware. He has thought upon his subject, he has studied and practiced his art. His picture may be assumed to be the result of long reflection and preparation. His critic has not and otherwise, because he is convinced that so it ought to be. Now, is it conceivable that, if the artist be correct in his conception and execution, the picture is work is to lose in reputation because somebody who knows nothing looks at it and says, "It is all false?" If the artist be so profoundly conscious that he should be before painting that or any picture that it is all true, are he or his friends likely to be more than amused or interested if some ignorant pronounces it unnatural in conception and extravagant in execution?

Or is nobody to express an opinion of pictures except painters themselves? The same rule must then be applied to all other arts. Only poets must criticise poetry; only musicians music. MOTLEY only may be allowed to criticise BANCROFT. BRYANT must be the sole critic of LONGFELLOW. But if any one has often listened to music in the company of musicians, or if he recalls what he may have heard painters say of each other's pictures, he can readily fancy whether criticism would be gentler if it were confined in every art to experts in that art. Are pictures made for painters or for the public? Do poets sing for poets or for the world? Why are the works of the year annually exhibited in the National Academy if it be not that their merits may be judged by the public taste? Has a man no right to be look at the present EMERSON, or prefer MCENTEE to GIFFORD, or GIFFORD to COLE, or COLE to HUBBARD, or HUBBARD to COLEMAN, or COLEMAN to any body else? Let us not too strongly condemn the spirit which has been displayed in the rejoinders to the Tribune criticisms, if it were a mortal offense in a critic to say that CHURCH is not a great painter and that FARREN is: that LAFARGE is untrue to nature and HENNESSY true.

But it is not unkind, you ask, to speak of any man as HENNESSY and DELAMARTER? Is it unkind of us to praise artists? They are denied every kind of excellence. Very well, grant that it is unpleasant; but what is the way to avoid unpleasantness? Is it to declare that gentlemen of such unblemished lives and amiable characters must necessarily paint true pictures or to show that they do not paint so? We are very sure of the answer both of the gentlemen named would give to the question. They would say that neither of them had ever made a positive claim to praise, and that, as artists, they must be judged by their works. They would say that PETER HAYNE was a kindred art—as indeed every artist always stands, at the mercy of any man who can show that their reputation is unfounded.

Let once more, we shall be asked if it is not ungenerous in any man to spoil another man's market for his wares? Here, we are told, are some young artists who club together, and hope to realize a pretty sum by the sale of their studies and pictures, and on the very eve of the sale an adverse critic, with a knowing air, in a leading paper, declaring that the pictures are unworthy the gentlemen who offer them for sale. Are gentlemen of honor, who are not very sure of their own taste, are shamed—and they refrain from buying lest they should make themselves ridiculous. In this, we are asked, not father hard upon young artists who, in any case, have no very easy path to tread? Now surely this is not on honorable question for the friends of the artists to put, since it implies that the pictures would, except for the criticism, have been sold under a misapprehension. Do the artists wish higher prices paid for their works than they are fairly worth, and how is that worth to be established but by a frank expression of opinion? Are authors also to be allowed to protest against adverse criticism, because it injures the sale of their books? If, indeed, a man paints a picture as a piece of furniture, and merely wishes to get the highest price he can for it, without regard to its intrinsic value or to the intelligence of the purchaser—counting, indeed, upon the ignorance of the latter—he must be held to prostitute his art, and be judged accordingly. But in that case the intelligent buyers have a right to protest. They may justly ask why the market should be spoiled by the high prices of poor wares. Every man who is sincerely interested in the elevation of art and the consequent refinement of society, is also interested in that the prices of pictures, so far as possible, shall have some relation to their excellence.

In fact, the whole discussion comes to this single plain point—shall there be any criticism of pictures whatever? If there may be, who shall criticise—the painters, their friends, their enemies, or the spectator? If it be allowed that the spectator may be the critic, the question of his competency can not be arbitrarily determined; it can be settled only by the criticism itself. If this assails traditions in art and traditional reputations, it is not confounded by an equally strong statement of opposing principles, but it can not be evaded by personal contempt and indignation. For it should be remembered that every man who attacks any established reputation does so at the risk of ruining himself. We all know that there has been really very little art criticism in this country at any time, and we ought to welcome heartily any effort to it, however mistaken we may believe the philosophy to be upon which it is founded. For it gives us the opportunity of knowing both what we ought not to be the true philosophy, and of establishing the works of our favorites upon clearly defined grounds. The criticisms in the Tribune are evidently the result of careful study and profound interest in art. They are personally aggressive, and evidently wholly sincere. We do not agree with them altogether; but then, on the other hand, the critic does not probably agree with us. And if there is any pointer who can not read them without indignation, we beg him humbly never to show another picture. For all the signs show that criticism as an art is beginning in this country, and "Notices of Pictures" are hereafter to be something else than a weak wash of complacent

"OUR MUTUAL FRIEND."

THIS is the title of DICKENS's new novel, the first part of which will appear in the June number of Harper's Magazine. There has been a good deal of comment upon the title, for it is assumed that the author must know that the phrase is ungrammatical and absurd, and that he has a special purpose in using it. It is hardly possible that he ambitions of fame a sanction, and one of the most unfastidious of writers, it seems that the phrase could not have escaped unchallenged if it had been a slip of the pen. Yet it is so common an error, and DICKENS is so far from being an exact or dainty writer, that there is some reason for supposing that he has made a mistake. Mutual is a word implying reciprocity. Mutual friendship is the feeling entertained by two persons each for the other. A and B are mutual friends. C is their common friend. WEBSTER says that the word mutual may be used also in addition to numbers acting in concert. But the only true standard of language is elegant contemporary use, and that condemns the phrase mutual friend as applied to a third person.

But whatever may be the dispute about the title there is likely to be very little about the story itself. The power and fertility of the author are here unsurpassed. There seems to be no exhaustion or even weariness upon his part. We know that there are readers who can not feel the old charm in his new works. But fortunately for our own enjoyment we are not of them, and we believe that he will find few among the multitude of his audience. We look for "OUR MUTUAL FRIEND" with the same eagerness that the readers of "Ivanhoe" looked for the next work by the author of "Waverley."

CAPTAIN SPEKE'S BOOK.

THIS elaborate and amply illustrated journal (just published by HARPER & BROTHERS) is the account of the solution of one of the greatest, most interesting, and longest hidden geographical problems, the source of the Nile. Whether Captain SPEKE is entitled to the credit of the theory of the rise of the Nile in the Lake Nyanza, is a question which DEASE will always dispute. But there can be no question whatever that he was the first explorer known to us who actually beheld the lake and the stream in question. His work must take its first place as a most essential and crowning chapter of African research.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—April 26. Mr. Harris introduced a joint resolution relating to making an industrial census in the several States.—The bill making an additional grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines was passed, with an amendment requiring the Hon. John Ehavenwood to be one of Lawrence to Emporia, and to carry one line to Fort Riley.—The question of appointing a Committee of Conference on the Montana disagreement was discussed, but no conclusion reached.—The bill regulating the Naptime Hour Law was taken up, and discussed by Messrs. Foster, Sumner, Wade, Hale, Fessenden, and Trumbull.

April 27. A joint resolution to fill the office of Postmaster-General when absent by reason of sickness or otherwise was passed.—The bill to prevent fraud in connection with the printing of officials of the operations of the service of the United States was passed.—The bill to authorize the sale to establish an Assay Office at Carson City in Nevada, and at Dalles City, Oregon. An amendment proposed by Mr. Nesmith, of Oregon, for establishing a Mint at Dalles City, instead of an Assay Office, was adopted, and the bill laid aside.—The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to repeal the Fugitive Slave Law, and Mr. VAN WINKLE spoke at length on the certainty of the extermination of slavery.—The House bill to provide for a National Currency was reported, with some amendments in reference to the taxation by States of capital, circulation, and business of banking associations.

April 25. The House bill to establish a bureau of military justice was passed, and to give the Judge-Advocate-General the rank of Brigadier-General with a salary of $3,000, and no other allowance. The bill was then passed.—The Army Appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1865, was taken up, and the amendments of the House Committee were agreed to. Other amendments were offered—that all the maintenance money of the regular army during the continuance of the present rebellion shall be paid to officers who shall perform the service there or may be mustered into the military service; also, that no officer shall receive more than twenty dollars per month, or other soldiers of the regular or volunteer forces more than their service; and that all moneys collected or mustered into the service as volunteers under the call of April 15, 1861, and not paid to the volunteers actually entitled thereto, be subject to draft to the State in which they volunteered, shall be paid over to the State Bounty authorized to raise the same. The bill was then passed.—April 26. The subject of the disputed election of the two Senators was taken up, and the Territorial government for Montana was taken up, and Mr. DOOLITTLE, of Wisconsin, spoke in opposition to the extension of the right of suffrage to negroes. Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon, followed in opposition. Pending the vote, replied briefly, and the Senate agreed to the request of the House for a Committee of Conference.

April 25. Mr. HALE introduced a bill to amend the act of 1855, which provides that no person shall be made an officer shall be retired under the age of sixty-two, and that no officer shall be retired on less pay than the Register forty-five years after the age of sixteen.—Mr. WILSON introduced a resolution to pay a bounty of $25,000 be appropriated for volunteers that may be received by the first day of July next.—The House bill to establish a postal money order system in regard to the extension of the right of suffrage to negroes.—Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a resolution requesting the vote, replied briefly, and the Senate agreed to the request of the House for a Committee of Conference.

April 25. Mr. HALE introduced a bill to amend the act of 1855, which provides that no person shall be made an officer shall be retired under the age of sixty-two, and that no officer shall be retired on less pay than the Register forty-five years after the age of sixteen.—Mr. WILSON introduced a resolution to pay a bounty of $25,000 be appropriated for volunteers that may be received by the first day of July next.—The House bill to establish a postal money order system in regard to the extension of the right of suffrage to negroes.—Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a resolution requesting the vote, replied briefly, and the Senate agreed to the request of the House for a Committee of Conference.

April 25. Mr. HALE introduced a bill to amend the act of 1855, which provides that no person shall be made an officer shall be retired under the age of sixty-two, and that no officer shall be retired on less pay than the Register forty-five years after the age of sixteen.—Mr. WILSON introduced a resolution to pay a bounty of $25,000 be appropriated for volunteers that may be received by the first day of July next.—The House bill to establish a postal money order system in regard to the extension of the right of suffrage to negroes.—Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a resolution requesting the vote, replied briefly, and the Senate agreed to the request of the House for a Committee of Conference.

HOUSE.—April 26. The day session was occupied in considering the Tax bill. Forty-two sections of the bill were acted upon. Several amendments were agreed to, and a verbal character.—During the evening session the bill for the better organization of an art in operation of the tax bill for reconstructing overthrown State Governments was taken up, and Messrs. Kelley and Broomall, of Pennsylvania, spoke in favor of the bill.—April 27. The House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Internal Tax bill, and acted on all the general provisions, comprising sections. Mr. WILSON moved to amend the amendment, providing that the stock of liquors on hand be taxed at the rate of one dollar per gallon. A long debate ensued on the various special duties, and to 79. An amendment was adopted including in the list of articles taxed at three per cent ad valorem and all refined coal oil upon which an excise duty is imposed, may be withdrawn from bond free of tax when the same is intended for exportation. An amendment was added providing that all tobacco, snuff, and all manufactured tobacco figures in bottles, shall pay no less or rate of duty than fifteen cents per pound.—April 28. The House resumed the bill for the construction of a ship canal to unite the Mississippi and the Northern lakes.—Mr. ELIOT reported by the Committee of Ways and Means a bill to encourage emigration to the United States.—April 29. The House resumed the Internal Tax bill, and acted upon the various sections. Amendments were adopted under which wholesale dealers are required to pay all the taxes imposed upon their sales under $50,000 a year, and $1 on each $1000 over that sum. The tax on sales was increased to five per cent. Gross sales were fixed as follows: brokers with business exceeding $50,000, $10; and $1 for each $1000 over that sum; commission merchants carrying passengers (except ferries) per $20 each; and auctioneers, auctioneers must have an office in which they are required to be kept on the premises; bowling-alleys and billiard rooms $10 for each alley or table; pedlers, commercial travelers pay $30 when doing business under $30,000, and $1 per $1000 over (except such as travel in a free carriage); coal (bituminous oil was put up from 10 to 15 cents per ton; anthracite coal, 15 cents per ton; coke, 10 cents per ton; gas companies, crude petroleum $1 per barrel; refined petroleum $1 per barrel; all other oils $1 per ton.—April 23. A bill was passed creating an additional Supervising Inspector of Steamboats for New Orleans, and Boards of Local Inspectors at Portland, Oregon, and Memphis, Tennessee.—A joint resolution was passed declaring the fourth section of the Act of March 2, 1799, empowering the United States Commissioners to hold in criminal cases and providing them with a seal.—The committee who investigated the charges against Brigadier-General Mc-Mindsort, of speculating in liquors, while in military command in the Department of Missouri, reported that McMindsort had not violated any law. Some remarks followed of a personal character between Messrs. Holman and Mc-Clurg.—The consideration of the Internal Tax bill was then resumed, and some amendments were added into a committee for that purpose.—April 25. A bill was introduced levied provisions for the collection of taxes on distilled spirits. It authorizes the commanding generals in the field to appoint provost-marshals to try persons charged with treason and other offenses, arson, burglary, rape, and violation of the laws and customs of war, and to execute them.—The Committee on the Internal Revenue bill. An amendment was adopted to increase the tax on bank notes, certificates, bonds, or other securities of the United States shall be increased to one per cent. An amendment was adopted to increase the duty at five per centum on all over six hundred dollars. The Bank stamp duty amendment was also adopted, providing that on incomes exceeding $600 and no more than $10,000, a tax of five per cent. shall be imposed; on incomes of $10,000 and not exceeding $50,000, a tax of seven and a half per cent. shall be imposed, and on incomes of over $50,000 a tax of ten per cent. shall be imposed.—The public printing bill was passed.—Messrs. Iowa, and Michigan, for railroad purposes, was passed.

THE MILITARY SITUATION.

Further details of the fighting in the Red River show them to have been among the most desperately contested of the war. On the 7th, the rebel General TAYLOR, with our cavalry advance and a body of the enemy, who were driven back seven miles, with heavy loss. The first engagement took place at Sabine Cross-Roads, between the rebel army, some 20,000 strong, under Generals KIRBY SMITH, Dick Taylor, Mouton, Greene, and Price, and a portion only of General Banks's army. Our troops, though greatly outnumbered, fought with desperate gallantry until the 9th, when the remainder of the command of General Banks's army came up, and was followed during the night by the fresh divisions of Generals A. J. Smith and Mower. At last, however, our line gave way, and slowly retired, fighting as it fell back, to Pleasant Hill, where it was joined by heavy bodies of men, guns, and material, a stand. The rebels attacked our position on the 9th, but the enemy again attacked our position at Pleasant Hill, where, during the night, General Andrew Jackson Smith had arrived with fresh troops. Skirmishing was kept up with varying success until 9 o'clock in the afternoon, when the rebels had completed their arrangements for the grand final assault. What followed is thus described by the New Orleans Era:

"About this hour (5 o'clock) General Emory's skirmish line was driven in on the right by the rebels, who appeared in large force. They soon reached the open ground, and moved on to the attack in three lines of battle. Our artillery and infantry opened upon them with terrible effect, great slaughter with grape and canister, while the enemy's artillery, being in the wood and in bad position, did scarcely any damage.

"Colonel Landram's brigade on the left was first engaged, soon followed by Dwight's and McMillan's. The fighting was terrific, and for many hours in never was surpassed for desperation. Notwithstanding the terrible havoc in their ranks, the enemy pressed fiercely on, slowly pushing the men of the Nineteenth Corps back up the hill, but not breaking their line of battle. A sudden and fresh of the rebels on the right gave them possession of the brigade's battery, and forced our line still further back.

"Now came the grand coup d'etat. The Nineteenth, by carrying at the top of the hill, suddenly filed off over the hill and passed through the lines of General Smith. They must now march back to the rebels were now in his two lines of battle, the first having been almost annihilated. General Smith remained lying on the ground back into the second line. But these two lines came on exultant and rent the air.

"The first passed over the knoll, and all hostilities of the day line of infantry and crouching forms of a brave army as over trod mother earth, pressed on. The second line grappled on their feet and the death-signal was sounded. Words can not describe the awful effect of this discharge. Seven thousand rifles and several batteries of artillery, each gun loaded to the muzzle with grape and canister, were in the immediate front and the whole centre of the rebel line was crushed down as a field of ripe wheat through which a storm has swept. It is estimated that 1000 men were buried into eternity or frightfully mangled by this one discharge.

"No time was given them to recover their good order, but Generals Smith and Mower, with the first line, moved rapidly forward, the boys of the Nineteenth joining in. The rebels fought bravely and desperately back to the line, on reaching which a large portion broke and fled, leaving their dead and wounded in the hands of the victors. Seventy-six stragglers, as we also two of the guns of Semmes's battery, have been taken from us at Carroll Parish hill, and can be seen by others belonging to the rebel line, one of which was captured by Colonel Landram. Besides the guns, a number of caissons and battery flag was kept up for three miles, when our men returned to the field of battle.

"And the world this fearful and bloody struggle for the control of Western Louisiana.

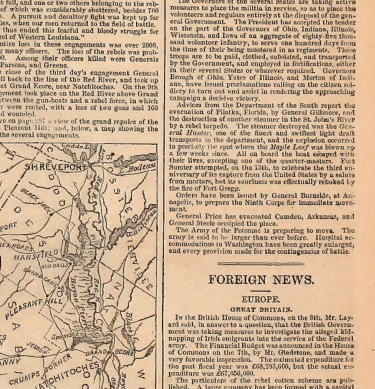
"The entire loss in the engagements was over 2000, including many officers. The loss of the rebels was probably 3000. Among the officers killed were Generals Morton, Parsons, and Greene.

"The fighting on the third engagement General Banks fell back to the line of the Red River, and took up a position on the high bluffs and bastions. On the 9th an engagement took place on the Red River above Grand Ecore, between the gun-boats and a rebel force, in which the latter were repulsed, with the loss of two guns and the destruction of another steamer in the St. John's River by the rebels. The most important disaster was the General Hunter, one of the finest and swiftest light draft transports in the department, and had on exploring expedition in precisely the spot where the Maple Leaf was blown up by a torpedo. The Hunter had on board 300 negroes with their lives, excepting one of the quarter-masters. Yet Banks' situation was by no means desperate, and the first anniversary of its capture from the United States by a rebels from morning, when the southern army was defeated by the fire of Fort Gregg.

Order have been issued by General Burnside, at Annapolis, to prepare the Ninth Corps for immediate movements.

General Price has evacuated Camden, Arkansas, and General Steele occupied the place.

The Army of the Potomac is preparing to move. The army is still in a much larger than ever therefore. Ample accommodation in Washington have been greatly enlarged, and every provision made for the contingencies of battle.



Disaster has befallen our arms in North Carolina. On the 17th a force of from ten to fifteen thousand rebels attacked Plymouth, and, after a severe engagement, drove upon its defences. Fort Gray, about one mile from the town, was captured, and turned upon the Albemarle which the town was penetrated by the rebels. In each instance, however, the rebels were driven back with considerable loss. Fort Gray was the front of the fighting, and did effective work. Four of the rebel gunboats came up the river and ran close to the fortifications in the Roanoke River, six miles from the town, and opened fire. The Albemarle was discovered, and was attacked by the gunboats. She fought with the utmost gallantry until fired under the bow of the Miami. Lieutenant-Commander Flusser, who was on board the Albemarle, then ran her down and destroyed her, which struck the ram, rebounding, and killed him. The rebels were thereupon compelling the Miami. The ram then attacked the Southfield, and she sank in five minutes. The Miami was also sunk. On the 18th the fight was renewed, and the rebels were driven back to the town. Fort Gray, about eight feet of water, and carries only two guns. The rebels have been taken from us at Carroll Parish hill, and can be seen by others belonging to the rebel line, one of which was captured by Colonel Landram. Besides the guns, a number of caissons and battery flag was kept up for three miles, when our men returned to the field of battle.

"And the world this fearful and bloody struggle for the control of Western Louisiana.

"The entire loss in the engagements was over 2000, including many officers. The loss of the rebels was probably 3000. Among the officers killed were Generals Morton, Parsons, and Greene.

"The fighting on the third engagement General Banks fell back to the line of the Red River, and took up a position on the high bluffs and bastions. On the 9th an engagement took place on the Red River above Grand Ecore, between the gun-boats and a rebel force, in which the latter were repulsed, with the loss of two guns and the destruction of another steamer in the St. John's River by the rebels. The most important disaster was the General Hunter, one of the finest and swiftest light draft transports in the department, and had on exploring expedition in precisely the spot where the Maple Leaf was blown up by a torpedo. The Hunter had on board 300 negroes with their lives, excepting one of the quarter-masters. Yet Banks' situation was by no means desperate, and the first anniversary of its capture from the United States by a rebels from morning, when the southern army was defeated by the fire of Fort Gregg.

Order have been issued by General Burnside, at Annapolis, to prepare the Ninth Corps for immediate movements.

General Price has evacuated Camden, Arkansas, and General Steele occupied the place.

The Army of the Potomac is preparing to move. The army is still in a much larger than ever therefore. Ample accommodation in Washington have been greatly enlarged, and every provision made for the contingencies of battle.

FOREIGN NEWS.

EUROPE.

DEPOSE MEXICO.

In the British House of Commons, on the 8th, Mr. Layard called, in answer to a question, that the Spanish Government was taking steps to investigate the alleged kidnapping of Irish emigrants into the service of the Mexican Government. Mr. Layard also made a statement in the House of Commons on the 7th, of Mr. Gladstone, and made a very favorable impression. The estimated expenditure for the past fiscal year was £83,000, but the actual expenditure was £67,000,000.

The steamship of the rebel confederate States, Alabama, a large company has been formed with a capital of £1,000,000, to construct steamers and run the blockade, for the purpose of bringing out cotton to relieve the rebel loan. Collins's Atlantic line is also urged in the matter.

THE DANISH WAR.

The Danish war is vigorously prosecuted by the Germans. On the 18th the Prussians opened a heavy bombardment on Duppel and Sonderburg, and it is stated that in the latter place 30 women and children were killed, they not having had notice to leave. The German steamer Bradenburg has arrived at Quebec from Danish mine-of-war. The Conference would meet in London on the 19th.

MEXICO.

Matamores letters assure the flight from Monterey of Governor Vidaurri, after he had declared his hostility to the Imperialists. He had issued a decree by which he made himself against any force the latter might send to attack him. The decree was dated May 2, and all the forces he could muster, some time before the soldiers of the Liberal army had reached the Rio Grande. He fled west to the border, being hot head of at Morelia. The Constitutionalists entered Monterey on April 30. Vidaurri is reported to have defeated a French force of 600 men at Jaujuapan, only eighty of the enemy escaping.

ARMY AND NAVY ITEMS.

THE Secretary of War has ordered that the new regiments of cavalry authorized by the present session of Congress shall be raised up to the legal standard of 1738 officers and men, within the period of six months from the date of the act by which they are credited. If regiments are not full on or before the 1st of May, 1864, the deficiency will be made up by draft until ordinary or infantry organizations. The order will not postpone the draft, but will only be suspended prior to which the draft will be declared from the quotas for draft.

The following order of General Grant having arisen from the army ride it of over twenty-eight hundred supernumeraries.

The President has assigned Major-General BRAIN to the command of the detachments (M'Clernand's Army Corps, now in the Department of the Mississippi.

Lieutenant-Commander D. HAVEN has been ordered to command of the Dictator.

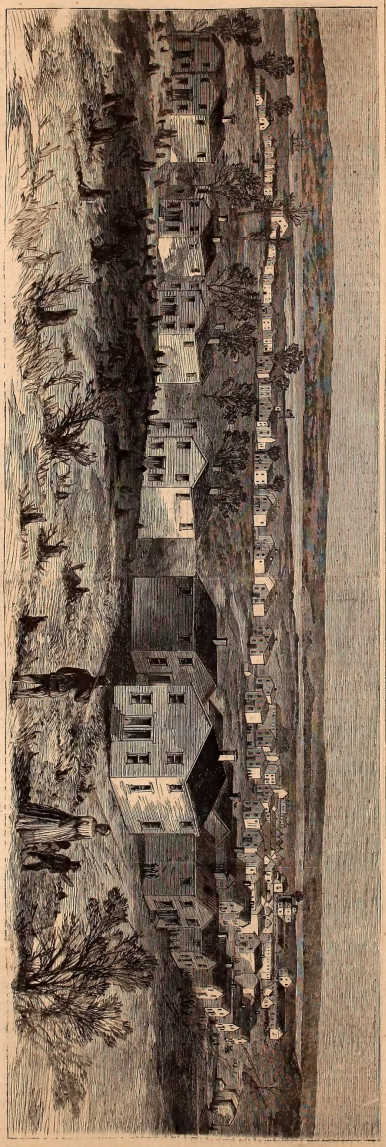
The Petersburg Express reports that the First Auditor of the rebel Treasury has been ordered to remove his bureau from Richmond to Montgomery, Alabama.

General Fremont has applied for an active command in the field.

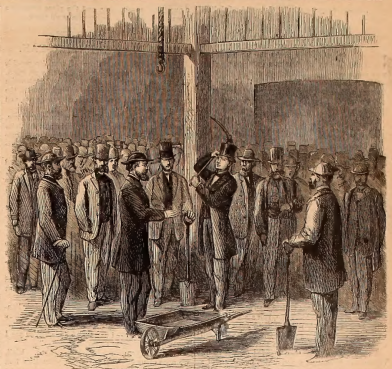
Governor PARKER, of New Jersey, has received instructions from the War Department to raise one regiment of twelve batteries of heavy artillery by the 15th of May, 1864, for the defence of Washington.

Colonel HAY, late Provost Marshal of Baltimore, and General Fremont, has been sentenced by one months in one year in the Albany Penitentiary.

NEGROES ESCAPING OUT OF SLAVERY.—SKETCHED BY A. R. WARD.—[SEE PAGE 294.]



FREEDMEN'S VILLAGE, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA.—[See Page 296.]



BREAKING GROUND.

THE GREAT LAKE TUNNEL AT CHICAGO.

ONE of the greatest works of the kind ever undertaken has just been commenced in the city of Chicago, under the auspices of the authorities, by Messrs. DULL & GOWAN, contractors; namely, the construction of a Tunnel under Lake Michigan, two miles in length, by which to supply the city with pure and wholesome water. Our correspondent gives us the following account of the enterprise:

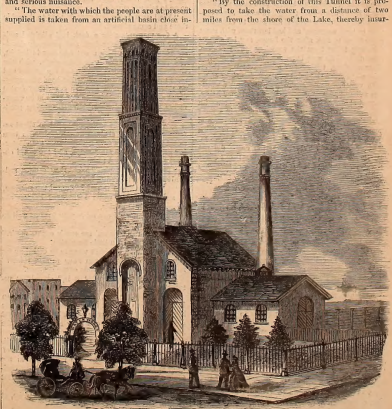
"Chicago is situated on a low and nearly level prairie, being but a few feet above the level of the Lake, so that even the earliest settlers found wells to be impracticable, from the fact that the surface water could not be avoided, while the river is nothing but a sluggish canal, the current of which sways up or down stream, as the wind outside the harbor happens to send the waters of the Lake inshore or out. A great deal of the sewerage of the city is also discharged into the river, together with all the refuse of the slaughter-houses and distilleries, so that it has become a vast and serious nuisance.

"The water with which the people are at present supplied is taken from an artificial basin close inshore, about three-fourths of a mile north of the mouth of the river, and by means of immense pumps, which are worked by two engines of two and five hundred horse-power.

"When the wind prevails from the south or southwest the current of the river setting outward is carried up the shore and is more or less deposited in the basin, causing the water to partake largely of the disagreeable flavor arising from a combination of ingredients neither agreeable to the taste nor smell, and at times rendering it altogether unfit for use.

"By the construction of this Tunnel it is proposed to take the water from a distance of two miles from the shore of the Lake, thereby intur-

IN TRANSIT.



WATER-WORKS BUILDING.

ing a constant supply wholly clear and unadulterated."

The views we present in this Number show the "Water-Works Building," which contains the machinery used in supplying water as at present obtained; "Breaking Ground for the Tunnel;" and the Iron Cylinders which form a lining to the shaft now being sunk.

We may hereafter give a sectional view of the Tunnel, together with plan of construction and other matters of general interest connected with it.

UNION SCOUTS IN LOUISIANA.

We give on our first page a sketch illustrating an interesting feature of the war in Louisiana. Among the most useful auxiliaries of General BANKS, in the operations in that State, is a band of native Scouts, led by Captain DUDLEY, who, knowing the country and accustomed to danger, penetrate every where in search of information. Many of these scouts are desperate men, who have suffered all manner of hardships at the hands of the enemy, and who, on this account, lose no opportunity to inflict the heaviest punishment on those who have driven them to the shelter of the swamps and forests. Captain DUDLEY is described as a slight, wiry man, about forty-five years old, with a small eye which is all black, and a face which is dark as full of cunning. A correspondent says of him: "He told me that he had been a physician in the Calcasieu River; that he avoided the conscription and had been living a wandering life for three years; that he had been back and forth from the Rio Grande to Mobile, had always escaped wounds, and I think had not been even shot at. One of his men told me that one night he followed a party of rebel bushwhackers to their camp, where till they were asleep, then crawled among them, determined to capture a gun which he had taken a liking to. One of the party waked, and DUDLEY lay down quietly among them until his hunter fell asleep, when he helped himself to the gun, and 'gently passed away.'"

NEGROES ESCAPING OUT OF SLAVERY.

We present on page 292 another view of one of the principal features of the war; namely, the escape of negroes, at all points within the rebel lines, from the tyranny of their bondage. Mr. A. R. WARD, who furnishes the sketch, sends the following account of a recent exodus during a Federal reconnoissance into the enemy's territory. The description will apply exactly to other movements of a like character in other parts of the field: "Coming in from the reconnoissance many negroes joined us. As it was not possible, on account of the muddy roads, for them to keep up with the horsemen, they were allowed to ride the spare and exhausted horses—many of them, however, coming to us on their natural horses. One party fell into the line of march with an old family coach, said to contain eighteen, principally pickaninnies. This was preceded by an old fellow with a torch, carrying a sooty 'a-straddle' behind him. All the women rode this way, side-saddles not having been provided by the ambitious owner. Sometimes three would mount upon one horse, and in one instance a father, mother, and two little children rode one animal. One colored fellow, on making out that the column was of Union troops, at once saddled his masters' horse, mounted, and taking another 'boy' up behind him, waved his handkerchief to the rest of the train, and mostly girls. 'Good-by, folks!' said he: 'I'se gwine to follow the Yankees.' He was asked how he would leave so comfortable a place. Scratching his head, and waving his hand toward his white-headed master, he answered, 'They's a kind o' poor class of people about here; don't have enough to eat.' Some others told us that the 'Mas'r' had gone to Charlottesville to 'raise a nigger,' and had left them strict injunctions to look after the house, and let no one take any thing from the premises. The spokesman insisted that he was busy hauling out things for other estables, telling the soldiers to help themselves—'For,' he added, 'we are gwine right along with yer, fer I'm free!' Many joined without a word; one fellow had been waiting for us for some hours. A party plowing in a field regarded the column with indifference for some time, when suddenly a light broke upon one: 'Why, boys, it's de Yanks!' And the horses were taken from the plow in quick time, the negroes mounting them and falling in. They all got in safely; even the coach did not break down. It reached the lines; but the quirky ones suffered horribly from fear of recapture several times."

FREEDMAN'S VILLAGE, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA.

We give on page 296 a view of the FREEDMAN'S VILLAGE, situated on Arlington Heights, Virginia, by the Government. The village is to be a large and extensive collection of frame-houses, erected especially for the use of such contrabands as failing to provide for themselves, become a burden to the Government. The village is surrounded by farmland, which negroes cultivate for their own benefit. To Colonel ELIAS M. GREENE is due the principal credit of thus assisting the negroes to help themselves.

All the smartest and strongest among the released slaves find employment as servants of different kinds—barbers, teamsters, etc. But there is still a number who fail to get employment, and these Colonel GREENE has tried to make self-supporting on the Government lands, and so far with considerable success.

The village is quite lively, having a large number of children in it. For these there is a school-house; there is, besides, a "home" for the aged, a hospital, church, tailor and other work-shops, and other public buildings. The principal street is over a quarter of a mile long, and the place presents a clean and prosperous appearance at all times.

THE DEVIL'S FRYING-PAN.

THE United States sloop of war Dragon-Fly swung lightly to her anchor in the soft west wind, and the officers and men of the larboard-watch lounged lily about the decks or slept beneath the bulwarks dreaming of their Northern homes and waiting sweet-hearts.

Astern stretched broad leagues of moonlit waters, ahead gleamed among his countless islands the stately form of Adamska, and close aboard was Little St. Simon's Island, while a dark cloud upon the horizon showed where Sapelo lay.

"Well, Mr. Fewkick," said Lieutenant Fewkick, "yawned Lieutenant Benton, to Dr. Fewkick the surgeon, who had come on deck to enjoy the beauty of the night, and now stood leaning against the taffrail close beside the young officer.

"Rather so. But these long days are grand for study. Why don't you get yourself up in an 'elegy,' Benton, and astonish our fair friends in Boston by your erudition when we return?"

"Hum. A fellow that has seen service as I have doesn't need any erudition to recommend him to the fair sex nowadays, Doctor," responded the Lieutenant, sulkily twisting his little mustache.

"True. I forgot that." And the surgeon pulled away at his cheroot with a merry twinkle in his dark eyes.

"Have you ever been seriously wounded, Benton?" asked he, carelessly, after a moment or two of silence.

"Why, no, I can't say that I have. You see I never was actually in action but once—"

"But then you might have been. I see. Well, we none of us can improve the opportunities that are not given to us."

Lieutenant Benton, with a disagreeable consciousness of being very young and inexperienced, left off pulling his mustache, walked up the quarter-deck, casting a scrutinizing glance aloft, and sternly bidding the look-out man to "mind his eye."

The seaman thus exhorted suddenly restored his attention from the stars to which he was essential, at rather maritime, and immediately shouted,

"Boat ahoy!"

"There it is," remarked the surgeon, as Benton sprang to the side and looked over, and pointed to a small black object slowly approaching the sloop on the broad wake of the moonlight.

"Dug-out ahoy!" he might have hailed, "remarked the officer, forgetting his momentary annoyance. "It will be a contraband, I suppose."

"Running the blockade. Now is the Dragon-Fly's chance for distinguishing herself."

"It would be a fatal chance to come off to compare notes on the healing art with you, Doctor."

"My most humble apologies for the pencil of your mustache, Lieutenant," laughed the surgeon.

"Bother!" ejaculated the young man, and leaned further over the rail to scrutinize the clumsy little craft now within hail of the sloop.

"It's a boy—no it's a dwarf—or a monkey! What is it, Doctor?"

"One of Count Monbodo's humans in an early stage of the transformation from baboon to man, I should say."

"Well, here he is. Hallo there! Range alongside and give me your name and business."

The dug-out, after many wayward attempts, placed in the required position; and a voice from the lumpish heap of clothes, arms, legs, and closecropped wool, answered,

"Lor, mas', tain't noffin but me!"

"And who are you, and what do you want?"

"I's Ban, mas'r, dat's short for Caliban, an' I's come to tell yer sumfin."

"Well, Ban, make fast your dug-out to the cable there and come aboard."

A few moments after a dark ball alighted suddenly upon the quarter-deck and, unfolding itself, coped into a human form about four feet in height, and nearly as much in shoulder-girth, with the shortest and crookedest of legs, and the longest and most muscular of arms. A bullet-head surmounted this singular frame, and the crisp wool curled about a face incredible as to age, ugly in its lineaments, and expressive of mirth and cunning, good-nature and violent passions.

The young lieutenant gazed in silent astonishment at this strange figure, and he in turn cast his large eyes over the ship, evidently footing a group of sailors amid-ships, and the novel objects that surrounded him.

"Do you speak any English?" asked the stranger, suddenly, his eyes reverting to the lieutenant.

"Lord, Sirs! can it talk?" quoted the surgeon, in an under-tone, while Lieutenant Benton answered, good-naturedly,

"No, Ban, but I can serve your turn as well as if I were. What is it?"

"Reck'n I'll wait an' see mas'r cap'n, mas'r," returned Ban, after a little hesitation.

"The old man would have me to be called up for any thing this creature can have to say, think?" inquired the Lieutenant aside of the surgeon.

"That depends on what it is," concisely returned the surgeon.

"I'll go up to him, Doctor. You're older than I, and perhaps he will be more willing to confide his secret sorrows to your ear, if indeed my first guess about the right one after all, and he is the fetich man."

"We will see." And the Doctor bidding Caliban follow him, led the way to a secluded part of the deck, where he placed the negro full in the light of the waning moon, and stood looking curiously down at him from the altitude of his six feet two inches.

"Now do you come from, Ban?" asked he, indulgently.

"De Debbil's Fryin'-Pan, mas'r."

"And a very fine specimen of his cookery you are," mentally ejaculated the Doctor, but the only audible response was a wondering repetition of the name.

"The Devil's Frying-Pan?"

"Yis, mas'r, dats what we lib."

"Who lives there besides you?"

"Dad an' mam, an' lots o' pickaninnies."

"And how did you get here?"

"In de dug-out, mas'r."

"I know. But where is the Devil's Frying-Pan? and how far from here?"

"Right up in de Sount, mas'r, 'bout two mile from dis, I reckon."

"Is it an island?"

"Yis, mas'r."

"And who gave it that name?"

"Donno, mas'r, I's sure. Reckon it allus had it."

"And who named you Caliban?"

"Oh, mas'r! my mammy, she brung up on de ole plantation, an' daddy he free nigger. So he bought mammy an' me, an' de rest of de young uns has come along since."

"And your mother brought your mother and you to the Devil's Frying-Pan to live?"

"Yis, mas'r. It don't b'long to no one in 'ticlar, an' we jis like it, too."

"And how old are you, Caliban?"

"Donno, mas'r. Didn' nebber ask."

"And how did you get here and you five? How do you earn money, I mean?"

"We ketches fish, mas'r, an' 'sters, an' lobsters, an' we sells 'em to de truck in de gyrdin, an' we no wants money we totes a load o' fish an' sarce up to town an' trades it off. Den I fiddles for de dancin' sometimes, an' dats 'bout all."

"You fiddle?"

"Yis, mas'r."

"Well now, Ban, what did you come here for to-night? You had better tell me, and if I judge it worth while, perhaps I may persuade the Captain to see you. He is asleep now, and we don't like to disturb him without necessity."

Ban, in whom the surgeon's magnificent proportions had inspired a much greater degree of reverence than he was inclined to accord to the juvenile Lieutenant, drew confidentially close to his side, before he replied,

"Yis, mas'r, I tell you all but it. Dis yer ship am not to catch all dem dat tries to go in an' out dis yer Sount, ain't she?"

"All that belong to the rebels, or are trying to get to their friends, I suppose."

"Cause dere's a big schooner in here, hidin' away 'mongst de islan's, all landed down wid cotton, an' she's gwine to start out some days, for all de dem Yankees kin do to hender 'em."

"What will they sail?" asked the surgeon, hastily.

"Jes' arter moonset 'morrer night. Jes 'bout dis time."

"How do you know?"

"De sailors an' some ob de gen'lemen dat's gwine passenger comes ashore dis arternoon to look roun' at de Debbil's Fryin'-Pan, cause its kind o' curus dere, an' I heerd 'em talk. Den dey tole dad to 'scite de Yankees' chance o' fish an' git some stews or lobsters to-morrer, an' mam's gwine to cook a supper for 'em, an' I tole 'em I could fit 'em a heap better, an' I mind fer a dance. Dey liked dat tip-top, an' 'greed to come jes' arter sundown, an' den I heerd 'em say dey couldn' sail till 'bout two o'clock in de mornin'."

"And they are to be at your house after sunset?"

"Yis, mas'r. Dey 'fected dat ob de Yankees wanted fer ter kitch 'em all, dere'd be a fustrate chance, an' maybe mas'r Cap'n 'd gib a pore nigger suffin fer de news."

"And what do you think the Captain, or whichever of us got hold of you first, would give you if you let us know? Do you want us to shoot you, just as you now offer to sell them to us?" demanded Fewkick, sternly, as he fixed his penetrating eyes upon the negro's face.

"Spec's you'd shoot me jes' like dog. Save nun right too," returned Ban emphatically, and with a sudden flashing change of voice and eye that set at rest the momentary suspicion in the keen mind of his examiner.

"You are right. Whatever happened to me, your own life would be the prize of treachery. Remember that, Ban, and don't draw back even now if you are not sure of yourself."

"I wish I was as sure ob ten dollars as I is ob dere ole wish to be rewarded Ban, hastily.

"Very well. I will ask Lieutenant Benton to report your errand to the Captain. I suppose you want to return to your dug-out?"

"Lordy, yis, mas'r. Ef de folks aboard de Sword-Fish sights de ole dug-out, an' 'spects whar she's bin, it's all up. Dey 'spects me, an' dey'll shoot me too, mas'r."

"Very well. Stay just here till you are called."

The visit of the dwarf was reported to the Captain, and Caliban was soon summoned to the cabin to repeat his story there. He did with the utmost readiness, unshaken by the somewhat severe cross-examination of the astute commander.

The result was the immediate under charge of the steward to refresh himself, and a hasty council was held as to the best manner of using his information.

It was finally decided that two boats' crews under charge of the two Lieutenants should, early in the afternoon, proceed to the Island at the Devil's Frying-Pan, surround the house and secure the merry-makers, and then proceed to capture the schooner, she not being thought safe to venture on the sloop in the intricate channels and dangerous reefs of that portion of the Sound.

Dr. Fewkick volunteered to accompany his young friend, Lieutenant Benton, and his powerful assistance was gratefully accepted.

The next question was of a guide. It was obvious that the absence of Caliban after his engagement as musician would cause suspicion in the minds of the guests, and might defeat the whole plan, and yet no one on board the Dragon-Fly could tell the Lieutenants in charge of the boats of the Devil's Frying-Pan or of the contraband schooner.

Under these circumstances Ban was recalled to the council, and the difficulty stated.

"Twon't nebber do for dis chile to be mongst de musicianers," said he, thoughtfully, "or dad 'll hear. But Nep 'd do fus-rate. He knows de chan'l an' all jes' same's I do. I'll fetch yo Nep."

"Who is Nep?" demanded the Captain, cautiously.

"He one o' mammy's young uns. He smart chile, Nep do."

"How old is he?"

"Lord, mas'r, we don' none on us know nothin 'bout dat. We 'ys grows same as de grass, nebber mindin' when we begun. Nep he good big boy."

"Well, you may bring him off, and we will see what we think of him. When will you be here?"

"Ain't got time to go home an' back 'fore day, nohow," responded Ban. "Nep have his dug-out roun' back side o' de Fan, an' jes' paddle off easy arter dey gits dere. Den he tell mas'r cap'n mammy an' me, an' de rest of de young uns has come along since."

"And whether

low ridge of naked rocks, while a long reef of the same extended straight out into the Sound, whose waters broke over it in a loud reiteration of angry menace.

No appearance of life or even vegetation was visible, and the first lieutenant demanded, in an irresolute whisper,

"Is dis the place?"

"Yis, mas'r. Dis de Fryin-Pan, and dats de handle," said Nep, pointing to the low reef, over which and a small intervening island the upper part of the masts and rigging of a large topsail schooner were dimly visible.

"And how do you get ashore?"

"Jis in here, mas'r," and, under Nep's directions, the boats were laid close inshore, at a spot where a break in the natural fortifications of the little island afforded access to its interior.

With as much expedition and as little noise as possible, the two boats' crews, well armed and full of eager anticipation, were now landed upon the narrow beach, the boats anchored off, under charge of a small guard, and the party, numbering twenty stout fellows besides the officers, proceeded noiselessly inland, still under guidance of Nep.

Passing through the rocky gap they found themselves in a large level area, comprising perhaps a dozen acres, divided into field and pasturage, with a somewhat neglected garden-patch surrounding a cabin of considerable extent, from whose low windows streamed a ruddy light, while the shrill sound of a violin, mingled with roars of laughter, gave evidence that the inmates of the Devil's Frying-Pan were in a very jovial mood.

"Stop here, mas'r, while I go an' peek roun' a little bit," suggested Nep, and the party were accordingly halted while he crept softly up, peered through the windows for a moment, and then noiselessly returned.

"All right, mas'r," whispered he in a gleeful tone. "Dey's hard at it, singin', an' dancin', an' drinkin' like de berry de Nick. De feller dey eat to watch roun' de house has gone t'sleep t'likker, an' he's settin' in de doorway wid he gun on de floor side oh him. An' Bas he fiddlin' away fit to t'ar de ole fiddle to bits, an' rollin' he eyes dis way an' dat lookin' arter de comp'ny he axed to de breakdown for hisself."

"If she don't pass long to look, then," Forward man, and remember no nice till the word is given."

With stealthy tread the party approached the house and surrounded it. Dr. Fenwick, foremost of the line, paused at the same window through which Nep had reconnoitred the interior, and cautiously peeped in.

It was a large low room occupying nearly the whole area of the cabin, and generally used by the numerous family as kitchen, parlor, and hall. Now, however, it had been cleared of much of its usual disorder, including the countless cribs of the youngsters, having been packed into the loft, and with terrific threats of what should befall them in case of their appearance visible, were now engaging themselves with an airy view of the festivities below through the chinks in the floor.

In the centre of the room stood a table covered with the remnants of a savory supper, prepared in old Sally's highest style of art, and around it were seated twelve blacks, smoking, drinking, and wrestling with much amusement the exertion of two of their comrades, who had undertaken to give the company a specimen of the genuine Spanish fandango.

None of the negroes were visible except Bas, who, perched upon the top of a heavy bureau or chests of drawers, with his stunted legs coiled beneath him, and his long arms writhing alternately in the vehemence of his exertions, was dragging from the bowels of a battered old violin a perfect storm of sound, with no particular reference to either melody or harmony, but very expressive of his own condition of nervous excitement, ever since the moment when the twinkling eyes had encountered those of his brother peering in at the window.

The dancers had barely had time to master their delight when the voice of the first lieutenant shouted, clearly,

"Now, lads!"

And through the opposite door rushed a crowd of blue jackets, overpowering the sentry before he could even unsling his musket, and grappling fiercely with the revelers, who, although taken by surprise, drew their revolvers and knives in an instant, and were ready for resistance.

The surgeon applying his shoulder to the frail sash, burst it in, and throwing himself through the aperture, had an irresistible grasp upon the collar of a stout fellow in the uniform of a naval commander, and ordered him to yield himself prisoner. The Captain, who had just aimed his revolver at the burly head of Lieutenant Benton on the opposite side of the room, drew the trigger, but missed his mark, and with a furious oath turned upon his new antagonist, drawing a formidable bowie-knife, and thrusting savagely at him.

Seizing the uplifted wrist in his left hand, the Doctor suddenly shifted his right from the collar to the waist of his antagonist, and tripping him at the same instant, brought him heavily to the floor, disarmed him, and bound his arms behind his back with a belt of rope snatched from the surgeon's ready pocket.

"You're safe, my fine fellow," muttered the victor, coolly, as he rose to his feet and looked about for another antagonist. In a corner he saw little Benton grappling with a muscular rebel, whose brawn and muscle were evidently an overmatch for the stripling strength of the Lieutenant, even backed as it was by an indomitable amount of pluck. He had lost their weapons, and the rebel (who, dressed in plain clothes, gave no indication of his rank) had succeeded in throwing his antagonist, and with one knee upon his chest, and one hand fiercely griping his throat, was at the moment the Doctor's eye fell upon him, searching after his knife.

Fenwick sprung across the room, but, slipping on a pool of blood, fell forward: and although he recovered himself almost immediately, the instant thus gained sufficed for the stalwart rebel to reach his weapon and raise it, with a fearful oath, over the heart of his prostrate victim. At this moment Fenwick, recovering his feet, threw himself upon the unfortunate man; but, although he diverted, he was too late to arrest the blow, and it fell, inflicting a long flesh wound upon the cheek and shoulder of the almost insensible lad.

"Coward!" shouted Dr. Fenwick, roused for the first time from his usual phlegmatic calm at seeing the blood of his young favorite, and wrenching the knife from the hand of the astonished rebel, he was about to inflict summary vengeance, when Bas, springing like a cat from the perch where he had crouched throughout the fray, shouting and screaming with all his might, alighted full upon the head of the Lieutenant's assailant, and bore him heavily to the ground.

"Now, Bas's Doctor! Pitch in wid de knife. Ban hole him stiddy for 'e."

"Hold hard, then, Ban." But much to the negro's disappointment, the Doctor, instead of the knife, merely armed himself with another bit of rope, of which it may be as well to confess he had prepared a small private stock, and the party then proceeded to bind his second captive as securely as the first.

This done, and the fight being now well-nigh over, the surgeon turned his attention to the wounded Lieutenant, and was relieved at finding his wound far from serious.

"There, my boy," said he, after rapidly dressing it, with the help of his pocket-case of instruments, "that will do for the present. I'll defy it, if it smarts a little for a few days, console yourself by remembering how much better an honorable scar is than the stiffest of oldgers."

The brave young fellow smiled gayly, in spite of the stinging pain of his wound, and was beginning to declare his determination to be remaining the party in the attack upon the schooner, when his lips suddenly turned white, his eyes rolled wildly, and he fell back insensible in Bas's arms.

"Poor lad! poor, brave lad!" murmured the grim surgeon in woman-soft tones. "It is his first engagement, too," and he gently drew pillows and coverings, and make him comfortable here till somebody could attend to him. Drayon-Fly. Any other wounds to attend to?"

There were a few, but none very serious. The contest had been so fierce, and the fight while it had been more of a hand-to-hand struggle than a fight, and few of the combatants had found time for more than one blow before the fray terminated, and overtaken rebels had yielded themselves prisoners. These, being carefully bound, were now secured in the vicinity to await the event of the attack on the schooner.

The surgeon's arrangements for the wounded Lieutenant were approved by the officer in command of the party, who, moreover, stimulated Bas to additional exertion by promises and threats, which the surgeon, with more tact, had omitted to employ.

"Mas'r Doctor, I wants to peek a tilly word to you dis, I whispered Bas confidentially, as the party were about to leave the cabin.

"Speak quickly, then, as we go down to the boat. There is no time to spare."

"Mas'r Doctor, dere's a gal in dah 'long o' my mammy dat's wantin' to git Norf powerful bad. Ef she's we gone to fix it?"

"A girl! What girl?"

"Name's Lucy. She 'mos' white, an' she mighty pooty; do you eye don't look at her. To be pooty to stay roun' dere pats, mas'r, less she one o' dem ar creed gals dat don' keer wot dey does, an' ain't one o' dem sort, mas'r. She mighty good, an' so she run'd away from her ole mas'r, an' dah an' she fetch her down here las' week. But she set on gwine Norf."

"She is nearly white, you pretty, and has run away from her master because she wants to be virtuous?" asked the Doctor.

"Yis, mas'r, dem's um."

"Well, she must be helped. But she had better cut off her hair, pretty though it may be, and slip on a suit of Nep's clothes. Pretty young girls, especially if they are not white, are somewhat out of place in a mas-of-war. Let her come off with you when you bring Lieutenant Benton in the morrow morning, and I will see what can be done."

They had now reached the strip of beach, and Bas was placed in charge of Nep in the act to guide the lieutenant in avoiding numerous rocks and shoals, rendering the vicinity of the Devil's Frying-Pan a very dangerous one to the uninitiated mariner.

The drowsy watch on board the schooner had scarcely recognized the approach of the boats as the two boats rapidly approached when they were alongside, and the crews swarming up the sides. Taken entirely by surprise, and without any order or discipline, the rebel crew made but slight resistance, and the schooner was captured and its astonished inmates secured before they had time for any of them had fully understood their position.

The boats were next dispatched to the Devil's Frying-Pan for the prisoners on the island, and no sooner were they aboard than sail was made upon the schooner for the Navy Yard, consenting to serve his new masters as faithfully as he had served his old under temptation of a handsome reward in money, and a berth aboard the fleet. And so well did he perform his task that, when the sun next morning shot his first rays across the blue Atlantic, they gleamed with a glorious welcome on the white sails and brilliant bulwarks of a large top-sail schooner anchored under the guns of the jubilant fleet at the Navy Yard.

Not long after sunrise the clumsy old dug-out appeared creeping slowly across the sunny Sound, and the temporary approach was found to contain Ban, the Lieutenant, already convalescent, and a smart-looking lad of quadroon caste, with great shadowy eyes and cheeks, where the color came and went each time that any body looked at him.

The party were the three aboard than Bas drew the Doctor aside.

"Mas'r," asked he, anxiously, "what dey gwine to do wid de prize—dem ar Reb?"

"Send her to New York, Bas, under a prize-master and crew."

"An' wy couldn' dis yer boy—Tom's his name, mas'r—why couldn' he an' me go long wid 'em?"

"I'm can, I suppose. But why are you going, Ban; your family are all free, why do you go North?"

"Now, mas'r, dat am powerful hard question for to answer; but I's tell ye honest, an' then yer kin laugh ef yer's minded. De truf is, mas'r, dat de white can't help it."

"Well, Ban?"

"Mas'r, isn't she powerful harnsum?"

"What, this boy Tom?"

"Hi, hi! mas'r," chuckled the negro, nervously. "Dey don' pull de wool ober you eyes berry easy. Well now, Ban, let's hab a picter?"

"She is very handsome certainly," assented the Doctor, wondering more and more what all this should come to.

"Well, mas'r, dough Is dat ugly dat I nebber dare to look down in de water wen it still, I's got eyes, an' I knows dat Livy mighty nice gal to look at, an' got awful pooty ways too, an' de sof'est leetle voice dat ebber you hear, mas'r. Dey don' 'spect, and here Ban sighed deeply, "dat dis pooty leetle gal gwine to look at a poor ugly creter like dis yer, dough mos' anybody good an' kin to marry one dat she nebber showed she t'ought Ban look any dif'ent from Nep, fac' she allus seemed 'e like Bas de best, an' 'e, Bas, like she. Edder she wuzzunnabber she goes, trew de worl', an' take keer ob her, an' work for her all de time, an one do de harm, an' den ef she take up wid some good feller by-an-by, wy Ban will be de fas' to say, 'All right.'"

"Poor fellow!" said the Doctor, softly, his dark eyes shining as he looked down upon the misshapen form that had so unexpectedly developed a heart romantic and devoted as that of a poet.

"Boat ahoy!" hailed the look-out, and the Doctor turned to see Nep's agile form suddenly appear over the rail. In a moment he doffed his tarn hat to the Captain upon the quarter-deck, but his eyes eagerly ranged forward until they fell upon the form of the disguised negress, when he and the Doctor saw with a real pang of grief and dismay that as Livy met this gaze her eyes drooped meekly, and she blushed intensely.

"Poor Ban!" murmured the Doctor again, and went aft to Nep to learn how his services as seaman on board the prize into whatever Northern port she might be bound for.

"All right, by Your brother and that other fellow have just shipped as passengers, and you can work your passage and theirs too."

"Yis, mas'r," replied the accepted Nep, and hastened forward to Livy, who shyly welcoming him, soon allowed herself to be drawn aside to the bows, where hooking her arm in his, she began a whispered conversation ensued.

Dr. Fenwick returned to Ban.

The dwarf was squatted in a coil of rope, his arms grotesquely crossed upon his knees and his chin resting upon them, in the deep eyes of the kindly surgeon saw no grotesqueire, no deformity in the soul that dimly struggled up and looked out in the gaze that he met, so steadily fixed upon the graceful and happy lovers.

Had Ban shown jealousy, anger, revenge, the Doctor would have watched him with money, and turned away with his habit of cynicism a shade more firmly fixed upon him. But the uncouth features and misshapen form showed none of these, nothing but deep despair struggling with a love that could not be crushed but would be purified and elevated by its very hopelessness.

Dr. Fenwick took his hand out of his pocket, and sat down in another coil of rope, close beside him.

"Ban, you are a man. Now is the time to show it," said he, kindly.

"Yis, mas'r," said Ban, in a choked voice.

"If I can help you, Ban, in this or any thing else, remember I am your friend."

"Tank you berry kin'ly, mas'r," said the negro, in the same tone, but never moving his eyes from Bella's face, and still a long one.

"What do you mean to do now, Ban?" asked the Doctor again after a little pause.

"Fetch her free to Canada, an' save her faithful, an'—an' him for her sake," said Ban, and the Doctor hastily rose and left him.

"Shake hands with me, Ban. You are stronger than I."

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

WHY is a journey by railway like a street row?—Because it is a line of business (concussion).

An Irish physician was called to examine the corpse of another Irishman, who had been assassinated. "This person," said the doctor, "was killed by a ball." "Was it that if he had not been murdered he would have died still as here?"

A PATENT REFLECTION.—It is in matrimony as in warfare—there is many a conference without an armistice. In fact, we have, on the authority of no less a personage than as well as to the sorrow of innumerable others) the flight of a ball, a sure indication that the contest is going on, and vows to have continued with tremendous severity from the moment hostilities had been over. It was up at his weakness or ovardice not to have parted the belligerents. That was the truth, by intervention, but such is always a most perilous proceeding. He who interferes generally is expected to get the worst of both sides.

A PATENT REFLECTION.—It is in matrimony as in warfare—there is many a conference without an armistice. In fact, we have, on the authority of no less a personage than as well as to the sorrow of innumerable others) the flight of a ball, a sure indication that the contest is going on, and vows to have continued with tremendous severity from the moment hostilities had been over. It was up at his weakness or ovardice not to have parted the belligerents. That was the truth, by intervention, but such is always a most perilous proceeding. He who interferes generally is expected to get the worst of both sides.

Why is a lawyer's mouth like a toll-bar gate?—Because it is seldom opened but for money.

A dull day, and an empty pocket, and being in love, afflict a man with Dora-Cy-Dy.

The man who misguided himself once became he detected some typographical errors in a newspaper has been trying to get a proprietor's share in a rainbow.

George Selwyn once affirmed in company that no woman ever wrote a letter without a postscript. "My next letter shall refute you," said Lady G. Selwyn soon after received a letter from her ladyship, when after her signature stood—P. S. And I've right now, you or I?"

At the close of a silly book the author, as usual, praised the word "Finis." A wit put this among the errata, with the pointed reader

"Finis!—An error or a lie, my friend!
In writing foolish books there is no end!"

HINTS TO THOSE WHO RIDE IN OMNIBUSES.—Never, on any account, assist any person, particularly if such person be a female, in passing in or out. Scrupulously avoid making room for a new-comer, although you may occupy twice as much of the seat as you have any right to. Be particular in placing your wet umbrella so close against your neighbor as possible. Always stretch out your legs so that your feet may be an annoyance to your opposite fellow-passenger. If you carry a stick or cane, try to stand it between your knees, and, resting both hands thereon, throw the others out in the inconvenience of those persons who may be fortunate enough to be sitting near you. Never ride outside, not even in a beautiful warm day, to oblige a lady, unless she be young and pretty.

Who feels all the umbrellas that every body loses? Every man who recovers the umbrella he loses, as he never never get acquainted with the man that finds them. Can any one answer the question, before the next rain?

RECENT UNCONVERTED.—"Do you know," said a would-be wit to a Jew, "that they hang Jews up, jackasses together in Georgia?" "Indeed, brother; then it's a well you and I are not there!"

A couple of travelers stopping at the Hôtel Français, in the city of Quebec, the capital of the Augustine Confederation, were surprised and amused by noticing on the bill of fare, "Eggs on horseback!" Determined to know what it meant they called for the equestrian dish, when it was stated there were two eggs on the bill.

Quilp says that women will pardon a great deal to their own net unless they are guilty of beauty. When they say they "don't like the looks of a woman," you may be pretty certain that soon do! Quilp had better look out for "Nell."

The distinguished individual known among the ancients as Cupid has recently changed his name to Cupidity, and will hereafter turn his attention to matters of money as well as matrimony.

UMBRELLAS.—"There are three umbrellas," said little Neil, "that I do not like—the weather's one, mother's another; and the sky is the third—the greatest of them all, but also the leakiest."

LET'S "PLAY-GROUND."—The church-yard.

"Jane," said a wag, "it's all over town." "What's all over town?" "Why, Jane's eye dropped.

Whisky is quoted as nasteady. So are these who drink it.

"What o'clock is it?" "I don't know, but 'tis only a quarter of 'eight."

A fellow's eye may be cowardly when his nose is pugnacious.

The Weed of Jaddoh is announced from Melbourne with 2700 crates of cold. Brown says that's the maid for him.

During an examination, a medical student being asked the question, "When does the heart cease to beat?" "When you pop the question, and are answered No."

Poole, praising the hospitality of the Irish, after one of his trips to the other kingdom, a gentleman asked him if he had ever been at Cork. "No, Sir," said Poole, "but I have seen something of it."

"It is remarkable that you are always forgetting my name," said a quasi-acquaintance named Flint. "Why," said the wag, "it is a confounded hard name to remember."

"None of your raillery," as the stage-coach said to the steam-engine.

"There is no living with you," as the thief said to the knife.

Little Daisy's mamma was trying to explain to her the meaning of a smile. "Oh yes! I know," said the child, "it's when you're happy and laugh."

ANGRY MAN TO COOL OBSERVER.—"You'll come to the gallows some day, Sir!"

COOL ONE.—"With pleasure, if you will let me know when you are to be hanged."

A skeptic once said to Dr. Parr, "That he would not believe any thing he could not understand." To which the Doctor replied, "Then, Sir, your creed will be the shortest of any man's I know."

A person who looks at the world in somewhat gloomy style recently complained, in M. Kinsley's presence, how hard it was that people must grow old. "Hard as it is," replied the latter, complacently, "it seems to me the only means of enjoying long life."

"Who was David?" asked a Governess Inspector, examining a school and not many miles from Brighton. "The son of Jesse, and King of Israel," replied the boy. "Who was Jesse?" "The Elector of Hanover."

An Irishman remarked to his companion, on observing a lady pass, "Pat, did you ever see so thin a woman as that?" "Oh, faith!" replied the other, "I ren a woman as thin as two of her put together, I have."

Doctor Bolus, who was very angry when any joke was passed on his profession, once said, "I envy any person whom I ever attended to accuse me of ignorance or negligence." "I envy you no safety, Doctor," replied a wag; "dead men tell no tales!"

During the recent performances of "Romeo and Juliet" at a provincial theatre, the fair Juliet's question, in the balcony scene, "What's the sleeping hour?" What if this mixture do not work at all?" was answered by an auditor in the pit, thus: "Then take a double dose."

Sir Robert Walpole was fond of playing at billiards, at which his friend, Dr. Money, excelled him. "How happens it, Money," said Sir Robert, "that you always win at billiards or contradict me but you?" "The solution is easy," answered the doctor; "other people think me more from you; perhaps if I did, I should be at great a loser as yourself by the game."

A large steamboat proprietor, although a man of immense wealth, has also immense appetite, and dines every day plainly at all times, and sometimes rather shabbily. Being on his passage down stream, not long since, he was accosted by a passenger, who took him for one of the crew, and thus addressed him: "Do you belong to this boat?" "No," said he, quietly, "the boat belongs to me!"

A white man not long since sued a black man in one of the courts of St. Louis, and while the trial was before the judge the litigants came to an amicable settlement, and so the counsel stated to the court. "A satisfactory settlement will not answer," replied the judge; "it must be in writing." "Then," said the opposing counsel to the white, "I'll compound the counsel, pointing to the parties; "you what does your House agree with more than this?"

DO YOU GIVE IT UP?

What is the difference between fern and ceremony?
You sit upon one, and stand on the other.

What was Joan of Arc made of?
Made (maid) of Orleans.

A Dream.

I view the world in little space,
An always changing and changeless place.
No food I eat, but by my power,
Procure what all the world devour?

Sun.

STOCK GAMBLING AT "GALLAGHER'S EVENING EXCHANGE."—[SEE PAGE 295.]

REPULSE OF THE REBELS AT PLEASANT HILL, LOUISIANA.—[See Page 291.]

THE SWEETEST SONG.

CLOUDS were flying, blue skies glancing
Bright and shy as April bluebirds
Or a bashful maiden's eyes;
Coral reefs of maple-blossoms
Reached up toward the changeful skies.

Violet censers wafted fragrance,
Crocus-cups stood hemmed with leaves;
And the new wine of the spring;
Eagerly I drank and drank it
From earth, air, and every thing.

I had turned my steps that morning
From the restless, sombre city,
To a quiet port I know,
Where the houses, quaint and olden,
All cast anchor years ago.

There in grass-grown paths I lingered,
Listening to the waves' low slaughter
Breaking on a pebbly shore;
Sweet their free, glad chorus after
Winter and the town's uproar.

Long I lingered; balm for lonely,
Tired spirits growth only
In some green, still haunt like this;
And I turned away, reluctant,
From a spot so full of peace.

Homeward, past long rows of houses,
Past low fields where famine browses,
Gaunt and lean as Pharaoh's dream;
But I heard a blithe bird singing,
And the sky wore April's gleam.

And adown the trodden pathway
Stepped a little figure toward me,
Spring which blowing back her hair;
Something, ere I met her, drew me,
In her quaint yet childish air.

As she nearer came, I wondered
What it was this trim, small Quaker
Prattled to herself about,
Till I heard, "Pat on my shaker,
Spoken without fear or doubt.

Then I stooped to do her bidding,
Kissed her lips, and saw the treasure
Which shabby, small hands hold fast—
Pebbles gathered from the road-side,
That was all my eyes beheld.

If you'll tell me what the brooks say,
And the crocuses and robins,
I'll translate her artless lay:
But I know whose was the sweetest
Of all songs I heard that day.

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

☞ Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER XVIII.

LILY IS SENT FOR TO THE DRAWING-ROOM.

YEARS sped on, and the baby became a child, the child a pretty girl. Years and years of peace in wars, tumults, and revolts, in famines and shipwrecks, in debates and dancing-parties, in pestilence and in new operas; inside, in the same dull round of little tasks, little duties, little quarrels, little pleasures, little pains. Rhododendron Place did not trouble itself about Corporation Reform, or the new Poor-Law Board. It contented it behold Bishops expostulations, Fieschi conspiracies, trials of Dorchester laborers. Fashions came in and came out, but there was no sartorial eleemosynary in the cut of pinafores at Stockwell. Corn-law questions convulsed the country, and Miss Bunnycastle grumbled at the baker's bill, but the free-and-easy boarders had four thin parallelograms apiece, of bread thinly veneered with Dorset butter, for breakfast, and four for tea, whether wheat was up or down in the market. Currency controversies agitated parliaments, engendered monstrous blue-books, and made financiers' lives a burden to them; but every Saturday, at noon, Miss Adelaide Bunnycastle appeared in the school-room with a tray set out with the boarders' weekly pocket-money, piled in symmetrical little heaps, mainly composed of sixpences. The hebdomadal average was fourpence. A young lady who had had sixpence a week was held to have an intimate connection with the plutocracy; a shilling a week, and she was set down wealthy. As for the parlor-boarders, who brought golden sovereigns to school with them after the holidays, and were continually having five shillings (with a cake) sent to them per carrier, they were considered as daughters of the house of Rothschild. Miss Dallwallah had once actually exhibited a five-pound note, payable on demand by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England. It was bran-new, crisp, and gleaming. She showed it to her chosen companions only as a mark of high favor toward them. Many were of opinion that it should be framed and glazed. Mrs. Bunnycastle, alarmed at the idea of a young lady not yet sixteen having so much money, remonstrated with Mr. Coopinghurst, the commercial gentleman in Austin Friars who was the agent in England of Miss Dallwallah's papa, and at whose country-house at Balham the sultana Scheherazade passed her Midsummer and Christmas holidays. Mr. Coopinghurst curtly replied, that, if Mrs. Bunnycastle was not satisfied with her pupil, he was ready to send Miss Dallwallah a lady at the next vacation, and that, indeed, he had been thinking of sending her a superior school for Miss Dallwallah, who, in all probability, would be the inheritress of great wealth. Mrs. Bunnycastle thereupon grumbled no more; if the Begum had brought half a dozen lacs of rupees back with her in her play-box at the beginning of the next half-year, the school-mistress would never have proffered a word of complaint.

Lily had grown up to be eight years old. It was agreed on all hands that, although her figure was graceful and well formed, she would never be tall. She had developed by very stages, and had not "shot up" in the bean-stalk fashion. The Bunnycastles granted that her brown hair was very soft and wavy, that her hands and feet were very small, that her skin was originally white, that her eyes were very large and blue, that her mouth was delicate and well formed, and garnished with teeth of irreproachable regularity and whiteness; but they authoritatively declared that she was not pretty, and would never become a beauty. She would be "a pleasing," nothing more. The truth must out, and I don't think the Bunnycastles liked her; Lily's nose was so decidedly retrousse as to be clear upon the shadow, and Lily had not a very charming little nose for all that—the coral and ivory nostrils almost transparent, the bridge slight and short, but coquettish, as a bridge over an artificial rivulet in a pleasure-garden. Then her forehead was decidedly a little too low. It has been my fortune to make acquaintance with a number of ladies and gentlemen of all ages, with foreheads so broad and so high as to astonish and who were more or less idiots; therefore I am not disposed to abide by the dictum of Miss Barbara Bunnycastle, who ignored the idiotic genius of Lily's brow, and was certain that she would turn out a fool. Finally, the shape of her visage inclined more to the square than to the oval. Unrelieved by expression or animation Lily's face would, from physiognomists whose broad principles of doctrine one should respect, but whose minute dogmatism on details is to be contemned—have appeared a stupid verdict of commonness. It is certain that Miss Foulbow, the dreaper's daughter, who was not very refined in her conversation, told Lily, that the girl's countenance found compensation, a handkerchief, in the merry smile that lighted up her lineaments at the slightest encouragement, and in the wistful, wishing, intelligent beam that played in her eyes; in her soft and pleading look when she was half doubtful that. She had a tempest of her own, a warm and somewhat peppery one, but it found no vent in black looks, bitter language, and clenched hands. When she was moved she turned very red, and spoke very quickly, and then there was a sudden and copious relief in a flood of passionate tears. It was dangerous to meddle with her then, for she would shake you off with those hands of hers, and the feverd movement of the hand which can only be thoroughly conveyed to the mind of a non-spectator by registering the accompanying physiognomic: the French "Na," the English "I shan't." But when Lily had said "I shan't," and "So violent" (in crescendo), and "I hate you," and "Go home," she calmed down, and the sun of her smiles came out as brightly as ever. Tempers were so easy to quell as they were difficult to rouse. She would bear a prodigious amount of teasing, pinching, cross words, and contradiction with surprising meekness and equanimity; or she would strive to disarm her persecutor by excessive and enduring good-nature. Contradict her. She was, when scorned, as pugnacious as a robin-redbreast. You might laugh at her, but it was never safe not to respect her. Her fits of passionate resentment of contumely arose from Lily being somewhat vain.

She was now eight years old, and neither a dunce nor an intellectual prodigy. Her masters and mistresses had very few complaints to bring against her. Since that first miserable morning when she sat down on the drugget and said, "I won't," she had always treated us all implicit and cheerful obedience to Mrs. Bunnycastle and her assistants. In the way of "doing as she was told" she was a model pupil to her round young ladies. Now and then in the school-room she was reprimanded for talking at unseasonable times; for her tongue was very glib, and there was the "clever pony" in a butcher's cart, and required to be reined in occasionally. Now and then Miss Barbara had had to scold her for carelessness, for trending her shoes down at heel, for making her pinafore look as if it had no pocket-handkerchief. Once or twice one of the governesses —but this was when Lily was very young indeed—had come complaining to interfere with what was in her tempers, and had recommended a short sojourn in the corner as a means of cooling those tempers down. These were her gravest scholastic offenses, unless, indeed, I take account of one or two desperate attempts she made when the goal, older to shield her play-fellows from reproof, and to take upon herself the blame they had incurred. She was very candid and unprejudiced instructresses of feminine youth to whom this will agree with me that the two master vices with which they have to contend in the education of their young charges to perness and sauciness in reply, and their painful manifestations at that form of deception which is known as "gloze." But Lily was never pert, and she could not be sly. With the exception of the attempts at shielding offenders mentioned above, which were usually so transparent as to be at once detected, she would not venture even upon a white lie.

Be it also, to the honor of the little woman, recorded that she never grumbled. Now, in order to be a grumbler at school it does not at all follow that you must be ill treated. Discontent is as often the result of satiety as of privation. A lady-cook may grow over his chickens and cream than a mongrel does over his bare bone. At plentiful harvests farmers (who murmur at every thing, and would have "wanted rain" in the Garden of Eden) murmur most. I dare say that a work-house child fed on gruel and "accidentals" bread from year's end to year's end is, in the long-run, less given to repine at her lot than a young lady at boarding-school, with three substantial meals a day, and the certainty of enjoyable meals as many, and as abundant, on the morrow. The Bunnycastles were economical, and made as much out of the housekeeping as they, with decency, conveniently could; but they neither starved the boarders nor fed them on coarse and unwholesome food, pregnant with boils, and blains, and skin diseases. The butcher's meat called regularly, and the joints he brought were, if not prime, nourishing. But Lily lived, nevertheless, in an atmosphere of grumbling. The great part of her existence passed more than one said at their instructresses, and accuse them of the most deliberate meanness in the article of money. The Bunnycastles themselves never assume a new silk dress without its being darkly hinted in the school-room that it was "got out of my bills." Every article of meat at dinner-time was denounced as shamefully deficient as to quantity and quality; the second helps were made the subject of a shameful and cruel imputation. The Wednesday mess of fish had boiled over—and it is a standing conspiracy to rob the boarders of their due, and their parents of the money they paid. "Unlimited diet indeed!" would Miss Barbara Purbrow, tossing up her head. "Is that nasty suet-pudding they give us twice a week unlimited diet?" Satirical remarks were made about the mangy cat which made its appearance every Monday morning. Occasionally the round of beef and mutton was favored by a piece of veal, and then the malcontents declared that Clodshop (Clodshop was the butcher) had lost a calf by disease, and had sold it to the Bunnycastles cheap. There was no end to their grumbling. Lily listened to it with unwearying goodwill, and refused to join in the chorus of complaints. She ate her meals thankfully, and did not find her food either scanty or repulsive. Perhaps she was too young to be a judge of cookery. Perhaps, never having had a home, she was not in a position to form invidious comparisons. And yet I scarcely think that the young ladies who were among the most inveterate grumblers had been, as a body, raised in the lap of luxury; many of them had been at other schools, where they were worse treated and worse fed. But it was the fashion to abuse the cookery, and those who spoke well of it were voted mean-spirited creatures. The insatiable appetite of female youth—for between fifteen and fourteen there are few things, out of the line of a cormorant, to equal a girl's voracity—may have had something to do with it. On the other hand, are young ladies at school the only persons in the world who are given to quarreling with their bread-and-butter.

If Lily had been any thing of a tale-teller there would have been sad work between the authoress and the grumblers, owing to those chronic criticisms on the cuisine. The child had full license to come and go between the school-room and the parlor; and might have been found a very convenient spy in the two naturally hostile camps. A Jesuit's mouth would have watered to instruct her in the arts of secret diplomacy; but she knew nothing of keeping-making; and somehow her little heart was so constituted that she would have trained her to be a hypocrite at school ashamed of their design, and abortive in their intent.

She had now been three years and a half at Rhododendron House, and the sum agreed upon by her mistresses and her protection had been regularly paid in yearly sums, always in advance, by orders on a banker in Cornhill. The drafts came accompanied by letters written in a foreign hand, but in very good English: in which a person signing himself J. B. Constant said that he had the honor to announce the payment of Miss Floria's account, and that he would not trouble Miss Bunnycastle to make any communication to him, for the information of her papa or to the young lady's health and progress, since, from causes at last removed, he was well informed upon those matters himself. To the satisfaction of the Bunnycastles at receiving so liberal a stipend for the board and education of such a very little girl was added a vague apprehension of losing her if they did not treat her with every kindness, and a dim consciousness that their proceedings were being watched over by some occult external influence. A mysterious interference, a mistake, and Miss Lily was fast verging upon her ninth year, that she was one morning dressed in her best and sent down to the drawing-room at once to the drawing-room, where a strange lady waited to see her.

CHAPTER XIX.

LILY'S VISITORS.

MISS FLORIS sent for to the drawing-room! A strange lady for Lily! The whole school was dazed at the news. There was a commotion. The very maid-servants were amazed. Such a thing had never occurred during the little girl's three years and a half's residence at Rhododendron House. She had been set down, by general expectation: not as a friendless child—for the implied pauperism, and the regular discharge of Lily's school-bills was sufficient evidence of her having friends somewhere—but as one whose connections, whoever they were, resided far away, and were deterred, by major reasons, from coming to visit her.

Miss Dallwallah was, to some extent, in the same position: the requirements of the Indian Civil Service rendering her papa's visits to Lombard, and her mamma's long dead; but no one would have dared to call Miss Dallwallah friendless. The Begum's own home, regularly for the holidays, to the commercial gentleman at Balham; whereto she had been passed, under scholastic escort, the outer gates of Rhododendron House. Those weary weeks passed in the deserted school-room and the scarcely less deserted house—for the Miss Bunnycastles were accustomed to holiday-time to repair to the pleasant shores of Ramsgate and Margate in charge of health and husbands; and Mrs. Bunnycastle was not, at the best of times, very amusing company for a little girl not yet eight years of age—were full of sorrowful memories for Lily. Inquisitive as she was, and fond of the continuation of external objects that she might build mental speculations upon them, one is apt to grow tired at last of peering into inkstands in whose caked depths florid growths of white fungi have accumulated. The dusty debris of last quarter's slate-pencils will at last lose charm, and novelty cease to emerge from the names of by-gone pupils cut on desks and forms. Lily remembers, with a shuddering sense of the tedium, how dinners and teas that used to be served to her in the school-room; the sepulchral ticking of the clock all over the premises; the sense of a certain black rat that used to sally from beneath the next-screen book-case, and watch her as she sat there alone; the hot tea with floating eyes, as though he said, "Drop me plenty of crumbs or, by my grandmother Whiskers, I'll bite!" the hot stool on which your tiny body is perched and can not up!" Lily was always glad when the holidays were over. And when Miss Dallwallah's young friends came back grumbling, as usual, at having to recommence their studies and leave their beds when getting up was a delight, she wondered, in her simple soul, whatever they could have to be discontented with.

After she had been dressed, and brushed, and tidied, and made generally spruce and shining as a new pin, Miss Barbara took her by the hand, and led her to the best parlor.

There was a lady waiting for her. She was a very handsome lady, not in her first youth, but in her second, which, very probably, was handsomer than the first had been. She was very beautifully dressed: so splendidly that Lily, modestly collecting all that she had heard about the Arabian Nights, instantly put her down as the absolute and perfect impersonation of Queen Scheherazade, of whom Miss Dallwallah was the imaginary type. She had a great deal of silk about her that rustled, and laces that glittered, and of flowers that waved, and a great many ornaments of jewels and gold that jingled and made a noise. She seemed to Lily that had she purchased the picture of that lady from the gallery of Mr. Marks, or Mr. Park, for a penny plain, she would cost at least twelve-and-sixpence to emblazon and finish off completely in tinsel.

The visitor did not disappoint Lily, for either every patient or a very good-tempered lady. She had been kept for some time waiting, and it had called her spirits down. She was drumming on the ground with her feet, and rapping Mrs. Bunnycastle's great cruciber walnut-wood drawing-room table with her unoccupied right hand, indeed, so to presume to rap that reverend article of furniture! Moreover, when Miss Barbara, with Lily gravely circling after her, entered the apartment, she turned to the former with a very quick and fierce movement, and said—

"Had you not better keep me all day? Is this little brat a princess that I am to dance attendance for hours before she grants me an audience?"

Lily opened her eyes at being spoken of as a brat, but quickly understood term had not yet been applied to her. This was evidently a very cross lady; as cross as the tall English teacher who was sent away for giving Lily pills. Cross when they were remiss in their geography—the Miss Bunnycastles observing, at the time, and with perfect truth, that any such remiss, if any thing of that kind was to be done, they could do it themselves. Lily noticed, too, apart from the angry vehemence of the lady's manner, that her voice did not resemble that of the Bunnycastles, or those who were accustomed to rule them. She spoke more like Mademoiselle, for shortness called "Mamselle," French governess at Rhododendron House, who was supposed to rail against the Bunnycastles as "tyrannical Megæras," to have the toothache, and to weep about her ancestors.

Miss Barbara drew herself up haughtily at being thus abruptly addressed. Indeed, it could not have so much manifested itself, but in the presence of a scholar, to be snubbed was intolerable. Did not Doctor Busby, when he went over Westminster School with King Charles the Second, apologize to his Majesty for keeping his hat on, upon the ground that if his boys were led for an instant to imagine that there was in the whole world a greater personage than he, his authority would be lost forever? So Miss Barbara drew herself up, and looked sharp-edged rulers, or whatever the law of kindness was capable of resorting to in moments of resentment, at the aggressor.

"My mamma, Madam," she explained, with the polite severity of offended dignity, "is confined to her bed by sickness, else she would have received you. My sisters are detained in the school-room by their domestic duties. To my own hands I have prepared Miss Floris for the visit which, during three years and a half, her friends have never condescended to pay her instructresses."

"She ought not to want any preparation," retrained the lady, with undiminished violence. "Do you keep her in a pig-sty, that she is not fit to be seen when she stopped herself for an instant—"when her friends call upon her? Come here, child!"

Lily answered the summons not very willingly. The handsome angry lady terrified her. She was accustomed, however, to do as she was bid, and obeyed the command: approaching the lady, however, sideways, and with one small forefinger in her mouth.

"Don't look like a fool!" cried the handsome lady.

Lily did not know what else to look like; or, to an uninterested spectator, she might have looked very much like a little girl in active preparation for a good cry. Her perturbation was increased when the strange visitor, pulling the child toward her, and with no very gentle hand offered very unmistakable evidence that she was about to undress her. She stayed her hand, however, at the sight of Lily's little plump white shoulders, which—A most curious and inconsequential lady this—she proceeded, incontinent, to cover with very fierce hot kisses. And then, that nothing might be wanting to the oddity of her demeanor, she pushed the child away again.

"There," she said, "I see you're clean enough. Do you give her a bath every morning?" she resumed, addressing Miss Barbara.

"Miss Flora," retorted that young lady, combining a diplomatic evasion with much moral suavity, "has constantly received unremitting attention, both as regards her physical and mental requirements."

"Then why you schoolmistresses talk!" the lady went on, not, apparently, in the slightest degree touched by the governess's eloquence. "It is all in the nick-nammed, I suppose—Jannonce. What is your name, child?"

The little girl opened her eyes, and Miss Barbara opened her ears. Had not the strange lady asked for Miss Floris?

"Lily," the child answered.

"Lily what?"

"Lily Floris, ma'am."

"Beast of a name. We must change it. How old are you?"

Lily looked appealingly at Miss Barbara.

"I know you to believe," Miss Bunnycastle remarked, with lofty condescension, "that Miss Floris is rapidly approaching her eighth birthday."

"Are you happy here?" resumed the lady, not deigning to acknowledge Miss Bunnycastle's self-withered existence.

"Yes, ma'am," the child replied, with all the sincerity of eight years of age. The lady frowned at this answer; but Miss Barbara seemed rendered thanks to Lily, in her secret soul. "It was always an engaging little thing," she admitted mentally.

"Do they beat you?" the lady continued.

"No, ma'am," the child returned, opening her eyes wider than ever.

"Tant pis," said the lady. "When I was young they used to beat me like a negro. It is true," she added, turning to Miss Barbara.

Miss Bunnycastle made a genteel inclination of the head, which might mean anything; but I believe that in the recesses of her mind the thought just then was uppermost, that if that handsome lady had been one of her young lady-boarders, and of a convenient age, she would have given her some vice exemplification of the law of fairness, which should have been of a nature to astonish her.

"I suppose you're good for children, the stick and all that," the lady added, musing. "It did me a torrent of good, to be sure. It made me love every body so. There," she went, giving her body a sudden wrench, as though she wished to rid herself of an unpleasant theme of thought, "I dare say you're too frightened to tell the truth while your schoolmistress is near. Please to have her dressed, and I will take her out for a walk."

The last part of her speech was addressed to Miss Barbara, and the governess thought it high time to take a part upon it.

"Madam," she said, with freezing politeness, "Miss Floris was placed here, three years and a half since, by two gentlemen who, considering her—then almost an infant—to our charge, strictly enjoined that she was never to leave it, save under direct instructions from—"

"Monsieur Jean Baptiste Constant," the lady interposed, with a wonderful sweetness of tone, "I know all about that. M. Constant is the agent for Miss Flora's guardian, and M. Constant pays her school-bills every year."

"Precisely so," Miss Barbara returned. "Therefore without instructions from M. Constant—"

"You wouldn't let her go: at least you'd say you wouldn't, although, if I choose, I'd have the child out of this house if fifty dragoons with drawn swords stood at the door to oppose it. But what nonsense all this is! Do you know the handwriting of M. Jean Baptiste Constant?"

"Perfectly well, Madam."

"Then send for it: get the child's hat and pelisse on, and let me hear no more about it."

She opened a pretty reticule, all velvet and golden bead-work, and flung rather than handed to Miss Bunnycastle a note written in M. Constant's remarkably small and neat handwriting, in which, with many compliments to the amiable Madame and Mesdemoselles Bunnycastle, he requested them, in all respects, to obey such directions as should be given to them in respect to Miss Lily Floris, by Madame la Comtesse de Beaunes, that young lady's nearest female relative.

"The letter, I see, is dated Paris," Miss Bunnycastle replied, after reading and re-reading the note, but still with a certain amount of hesitation.

"Whence else?" returned the lady, with impetuosity. "He being in Paris. M. Jean Baptiste Constant is ill. He is in bed. He has an aneurism."

"And you, Madam?"

"You are very inquisitive. I am Miss Floris's nearest female relative. I am Madame la Comtesse de Beaunes. There is my card, which I gave to your father, Sir Thomas Bunnycastle, when he was alive, and with a heightening color, exclaimed—

"I won't let the dear little child go. I don't know who you are, or what you mean. Your manners are most insulting, and unless the gentlemen come themselves to fetch Miss Floris, or M. Constant sends a messenger who knows how to behave himself, the darling shan't go. Do you want to go, Lily?"

The subject of this controversy, simply reasoning, that the strange lady was not to be obeyed, she was very fond of Miss Bunnycastle, and, moreover, that it was decidedly preferable to be called a darling than a little beast, and that the heart palpitating violently, that she was very happy where she was, and that she didn't want to go, began with sobs—

"I thought so!" Miss Barbara exclaimed, triumphantly catching the child to her. "A pretty thing, indeed, to be interrupted and domineered over in one's own house. You have your answer, Madam, and I must wish you good-morning." And she made as though she would have rung the bell to have the importunate visitor ushered out.

But Miss Barbara Bunnycastle reckoned without her host. The strange lady rose in a rage.

"You devil!" she cried, "you're making a genteel establishment for young ladies! "I will have the child. Do your worst. I say she shall go with me. You shall answer to me for your mother and sisters, and they will make you list to reason. And in the police, if you like, and see if not a charming figure you will cut in the dock."

She set her teeth together, and glared at Miss Barbara as though she would devour her. The schoolmistress was fairly paralyzed. Was the lady mad? Something must be done, and the only reflection she concluded that the best thing she could do was to call for aid outside. The front gate was fast locked, and the lady would hardly be so desperate, she thought, as to scale that railing. There was a bell-rope in the drawing-room, and how to get her away from Lily?

The stranger seemed to divine her thoughts. "Ring the bell, if you like," she said, "and tell the other servants to come. I'm not afraid of twenty of them. But I'll tell you what! Before I leave this room without the child, I'll smash every article of glass in the house. And the lady decidedly looked as though she meant what she said.

It was a strange dilemma; an uprooting of all the conventionalities, an unheard-of revolution in the ordinarily placid world of Rhodedendron House. A servant came in, and the Miss Bunnycastles summoned. Then a speech embassy was dispatched to Miss Barbara, who sat, with the old lady, on the sofa, now growing very feeble, and was not quite valid, mentally, should suggest a thing, and confined herself to a general remark that "it was a pity" of such goings on. As a last resource, Mr. Draxe was sent for. That tremendous person happened fortunately to be at home, and on his arrival the school did his best to throw oil on the troubled waters. He ordered cognac for M. J. B. Constant's handwriting was undeniable, and, M. J. B. Constant's wishes must be attended to. Moreover, there was present in the lady's hall was always paid in advance, and there were at least six months to run, to the next term of payment. The visitor was pacified. "Do be sure, Mr. Draxe had not seen her in a rage. Clearly, the only course to adopt was to accede to her very liberal demands.

It happened, at this conjuncture, that the strange lady's bearing underwent a remarkable change for the better. She condescended to smile on Mr. Draxe. She told him that he had acted with good discretion; which expression tallied so exactly with the quality on which he so much prided himself that Mr. Draxe was in ecstasies, and even Celia and Adelaide thought that their sister had been a little too hasty. To be sure, they, too, had not seen the handsome lady in a rage. She, on her part, remembered the information that she was Lily's aunt, that her only object in temporarily removing her was to take her out for a holiday and purchase her some new clothes; and she faithfully promised to return with the child in a most self-same evening. Finally, a treaty of peace was arranged. As a matter of form, a fresh embassy was dispatched to Miss Bunnycastle, to obtain her consent, as chief of the establishment, to Miss Floris's temporary departure; but that good lady merely told her daughters that they might do as they liked, and expressed a desire not to be "worried." Poor, placid Mrs. Bunnycastle: she shall not tease no more.

Lily, who had stood and wondered throughout the whole of this strange argument, was at length conducted to a bedroom and arrayed in her walking clothes. Miss Barbara it was who buttoned on her pelisse, and tied her hat beneath her dimpled chin; but Miss Barbara, although she had been forced to yield to superior numbers, was by no means satisfied in mind at the upshot of the dispute.

"You'll be sure to come back early this evening," she said, kneeling on the floor to adjust a bow, she gazed earnestly in the child's face.

"Yes, Miss Babby" (this was the petit nom which, of the five-and-thirty boarders, Lily, the chartered pet of the establishment, was privileged to address Miss Barbara by).

"Yes, Miss Babby," she whimpered; "and I'm sure I don't want to go away at all."

"There, you mustn't cry," Miss Barbara, who was on the point of shedding tears herself, hastily interposed; "it's naughty, and not like a great girl as you know. Now, kiss me, and say your prayers. If you don't, you'll be punished." This was said with a touch of Miss Barbara Bunnycastle ordinary and schematic enterdevalness; but her heart was not in her words, and, casting her arms around the little girl's neck, and without any valid reason in the world that I know of, she wept over her as though her heart would break.

The same quite irrational impulse led Miss Barbara, after Lily had been carried off in a kind of triumphal car, defiant triumph by the strange lady who had so remarkable a temper, to shed many more tears. It was foolish, she thought, but there, her heart felt. The child would be back soon. There was no harm in her going out. Her sisters were quite satisfied. Mr. Draxe had publicly declared to be the authenticity of J. B. Constant's autograph. But Miss Barbara mistrusted and Miss Barbara wept, in the lower regions. Miss Barbara, the heavy, hazel blue-eyed maiden had twisted herself round her heart, and she felt as though the twisting process had been repeated too many way. She dried her eyes, and put on, as well as she could, manage it, the scholastic countenance, and then she went down into the schoolroom and took a geography class. Her temper was tried to the uttermost. There was the usual average of stupid young ladies, careless young ladies, young ladies who were pert, and young ladies who were insinuating. She ground, for the five thousandth time, the dreary old barrel-organ to its accustomed round of tunes, let her spirit wet with tears. Her heart yearned for Lily. She distributed good marks and bad marks unconsciously, and she was inexpressibly grateful for tea-time to come because her vexatious task was over, but because the time had grown nearer when she thought the child would return.

That a schoolmistress is a "cross old thing," and nothing more, while generations of young ladies have maintained that in regards for remote from the school-room and its petty vexations, is a truism. But the difficulty in settling down the governess as a prim, prosy, ridiculous personage, full of angular ways and ludicrous feelings, to be ridiculed, to be contradicted, or snubbed, or supercilliously patronized. Ah! if we only thought a little more of what she had to endure! Ah! if we only reflected a little on how sick grows the head that has to listen to the strains, how numbed grows the hand that has to beat time, turn, that overtasking barrel-organ! Men, with a smug complacency, repeat, one after the other, that women have a peculiar aptitude for teaching: that they are patient, willing, persuasive, and the rest; and then, with ludicrous politeness, condemn them to grind the barrel-organ for the term of their natural lives. That men are not so eminently fitted for the task of tuition is shown by their losing patience half a dozen times in the course of a lesson, and falling on the cubs they are licking into shape and making them foremost; but gentle, long-suffering woman is contented to go on mildly nagging, and wrangling, and monotonizing over the cubs, and they decline to dance to the very gentelest of tunes. In the female breasts of every lunatic asylum you are sure to meet with one or more demented schoolmistresses. I often wonder that for the one or two I don't meet a dozen.

Ten-time came and went; then play-hour; then study-hour; at last the times for reading prayers and going to bed. Miss Floris had not come back. Her continued absence was common talk in the school-room. Among the girls, one party, the sympathetic, speculated on the dreadful things that would be done to a pupil who staid beyond her leave; another, and the majority, opined that Lily would be held harmless, seeing what a favorite she was with the authorities.

Time went on, and the Miss Bunnycastles sat down to that supper which they were too sick at heart to eat. Then came on the stroke of ten when the outer gate bell rang.

"Tis she! 'tis Miss Floris!" cried Barbara, "the dear little child!"

"The naughty little minx, rather!" added Celia, with some asperity.

"Perhaps it isn't her fault," pleaded Adelaide; "she may have been taken ill. But here she is!"

The door opened, and the maid appeared, with a scared face, announcing not Lily, but a gentleman; and, close upon her heels, there followed, with a rapid step, a tall man, nearly wild with excitement, Jean Baptiste Constant.

"The child!" he cried; "the child, dear ladies! Has she come back?"

A trembling negative had to be returned to his question.

"Oh! I am ruined, I am ruined!" the Swiss went on. "Where is she?" What have you done with her? Oh! my little, little Lily. She has been stolen, stolen by that monster of a woman. Malédiction!"

And for a time this was all that could be got out of J. B. Constant. He persisted in declaring that he was ruined. By degrees he calmed down a little, and explained that at five o'clock that afternoon he had seen the child pass, in a hackney-coach, with a person in whose company (so with much vehemence he declared) she had no right to be. It was in Regent Street. He had followed the coach as rapidly as he could, and, by voice and gestures, had endeavored to arrest its progress. But all was in vain. The coach was Regent Street; the time, the full tide of afternoon life. At length the driver of the hack compelled to abandon the chase, vainly endeavoring to persuade himself that he might have been mistaken. He had made scores of inquiries—perquisitions, he called them—in places that he thought it at least fairly probable that Lily might have been conveyed, and at length he had come to Rhododendron House.

The Bunnycastles could do little to console him. They made the most of their reluctance to allow Lily to leave; but what were they to do? They had long hesitated, and at last acted on the advice of Mr. Draxe, a trusted and discreet friend.

"Curse Mr. Draxe!" cried the valet, fiercely.

"Drax is a goose, a pig, a donkey!" And I am afraid the discomfited Miss Bunnycastles felt that moment very much inclined to agree with J. B. C. Drax's renown for discretion was gone for ever.

They showed J. B. Constant the note purporting to be in his handwriting. He flung it from him with something like an oath and a yell of rage.

"Forgery, an infamous forgery!" he cried, distractedly. "Fool that I was not to have foreseen the possibility of such a fraud! That woman would do anything to get the child."

"And whatever will your master say?" naively remarked Miss Adelaide, who had been eyeing the valet with much curiosity.

"My master!" he repeated; "burn my master! This little angel was worth twenty thousand masters to me."

Grief made him garrulous, but his communicativeness was not of a nature to satisfy the Bunnycastles. All he could permit to be said was made in advance, and the customary references dispensed with, they felt the indelicacy of pressing him with questions. Enough for them that was definite could be extracted from J. B. Constant. He could mention no names; but when the card of Madame la Comtesse de Beaunes was shown to him, he tore it, contemptuously, in half, and muttered, "Bah! one of her twenty aliases."

The council remained in session until an hour was attained quite unexampled in the annals of this well-conducted establishment. But Lily did not come back. Indeed to Rhododendron House she was never known again. J. B. Constant, with lowering looks, but with many protestations of regret at having flustered the ladies, to whom he was, for what if the child did not return, to be, they were very welcome to keep what remained of her wardrobe as some slight compensation for the trouble they had taken. And then the Bunnycastles were left desolate. The compensation was one not indeed. Bereft of hope to mourn the loss of her darling, and would not be comforted; and her two more practical sisters were bound in bitterness to acknowledge the new payments, having been made in advance, they could not demand even so much as a quarter's dividend on the sudden removal of their young lady-boarder.

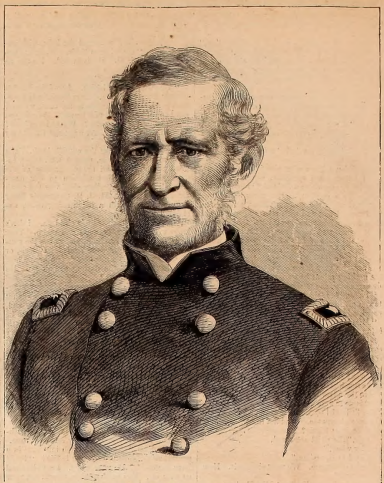
GAMBLING IN STOCKS.

THE excitement attending stock-gambling is finely depicted in our sketch on page 296. The scene here represented is one that is seen nightly at the new stock-board in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where operators, whose eagerness for speculation is only equaled by their ignorance, congregate in numbers and gamble far into the night.

GENERAL GREGG.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL DAVID M. GREGG, whose portrait we give on page 300, is a native of Pennsylvania, and is about thirty-six years of age. He entered West Point as a cadet in 1851, and graduated on the 30th of June, 1855, standing No. 8 in his class, among the members of which were Generals WETZEL, TORBERT, HAZEN, MERRILL, DU BOIS, AVERILL, COLONEL COLBURN, and many others in the Union army. On the 18th of September, 1855, he was brevetted Second Lieutenant of the Second Dragoons, and was transferred to the First Dragoons, with full rank, on the 16th of September, 1856. He was distinguished in several conflicts with the Indians in Washington Territory, in September, 1857, and in the early part of 1861 was promoted to a First Lieutenancy. On the 14th of May, 1861, he was further promoted to a Captaincy in the Second United States Cavalry (a new regiment), and afterward was appointed Colonel of the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry, or Eighty-second Regiment of Volunteers. He served during the peninsula campaign, and was brevetted Major of the United States Army for meritorious services in reconnoissance before Richmond from July 1, 1862. At the death of General JAMES STEWART (commonly called "Jeb" Stuart), on the 14th of December, 1862, appointed to the command of his Brigade, with rank of Brigadier-General of Volunteers from November 29, 1862. His command was confirmed in March, 1863. In February, 1863, he was appointed commander of the Third Division of Cavalry, under General STONEMAN, and in that position distinguished himself on several occasions. At present he commands the Second Division of the cavalry corps. He is among the most capable and daring cavalry officers in the service, and with CUSTER, PLEASONTON, KILPATRICK, SHERIDAN, and others, has stamped his name indelibly on the annals of our great conflict.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL DAVID M. GREGG.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—SEE PAGE 299.]



ADJUTANT-GENERAL LORENZO THOMAS.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GUTEKUNST, PHILADELPHIA.]

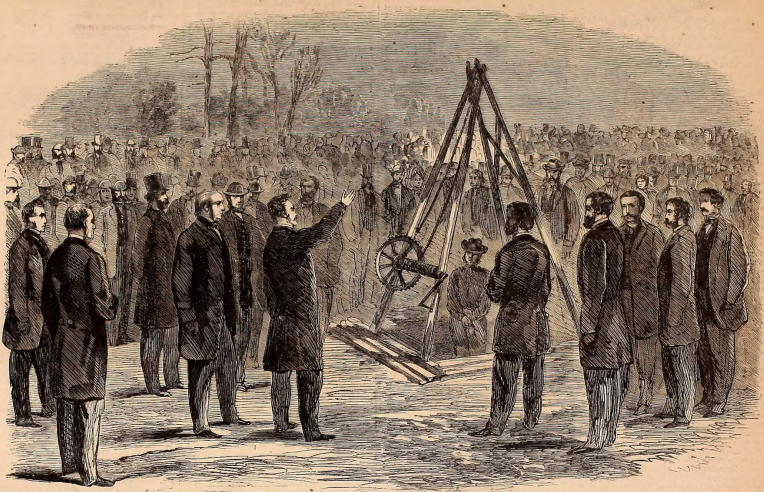
THE NINETEENTH ARMY CORPS CROSSING CANE RIVER, LA.

WE give below a sketch of the NINETEENTH ARMY CORPS, belonging to General BANKS's army, crossing Cane River, Louisiana, on a pontoon bridge. The crossing took place on the 31st of March, two days having been occupied in laying the bridge. Cane River, thirty-five miles above Alexandria, is one of the more considerable streams that flow into or out of Red River, according to the relative height of the water in the two streams. Like Red River, its banks are divided at short intervals by sloughs, or bayous, as they are called by the natives, which are sometimes magnified by rains into small rivers, and sometimes as dry as a brick sidewalk. Cane River is a fine stream, its waters being supplied by the drainage from the higher lands on its west side. As its name implies its banks are lined with extensive "cane-brakes," which in some places cover many thousand acres, and furnish grazing for large herds of cattle. Two days after crossing the river the Federal cavalry engaged the enemy in force, and defeated them with heavy loss. All the rebel cavalry engaged were under command of General DICK TAYLOR. The entire force of the enemy amounted to about 10,000. The success at that point will give Cane River a historic importance.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL LORENZO THOMAS.

WE present on this page a portrait of ADJUTANT-GENERAL LORENZO THOMAS, whose name has been prominently before the public during the whole of the present war. General THOMAS is a native of Delaware; he entered West Point in September, 1819, and in July, 1823, was made Second Lieutenant of the Fourth Infantry. From March, 1828, to February, 1831, he acted as Adjutant, and in 1836 was made Captain. In September, 1836, he became Assistant Quarter-master, and in July, 1838, was made Assistant Adjutant-General with the rank of Major. In September, 1846, he was made brevet Lieutenant-Colonel "for gallantry and meritorious conduct in the several conflicts at Monterey, Mexico." Subsequently, he was made Major of the Fourth Infantry, and relinquished his rank in the line. On the 15th of July, 1852, he became Assistant Adjutant-General with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. At the commencement of the war he occupied this position, but for several months past has been engaged in the West in the organization of negro regiments, and the superintendence of the work of establishing the Free Labor system on abandoned plantations. In this work he has displayed great energy and wisdom.

THE NINETEENTH ARMY CORPS CROSSING CANE RIVER, LOUISIANA.



THE SHAKESPEARE MONUMENT IN CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK.

THE SHAKESPEARE TERCENTENARY.

THE three hundredth anniversary of the birth of SHAKESPEARE was commemorated (April 23) in New York by laying the corner-stone of a Monument to his memory in Central Park. The ceremonies were witnessed by a number of distinguished citizens. The principal features of the occasion were addresses by Judge DALY and Mr. WHEATLEY, who recited an original poem, and the formal laying of the stone by Mr. HACKETT. The ceremonies closed by the formal acceptance of the monument by Mayor GUNTHER on behalf of the city. The site of the proposed statue is at the south end of the Mall, one of the most attractive and delightful within the limits of the grounds. A space staked off and surrounded with ropes protects the excavation, in which rests an oblong block of granite, bearing the following inscription:

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
APRIL 23, 1864.

The Monument will add another permanent attraction to the Park.

THE REBEL RAM AT PLYMOUTH, NORTH CAROLINA.

WE give on this page a sketch of the encounter between the Rebel Ram and the Federal gun-boat Miami in the Roanoke River, near Plymouth, North Carolina. Our sketch shows the gun-boat Southfield in a sinking condition, having been run down by the Ram. The Southfield was formerly a ferry-boat, and carried a battery of six guns. Upon finding the Southfield disabled, the Ram gave chase to the Miami. Captain FLUSSER stood by the large gun, and asked what charge it contained. He was answered, "A shell;" and he made the remark, "Let us fire this, and afterward we will give him a better dose, solid shot." Captain FLUSSER sighted the gun himself, the iron-clad being only a half-length from him. The shell fired was a 10-second fuse, which struck the roof of the Ram, rebounded, and hit Captain FLUSSER. In striking him the shell exploded, and killed the gallant officer instantly, almost tearing him to pieces. The Miami then retired below Plymouth, having succeeded in picking up a number of the officers and crew of the Southfield.

THE REBEL RAM ATTACKING FEDERAL GUN-BOATS AT PLYMOUTH, NORTH CAROLINA.

BURIED ALIVE.

My name is Daniel Tyler, and my skin is dark, as my mother's was before me. I have heard that my father had a white face, but I think his heart and life were blacker than my mother's skin. I was born a slave, and remained a slave until last April, when I found deliverance and shelter under the flag that my master was fighting to dishonor.

I shall never forget the day when freedom came to me. I was working in the fields down in Alabama, my heart full of bitterness and unutterable longings. I had dreamed for two long years of escape from my bondage; the thought had run through the dark nights, and filled all the days with a weird sort of nervous expectation. Many dreams had proved unreal—more than dreams; the opportunity I yearned for did not come. But that day, working in the fields, suddenly along the road there there flashed a long column of loyal cavalry, the old flag flying at its head. How my heart leaped at the sight! How like a madman I cried out and thought: "This, Daniel Tyler, is your opportunity!" Need I tell you how I acted upon that thought; how, in one second of time, I leaped out of slavery into freedom, and from a slave became a man?

I will, joining the fleshing column, I rode with them for days, coming at last into Baton Rouge, and thence, having joined a regiment that had been recruited in Memphis. Thence four hundred of us came to Fort Pillow. But there are not four hundred of us now; for three hundred and five were murdered in cold blood only a week ago by Forrest's rough-riders.

It was a day of horrors—that 12th of March. There were seven hundred of us in all in the fort—three hundred whites of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry, and four hundred blacks, a few of the all under command of brave Major Booth. The fort consisted simply of earth-works, on which we had mounted a dozen guns. Twice since that Forrest had been plaguing the country all about us, and imagined that perhaps he would try to storm us; but the thought did not alarm us, though we knew, those of us who were black, that we had little to expect at the hands of the rebels. At last, about sunrise on the morning of the 12th, Forrest, with some 6000 men, appeared and at once commenced an attack. We met the assault bravely, and for two hours the fight went on briskly. Then a flag of truce came in from Forrest, asking an unconditional surrender; but Major Bradford—to whom having been wounded—declined to surrender unless the enemy would treat those of us who were black as prisoners of war, which, of course, they refused to do, and the fight went on. The enemy in the next few hours made several more assaults, which but were each time repulsed. At last, about four o'clock in the afternoon, they sent in another flag. We ceased firing, out of respect to the flag, and Forrest's men had no such notions of honor and good faith. The moment we stopped firing they swarmed all about the fort, and while the flag was in the act of drawing, made a desperate charge from all sides. Up to that time only about thirty of our men had been hurt. But in this charge the enemy, with their double-barrelled guns, and forthwith there ensued a scene which no pen can describe. Seeing that all resistance was useless, most of us threw down our arms, expecting, and many begging for, quarter. But it was in vain. Murder was in every rebel heart; flamed in every rebel eye. Indiscriminate massacre followed instantly upon our surrender. Some of us, seeking shelter, ran to the river and tried to conceal ourselves in the bushes, but for the most part in vain. The savages, pursuing, shot down the fugitives in their trenches, or, like Manuel Nichols, as brave a soldier as ever carried a musket. He had been a free negro in Michigan, but volunteered a year ago to join the Union ranks. He, with others, had sought a shelter under the bank of the river, but a cold-blooded monster found him, and putting a pistol close to his head, fired, failing however to kill the brave fellow. He was then hacked on the arm, and one day after died, delirious, in the hospital. Then there was Robert Hall, another colored soldier, who was lying sick in the hospital when the massacre commenced. The devils gashed his head horribly with their sabres, and then cut off part of his right hand, which he had lifted in a mute appeal for mercy. Then there was Harrison, of the Thirteenth Tennessee, who was shot four times after surrender, and then robbed of all his effects. Before I was shot, running along the river bank, I counted dead Union soldiers lying in their blood. One had crawled into a hollow log and was killed in it, another had got over the bank in the river, and on its board that ran out into the water. He laid on it on his face, with his feet in the water, and when I saw him was already stark and stiff. Several had tried to hide in crevices made by the falling bank, and could not be seen without difficulty, but they were singled out and killed. One negro corporal, Jacob Wilson, who was down on the river bank, seeing that no quarter was shown, stepped into the water so that he partly sunk under it. A rebel coming along asked him what was the matter: he said he was badly wounded, and the rebel, after taking from his pocket all the money he had, left him. It happened to be near by a flatboat tied to the bank. When all was quiet Wilson crawled into it, and got three more colored companions also into it, and cut loose. The boat floated out into the channel and was found ashore some miles below. There were, then, four of the famous escapes!

I was shot near the river just about dark. Running for my life, a burly rebel struck me with his carbine, putting out one eye, and then shot me in two places. I thought he would certainly leave me with that, but I was mistaken. With half a dozen others, I was at once picked up and carried to a ditch, into which we were bound like so many beasts, white and black together. Then they covered us with loose dirt, and left us to die. Oh, how dark and desolate it was! Under me were several dead, and right across my breast lay a white soldier, still alive! How he clutched and strained! How, hurt and weak as I was, with only one hand free, I struggled for air and life, feeling my strength waning every moment! It was a strange thing to lie there buried, and yet be able to think and pray. Maybe, friend, you have known what agony was, but you never had such pains of soul as I had down there in that living grave. I thought I could feel the worms gnawing at my flesh; I am sure I had a taste of what death is, with the added pain of knowing that I was not dead, and yet unable to live in that dark, dismal tomb. So I clutched and struggled and struggled on, digging upward as I could with my one puny hand. At last—oh joy!—a faint streak of light looked in; my hand had carved an avenue to the world of life! But would I live to lift my head? Might not some rebel, standing by, strike me down again on the moment? But I could not die there in that grave, I was not ready. Slowly, painfully, I rolled the burden from my breast—he was dead by that time—and then carefully crept out from my living death. It was dark, and no one was near. A moment I stood up on my feet; then—

The next thing I remember I was in the hospital where I am now. They had found me just where I fell, and brought me to a place of safety, and after a while, consciousness returned. I have been here a week now; and I think I shall get well.

I lie in the cot where poor Robert Hall lay when he was butchered by the rebels. They showed me, yesterday, a letter he had written the day before the massacre to my friend, Jim Lee, who could read and write at Memphis, after his enlistment, and used to send a message to his wife and children. He still remained there, poor fellow, for he, too, was his letter which a surgeon had helped him put together:

"DEAR MANDY—It run—I am very sick here in the hospital, but am better than I was, and hope to get well soon. They have been very kind to me; and I feel it very much to suffer for the cause. Tell Jim Lee to write. You must not worry on my account. Tell Katy she must not forget to say her prayers, and that I am thinking constantly how white she has an opportunity. And, mammy, take great care of the baby. I remember how he looks, and I think how and it would be to die and never see her little face again. But then chaplain says it will all be right in heaven, and he knows all about it. Good by, mammy, don't forget we are free now; teach both the children to be good, and I remain your husband,

"ROBERT HALL."

That was poor Hall's letter—it had not been sent, and we have no heart to send it now. He will never see the baby's face here; but then God may let him see it up yonder.

I hope to recover and get away from here very soon; I want to join Nat Gardiner's regiment. I have something to avenge now, and I can not bear to wait. Poor Hall's blood is crying to me from the ground; and I want to do it and avenge it for his and Manuel Nichols's wife, up there in Michigan, that his fall has had its compensation. And may God speed the day when this white people's power, for a time—what remains of it—shall be "Buried Alive!"

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to Mr. Mortan's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, Jobbers were obliged to sell and credit every Pen they took.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past Two Years, only one Pen in Fifty has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price as those who live near it.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Premium Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the time spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in this column.

THE MOST ATTRACTIVE COLLECTION
OF
Pianoforte Songs, Ballads, Duets, Quadrilles, Waltzes, &c.
"THE SILVER CHORD."
An elegant volume of two hundred pages. Price, plain binding, $2; cloth, $2 25; full gilt, $3 00. Mailed, postpaid. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Attention Company!

Clark's Cosgarot, a powerful stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of whiskers or moustaches at the regular Government price, $1 00. Sent anywhere free of duty to the Army. Any person using this Cosgarot, and finding it not as represented, by forwarding us the box, can have their money returned them at any time within 12 months from date of purchase. Price $1 00. Sent mailed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money. Address, A. K. CLARK,
F. O. Drawer 118,
Albany, N. Y.

MME. DEMOREST'S IMPERIAL DRESS ELEVATOR, a very durable, convenient, and perfect arrangement for raising the dress in the street or carriage, the fashionable style, uniformly all around, and letting it down at will. Price 50 cents. Sent to all the trade and trimming stores, or sent by mail free on receipt of the price. No. 473 Broadway. Dealers supplied on liberal terms.

Union Playing Cards.

Colored for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. Ornamented cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are the trumps. Sent to any part of the country, free of postage, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. AMERICAN CARD CO., 16 Chambers St., N. Y., and 105 William Street, N. Y.

U. S. 10-40 BONDS.

These Bonds are issued under the Act of Congress of March 4, 1864, which provides that in lieu of so much of the loan authorized by the Act of March 3, 1863, to which this is supplementary, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, on the credit of the United States, not exceeding TWO HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS during the current fiscal year, and to prepare and issue therefor Coupon and Registered Bonds of the United States: and all Bonds issued under this Act shall be EXEMPT FROM TAXATION by or under any State or municipal authority. Subscriptions to these Bonds are received in United States notes or notes of National Banks. They are TO BE REDEEMED IN COIN at the pleasure of the Government, at any period not less than ten nor more than FORTY years from their date, and until their redemption FIVE PER CENT. INTEREST WILL BE PAID IN COIN, on Bonds of not over one hundred dollars annually, and on all other Bonds semiannually.

The interest is payable on the first days of March and September in each year. The semi-annual Coupons are payable as above, and the annual Coupons thereon on the $50 and 100 dollar Bonds are payable on the 1st of March.

Subscribers will receive either Registered or Coupon Bonds, as they may prefer.

Registered Bonds will be issued of the denominations of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), One Thousand Dollars ($1000), Five Thousand Dollars ($5000), and Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000), and Coupon Bonds of the denomination of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), and One Thousand Dollars ($1000).

Subscribers to this loan will have the option of having their Bonds draw interest from March 1, by paying the accrued interest in the coin or in United States notes, or the notes of National Banks, adding fifty per cent. for premium, or receive them drawing interest from the date of subscription and deposit.

As these Bonds are exempt from municipal or State taxation, their value is increased from one to three per cent. per annum, according to the rate of tax levies in various parts of the country.

At the present rate of premium on gold they pay over eight per cent. interest in currency, and are of equal convenience as a permanent investment.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as the various descriptions of U. S. Bonds, and in all other forms of investment, the ability or safety of private parties or stock companies or separate communities only is pledged for payment, while for the debts of the United States the whole property of the country is liable to secure the payment of both principal and interest in coin.

These Bonds may be subscribed for in sums from $50 up to any magnitude, the same terms, and are thus made equally available to the smallest lender and the largest capitalist. They can be converted into money at any moment, and the holder will have the benefit of the interest.

The fact that all duties on imports are payable in specie furnishes a special fund for the payment of interest on all Government Bonds largely in excess of the wants of the treasury for this purpose.

Upon the receipt of subscriptions a certificate of deposit therefor, in duplicate, will be issued, the original of which will be forwarded by the subscriber to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, with a letter stating the kind (registered or coupon) and the denomination of bond required.

Upon the receipt of the original certificates at the Treasury Department, the bonds subscribed for will be transmitted to the subscribers respectively.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States at Washington, and the Assistant Treasurers at New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, and by the

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK, No. 4 Wall St.
SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK, 234 St. and Broadway.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK, Pine St.
SIXTH NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK, 6th Avenue and Broadway.
TENTH NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK.
NATIONAL EXCHANGE BANK OF NEW YORK.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF ALBANY, N. Y.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF TROY, N. Y.
SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF UTICA, N. Y.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SYRACUSE, N. Y.
THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF SYRACUSE, N. Y.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BUFFALO, N. Y.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF WASHINGTON, D. C.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PHILADELPHIA.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BALTIMORE.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW HAVEN, CONN.
SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF NEW HAVEN, CONN.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF HARTFORD, CONN.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW LONDON, CONN.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF STAMFORD, CONN.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PROVIDENCE, R. I.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BOSTON, MASS.
SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF BOSTON, MASS.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF WORCESTER, MASS.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CLEVELAND, O.
SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF CLEVELAND, O.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CINCINNATI, O.
THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF CINCINNATI, O.

And by all National Banks which are depositories of public money. All respectable banks and bankers throughout the country will furnish further information on application, and offered every facility to subscribers.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."
THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS.
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

THE GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not guaranteed, but correspond in size to numbers 3, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 50, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

There are Wood's Stained, Gold-Mounted Gold Pens, with Iridomia Points, the average wear of every one of which will be about a dozen of the best Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not acknowledged.

DIRECTIONS AND WARRANTY.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate size accurately. No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest, Bankers' Shapes on the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are fine, but not extremely fine points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

THE GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 2 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 4th quality.

For $1 25, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 00 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridomia Points, carefully selected, and of the finest quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "2d Quality" we superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1861.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true considerations) any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In regard to the Gold Pens, he hopes to excel all that, previous to opening his New Establishment, he could not obtain, and which have made a Gold Pen the Desirable Pen, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or "Number" and "Quality" of the Pen wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer—whether for Broad-hand or Fine-hand.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk: and to all who send Postage Stamps to charge for registering, in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will generously pay the postage.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, of 15 per cent. on $20, and of 20 per cent. on $40, if sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

Eagle Gas Stove Works.

Summer Cooking Stove.

GAS the CHEAPEST FUEL.

BOIL, BROIL, ROAST, BAKE, TOAST, and do IRONING.

SEND FOR DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE.

H. D. BLAKE,
474 Broadway, N. Y.

The Graefenberg Company's

UTERINE CATHOLICON (Marshall's).
An infallible cure for "Female Weakness," and all Uterine complaints of women.
Price $1 50 per bottle. Five bottles for SIX DOLLARS.
THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS.
The best Pill in the world. Price 25 cents per box for all Bilious and Liver complaints. Price 25 cents per box. Address all orders to J. F. BUDD, M. D.,
Resident Physician GRAEFENBERG COMPANY,
No. 139 Fulton Street, corner of Dutch, New York.
☞ INQUIRE OF DEALERS EVERYWHERE. ☜

Do they Pray for Me at Home? The best song out. Mailed for 25 cents.
O. DITSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm.

This remedy has been used in the family of the proprietor and his friends for many years, and they have resolved him to offer it for sale to the public, feeling confident, after a trial, that it will prove worthy of the confidence of

The cure of Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism it is invaluable; and if, after a fair trial, it fails to cure, the money will be refunded. Price $1 per bottle.

PRINCIPAL DEPOT: No. 164 Tenth Street, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts. Call and examine or the samples sent free by mail. Address, P. GARRETT & CO., Cincinnati, O.

☞ EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTIES continually supplied by the Agents of the New York Weekly Novelette. We do not fail to use this week's number, now ready, universally acknowledged the most spicy and fine weekly now published.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$125 00 each.
100 Gold Watches	70 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches	15 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains	5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 " "	3 00 to 5 00 each.
2000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Jet, and Enamel Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Jet, and Enamel Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 5 00 each.
2000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons	2 00 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Plain Set Rings	3 00 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets	2 00 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'ed Holders	4 00 to 6 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittances amount to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

269 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Richardson's Bazaar, and all places specified by Union troops, should be sent by HARDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Rubbers charged low rates.

New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 212 Broadway, New York, wish Agents in every county and every regiment, for the sale of their new styles of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

DEMOREST'S N. Y. ILLUSTRATED NEWS.—This spicy and valuable Weekly will give some startling novelties this week. Do not fail to see it.

SOMETHING NEW

IN PLAYING CARDS.

LOVE SCENES.

Designs from French Artists.

The above new Card has fifty two beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can also be used the same as ordinary playing cards. One combining pleasure with amusement. Price 50 cents and two red stamps, and send for sample pack. 25 per dozen. Liberal discount by gross to dealers. H. A. CASWELL, 99 Nassau St., New York.

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS, "THE LEAF PAPER OF AMERICA.—Everybody and his wife are in ecstacies, and are complimenting and his wife are in ecstacies, and are complimenting DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED NEWS, as the most spicy, interesting, and live illustrated paper ever published. It needs only to be seen to be appreciated.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS vs. FEVERS.

Fevers are caused by an effect of Nature to throw out from the body poison that has been absorbed, either from another body, from checked perspiration of our own body, or from the atmosphere. Putrid exhalations, whether from living or dead bodies, or from swamps, or marshy vegetable matter, will produce fever. The GENERAL EFFECT IS TO RENDER THE POISONS OF LIFE. Should these exhalations form part of the air we breathe, they are carried into our fluids through the lungs, and actually act as a CORROSIVE POISON, which seriously disorders the digestive organs, and makes the blood impure, and circulates in the liver, and particularly in the stomach and bowels. If timely medicine is not administered to unload these organs, and unless what has been received is set free from its diseased actions as to ulcerate, and then no means will scarcely save life. What shall we do under these circumstances? Why you have an effect with fulness, pain in the head, confusion of ideas, dizziness of sight, pain in the back, loins, and side, sickness of stomach, or a general weariness, take at once four or six of and repeat every four hours until they have operated well upon the bowels.

BRANDRETH'S VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL PILLS,

Remember, this precaution, produced by these celebrated Pills, does not weaken, but the patient is usually stronger, because they have removed the cause of weakness, which CORRUPT HUMORS WHICH WITHERS DOWN HIS LIFE FRENZIED PILE. This evacuation of the bowels is most necessary in all malignant diseases, but more particularly in Yellow Fever, and all fevers and violent diseases generally; for the stomach and bowels are the parts most effected in all cases of a severe character, whether they appear so or not, as is proved by what is brought away. But, by purging them with Brandreth's Pills, their putrid contents are thoroughly discharged, and counteract their bad effects. This timely evacuation not only cleanses the bowels, but

THE BLOOD IS ALSO FREED FROM A LOAD OF DEPRAVED HUMORS.

I have often noticed, in cases of fever, that, after a few doses of Pills, the vital power was restored that a gentle sweat has broken out and carried off all tensions of fever, and the patient has been well in a few days.

DR. BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

Let not an ill-timed fear about the weakness of the body prevent the Pills being given and continued until the bowels have been properly evacuated, and the blood cleansed; for it is this very weakness which calls for this treatment, which nature ever attempts, but is often not in sufficient strength unaided by medicine to do. Believe me, ye sick, it is the only method by which your lives can be CERTAINLY SAVED. I can affirm that I have given Brandreth's Pills in the most severe fevers, when the patient was so weak he could not walk across the room without help, and the pulse so feeble as to be scarcely felt, and the general prostration of nature, and, after the Pills had operated, he was stronger, as was evident to himself and all around him.

The U. S. 10-40 Loan.

Instructions to the National Banks acting as loan agents were not issued from the Treasury at Washington until March 26th. The Banks did not generally begin to receive subscriptions until one week later, and in distant parts of the country have not yet begun to work. Into the subscriptions reported by mail to the Treasury up to April 23d, amount to over $25,000,000, and the sum actually subscribed but not yet reported at that date is much greater. The attempt of interested parties to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to raise the rate of interest on this loan has signally failed. The experience of the last few weeks gives us every reason to believe that all the money the Treasury desires to borrow, can be obtained for five per cent. interest in gold.

Albums for the Army.

Our New Pocket Album,

holding sixteen pictures, and cost at

RICHARDSON'S,

is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.

Send by mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of Seventy-five Cents.

SAMUEL BOWLES & COMPANY,

Photograph Album Manufacturers,

Springfield, Mass.

$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines. We will pay $75 a month to all who can obtain sold, or employ agents who will work for the above wages, and all others $50 a month. Address

D. B. HERRINTON & CO., Detroit, Mich.

OLD BEES JOKE'S:

ITS ORIGIN FIRST AND ONLY GENUINE.

Comprising all the issues, complete, of "Brickbat," being the Jests and Squibs of President Lincoln, written by Redpath-Cross, and Agent-Nash, post-paid, 35 cents.

T. B. DAWLEY, Publisher, 15 & 18 Park Row, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address

SECOR & CO., Alfred, Maine.

ICE CREAM.

And the Philosophy of its Manufacture.

A small treatise, with valuable receipts on this subject, will be sent FREE, by mail, to persons who will send their address to E. KITCHAM & CO., 999 Pearl St., N. Y.

THE TOILET

Preparations of JOSEPH BURNETT & Co., of Boston, are the "creme de la creme." Sold every where.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Concentrated Rose Water (a new discovery in perfumery, and wholly unlike rose) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of a dollar. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 809 Broadway, New York.

COPY.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 19, 1864.

R. T. BARRETT, New York.—Dear Sir: Inclosed I send you a check for $36. You will please send me six boxes of your French Chemical Ointment Soap. I wish two for myself, two for a friend, and two for a grocery merchant in our city, whom I want to keep it for sale hereafter, and he wishes to try it. I first ordered it from you three or four years ago, and have used it ever since. My wife thinks she can not do without it; she informs me when the girl is enabled to do her washing in half the time required with ordinary soap, and her clothes cleaner and whiter. We are both fully satisfied that gotches like shirts, or other clothing requiring much rubbing, can fully one half longer or more when washed with the Exercise Soap, as so much rubbing is saved; and a still greater saving is made in the wear of such, in not boiling the clothes. This matter of boiling clothes has been pointed out for a long time; the hard lye clothes boiled all her life, and could hardly part with it, even though it was entirely unnecessary, and that clothes unboiled were a great deal cleaner and whiter, unless when boiling seemed to boil the dirt into the clothes, or to make them yellow, but when left without boiling, they were white as snow. I intend to get a number of my grocery merchants to keep it hereafter, so we can get it without sending to Boston. Should the saving per cent in case of fifty pounds each, strike me, and I will send you the balance. I am, very truly yours,

JOHN GIBSON.

Send by Merchants' or Great Western Dispatch, to

J. S. DUNN & CO., Indianapolis, Indiana.

N.B.—Above letter refers to R. T. BARRETT'S celebrated NEW YORK STEAM SOAP, manufactured at 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., New York, and for sale every where.

G. L. & J. B. KELTY

WINDOW SHADE

MANUFACTURERS.

359 BROADWAY.

White Holland for Shades. Only Agents for Bray's Fixtures.

AMERICAN NEEDLE CO., 462 Broadway, N. Y., Needle Manufacturers for the Sewing-Machines, Bartlett's Barbed Head Needle, Hemming, Gilt, Cloak, Sack, Plain, &c.

THE SILK GUIDE AND NEEDLE SETTER, for all Sewing-Machines, price $1 00 by both. Sent free by mail, with directions. J. W. BARTLETT, 462 Broadway, N. Y.

To Wounded Soldiers.

The bounty due to soldiers who have been discharged on account of wounds received in battle is now being paid at THE UNITED STATES ARMY AGENCY, 64 BROADWAY, corner of Rector, opposite Trinity Church. The discharge must be presented by the soldier; when application is made by heirs, they must be prepared to give satisfactory proof of their claim.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications. Novels: No. 1, The Hunters. 2. The Trapper's Retreat. 3. The Veiled Huguenot. 4. Uncle Tom's Cabin. 5. Uncle Tom's Cabin with the Pirate Scenes. 6. The Man-Eaters. 7. Mysteries of the Sea. 8. Ned Perry. 9. The Lost Ship-Slaver. 10. The Turtle-Catcher. 11. The Hunter's Trip. 12. The Lost Whaler. 13. The Pirate Wreckers of the Isles. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, 10c. each.

GEORGE MUNRO, 17 Vandewater St., N. Y.

Excelsior Music Book. Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, for violin, flute, and piano, 25c. each. The latest popular music, such as "FAUST MARCH," "FREEMAN'S WAKE," "Fred Wallace," "Lucy of Pompeii," "Lone grave," "An Irish sead reply." Leyung, I think of thee, &c. Price 25c. each. Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, for violin, flute, and piano. ELEMENTS. Descriptive price list sent on receipt of stamp.

GEORGE MUNRO, 189 Bowery, N. Y.

Eczema in Sills, Gloves, Ribbons, &c.

HEGEMAN & CO'S BENZINE removes Paint, Grease Spots, Tar, Pitch, &c., and cleans Silks, Gloves, &c., equal to new. Only 25c. a bottle. Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods Stores. HEGEMAN & CO., Nos. 288, 290, 292, 294, 176 Fulton street, corner of 4th Av., New York.

ARMY BADGES.

SOLID SILVER AND GOLD BADGES of every description constantly on hand, and NEW STYLES to order. Also a BADGES constantly on hand, and NEW STYLES to order. Also a BANNER & PENNANT, Silk Fringed, and Lettered, engraved on the outside, in solid silver, at $15 00; FLAGS of gold, $8 00; Gold Pens, with Silver or Rhoad Pencils, $1 00 each. Sent by mail. Agents wanted.

S. KEITH, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

LIFE PAINTING.

New Spring Styles for 1864.

G. L. & J. B. KELTY 359 Broadway N.Y.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The Spring number of this magnificent Fashion Magazine is unusually attractive, a brilliant display of fresh novelties for the Spring Fashion, and some unusual and extraordinary attractions. Every one is a large Double Mammoth Fashion Plate, twice the usual size, and the most beautiful Fashion Plate ever offered in a magazine in the world. The Spring number also contains SIX Full Size Patterns, and a variety of other valuable information, information, &c., all for only 30 cents; or yearly subscription, $3, with a present of One Dollar's worth of extra Patterns. Do not fail to subscribe immediately. The Spring number will be ready for delivery on Saturday, for $1 75. Arthur's or Peterson's Magazine and the Mirror of Fashions, $3 75. Harper's Lady's Book and Mirror of Fashions, $2 75, less than the cost of Godey's alone. Splendid premiums for Clubs. Address Mme. DEMOREST, No. 473 Broadway, N. Y.

DR. B. C. PERRY,

DERMATOLOGIST,

49 Bond Street, New York,

Formerly of 29 Winter Street, Boston, treats successfully all Diseases of the Skin, Loss of Hair, and Shaving or Blanching. Also, removes Moth Freckles, and other Discolorations from the face, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultations free.

For particulars send stamp for Circular.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Self-Inker. Price $1800.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

"Good Looking."

PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHRENOLOGY, Physiognomy, and Psychology, with characters of Phrenological Subjects, given in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. 15 cents No. or $1 50 a year. For 60 cents the Portrait Double Nos. for January, February, March, and April sent by first post, by FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Enameled Chamber

FURNITURE

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, walnut and chestnut, plain and ornamental, in sets or single pieces. Also Mattresses and Feather Beds. WARREN WARD, 277 Canal St., N. Y.

5000

Agents Wanted,

TO INTRODUCE OUR

NEW GOLD PEN.

This gold pen is something entirely new, and is now offered to the public for the first time, and is made in the entirely new process, enabling us to offer them very cheap. Every pen is warranted and will be sent by return mail, post-paid, and to possess all the elasticity and writing qualities of the highest priced gold pen made. Single pen sent by mail on receipt of the following prices:

WITH SILVER-MOUNTED ROSEWOOD HOLDERS, IN MOROCCO CASES.

No. 2. Medium Pen and Holder, each 50 cents.
No. 3. Large, " " each $1 00.
No. 4. Engraving Pen and Holder, each $1 25.

Great inducements to Agents to form Clubs. Send for our Circular. GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 18 Broadway, N. Y.

WATCHES.

The Great New Army Watch, especially for Soldiers, in heavy and beautifully finished solid silver hunting cases, genuine Lever movements, ruby jewelled, and warranted as represented, and a perfect time-keeper, only $18. Instantly on hand. Watches of every description. Agents wanted throughout the country. Send for our circular. Sample Watches sent free. Postage, by the case, $2 38; Registering, 20 cents.

WARRANTEE.

We warrant every Watch to be as represented, or money refunded. A written warrantee if required.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Importers of Watches, No. 18 Broadway, N. Y.

50,000 AGENTS WANTED.

B. T. HAYWARD,

Manufacturing Jeweler, 209 Broadway, N. Y.

I will send a sample of either of the New Artillery, Cavalry, Pontonier, Engineer, or Naval Fits for $1 50 or a Full Dress Shield, or Officer's Cap Ornament, for $3. Company Fits with your Name, Reg., and Co. handsomely engraved thereon, for $1. Send for Wholesale Illustrated Circular.

CARPET WARP.

WOOL TWINE.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 94 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

BADGES. BADGES.

Solid Silver Company Pins (engraved to order), $1 00 ea.
" " Corps Badges " " $1 50 "
" " Cavalry " " $1 50 "
" " Artillery " " $1 50 "

Send for our Illustrated Catalogue. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO., 269 Broadway, New York.

Great Chance to make Money!

$650.000 of WATCHES, JEWELRY, &c., given away. Every Subscriber to the Literary Agent purchases 100 Tickets will receive FREE a Gold Watch, Gold Chain, Pin, Ring, Pencil, Pen and Silver Set. ENGRAVING, by which $10 invested will yield $1,000 in Gifts, Watches, Jewelry, Silver Ware, and ENGRAVING than in any other business. For particulars of SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS, send for NEW CIRCULAR.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 & 38 Beekman St., N. Y.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW

A little of every thing relating to the human system, diet, and marriage, &c., &c., send for a new and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Anatomy, Digestion, Nutrition, Animal Growth, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver, and Pulmonary Complaints, Constipation, Affections of the Urinary Organs, Diseases of the Female Organs of Generation, Barrenness, Impotency, Sexual Diseases, Abortion, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Nervous System, Organic Weakness, Hypochondria, Hysteria, Spermatorrhœa, Marriage and Sexual Philosophy, the Laws governing Offspring, Boarding Schools, Children, Infancy, Boyhood, Youth, Manhood, Old Age, Death, and the Married, and a thousand of value to mankind and womankind. Any lady or gentleman, by mail, postage paid, on receipt of fifty cents. Address Dr. R. FOOTE, M.D., 129 Broadway, New York.

25 Card Photographs for $1. Made of the best material, and will be sent secured to any address on receipt of price in U. S. Currency. Address

C. ROLLINS, Box 1,000, Penfield, Mass.

DEMOREST'S N. Y. ILLUSTRATED NEWS, a Weekly Journal of Illustrations on all live subjects, and a Novelties and Fashion Sheet of the most desirable prehensive sense. Published 90 Beekman Street. Sold everywhere.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell the largest and most valuable Map of the United States ever issued in the world, ten kinds. Old hands at the business will do well to try a sample kit. Send a red stamp for circular.

JOHN GIBSON, No. 32 Beekman St., N. Y.

The Printer's Devil; a handsome, illustrated, humorous weekly paper, will be sent one year on trial for 25 cents. Address "Printer's Devil, 115 Nassau St., New York."

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Have Just published:

THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON. A Novel. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Barchester Towers," "Doctor Thorne," "Framley Parsonage," "The Bertrams," "The Three Clerks," "Miss Mackenzie and the Spanish Main," &c. Illustrated by Millais. 8vo. Cloth, $2 50; paper, $2 00.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $3 00
Two Copies for one Year 5 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Ten Subscribers at $3 00 each, or 11 Copies for $30.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $6 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Two Years 8 00
One Copy for Five Years 16 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers at $3 75 each, or 11 Copies for $37 50. Prepaid invariably in advance.

TERMS TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Sixty cents per line for inside, and One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

[AT THE FAIR:—SCENE: Very pretty girl pinning bouquet on Young Swell's coat.]

YOUNG SWELL. "Twenty-five cents for the bouquet, I think you said; here's a Two-Dollar Greenback."

YOUNG LADY. "Yes; twenty-five cents for the bouquet: a dollar for pinning it on your coat: and seventy-five cents for the pin. That's just right: thank you. Can't I show you something else?"

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

ALSO, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street, N. Y., 31 Rue de Chateau d'Eau, Paris.

Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

Shults' Onguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent post-paid, for 50 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

TROPICAL BALSAM

Prepared by Carreno Brothers and Co.

Manufacturers of Perfumery, Soaps, Pomades, Hair Dyes, &c., &c., 41 Park Row, New York.

Good News for the Army.

Heretofore we will send, post-paid, any of our BLOOD-GRATIFIER BRUSHES ordered by soldiers for themselves or friends, giving an album of the full value of themselves or sons.

Our Albums have the reputation of being unique to all others in beauty and durability, and range in price from 50 cts. to $50.

Our catalogue of

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS

now embraces about 8000 officers, kings and many, statesmen, actors, copies of works of art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our assortment of these is very extensive, including a great variety of the present war.

Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 Broadway, New York.

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

AMERICAN METALLIC COLLARS

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in the market. Send 31 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

A Bad Breath.—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever gotten. The subject is so delicate, your modest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentrifice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin pure and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 109 and 107 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

Davis Collamore & Co.,

479 Broadway, below Broome St.

IMPORTERS OF FINE CHINA, WEDGEWOOD, PARIAN, &c., &c. ENGRAVED GLASS to order in great variety.

COLORED STONE CHINA DINING SETS.

WASHINGTON, March 28, 1864.

GENTLEMEN:—You may use the sentence about "Cuticle Cure" when I wrote to Mr. Trowbridge. The book merits higher praise, and I have heard it more highly praised by discerning judges.

Yours very truly, S. P. CHASE.

Messrs. J. E. TILTON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

What Secretary CHASE says of the New Method.

"The inflated condition of my right eye has prevented my reading or writing much for "Cuticle Cure" I could not help reading, however. It interested and impressed me profoundly."

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR DYE.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR DEPILATORY.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.

Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and beauty of appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, injury of head, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

Hoyt's Imperial Coloring Cream.

Superior to any Hair Dressing in use. Oils and Colors the Hair at the same time. Changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

N.B.—Ladies' French hair-dresser in attendance to apply the Hiawatha.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

USE STERLING'S AMBROSIA

IT WILL MAKE YOUR HAIR GROW THICK AND LONG.

BUCKLEY'S MELODIST.

A COLLECTION of about ONE HUNDRED of the most popular Songs of the day, Words and Music, bound in cloth. Also a large assortment of "Ethiopian Melodies" constantly being issued. "Break it gently to my mother." "Sweet Bird of Home." "Where is your home dear?" "Is there room at home?" "Her bright smile haunts me still!" "How can I leave thee?" "Long away days." "Maple leaf for bottle over!" "Rock me to sleep, mother!" "Sound of a distant drum!" "There's music in the sky!" "Is midnight hour!" "Rock Brigade!" "The Corps!" "The Gipsey's Warning." "Go weeping, my child!" "Gone! Hallelujah!" "Invalid Corps!" "Jeff Davis's Dream!" "Mother company." "Mother, watch for me!" "Watch by the sea." &c. &c. Copies mailed, post-paid, on receipt of 20 cents.

HENRY TOLMAN & CO., Publishers, 291 Washington Street, Boston. For sale by the AMERICAN NEWS COMPANY, New York.

IVORY JEWELRY.

A fine assortment made and imitation of CORAL and JET Ornaments from $1 00. RARE LOCKETS, all the Popular Patterns, Cameos, &c. pair. New Patterns Pearl $1 00 pair. Send for a circular with full price list. Address C. WILLINGS, 537 Canton St., N. Y., Sign of the GOLDEN ELEPHANT. TRADE SUPPLIED.

$50 AMERICAN $50 LEVER WATCHES.

TRADE MARK, P. S. BARTLETT, WALTHAM, MASS., FULL JEWELLED, WARRANTED, IN 6 OZ. COIN SILVER HUNTING-CASES, GOOD JOINTS, FANCY TURN PIN, FOR $50.

ALSO EVERY VARIETY of most Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bill. For collection, on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches, 208 Broadway New York.

BENJAMIN'S RUPTURE ELIDE TRUSS challenges the world to equal it in retaining and perfectly curing HERNIA, or RUPTURE. Office, 1 Barclay Street, opposite the Astor House.

Soldiers of the Union!!!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD-KNOWN AND WORLD-TRIED REMEDIES

KNOWN AS

Professor Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay.

Your Life is Valuable!!

Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives, and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health!

For 35 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40.

With, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the greenest and richest old age.

The following are genuine letters, on file for inspection at this office,

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,

FORT HAMILTON, Long Island, }

FORT RICHMOND, Staten Island, }

FORT LAFAYETTE, }

FORT WADSWORTH, }

FORT TOMPKINS, }

FORT COLUMBUS, }

FORT SCHUYLER, }

FORT HAMILTON, }

FORT RICHMOND, }

FORT LAFAYETTE, }

FORT WADSWORTH, }

FORT TOMPKINS, }

FORT COLUMBUS, }

FORT SCHUYLER, }

FOLEY ISLAND, S. C., November 26, 1863.

PROF. HOLLOWAY—SIR: Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies. Address

Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,

89th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA.,

January 7, 1864. }

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills and Salve, but I never was in need of them until now, I want to try them, as Diarrhœa is very prevalent at the present time: send me the worth of the enclosed.

Yours, &c.,

JOSEPH WALSH,

Co. F, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

FUSANIA, Tennessee,

December 28, 1863. }

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dysprepsia, and neck cure.

Yours, &c.,

THOMAS F. TURNER,

Co. I, 3d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., }

January 18, 1864. }

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find 50 cents: for which I wish you to send me some of your valuable Pills; send them by mail. I enclose 10 cents for postage.

Address, 1st REGT. HALL,

Co. D., 6th N. H. Vols.,

Fort Boyd, S. C.

CAMP OF 3RD EXCELSIOR BRIGADE,

January 22, 1864. }

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

SIR: Please send me for the enclosed 50 cents the worth of it in Pills; enclosed find 10 cents to pay postage, and you will oblige. Address,

YOURS, &c.,

SERGT. WM. POWERS,

Co. E, 5th Regt. Excelsior Brigade,

Washington, D. C.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C. }

January 18, 1864. }

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills.

Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM CHRISTY,

Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.,

Morris Island, S. C.

CAUTION.

If the reader of this "notice" can not get a box of Pills or Ointment from the drug store in his place, let him write to me, 80 Maiden Lane, enclosing the price, and I will mail a box free of expense. Many dealers will not keep my medicines in stock because they can not make as much profit as on other persons' make. 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 per box or pot.

10,000 Copies sold in One Week.

THE NATIONAL ALMANAC

And Annual Record for 1864.

Containing recent, reliable, and ample statistical relations to the United States, the States, and Cities, and all Foreign countries.

It is an Encyclopedia of useful and interesting information, and is indispensable to all who read or think.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, with gilt back, $1 50. Sent free by mail. Canvassers and agents wanted. Address, GEO. W. CHILDS, Publisher,

628 and 630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

For sale by Booksellers and News Agents everywhere.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

DRY AND GROUND IN OIL

in several dark shades.

For English and Gothic Cottages, Outbuildings, &c.

ROBERT REYNOLDS, Agent, No. 14 Maiden Lane.

A Treatise on MILITARY SURVEYING,

Theoretical and Practical, with a Description of Surveying Instruments. By G. H. MENDELL, Captain Engineers, U. S. Army. With numerous illustrations. $5. Sent free by mail on receipt of price. Just published by D. VAN NOSTRAND, 192 Broadway, New York.

WATCHES.

AMERICAN SILVER HUNTING CASED WATCHES, from $32 to $75.

SWISS SILVER HUNTING CASED WATCHES, from $16 to $95.

ENGLISH " $35 to $75.

AMERICAN GOLD HUNTING CASED WATCHES, from $75 to $150.

ALL WARRANTED AS TIMEKEEPERS, and every article to be worth the amount charged for the quality sent.

Orders large and small faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.

T. B. BYNNER, 195 Broadway, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever, Cap, and Pin Set, enameled dial, set hands, Swedish Movements, and correct time-keeper.

A single one sent free by mail in neat case, for only $7.

A best SILVER WATCH, same as above, specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, for only $7.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

OR, COMRADE WATCH.

A SUPERB "Extra Double Plated" engraved or engine turned Hunting Case Watch, Maple Spring, "Genuine English Jeweled or Nickel Movements," "A 1 Timekeeper" Independent Action, Self Balance, and has a neat MINIATURE COMRADE with in the cap and attached to the movements, making it a "Correct Guide" to the Soldier or Traveler. Perfect time-keeper, "warranted one year." WILL STAND ALOX, and is so

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch,

Used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

"French Lepine Double Plated Stemwinder of 18k. 20 carats of fine European Timekeeper," 15-16 a nearly here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to stand the wear and tear of soldiers in the field." Illustrated Price list free. Correct timepieces; and for elegance and fine finish they will be found unsurpassed by $150 watch.

Address HENRY D. NORTON & CO., Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

$11 Watches. $12

"AN ELEGANT WATCH."

Set in very heavy Silver hunting cases of splendid finish, Silver capped, ruby jeweled, fine English movements, gun white dial, and steel polished hands. Warranted a correct timekeeper, and promptly forwarded, together with an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to stand the wear and tear of soldiers in the field." Illustrated Price list free. Correct timepieces; and for elegance and fine finish they will be found unsurpassed by $150 watch.

Address HENRY D. NORTON & CO., Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready made or to measure, at $18, $16, and $40 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts sent free to any address.

Five every where.

The ENGLISH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3 00, $3 75, and $4 50 each: all cut one yard long. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of $4 50 each. All extra postage for each shirt.

Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE.

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned with a wet sponge, and are

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cts. each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 75 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

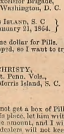
S. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers Discharged

For Wounds, $100 Bounty paid by applying at once. Blanks and information sent by mail.

SOLES, BROWN & CO., 71 Nassau Place, N. Y. City.

From the "Louisville Journal."



We wish to say to our friends among the military men—and their name is legion—that the "Soldier's Friend" is without a rival.

THE GREAT DEVIL KILLER, THE GREATEST MEDICINE OF THE AGE. Every one wants it: the army surgeons want it: the hospitals want it, the sick want it; and all our volunteer nurses—God bless them—want it, and ought to have it in their stockings in their errands of mercy. It is just up in neat boxes of two dozen each, securely packed for wounds. Can be transported over any road without danger of breaking.

$15 Per Day, $20

And a Gold Hunting-Case Watch given free to all agents who will sell our Original and "Only" Copyright Yarn Size Stationery Prize Package. One of our Wonderful Prize Packages will be sent free by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Address

SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me.

Scurvy and Scrofulous Eruptions will soon cover the bodies of those brave men who are fighting their country's battles, unless they feed well. Food, nourishing wine will make rat havoc with the strongest; therefore we recommend every soldier to abound with DOLLIVER'S ANTISCORBUTIC OINTMENT. It is a certain cure for every kind of skin disease. 18 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 per pot.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. VIII.—No. 385.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

REBEL ATTACK ON OUR GUN-BOATS IN THE RED RIVER.—[SEE PAGE 310.]

THE SHARP-SHOOTER.

SOMETIMES I climb to the top of a tree,
And sometimes I hide in a thicket,
Or, crouching low in the tall, lank grass,
I fire on the enemy's picket.

All's fair, it is said, in love and war,
And both are concerned in my story;
To the lover, why, life and love are all—
To the soldier death is glory.

'Twas down in Virginia; the sky was fair,
And the hour of noon was nearing;
The sun poured down with a Southern fire;
And I stood at the edge of a clearing.

While opposite lurked a rebel in grey,
Where the open space was bounded;
By a dark wood; and shrill and sharp
The crack of our rifles sounded.

Then a deadly aim I took at my foe—
Now hear to the end of my story,
And I'll tell you what to a lover is love,
And how death to the soldier is glory.

"Advance!" came the word along our lines;
Then woke the echoes infernal!
And clear and loud above crash and roar
Rang the voice of our grim old Colonel.

I glanced as I passed at my fallen foe—
Do you wonder if I faltered?
'Twas the man who married the girl I loved,
Though his face was strangely altered.

I rather had lain where he lay that day,
On the field, all rigid and gashed;
If she had but loved me as she loved him—
And so ends this sharp-shooter's story.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1864.

THE SITUATION.

THE summer opens upon a situation which is every where most interesting. In Europe the question of general war will be virtually decided by the success of our campaigns. Europe is undoubtedly ripe for revolution. The Governments mistrust each other, and the people watch the Governments. Austria and Prussia have rushed into a war with Denmark, in order that they may continue their hold on Germany and thwart the free constitutional tendencies of Denmark, which would inevitably affect the German frontier and be felt in Berlin and Vienna. The London Conference will doubtless agree upon some way to avoid a continuance of the war, which is a threat to the present condition of affairs, and which makes Europe more sensitive to the chances of our struggle. In England the ministry of Lord PALMERSTON, strongly intrenched for many years in the lymph of the British people, now begins to totter. It has been defeated in Parliament. Even the liberal journals prophecy its fall, and it has yielded to the Tory assaults in the resignation of Mr. STANSFELD. Meanwhile the Queen is losing her popularity by her long seclusion, nor does she regain it by announcing that she can no longer fulfill the merely ceremonial duty of her position. Ceremonial duty! And your Majesty's self—? The Prince of Wales, the dull-looking youth who came to us four years ago, is inclined to Toryism. The Tory Lancashire cotton mill continues to grind, as PALMERSTON goes out DERBY will come in. It is always a choice of cake or smoke in England. If they can not have the traditional Whig they must take the traditional Tory. Whether there is any secret reason for the Queen's privacy is not generally understood. But it is not easy to forget, under the circumstances, the rumors that have been always whispered about the misfortune of insanity in the royal family.

But while there is evidently the sign of change in England, it is amusing to watch the recent conduct of the governing families. GARIBALDI, who is the incarnation of the popular revolution in Europe, was announced as on his way to England. Instantly public expectation was on the alert, and the papers fell to writing and speculating. If London is not to see the most formidable riot of many years, said one of them, let the Government be well prepared. GARIBALDI is the Anti-POPE, and a commotion of the Romanist masses was feared. But, also, GARIBALDI is the Anti-LOUIS NAPOLEON, and the friend of MAZZINI, and ENGLAND had not just condemned MAZZINI (if he could only catch him) to transportation for an alleged attempt at assassination; and England had refused the conference proposed by the Emperor. Poor John Bull was dreadfully perplexed. What could be done to keep right with every party? First, Mr. STANSFELD, a personal friend of MAZZINI's, had to go out of the Government. Then the enthusiastic GARIBALDI, and immediately called upon STANSFELD and MAZZINI. John, at his wit's end treats the Liberator as Mr. PICKWICK treated the horse, of which he was mortally afraid, and which he could not mount. "Poor fellow!" said Mr. PICKWICK, soothingly. "Poor old horsy!" and he revolved around him in the effort to liberate his possible wrath, until he declared that it was like a horrible dream. So John Bull pats GARIBALDI: "Good and great man, please come and dine with PALMERSTON, and ride in the DUKE OF SUTHERLAND'S carriage; and three cheers for the noble patriot who says that he wishes no political demonstration! No, no? of course not. Let's go to the navy-yard. Let us show all the sights to this great and good LIBERATOR, who has promised to behave so sweetly!" and while he shouts this cheerful speech he whispers to Lord CLARENDON, "For Heaven's sake, run over to Paris and tickle LOUIS NAPOLEON, and tell him that it is nothing but a tub to this terrible whale of the people; and that John Bull now, as in the time of CHARLES and JAMES SECOND, the great mystery, is the most humble servant of his dear ally!" That the noble and best men in England see with shame and sorrow that KOSSUTH was right, and that Great Britain is humiliated by France, is beyond question. They feel as we Americans felt when the policy of our Government, a few years since, was to bully the world and truckle at home to the meanest despotism.

France, meanwhile, crosses the sea, and enthrones herself in Mexico in the person of MAXIMILIAN. When she is once there, and has ascertained that we do not assent to the Mexican conquest and subjugation, she will be ready, directly or indirectly, to become a party to our war. The assent of the Governments of Europe to French participation in our affairs will be based upon their natural earnest wish that a popular Government may conspicuously fail; for our success would be an inspiration to the people of Europe to undertake what is coolly contemplated by the aristocratic class. On the other hand, any European interference in our war would be the signal for the rising of the people all over the European continent.

Thus every where the most momentous movements undoubtedly depend upon the issue of our campaigns; and by a curious fortune General GRANT has become a pivotal man. Yet in any case there is for us no cause of profound apprehension. If he fails, and France in any way interferes, even with the tacit assent of the great Powers, the people of the free States will rise as they have not yet risen. What France did in the Revolutionary time, namely, maintain herself against domestic intrigue and foreign combination upon contiguous soil, that the United States are perfectly capable of surpassing. Every European State will suddenly bristle with our friends and allies. On the other hand, if GRANT succeeds, LOUIS NAPOLEON will bow himself out of Mexico as gracefully possible.

In all these speculations upon contingencies and possibilities the true ground of faith in the issue lies, for a loyal American citizen, in the good sense of the people. The history of the war is the history of the steady development of that good sense. From the beginning, with apprehension, and open hostility to the people and their purpose. But that purpose was never clearer, nor the popular mind more resolved than at this moment.

WORDS.

IN the blessed days when that incorruptible patriot, FERNANDO WOOD, was lamenting to ROBERT TOOMBS that he could not send him rifles to shoot down the Black Republicans, a good deal said about "coercing" States. The right of secession was not exactly clear to some minds, but the wrong of "coercing" was plain. In other words, it was doubtful to these minds whether the Government of the United States had the right to enforce its laws; or, in truer words, whether secession was constitutional—but whether the only clearly constitutional thing was to connive at the destruction of the Constitution.

The word "coerce" played a great part in the debates of those days; but since the first battle of Bull Run it has gone out of fashion. Since the American people, namely, have addressed themselves to the maintenance of the Union and Government we have not heard so much of the Constitutional duty of submitting to national rule. But another word has arisen to take the rose for which the word "coercion" was employed. The new word is "subjugation." Mr. LOMAS informed us in Parliament that what the alternative is now concession of the success of the rebellion, or the subjugation of the rebels. He calls them States, but that does not alter the fact.

We beg to ask Mr. LOMAS if there has ever been any other alternative? Either the rebellious citizens of the United States are to be compelled by force of arms, and by every other effective measure, to submit to the Government, or they are to overthrow the Government. There is no middle ground, and there never has been. The insurrection has taken the proportions of a war. It is treated of necessity as a war. All warlike methods are properly invoked. The struggle has endured now for three years. But it still remains what it was at first—an armed and powerful insurrection of citizens of the United States against their Government; and either that Government will subjugate the insurgents, or the insurgents will subjugate the Government. The word subjugate means bringing under the yoke. And that is exactly the business in which we are now engaged. The rebels are being brought under the yoke; that is, the authority of the Government.

If the question is asked, "What then becomes of the assent which is declared to be the basis of the Government?" the reply is, that it is the assent of the people collectively which is intended. When a majority have created a Government by common consent which provides for its own amendment and change, no portion of that people, without speaking in the prescribed method of amendment, can insist that their interest shall prevail by arms over the interest of the whole. Nor in that case is any revolt new that was seen ever given, while to-day those who do not assent are brutally murdered. When it is said that the Government rests upon common consent, it is not meant that every citizen is at liberty to obey or disobey the laws. If he disobey he justly pays the penalty. If the County of Chautauqua should refuse to obey the laws of New York, what would New York do? She would compel the citizens of New York living in Chautauqua County to submit to the laws, exactly as the United States are compelling the citizens of the United States living in the State of Georgia to obey the laws. For the Government of the United States exists, or it does not. If it does, its first duty is to enforce itself against armed citizens in rebellion, and to subjugate them; that is, to compel them to yield to the laws which they, in common with all other citizens, have made.

This proposition was formerly called coercion. It is now called subjugation. In both cases it is exactly the same thing. It is the forcible maintenance of the authority of the Government. ALEXANDER HAMILTON long ago declared what all experience confirms, that the vigor of government is essential to the security of liberty. This will henceforth be the first lesson in our political primer.

THE FREEDMEN.

IF our conduct toward the colored race in this country during the war has been harsh, unkind, uncertain, and most sadly just, how noble and generous have been the sentiments! Despised, hated as an inferior race, as less than human, as properly enslaved and degraded, the history of these three years is full of stories of their bravery, humanity, and unfailing fidelity. And while their bearing as soldiers is now beyond question there is not a more touching and important, and that is their temper and capacity as freemen. This point is touched in a most timely and able paper in the North American Review, which we commend to the study of the cotton question. We commend its clear and conclusive summary to the most careful attention of those who wish to understand fully the prospects of the cotton supply hereafter, and the capacity of the freedmen as successful cultivators.

We may add to the testimony of the article that of a gentleman who for a year past has had several hundred freedmen in his employ on the Mississippi River. He affirms that he sees in every respect superior as a working class to the "mean whites" of the South; that they are docile, faithful, and entirely trustworthy precedent; that they display the utmost eagerness to acquire useful information; and that they are in every instinct loyal to the Government and its institutions. He says that in the cotton plantations worked by this gentleman nearly every laborer has grouped about his cabin—in addition to the family of actual kindred—dependents, exhibiting at once an appreciation of his home, and a sentiment of taste suggestive of a deeper nature than the mere animal enjoyment which will allow to his race. In the cultivation of his "patch" of ground, and the raising of poultry and pigs, he takes the greatest delight, giving every encouragement to his children to grow up to this pleasing work. In a word, the freedman, whenever an opportunity is afforded him, is demonstrating that he is a man, with the instincts, feelings, and yearnings of a man, and anxious most of all to qualify himself for the responsibilities and duties to which he has been at last restored.

The manifest desire of very many of the freedmen in Government service and the employ of planters on the Mississippi to save the proceeds of their toil has suggested to General THOMAS and others, as we are trustworthily informed, the propriety of establishing savings-banks on the various plantations, in which the laborers may deposit their earnings, and so provide for their future contingencies. Fourteen dollars per first class under the present regulations receive twenty-five dollars a month with rations; and as they for the most part support their old and infirm, as well as their small children, from the sale of the products of their humeries and gardens, they are able to put by the greater portion of this amount, and with proper encouragement would immediately do so. It is to be hoped that General THOMAS, who has so far exhibited a most benevolent interest in the welfare of the unfortunate class, will at the earliest moment establish some system by which this spirit of providence and thrift may be developed into practical results, and the freedmen set on the high road to that prosperity which they have already demonstrated their capacity properly to appreciate and employ.

AN ACT OF JUSTICE.

THE House of Representatives has at last agreed to the Senate's amendments to the Army Appropriation Bill, by which the merest justice is done to the colored soldiers in the army; and by the time these words are printed we trust it will have the President's signature and be a law. The act of justice was, of course, resisted to the last by the representatives of the steadily and consistently repudiate the fundamental principle of the American Government, equal rights, and who, being the most industrious panders of an aristocracy and of class legislation, call themselves Democrats, but are called by the common sense of the American people, and will be known in history, as Copperheads. The vote was eighty-one yeas to forty-nine nays. Among the yeas we are heartily glad to see the names of two representatives from New York, Mr. GRISWOLD, of Troy, and Mr. ODELL, of Brooklyn; who, if they are unwilling to relinquish the party name of Democrat, yet show by their votes that they conceive Democracy to be something else than contemptible subservience to the support of human slavery. Of course Messrs. JAMES BROOKS, WINTHROP CHANLER, and FERNANDO WOOD, from the city of New York, voted against the proposition; and it would be difficult to name a single measure for the maintenance of the national honor, the salvation of the American Government, and the advancement of liberty and justice, against which Messrs. JAMES BROOKS, WINTHROP CHANLER, and FERNANDO WOOD did not vote.

Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, was very anxious lest Congress should "equalize" men. Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, need be under no concern. No Congressional act can ever make a base man equal to a noble one; an unjust statute can not be just one; an enemy of equal rights as true an American as a friend of liberty. No power in Congress can make a tool of freedom and an advocate of caste so safe a legislator for this country as a man who believes the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence. Nor can "equalize" intelligence and ignorance; generosity and meanness; treason and loyalty; or sympathy with rebels and devotion to the country. The most effective act, however severe and stringent, could ever "equalize" the infamy of ROBERT TOOMBS and the heroism of ROBERT SHAALER; or the spirit that grudges a soldier his fair pay with that which inspires the same soldier to fight and fall in the front of battle; or to enlist notwithstanding a bleak and prospect of imprisonment if he be captured. Let Mr. HOLMAN be comforted. Congress can not put asunder what God has joined; as, for instance, heroism and unintelligible animation of it: not while what he has severed, as, for instance, patriotism and party-spirit.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY SANITARY FAIR.

THE Fair of the Western Sanitary Commission will begin on the 17th of May in St. Louis, and we are sure that the same charity which has not tired the Eastern States in the East will not tire the new demand. Missouri is a State which has been tried by fire. The war has wasted it for three years, and upon the border, and long after the State, it has been full of rebels and ruffians; and, on the other hand, it has been loyal to the Union. And because of the most devoted heroism and the most patient endurance of suffering. The loyalty of loyal border men is the loyalty of martyrs. They endure personal proscription by traitors and constant danger and alarm. But the heroic fidelity of such men has been equal but in the Union. Gen. FRANK BLAIR, Gen. BROWN to the Senate, and hardly less State, it has been full of rebels and ruffians; and, on the other hand, it has been loyal to the Union. And because of the most devoted heroism and the most patient endurance of suffering. The loyalty of loyal border men is the loyalty of martyrs. They endure personal proscription by traitors and constant danger and alarm. But the heroic fidelity of such men has been equal but in the Union. Gen. FRANK BLAIR, Gen. BROWN to the Senate, and hardly less from the last desperate clutch of Slavery. To help those who have given her true sons and daughters to make their appeal to us. General ROSECRANS is the President of the Central Committee, Governor YATES is the first Vice-President, and Mayor FULLER second, and General FISH third. JAMES E. YEATMAN, Esq., Treasurer of the Commission, and Secretary of Western Sanitary Commission, is chairman of the Standing Committee, and to him every thing is to be addressed; while bills of lading and goods are to be sent to Major ALFRED MACKAY.

But no proof of the earnestness of border Union men could be more striking than this, that in a Slave State, almost upon debatable ground, the Western Sanitary Fair is the first effort so far as we know, to assign by the unanimous vote of its Executive Committee a special Department for the interests of suffering and Union Refugees, and, as we are informed, one of the tables will be under the charge of a man who was a slave until a few months ago. And this is a city where slaves are still held and sold.

Whatever is sent to the Fair and is intended for this Department should be marked F. and U. R. Department, and it will be appropriated. "It is not a sectional work," say the Committee, "and they make no sectional appeal." We hope that our friends every where will do all they can for this great, good work; not forgetting that of the West receipts of the Eastern Fairs for the United States Sanitary Commission the Western Commission receives one-third, as it is a separate, although co-operative organization.

"UNION AND LIBERTY."

A PRIZED IN NEW JERSEY WRITES: "Hon. THOS. S. GREMER, of South Carolina, deceased since 1835, was noted not only for his rare virtues, commanding talents, research, and learning, but for his nationality of sentiment at a time and among a people when it almost involved martyrdom. His speech in the Senate of South Carolina in December, 1833 (prior to the famous debate which gave Mr. WEBSTER his deserved renown), on the resolutions respecting the tariff, avowed all on the topic of State Sovereignty except that of Mr. WEBSTER, and is richer in learning than his. And the following ode, for July 4, 1833, is certainly worthy of comparison with any produced by its ennobling subject:

"'Who would over Freedom's shrine?
Who would dare to lavishon her
Though, by birth, one spot be mine,
Dear if all the rest!
Dear to me the South's fair land,
Dear the ocean mountain band,
Dear New England's rocky strand,
Dear the prairied West!

"'By our sires and by our dead
By our hav'n deep-rooted tree!
By the Past's dread memory!
By our common kindred tongue!
By our hope, bright, buoyant, young!
By the ties of country strung!
We will die to be!

"'Fathers, have ye tied in vain?
Ages, must ye droop again?
Manly shall we rashly stain
Bleeding sod by Thee!
No! Receive our solemn vow,
While aside for those we bow,
Ever to maintain, as now,
Union and Liberty!'"

A MONUMENT.

OUR readers have not forgotten the terrible explosion at the Allegheny Arsenal in Lawrenceville, Pennsylvania, on the 17th September, 1862, by which fifty women were destroyed. They lost their lives in the act of working for our soldiers, and it is proposed to erect a monument to their memory in the cemetery in Allegheny Cemetery. A photograph of the design has been sent to us. It is a simple shaft standing upon a heavy pedimental, and surmounted by an urn. Any gift for the purpose, however slight, will be a sign of sympathy to the poor families interested. It may be sent to Mr. M. DEWORTH, clerk to Paymaster, United States Arsenal, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

A CORRECTION.

WE reprint the following letter from the Louisville Journal:

NEW YORK, April 9, 1864.

"To the Editors of the Louisville Journal:

"I have just seen in your paper of the 31st of March a letter signed 'A. Lincoln' and dated 'Chattanooga, March 24,' in which 'a few friendly hints' are offered to me. The letter is instructive as illustrative of the coarse keenness with which personal criticisms are often publicly made, tho I venture to trouble you with this reply.

"At the front of the letter I read in the Round Table, a literary journal of this city, an anonymous article which he assumes that I wrote, proceeds to castigate me for it, and, warning with his work, forbids his remarks by a quotation from memory of what he says 'Mr. Curtis tells us' in Harper's Weekly.

"I have never seen the article in the Round Table of which your correspondent speaks, nor have I expressed in Harper's Weekly, or elsewhere, the sentiments which he attributes to me. I say sincerely that, however lighting 'at the front,' as I have no doubt he is, he will not begrudge me the use of his own common-sense the wholly gratuitous assumption that he is a rebel private.

"Your obedient servant,

"GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS."

DRAPER'S PHOTOGRAPH OF THE MOON.

THE illustration made from Dr. HENRY DRAPER'S Photograph of the Moon, published in Harper's Weekly (March 19th), is exciting great attention in Europe. It is proposed by the Committee of the British Association having the matter in hand to use it in rectifying the names that have been given to the lunar mountains.

LITERARY.

MESSRS. HARPER & BROTHERS have in preparation, and will immediately commence the publication of an elegant Library Edition of The Works of WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY. This edition will contain only those elaborate works by which the author wished to be known to after-ages, leaving out those transient writings, which, having served their momentary purpose, he wished to die. THACKERAY, who missed being a great artist only by becoming a great writer, designed many of the most characteristic illustrations to his works. These illustrations will be faithfully reproduced in this edition. "VANITY FAIR," being the first of that series of tales by which THACKERAY won his place as a great writer, will be the first in this edition. This story, the first volume of which is already ready for publication, will contain a portrait of THACKERAY, engraved upon steel, after the famous drawing by SAMUEL LAURENCE.

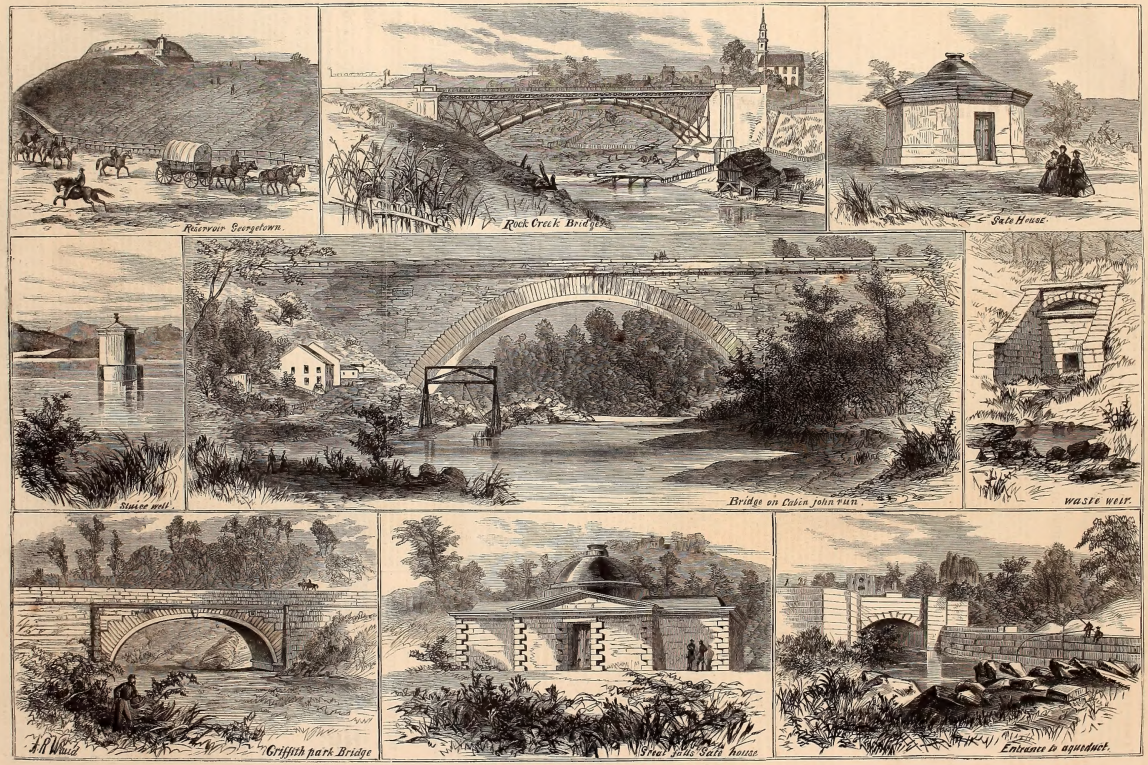
"The National Almanac and Annual Record for 1864," published by GEORGE W. CHILDS, is admirably designed and carefully prepared. It contains more than five hundred pages of facts and statistics, any one of which may at any moment be worth more to almost any man than the whole cost of the book. These are so arranged and classified that any man of fair intelligence may, in a short time, know precisely where to look for any fact respecting which he desires information. The work we consider to be an indispensable one for any man who has ever occasion to refer to a fact or figure belonging to the military, political, or financial transactions of the past year, whether at home or abroad.

"The Annual of Scientific Discovery, or, Year-Book of Facts in Science and Art, for 1864," edited by DAVID WELLS, and published by GOULD & LINCOLN, is also one of those indispensable works of reference for which we can not be too grateful to editor and publishers.

PROGRESS OF INTERNAL LEGISLATION.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—April 27. The following House bills were passed: For the prevention of illegal practices of Indians in relation to the manner of vessels; fixing certain additional rules and regulations for preventing collisions on the sea; and to regulate the measurement of tonnage of ships and vessels of the United States; also, the bill to amend the section of the act for the enrollment of vessels, and for the said purpose; and to provide for foreign vessels. Mr. WILSON reported a bill concerning the volunteer and regular army of the United States, which makes the same as it was at the beginning of the war; and provides that hereafter no person shall be enlisted for more than three years, but being something more than the cost before the expiration of the term of service, the organization of the bill to provide a national currency, secured by the pledge of the United States bonds, etc., was resumed; but no vote was reached.—April 28. Mr. Chandler reported favorably on the bill to amend the act to regulate commercial men of Ohio Valley, praying for the improvement by Congress of the navigation of the Ohio River. The following bills were passed: Granting homestead exemptions to soldiers and sailors in the matter of the relief of the clerks in the Kittery and Philadelphia navy yards; to change the northern boundaries of the judicial districts of West and East Virginia; and the joint resolution for the relief of the clerks of paymasters of the navy and the graduation of their pay.—The joint resolution from the House to increase for sixty days the present duties of foreign imports fifty per centum, except printing paper, was also passed, and referred to the Committee to introduce several amendments.—April 29. Mr. Ramsey introduced a bill for the benefit and better management of the Indians, by which the President is authorized to make from any public reservation.—Mr. Henderson referred a joint resolution, which was adopted, to provide for the printing of the report of the Committee, of which Major-General Irvin M'Dowell was President, to examine into contraband and fraudulent claims in the Military Division in the West.—Mr. Sumner called up the Senate bill to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, and to make it a City, Congress. An amendment striking out Carson City was adopted, and the bill passed.—April 30. The Senate took bill came up in order, but no result was reached.—April 30. A bill was introduced establishing the qualifications of candidates for all civil offices or promotions in such offices excepting the appointment of Mr. SUMNER offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 2. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 3. Mr. WILSON's bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 3. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—May 4. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 5. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 6. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 7. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—May 8. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 9. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 10. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 11. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—May 12. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 13. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 14. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 15. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—May 16. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 17. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 18. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 19. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—May 20. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 21. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 22. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 23. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—May 24. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 25. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 26. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 27. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—May 28. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—May 29. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—May 30. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—May 31. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 1. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 2. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—June 3. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—June 4. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 5. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 6. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—June 7. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—June 8. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 9. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 10. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—June 11. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—June 12. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 13. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 14. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—June 15. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—June 16. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 17. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 18. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—June 19. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—June 20. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 21. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 22. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—June 23. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—June 24. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 25. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 26. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—June 27. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—June 28. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—June 29. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—June 30. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 1. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 2. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 3. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—July 4. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 5. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 6. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 7. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—July 8. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 9. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 10. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 11. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—July 12. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 13. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 14. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 15. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—July 16. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 17. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 18. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 19. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—July 20. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 21. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 22. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 23. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—July 24. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 25. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 26. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 27. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—July 28. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—July 29. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—July 30. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—July 31. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 1. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 2. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 3. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—August 4. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 5. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 6. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 7. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—August 8. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 9. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 10. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 11. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—August 12. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 13. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 14. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 15. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—August 16. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 17. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 18. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 19. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—August 20. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 21. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 22. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 23. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—August 24. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 25. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 26. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 27. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—August 28. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—August 29. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—August 30. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—August 31. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 1. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 2. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—September 3. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—September 4. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 5. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 6. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—September 7. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—September 8. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 9. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 10. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—September 11. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—September 12. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 13. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 14. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—September 15. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—September 16. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 17. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 18. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—September 19. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—September 20. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 21. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 22. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—September 23. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—September 24. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 25. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 26. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—September 27. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—September 28. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—September 29. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—September 30. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—October 1. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—October 2. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—October 3. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—October 4. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—October 5. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—October 6. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—October 7. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—October 8. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—October 9. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—October 10. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—October 11. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—October 12. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—October 13. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—October 14. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—October 15. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and elsewhere.—October 16. The bill to amend the enrollment act, the proposition was laid over.—A bill granting land for a railroad in Minnesota was passed.—October 17. The Senate bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, the Finance Committee's amendments being agreed to, and the whole bill was then reported to the Senate. At this stage of the proceedings, it was being so current, the Senate then adjourned.—October 18. The bill to grant pre-emption to certain lands in California was discussed in the Senate. The Senate bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern frontier of the United States. The resolution was adopted for the provision of additional grounds for the cemetery at the Soldiers' Home.—October 19. Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the number of men in the army General so as the rights of colored persons in the army and el



VIEWS OF THE GREAT AQUEDUCT, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—[SEE PAGE 309.]

THE TWO POETS.

APRIL 23, 1864.

SHAKESPEARE.

GRAMERCY! what a night for stalking deer!
My kingdom for a—— Hold! what have we here?
A head of Schiller? Phœbus! can it be
Schiller in Central Park ahead of me?

SCHILLER.

Goddden, good Shakespeare, Guten Abend—long
Have I thy coming waited, Prince of Song,
Guarding the snowy flocks that round me throng.

SHAKESPEARE.

What flocks, O Schiller!—opium poeus?—say
Whose errant sheep into thy pasture stray?

SCHILLER.

No errant sheep; but the white birds that yon
The lakelet's placid bosom rest upon,
And are to mankind thy comparison.

SHAKESPEARE.

O faithful Schiller! who, by lake and river,
My truant swans thus unto me deliver,
Half of my white-necked flock be thine, forever!

MAJOR-GENERAL SHERIDAN.

MAJOR-GENERAL PHILIP HENRY SHERIDAN, commander of the Cavalry Corps of the Army of the Potomac, whose portrait we give below, was born of Irish parentage in Perry County, Ohio, in 1831. He was appointed to a cadetship at West Point in 1848, and graduated there in June, 1853. In the same year he was appointed Brevet Second Lieutenant in the First United States Infantry, and ordered to duty at Fort Duncan, Texas, where he remained about two years. Early in 1855 he was promoted to a Second Lieutenancy in the Fourth United States Infantry. In July of that year he went to California in charge of a body of recruits, and was appointed to the command of the escort of Lieutenant WILLIAMSON, engaged in surveying a route for a proposed branch of the Pacific Railroad from San Francisco to the Columbia River, Oregon. Detached at Vancouver's Island, in September, 1855, he was assigned to a command of a body of dragoons which accompanied Major RAINE's expedition against the Yakima Indians. In an engagement with them, April 28, 1856, Lieutenant SHERIDAN acquitted himself so gallantly as to be mentioned in general orders. In May, 1856, he was in command of the Indian Reservation in the Coast Range of Mountains. In 1857 he received the compliments of General SCOTT, then General-in-Chief, for bringing about an adjustment of a difficulty with the Coquille Indians. Later in the same year he erected a military post at Yamhill, on the Indian Reservation.

On the 14th of March, 1861, he was promoted to a Captaincy in the Thirteenth Infantry, and from that position gradually advanced until June, 1862, when he became commander of the Second Brigade of the Cavalry Division, Army of the Mississippi, having served with great gallantry in some of the heaviest engagements in the Southwest. In July, 1862, he defeated the rebel General CHALMERS before Corinth, and was at once promoted to the grade of Brigadier-General, and given a stronger command; being assigned, in October of that year, to the command of the Eleventh Division of the Army of the Ohio, accompanying General BUELL in his advance upon BRAGG, and participating in the battle of Perryville, where he held the key of the Federal position, and repulsed two desperate charges of the rebels. General SHERIDAN was in command of a division at the battle of Stone River, and distinguished himself in a most remarkable manner, for which, on the special recommendation of General ROSECRANS, he was made a Major-General, December 31, 1862, his appointment receiving the confirmation of the Senate, March, 1863. In the battles of Chickamauga and Mission Ridge he won fresh laurels; and in his present position he will no doubt fully maintain his already exalted reputation.

General SHERIDAN is under the medium height, but is robustly built, and is full of life and energy. He knows more about the various fields of action than any one of his associates. Like the lamented KEARNEY, he makes all his leading reconnoissances in person. He informs himself thoroughly on all the topographical features of the hostile country through which he marches, and all the resources of the enemy's. He is never taken by surprise. The wants of his soldiers are always amply provided for. Hence, wherever he leads his men are sure to follow, confident alike in his courage, in his discretion, and his sympathy in all their needs.

SHAKESPEARE AND SCHILLER.

MAJOR-GENERAL PHILIP HENRY SHERIDAN.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY ANTHONY.]

GENERAL THOMAS E. GREENFIELD RANSOM.

GENERAL THOMAS E. GREENFIELD RANSOM, whose portrait we give on this page, was seriously wounded in the battle at Sabine Cross Roads, Louisiana, on the 8th of April. He was born in Norwich, Windsor county, Vermont, on November 29, 1835. He is the son of Colonel RANSOM, who fell at Chapultepec, September, 1847. General RANSOM entered the service as Captain of the Eleventh Illinois Volunteers on April 26, 1861, and became Major in May, and Lieutenant-Colonel in July of the same year. He was stationed at Cairo, and afterward at Charleston, Missouri, where he was wounded. During January, 1862, he removed to Paducah, to take part in the reconnoissance, under General GRANT, into Western Kentucky, to the rear of Columbus. He next took part in the movement upon Fort Henry and the contests before Fort Donelson, where he was again wounded, commanding his regiment on both occasions. In February he was promoted to the Colonelcy, in place of W. H. L. WALLACE, appointed Brigadier-General. He participated in the battle of Shiloh, where he was a third time wounded, and afterward assisted in guarding the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. On November 29, 1862, he was commissioned a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and confirmed on March 9, 1863. During the latter month he formed one of the examining board of officers for the Seventeenth Army Corps. He was next placed in command of the First Brigade of the Sixth Division of that corps, and took a prominent part in the siege operations of Vicksburg, gaining great distinction, his brigade forming part of the force selected to occupy the city after the surrender. He was next placed in command of the post at Natchez, from which he was relieved during September, 1863, and ordered to the Department of the Gulf. There he has shown the highest soldierly capacities, distinguishing himself especially by his gallantry at Sabine Cross Roads, where he was wounded for the fourth time while standing among the guns of one of our batteries.

THE WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

WE give on page 308 a series of views of the WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT, at Washington, District of Columbia. The first of the series represents the high Service Reservoir at Georgetown. The next shows the handsome Bridge over Rock Creek, on Pennsylvania Avenue, the water being conveyed in the pipes which form the arch of the bridge. The octagonal building is the Gate-house of the Receiving Reservoir; the Sluice-well or Tower regulates the flow of water from the receiving reservoir. The Bridge over Cabin John Run, a muddy stream, is a splendid piece of masonry, with an arch of 220 feet span. The Waste Weir, as its name implies, is a drain for the aqueduct. The Griffith Park Bridge is a dry arch over a ravine. The Gate-house, at the head of the aqueduct, is a triumph of engineering and a handsome building. The last sketch, the Entrance to the Aqueduct, describes itself.

The Washington Aqueduct was built by the United States Government, for the "purpose of supplying the cities of Washington and Georgetown with pure and wholesome water." The original surveys and plans were made by Captain (now General) M. C. Meigs, of the United States Engineers, in the winter of 1852-3. The plan adopted was to bring the water from the Great Falls of the Potomac, through a conduit, built of brick and stone, circular in form, of nine feet diameter. The Potomac is to be dammed about half a mile above the Falls by a cut-stone dam of solid masonry, 3000 feet in length, in the form of an arc, extending to the Virginia shore. At present the water is supplied only from a small branch of the river, a temporary dam having been thrown from the Maryland shore to an island. Ten miles from the Falls is the Receiving Reservoir, with a circular basin of some sixty acres, filled with water from a number of small streams entering into it. It is this water which the inhabitants of Washington have been using for some four years; but on the 4th of December last the Potomac water was introduced with appropriate ceremonies. Unfortunately, in the original plan no provision was made for bringing the Potomac water around this Reservoir, consequently the purer waters from the river are mingled with those of the small streams which receive the surface-drainage from a large area, and are somewhat turbid on every shower. The present accomplished Chief-Engineer, Colonel Silas Seymour, proposes to remedy this by constructing a supplementary conduit around this Reservoir, and this plan is recommended by the Secretary of War in his last annual report. Two miles nearer the city is the Distributing Reservoir, yet unfinished. When completed this will be a double basin of the same sizes' extent, the banks all lined with substantial slopewalls. From this the water is distributed to the city through cast-iron mains.

GENERAL THOMAS E. GREENFIELD RANSOM.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

The crossing of Rock Creek, between Washington and Georgetown, is effected by a unique and beautiful bridge of iron pipes, five feet, of about 200 feet span, being composed of the mains through which the water passes. The structure of masonry along the line of the aqueduct are all built in the most substantial manner.

The total length of conduit is about twelve miles, and the level of water surface in the reservoirs 146 feet above mean tide. The diameter of conduit is nine feet, and the capacity 85,000,000 gallons daily. The estimated cost of the work is $3,500,000.

ENGAGEMENT OF GUN-BOATS ON THE RED RIVER.

We give on our first page an illustration of the engagement between Admiral Porter's gun-boat fleet and a large body of rebels on the Red River, above Grand Ecore, on the 12th ult. Admiral Porter thus refers to the affair in his report to the Navy Department:

On the evening of the 15th inst. we were attacked from the right bank of the river by a part of Taylor's force, which two or three days previous had gained success over our army, and flushed with victory, and the capture of a regiment of Negro, appeared suddenly upon the right bank and fearlessly opened fire on the steamers. Commodore Lee, under F. O. Smith's orders, gave chase, and after a short engagement with a transport (the Black Hawk) drove her ashore, towing her off. The rebels opened with 1000 muskets, and soon threw every one out of sight. Added to the safe seamstress of the monitor, Lieutenant Bacon had just come down his vessel (the Lexington) and unfortunately was enabled to pull up to her again, keeping close up to the bank. Admiral Porter opened a heavy fire from the Cricket and Fairy, and the vessels, who, undeterred by fright, had got on by their engines, were soon attempting to capture an army vessel.

Fate told that their hooting and actions baffle description; for after they seemed to have brought up the rear of the bank, where they confronted the guns of the iron vessels, only to be mowed down by grape and canister. In the mean time Lieutenant Bacon had reached his vessel, and, without the distance between them, attempted to be opened a cross-fire on the infuriated rebels, who fought with such desperation and courage against certain destruction that it could only be accounted for in one way. Our opinion was verified on inspection of the dead, for many the men actually smelling of Louisiana rum. This affair lasted two hours before the rebels fled. They brought up two pieces of artillery, one of which was quickly knocked over by the Lexington's gunner, the other abandoned in a hurry off. The cross-fire of the Lexington finally decided this curious affair of a fight between gun-boats and rebels. The rebels were mowed down by her canister, and finally retreated in such quick haste as left the vessels unattacked, leaving the space of a mile covered with dead and wounded, muskets and knapsacks.

A PARROT ON THE RAMPAGE.

The spirited sketch on page 312 represents a scene which has often been witnessed by naval officers and sailors. The scene of the incident here illustrated was the forecastle of the United States steamer Richmond, off Mobile. During a high sea, causing the vessel to roll heavily, a heavy comber broke from its stays and knocked about with the utmost disregard of the consequences, occasioning great excitement among the sailors. For a time, however, proceeded to secure the gun as best they could. Our sketch represents the hardy fellows laboring to replace and restore the monster to his proper position by such appliances as they had at hand, taking care, however, while engaged in their persuasive task, not to put themselves in too close proximity to the frolicsome Parrott. Such scenes, while sometimes exposing the sailors to risk, always produce an agreeable excitement on shipboard, where even misfortune, if it only comes in a novel shape, is sometimes welcomed as a relief to a monotony which no pen can describe.

UNION REFUGEES IN THE LOUISIANA SWAMPS.

We give on page 313 an illustration showing a Rendezvous of Union Refugees in the Swamps of Western Louisiana. In no part of the Union have the loyalists suffered greater persecutions at the hands of the rebels than in the region where General Banks has recently operated. A correspondent who accompanied General Banks's army says that many Union men have been in the swamps for two years, having been driven there for refuge from the conscription. In many cases they were hunted by dogs, in others they escaped with wounds from the smoking ruins of their own homes, and did not dare to discover themselves until the advance of the Union forces, when they came out by hundreds from their dismal retreats, and enrolled themselves as scouts and rangers. Our illustration gives a vivid picture of the life which, for two years or more, these men have been compelled to live, for no other crime than refusing to turn against their flag and country.

AT PLEASANT HILL.

(On the battle-field at Pleasant Hill, the night following the engagement, a boy only nineteen years of age and an officer were found dead, lying side by side, each face wearing a smile.)

Two lives lying pale and stark
Beneath the moonlight's dull cast;
Two rifles gleaming in the dark,
Dropped from the unnerved dying palm:
Two faces bleak and stark and white,
In silence fading through the night.

One face a boy's, with auburn hair
Its outline fringing like a veil;
A forehead rounded, soft, and fair,
That until then no pelting hail
In all life's storm had scarred or torn,
That never on cold battle-field had worn.

Still on the lips a smile remained.
As if some dream had loitered there—
Some dream of home that, travel-stained,
Had come to rest with the weary—
Had come and whispered words of cheer,
And fond good-byes from kindred dear.

One face a boy's—The other sown
And seamed with prints of weary years—
Sad years that in their march hot strewn
Life's way with pains, and aches, tears—
A face with beard of silver white,
Wet with the falling dews of night.

No braver souls than theirs that day
Had faced the leaden hail and rain—
Through all, sweet voices far away
Talked with them, soothing all their pain—
The pain of battle, and the fear
And, having won, as trophies were.

Death came at last—came in the flash
Of desperate charge, and bare they lie—
Life in a sleep-like calm, as hush
Shall ever break—no storms that fly
Shall ever smite with harsh alarm—
A sleep God-watched against all harm.

The noble dead!—Not lost are they:
Through all the years their worth shall shine;
Their deeds shall live, and light our way
To those for future years shall twine
All royal souls with garlands white
As were these faces on that night.

STORY OF LAWRENCE.

Music sounded from below, and a cheery bustle of voices, and shouts from the drawing-room, while in the dimness of my chamber I could scarcely see a scarred and manly face and form. Now drawing-glass before which I stood, idly sticking in and out a great pin in the white frilled toilet cushion. We were married only last night, I think, to confide in ourselves. I did not say to myself that I lingered because the drawing-rooms were all one flood of merciless light. I was thinking of Philip's grave, and how I had to all that smooth dazzle of skin, and flitting rose-red, that he used to praise; but I straightened the slide of the pin, and turned my face full now at my collar, and then losing courage altogether, sat down by the window, and looked out. The quiet old-world street till Alice called me, and there was no further possibility of evasion; and then I slipped quietly down the stair and into the room (Alice and Catharine was in the shadow), never once glancing up till they all were fairly seated; though I might have heard Alice's quick breath, and seen her shower of four months, was too busy with Eliza Vaughan to bestow on me more than a brief look and careless smile.

Mother is the calmest being in the world, and never forgets her lofty courtesy. It is only on that every drop of the Morton blood was boiling in her veins, while Alice, who is like our father, and has less reticence and more of the King Lake fire, followed me to the recessed window, where, the wretched meal over, I made haste to hide myself out of sight. I was ashamed of such a little room, that window, shut out by heavy curtains, and holding a stand of heliotrope and the great fantoni in which I sat, my face burning, and my hands. But she need not see its comment on what was passing without while I listened to her prattle. I hate sympathy and condolence, because that shows that people know that your heart is sore.

At last:

"I know you want to be alone," said Alice; "but, my dear, I am in a rage, and I can't go out there yet, and mother and Mrs. Vaughan's eyes. If it means. In an honest business-like way, 'a bold stroke for a husband,' why, Heaven save the mark and help those who have not! I don't defend her work—by strategy. Imagine her telling him before us all that she never dreamed of finding him here!"

"Well."

"Oh, he lee if you choose, Georgie; but you know as well as I that two days ago she was in wrapper and slippers and that toilet was the result of seeing him pass the house."

I could not help a glance out at the perfection of the toilet in question. It was daintily and well fastened, even to her film of a handkerchief, and the scarlet flowers drooping from her black hair, and Philip I knew noted all these things.

"As for Philip himself," continued Alice.

"What of him?" demanded a pleasant voice, as the person in question parted the curtains and took possession of the footstool near me.

Alice gave a little shake and shrug of the shoulders for all reply, and continued:

"What of Philip?" he asked again, looking searchingly up at me keenly.

"What should there be?" I answered, lightly. "You knew our thoughts of you when you left us, and four months is too short space for the growth of new opinions concerning an old friend."

"Are you quite sure of that, Georgia?" he asked, quickly. "It is only my fancy that tells me you looked at me then with different eyes from now?"

Our tongues was often without leave, and, "Ah, the eyes were set in a different face!" slipped from mine, as if the words had been those of some third person.

To that the answer came swift as thought.

"Not for me, my darling. I loved the face then, and I love it now, better than my life. For you my life, and that for which I care to live;" and then I hardly remember more than that my hand was taken in his clasp, and that we were not in a sort of charmed hush, looking out through the open casement on the soft dark of the summer night, till Eliza Vaughan had run away in a pet; and some time on, late in the evening, Alice and George, my Mother-in-law, parted the curtains and peered in, laughing at us.

"Why were you not at town-meeting, Dr. Philip?" he asked, sly, merry malice. "The Crookers and the Wise men were there in full force, and not having you to turn the scales, we were equally divided as to how done nothing. The Crookers will have it that, at five seconds after midnight precisely, the guerrillas will be upon us, and that some one of us should stay with the speaker-horn for a night-cap, and with one eye open; while the Wise men, of whom, as you all know me, I is not unwise to say that I am one of them, in the belief that there are no guerrillas within fifty miles, and that Ewing's men are quite competent to protect us."

Philip looked grave.

"And in case they do come? What have you done?"

"Done! why nothing; unless we except a few resolutions peculiarly affecting that much belabored future generation."

"Have you any arms?"

"Not I! except the house nature gave me. Are you too going to turn Crooker on our hands! What would you have us do? Patrol the streets and frighten our little girls out of their senses? Here is my stout-hearted Alice trembling in her shoes already."

"Why did you tell me of your meeting?" rejoined Alice, petulantly. "I am quite certain that I shall not sleep to-night."

"Nor any of us," observed mother, placidly, "unless we move bedward soon. It is getting on to half-past."

All this time, under this surface chat, half-grave, half-jesting, was going on that quiet, electric, unspoken talk in which the husband is made of the business of home; for you see they had all an honest pride and interest in my fair looks, and all eyes were blow at mother and Alice on that first day when I had tottered down from my sick room; and when Philip should have gone coming, they had seen me had worn an air of waiting and anxiety that my pride only half liked; and now I found the pleasure in waiting to him almost as ill to bear. Perhaps, too, I was impatient of all this pother about the guerrillas, of which we had enough in Lawrence to give fever, and Philip's grave, anxious looks, as he still held my hand, red with the pressure of his fingers lightening their grip in the unconscious energy of his thought. I had been "heart hungry, very poor" in spirit for many weeks, and now, in the perverse manner of my sudden happiness, I was ready to say, "I shall never be moved." So blind are we!

It was after midnight when the house was at last hushed and the lights out, and an hour or so later before I could lose my tumultuous thinking in sleep, and then I had a dream. I thought I awoke from the very deepest abyss of that heavy, dreamless slumber that follows on strong excitement, and was dragged on a sudden up to startled consciousness by a hideous and inconceivable uproar, raging in the quiet outside of clattering hoofs, shouts, cries, groans, cracking pistol-shots, and repeated hurrahs for a name that I could not at first distinguish. I sat bolt upright, and looked over my door, still in her night-dress, her long fair hair all about her shoulders, and her bare feet busily thrust into slippers, in the act of dragging a rather, just sleepy little Susie by the hand. She came close to me, and I felt her heart beating.

"Georgia, don't you hear?" she whispered, as though these without could hear her,

"Georgia, don't you hear? Get up at once; the guerrillas are in the town!"

I knew then what it was they said. "Hurrah for Quantrell!"

But Alice will ready enough to avow ourselves heirs to all manner of indefinite human ills, but if by chance we come into sudden possession of any of this species of property, we are apt to exhibit a feeling of astonishment that calamity should have found us out. I had this species of incredulity strong upon me, for, notwithstanding that little dream, my dreadful dream to be shaken off by an effort of will. I dressed with a sort of stony apathy, frozen into one fear rather than saddened by the hideous outcries without. Alice wandered aimlessly from one spot to the other, looking out of every window, but was distracted with terror. Mother came to us calm as ever, but for the tremble in her steady tones as she spoke to each other, inaudible amid the tumult as last. They had been looking after the doors and windows below.

"Though it's useless," said George, with a bitter oath. "We're fairly trapped; caught here without arms, and not a door that those villains can't crash through in three minutes. Do you hear them? They are shooting men down right and left out there. Oh, my God! that I should have been doing across the river, while loyal men are murdered here like rats in a trap!"

Out on the gray sky of the early dawn flamed now a wicked blood-red light, shooting up in pointed, climbing flame, and making all the dim street as bright as noonday. They had fired the house just below (Eliza Vaughan's), and we saw her grandfather, poor old man, crazed with terror, run with feeble, tottering steps from the shadow into the great flare of light, and drop upon his knees, lifting up his hands for mercy; and so kneeling full on the pavement, his white hair all dabbled in blood, shot with deliberate aim by one of the men of whom the streets were now full, mounted and on foot, their scowling faces panting on the look of veritable demons in the glare as they shouted at every head showing either in door or window, and picked off unlucky fugitives trying to make good their escape. They worked with system and method, dividing into smaller gangs, and entering the houses one after the other as every house before followed the pistol-shots, and sickening cries and screams, and bursting smoke, and mounting flame, while household goods were tossed out on the sidewalk, and covered all the pavement; and there were more bodies now near Mr. Vaughan, lying with ghastly faces upturned to heaven, as if calling down its vengeance. Some we knew. One was Mr. Newton, our dear pastor.

I have been long in telling this, yet it was done with a horrible rapidity; and while scarce out of the house first amaze was yet dazed and dumb and with horror, sounded heavy blows and a dull crash below. At that Alice ran to George and flung her arms about him; another discharge of fire-arms, still holding Susie, praying; while I felt Philip's arm about me, and heard his low voice as if in a dream.

"Courage, dearest! Even these brutes will not burn women!"

But if I trembled for myself or wished for life without him! I remember too, dimly, that I saw him offer himself to the chief, and that George noticed it back, saying, briefly, "Of what use?" in every faculty, thought itself, was swamped in a strained intensity of hearing—listening for the first footfall below. As George had said, the fastenings were of about the worth of so much straw. There was a second score of blows, a crash and clatter of broken panels, a rush and shout, the jingling fall of a mirror, a hurrah! proclaiming that they had found the wine, then a brief pause and then I knew a heavy tramp on the stairs.

I sicken even now when I recall that instant of dreadful waiting; the wild prayer, the utter hopeless helplessness, the agonized grasp with which we clung to each other, our weak defiance. The door of our hearts as the ruffians stood at last in the doorway, coldly scanning us. Oh, gay girls and happy women! on that still, gray Sunday morning, so severely in your great peaceful cities of the North and East, and your quiet country towns, you know not, but by hearsay, and think of it as a story, or you could never sparkle in your gems, and tread out gay measures to gayer music, while such deeds were done! You could be in more solemn earnest: could you but feel the sorrows of our land, so of which you are a part, and for which you will yet be shadowed even in your dreams, what it was to stand there as we did that day, a whole lifetime of exposure in the few minutes that passed before I was then a brief command to Alice, "Out of the way, woman!" a short, stern questioning of George:

"Are you the State are you?"

"New York."

"Do you go for the Union?"

"Yes."

"Then you're too good for this earth; we mean to kill you;" and unloading our muskets, the six fell before we finish, and it won't be fit for an abolitionist. Reckon we'll give you a free pass to the upper regions."

And then a glittering barrel leveled at his head, and George's low "God-by, Ally;" and her frantic cry,

"Oh no! you can not, you will not have the heart to kill him! Oh! you do not know—he is so true, so good—he is my—my—my love! Kill me instead!" and we miserable women, clinging about them, and trying to shield them with our bodies, and the pistol close there, between us, and blinding smoke, and a groan, and George lying there on the floor, and Alice, Mrs. Vaughan's two girls without, and quick, sharp ringing shots, one after another; this time from Philip—as with a terrible cry of rage and anguish he fell forward with them headlong, and with such fury that for the moment they were staggered and gave back. A wild rush for the door, struggle, and then Heaven was merciful to me and I saw no further.

Fire leaping out of windows, and gliding down the stairs, and bursting up through the floors, and curling about the doorways, and toppling down chimneys, and crushing in our roof, and all our enemies left us—and the bodies of our dead. Lawrence was free of them. It was clear daylight now, and the country was rousing, and the rebels fled in prudent haste loaded with our spoil. We, at least, could find refuge in the street from the burning and crash of falling walls before it. Alice still knelt beside George's stiffening body, but at mother's touch she rose and followed me mechanically. I don't went I looked shuddering for another rigid, ghastly figure, but neither in hall, nor on stairway, nor passage was what I dreaded. Mother divined my thought.

"Best so," she said. "Don't look, love. Better to remember him as you saw him in life, than—like—dear George."

The streets were full of wretches like ourselves. Women in mourning and weeping, sobbing children, homeless families; weeping mothers, wives, sisters, kneeling beside bleeding bodies. The sultry, heavy air, blue with smoke of burning buildings, resounded with lamentations. True, at last the soldiers were coming, and men pouring into the rescue in hot haste, with old swords snatched from the chimney-piece, and guns hunted out of the barn, and grief and pain and every variety of agony they vowed a bitter vengeance; but vengeance would not bring us back our dead, and the weeping and wailing went on.

My uncle's house had been left unharmed, and we took refuge there. There too, came Ellen Vaughan, and in that strange way in which the veriest trifles will obtrude themselves on the most sacred grief, came back the remembrance of how I had seen her with the scarlet flowers trifling from her black hair, and of my paltry jealousy, and a dim sense at such pettiness, in a world where was murder, and death, and this unutterable bereavement; and while I sat there thinking, nearly swooned almost into death, but living yet, and to live, through the great mercy of God.

They had left her dead in the open street, where he had fought his way, and it was only what seemed like, and was, a Providence, that she recovered life yet flickering in him. He has lost an arm, crushed by a falling beam; but I will be to him arm and hand, and I am very happy, though after a subdued and chastened fashion; and awakes with a something like remorse, as I look at Alice in her widow's weeds, and with lines of gray in her beautiful fair hair, and think how selfish looks my happiness to her mourning.

ORIGIN OF THE DEW-DROP.

THE sable Midnight rose one day
To woo the Early Morn;
But the coy maiden fled away,
Away, away,
On light wings gay,
With laughing glee and scorn:
For Cupid, watching closely by,
Had quickly let his arrow fly,
But missed for ones,
Ha! Ha!

Then grieving he had missed his mark
(So much for shooting in the dark),
His tears fell down in sparkling showers,
And "lighting on the early flowers,"

Lay glistening there,
Till Early Morn and Sunbeam Bright,
Both laughed at poor Cupid's plight,
Did with their smiles the dew-drops dry,
And thus revived the archer sly;
While he with glee,
Cried out "I am
Though I've missed one,
Though I've missed one,
I've hit another."

MILLY GRAHAM'S ROSE-BUSH.

MARY a banger along the streets of N——— paused to look at Milly Graham's rose-bush, bending under its fragrant hood of pink and scarlet, just within the white fence gate before Widow Martin's door. It was worthy of the admiration so bestowed upon it. No other rose-bush in all the town bloomed and looked like this of hers, however-ed little Milly. No other pair of hands ever tended flower, or shrub, or plant so carefully as she watched and guarded hers.

Lottie Cushing came in one day just as Milly was giving her pet a cool, refreshing drink.

"I do believe," she cried, "you think more of that bush than of yourself; you're almost a gelling in your devotion to it."

Milly laughed.

"But you know I have nothing else to care for, ne brother or sister, no dear precious mother or fond old father"—and a shadow came over the bright face. "Why shouldn't I find companionship in Nature, and employ myself in nursing the lings?"

"Well, I won't quarrel with you, Milly dear. But why don't you let other people share in your wealth? There's the hospital now; why not send a bouquet, now and then, for some poor fellow lying sick and languishing in the hot, close rooms! They'd relish flowers amazingly, and somehow people seem to forget that they only care for bread, meat, and custards—as if they haven't the same sense of the beautiful as ourselves. If I had your wealth of flowers, I know I'd do it literally."

Milly Graham seemed struck with the suggestion. It was strange the thought had not dawned on her before; it had not, so that now it came like a new revelation of duty.

She was not slow to act upon the hint. Many a rose, from the parent, found its way to the hospital after that day; many a bouquet from the cozy garden shared the lonely hours of death and mingled ones lying in the dreary, crowded wards. Other hands too, after she had led the way, had their fragrant offerings daily beside her. Hearts which loneliness and absence of sympathy had filled with pain and despair grew hopeful under the ministry of the various ministers, telling of green fields, and smiling gardens, and kind hands gathering the sweet field and garden for their sakes. Life became brighter; Hope flooded many a little, little while before so dark, and its depths, filled before with sadness, to be thought that there might be boughs bending with fruit under which their now crippled, weary feet might again, some day, walk,—fields waving with harvests in which their now powerless hands might, some day, glean affluent sheaves, strengthened and comforted the suffering soldier-boys, lying there in rows, with white robes beside them filled with the offerings of kind hearts, fresh, bright flowers standing chief of all.

One bright day Milly Graham, going her rounds with her basket of flowers on her arm; came to a cot having a strange face as its occupant. It was a noble face, but so pale and wan that it almost startled her. The eyes were shut, the hands lay folded over the still breast, and hardly a breath stirred the lips. She paused a moment and looked sadly into the pallid face; then with a sigh put down her basket, and sitting down took the thin hands into her own. Perhaps I can help him," she said to herself. And her touch did help him. The eyes slowly opened, looked a moment wonderingly, and then brightened with gratitude deeper than any words could express. A faint whisper, too, fluttered from the pale lips: "You are very kind." It was brief, faint, but it was full of meaning, and she understood it perfectly.

"Shall I leave you a rose?"

He nodded, with a faint smile on his lips. Then,

"Let me have it in my hand, if you please," he said.

She put the flower into his hand, and, with a pleasant good-by, stole away.

Daily, after that, clustered to some impulse she could not explain, Milly visited the cot, smoothing the pillows of the invalid, preparing him cool, refreshing drinks, and leaving always a fragrant bouquet in the little pine table at his side. One day Lottie Cushing, accompanying her, called her on her devotion to her one favorite patient. The bright face flushed. In that moment, for the first time, Milly comprehended that she was finding it a pleasure to minister to that patient above all others, though something more than an ordinary interest lay at the bottom of her action. But the thought did not wholly disconcert her. She answered gayly her companion's banter, and went right on, day after day, at a feeding had been said.

At last he was able to sit up for an hour or so daily in his cot. The ugly wound in his side, out of which a ball had been extracted, in time, his life would flow away in driblets, was healing, and in a month or so, if nothing happened, he would be able to return to his field. Why not in that Milly contemplated the fact, when she came to know it, with a throbbing heart?

She came one morning as he was sitting thus, propped with pillows. His face brightened as, approaching, she sat down, with a word of greeting, beside him. Presently, after their talk had run for a little time in accustomed channels, he said, suddenly:

"Miss Graham, you have been very kind to me within these last few weeks. Will you do me one more favor—simply ask for an hour as my amanuensis?"

"Certainly," she said, wondering what he could mean to write.

At once she bustled about and procured pen and paper, then sat down by his side. It would be pleasant, she thought, to write for him. Then he began to dictate:

"Dear Cousin Kate—

Why did Milly's fingers tremble? It was only a common name.

He went on, telling how rapidly he was recovering: how he hoped soon to be discharged; and then added, "I shall make haste, darling, to come to you, and we will be very happy together."

A strange look came over Milly's face as she wrote these words. His darling! Who could it be? He had never told her of a sister. It could be some one nearer and dearer than any sister. But he was cool and collected as he posed her pen waiting his command. In a minute he went on, telling "dear Charlotte," as he called her, how kind he had been during his illness, how the hospital had daily put a bouquet in his hand—Milly stopped there, and refused to write it; but he said, with a smile, that Miss Graham knew about it. "Do not refuse me this, Miss Graham," and, with a blush, she wrote it down; how the world was growing brighter every day—how he looked forward all to simply adding his name, "Charlie." Then Milly sealed the letter and waited his dictation. She would know now whether it was a sister or some other dear one to whom he was sending his loving remembrances.

"What name?" she asked, timidly.

"Miss Charlotte Somers, Bridgeport."

Poor Milly! It was not a sister, for his name was Beaton. But she wrote it, nevertheless, though with a shadow on her face. And then, having received his thanks, she took up her basket and crept away homeward.

Was the sun clouded in the world that wild so dark as she hurried along the street? Had the day grown suddenly black and stormy? Where was her heart and what had become of it through the smiling days! That was the pang which wrote its autograph in the lines of her face and the hopeless sorrow of her eyes.

She confessed to herself now that the hope she might find full room for it filled her heart with a strange joy in the few weeks gone. He was so patient, so brave, so full of generous, noble thoughts that she could not help admiring him, longing to share with him life's burdens and triumphs. But it was over now—Charlotte Somers had the heart she would have given her life to win.

One day it was noised abroad through N——— that Milly Graham was seriously ill; she had contracted a fever, the gossips said, while waiting on the sick at the hospital, and the physicians feared the worst she could recover. It was a most malignant fever, they said, and usually only the most rugged and healthy constitutions withstood it. Her two volunteer nurses were also seized soon after with the fever, and before Milly had been sick a week a panic prevailed, and Widow Martin was left all alone to nurse her through her illness. Lottie Cushing had, indeed, spent a day or so at her bedside, but she was suddenly called away, and none others came to supply her place. Poor, deserted Milly Graham!

One day, Charlie Beaton, lying in his cot, heard one of the physicians say to another:

"It's shameful, I wouldn't have believed that dear Milly Graham would ever have wanted for a nurse in sickness—she whose hand has smoothed so many aching heads."

Charlie Beaton leaped on his cot and approached the speaker.

"What did you say, Sir, about Miss Graham?"

The doctor scanned him with a peculiar look. Then,

"I said it was a shame that now, when she is sick, many will be found, there is not one of all those in all this community, to whom she has in her noble life been a blessing and a help, with soul enough to go to the house and offer her heart-broken old nurse, herself dying by inches for want of that very help."

A look almost savage in its earnestness came over the soldier's face. Then, laying his hand upon the doctor's arm, he said, earnestly,

"Doctor, I will be her nurse?" Then, seeing the grave questioning of the other's face, he added, hurriedly, "She nursed and saved me, Sir; why shouldn't I do something, if ever so little, for her?"

The doctor at first thought it was impossible; but at last he agreed to arrange it, if it could be, as the minister in that parish was away. It would be better to save Milly's life, even at the risk of scandal, than to lose it for the want of any effort.

One day, weeks after, Milly Graham, opening her eyes and looking through the window opening at her side, saw Charlie Beaton sitting on the little piazza, in the shadow of the vines which since she had been ill had grown wild in the late summer and wore now russet robes. How had he come there? why was he to near when her first conscious thought had been of him? What wonderful fairy had contrived it all? She shut her eyes with a dreamy happiness, and tried to think. How long had he been sick? What had happened meanwhile? and what was he doing there—there, where her eyes could see him the moment God brought her out of the dark and swung open her soul again to the light of reason, and opened the doors of memory that she might walk again in the fair gallery? It was all a mystery, a blank; and weary with the effort at thinking she fell asleep, and for the first time in weeks dreamed of nothing. When, an hour or so after, she awoke Charlie Beaton was gone. He had remained with the widow from the day he had obtained the physician's permission to do so, adding her in every way possible, proving as tender as a woman and as thoughtful; but on this day Milly had been pronounced out of danger, and he had gone away, enjoining on Mrs. Martin perfect silence as to what had happened. The physician had had much to say of his action—it was so out of the ordinary course that it justified discussion at every social gathering—but he was in a way indifferent to it all, and he meant that Milly should be shielded from all unfavorable remarks.

At last, when he knew that Milly was able to sit up, Charles Beaton dropped in upon her. She had, somehow, expected him before; but she had feared to ask any one about him, and she could not have told; she only knew he had been there, for some reason, on the day when consciousness came to her after her long illness, and that gave her, somehow, a sweet consolation.

How pale and thin she looked as he came and sat down by her side! How she trembled as he took her hand, saying, in his soft way,

"I am very glad, Miss Milly, to see you thus life-like once more. I was afraid, I think, than ever before."

She looked at him with a startled, yearning expression.

"Yes, Milly," he said, answering the look, "like is brighter and warmer now that I feel I have not hoped to find it. It would have been always dark to me had you never come to us out of the Shadow into which Death had cast a little darkness. Now I am happy, because, maybe, you will consent to knit to mine the life He has given back."

Poor Milly Graham! How sweetly the words sounded in her ear! How she had longed to hear them! I shall not tell.

A sad, pained look stole into her eyes; a cold suspicion and dread crept over her heart. Then, in a moment, all passed, and broke into words:

"I thought you loved Charlotte Somers!"

"Charlotte!—why, Milly dear, she's my dear pet, and nothing more. She is after my mother had married a second time. She is only fifteen; she has been my playmate, my pet, for all those years. I love her! I will love her, but not as I love you, Milly."

It was all clear now, and the afternoon sun shine, lying among the faded vines, was not brighter than Milly's face. Then he told her, as delicately as he could, how he had lovered more in her sickness; how he had been filled with trouble and anxiety; how he had loved her from the day when he had first brought in his hands.

"But you never told me, Charlie, nor even hinted your thought."

"No, I could not, a weak, wounded, helpless man; I did not know I should ever recover, and I could not think of telling you my love while I lay there, a wreck, with the chances all over becoming incapable of shielding and protecting your young life. But I am well, Milly, but you acted as my sacraments that you were not indifferent to me, and that gave me hope and strength such as no medicine could give."

They talked thus, the twilight coming on and folding them with its hide. Then, smiling their happy betrothal with a kiss, he took a faded rose from her breast, and placing it in her thin hand, said, simply, "Let that be the sign between us," and so went away.

The sign between them! It was the rose she had given him that first day when she smoothed the matted hair from his pale face in the still hospital ward in the flush of the early summer.

And so Milly's rose-bush sprouted a flower more fragrant and beautiful than any she had ever gathered there before—a flower which, through all the coming years, she will wear upon her heart lovingly and proudly, as her soldier-husband wears on his breast the ribbon Kearney gave him for bravery on the field.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

AN IMAGINARY BEING.—A new work is advertised under the title of "A Woman against the World." It is announced as a story, and could hardly be supposed to be any thing but imaginative work of fiction. Where did know a woman to set herself against the world? If "A Woman against the World" is illustrated, the heroine should be represented as wearing no crinoline.

We have simply the choice either always or never to be out of fire. Nothing stands ever a loaded mine, and round about the hours alm at us naked weapons. Only one is a thousand hits, but, in any case, better fall standing than binding like a coward.

A JERSEYMAN was lately arrested for flogging a woman, and excused the act by saying he was near-sighted, and thought it was his wife.

DR. CUMMING'S LAST.—By advertisement we are informed of another new work by Dr. Cumming. "The Destiny of Nations as indicated in Prophecy." In this book the prophetic Doctor might profit to the last production of his literary constructiveness is "Small pickles and quick returns."

RUDE.—"How many rods make an acre?" a father asked of his son, a fast urchin, as he came home one night from the public school. "Well, I don't know, governor; was the reply of the young hopeful; "but I guess you'd find the same number an acre if you'd put such a tanning as I did from old vinegar-face this afternoon."

MARTIN BAD WORSE.—It is related of a Parisian portrait-painter, that having recently painted the portrait of a lady, a critic, who had just dropped in to see what was going on in the studio, exclaimed:

"It is really pitiable; but why did you take such an ugly model?"

"Ugly, mother," calmly replied the artist.

"Why, you monster, you rascal!" (you critic, in great confusion. "You are right; I ought to have perceived it. She resembles you completely."

To omit a good deed out of an approbation of being applied is to make a selfish motive too fair, and to keep up our precept by the breach of another.

BEAUTY AND IMAGINATION.—Sometimes there are the most beautiful creatures in the world. Reality surpasses imagination; and we see breathing, bright-eyed beings before our eyes, equal to the creations of our purest fancy.

CAREFULNESS NOT MEANNESS.—To be careful, however, is not to be mean. Meanness is a vice and impolitic, not less than prodigality and carelessness. The proverb well says that "The penny saved never came to two-pence. Generosity and liberality prove the best policy. Looking at the most common-place matters, we have often raised themselves from a humble position to affluence and eminence, and that they have generally been liberal men —men whose conduct has been as remote from meanness and parsimony as from carelessness and prodigality.

A new sign for a tavern has recently been invented—Dew-drop inn (do drop in).

"I think I see on a new fac-torn in this case," as the lady said when she cleared informed him that he had plenty of money.

Why are the drinking-saloons in Washington like a cotton-cloth?—Because they are generally surrounded by out-sheds.

Why must Shakspeare be a first-rate poet?—Because he's the best in the land. (In the land, Cotton and no unlimited supply of refreshments allowed for the reader's mantle in discovering this.)

A REFLECTION IN AN ANGLER.—Artemus's Aristocratic Mental man being bit a worm, is therefore by nature of a thoughtful turn.

A Mormon preacher lately said, "I have forty-eight children, and I have reason to hope that Heaven will vouchsafe me a good many more." Before a hundred years my direct descendants will exceed in number the population of the State of New York, which consists of four million souls."

Love, like a sailor upon a wind-calmed sea, beholds no depth, only heaven. Heaven above. Heaven below. Heaven around beneath, and the water that bears it up is merely a paler heaven.

"Sally," said a fellow to a girl who had red hair, "keep away from me or you'll set me on fire." "No danger o' that," replied Sally, "you are too green to burn."

A Frenchman writing a letter in England to a friend, and looking in the dictionary for the word "precaution," and finding it, wrote to his friend, word as follows: "May you and your family be pickled to all eternity?"

LOVE OF THE BEAUTIFUL.—The love of the beautiful and the good is as strong in the heart of the cynic, restless, forever clear and liquid in the inmost shrine of the soul.

DO YOU GIVE IT UP?

Why are poultry the most profitable things a farmer can keep?

Because for every grain they eat you get a fowl.

When did Moses sleep five in a bed?

When he slept with his four (four) fathers.

What part of speech is a kiss?

A conjunction.

What heavenly thing and what earthly thing does a ruby most resemble?—The sun and your nose?

The sun and your boots, for it takes the shine out of both.

My first relieves each pain and care,
My second as an helmet wear,
My third is found in every home,
My whole to every one strength it seem.
Red-pot.

Why are people born dead the most virtuous of beings?

Because they never arrest (hearth).

If all the oceans were dried up, what would Neptune do?

He would not have a surface on comet.

What's the difference between a young lady and a hat?

One has feeling and the other is felt.

My first is a pronoun,
My second is inferiority,
My whole an impertinent.
Matchless.

Why is a deaf doctor like a dead cricket?

Because they have both done quacking.

Why is A like a honey-suckle?

Because a bee (B) follows it.

Why are married people like a pair of shears?

Because they are so joined that they must be separated without violence, and yet always pursue one object, and always move between them.

My first is a city little brute,
My second's as the end on't,
My third, like many an honest man,
Is on a fool dependent.
Pig-foot.

THE PET PARROTT ON THE UNITED STATES STEAMER "RICHMOND" IN A STORM.—[See Page 320.]

UNION REFUGEES IN THE SWAMPS OF LOUISIANA.—[See Page 316.]

'ONLY A BABY'S GRAVE!'

'Only a baby's grave!'
Some foot or two, at the most,
Of star-dasted sod, yet I think that God
Knows what that little grave cost.

Only a baby's grave!
To children even so small,
That they sit there and sing—so small a thing
Seems scarcely a grave at all!

Only a baby's grave!
Strange! how we moan and fret
For a little face that was here such a space—
O more strange, could we forget!

Only a baby's grave!
Did we measure grief by this,
Few tears were shed on our baby dead,
I know how they fell on this.

Only a baby's grave!
Will the little life be much
Too small a gem for His diadem,
Whose kingdom is made of such?

Only a baby's grave!
Yet often we come and sit
By the little stone, and thank God to own
We are nearer Heaven for it!

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

☞ Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER XX.

LILY GOES OUT TO DINNER.

The handsome lady, who, probably to serve her own purposes, had been bland and almost affable while the treaty of peace with the Bunnycastles and Mr. Pax was being concluded, was seemingly of a most capricious disposition. At all events, she informed Lily, so soon as they were outside the door of Rhododendron House, that she would box her ears well if she made any rudes, or gave her any further trouble; and the child, quite unaccustomed to harsh treatment, or even threats, followed her new protectress in a very subdued, but scarcely cheerful manner.

The Clapham stage—peace to its short memory!—is extinct in these days, and it was by means of this conveyance that Lily was brought to the metropolis. First of all, however, the lady took her into a pastry-cook's shop and bought her a very large Bath bun, which she apparently considered a sovereign remedy for all the woes of childhood, for she said, very bad half eaten it, she said to her, not quite so sharply as before:

"Now, are you quite happy?"

Lily had not attained the summit of human felicity, but she deemed it expedient to appear rich a personage so stern as the personage who talked of boxing her ears. She murmured an affirmative.

"That's right," pursued the lady. "Be a gentle little darling, very sage and obedient, and I will love you. Don't vex me, or I shall have an attack of nerves. Satanée ingrisine, ya!!! This last remark she made in a language which Lily did not understand; and she noticed that the lady made remarks in the same incomprehensible tongue rather frequently. She noticed, also, that the lady, after bestowing on her the Bath bun, ate a macaroon herself, and called for a glass of cherry brandy; that, after drinking it, she declared it to be "detestable," and demanded a glass of water, the which beverage she characterized as "infamous poison." Likewise, Lily noted that her protectress apostrophized the young waiter in ribbons and ringlets who officiated behind the counter of the pastry-cook, as an "impertinent"—an impertinent, simply, not an impudent, nor any thing—and that she vehemently protested that there was a bad half-penny among her change. The change itself she flung at the head of a beggar boy who was lurking at the door, licking his lips at sight of the greasy delicacies in the twopenny tray; but the handful of farthings burst in the side of his head, so that he yelped with pain, and forbore to thank her. Then she swept out of the shop, nearly overturning an old gentleman in a white hat, who was seated on a cane-bottomed chair, meekly handing on a sausage-roll, and leaving the young lady in ribbons and ringlets in semi-hysterics of indignant mortifications.

There were two inside places vacant in the Clapham stage, and Lily, for the second time in her life, was installed in a coach. She had been such a little while at school that the great outside world seemed almost as strange to her as it might to a chosen nun, transferred, for some occult monastic reason or other, from convent to convent.

Lily gazed about her as wistfully and as carefully as ever a nun could do; but she wore no veil, nor had she a breviary; so she began to ask the lady a series of questions about the things on the road which she saw from the windows of the stage, and was lived in those tall houses; why there were gates and bars across the road, with men in white aprons, and with red faces, who darted out of the little hovels, and seemed so angry—to judge from their hoarse voices—whenever a carriage came through. The lady was not very communicative. Once or twice she said, "Absurd!" Then she cried, "Peste!" At last she bade the child be silent.

The journey, however, was saved from being entirely uneventful by a few fierce verbal encounters between the lady and two other inside passengers. One of these, a tall young man, with weak eyes, an eruptive countenance, speckled stockings and shoes, the lady accused of rudely staring at her. She called him several injurious names, and made him generally so miserable that the young man, well-nigh moved to tears, got out at Kennington Common, forgoing half the amount of locomotion to which he was entitled. Then she had a passage of arms with an old gentleman in a bottle-green spencer and a fish, whom she charged with having wilfully trodden on her feet; but in this last case she had reckoned without her host, for it turned out that the old gentleman had a temper of his own, and was not inclined to brook indignity with meekness.

"I didn't do any thing of the sort, mum," quoth the old gentleman, with rising wrath, on the charge being repeated.

"Sir, you are gross! you are brutal! you are elephantine!" retorted the lady.

"Upon my word, I think the woman's mad!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "I'm very glad that I'm not your husband, mum."

"Insolent again,your hob-nobs are crushing my feet."

"Confound your feet!" screamed the old gentleman, in a fury. "I never touched 'em. Here, guard, guard, let me get out. And as for you, my darling," he continued, addressing Lily, "I wish you joy of your grandmother, and I wouldn't be in your shoes for something. Good-morning, mum, and a more Christian answer to you!" And, so saying, the old gentleman got out in dudgeon at the southern foot of Westminster Bridge.

They went on without any more adventures to the Golden Cross, Charing Cross, where they alighted. The lady and her ward swept away, and the coachman and the guard both turned their heads to look at them.

"Fine woman, Bill!" observed the coachman.

"Good stepper!" agreed the guard; "stunning fine for rattling pace. But ra-ther a kicker; eh, Josh?"

"I shouldn't like to be the splash board," replied the coachman, "that she puts her right foot on of. Kick! She'd kick the Tower of London into toothpicks. God 'un to bite too, I should think. Say nothing of the young 'un, though! She's a real live woman, Bill, and no mistake."

The subject of this criticism had held pretty tightly of Lily's hand during the last few hours, but she now released it, and, with a fierce air, began to count a large wedge of silence among the million. The million were there, in the shape of many old ladies in beaver bonnets, and school-children, and raw lounging lads, and scores of the country-cousin order generally. They poked their fingers into the models, and peered between the backs of the ships to see to see where the captain's cabin was, and gave themselves galvanic shocks, at which they danced, and—the penguin per cent—screamed dismally. There they inhaled doses of laughing-gas. And then they had a most extraordinary machine, and a steam-gun, explained to them, by hand and hard to look at though they understood those scientific inventions. Then there was a Diorama, and there was a number of little round holes, and saw some very brilliant pictures, which, she was told, represented Lisbon, Chamounix, and Jerusalem, and the like: at the which she clapped her hands in not unfamiliar glee, for a man with a peep-show had once been about the Rhododendron House. Rhododendron House. The Bunnycastles took care to put this entertainment in the bills of the five-and-thirty boarders, inviting them to the Admission to a geographical and pictorial exhibition. Then, at the close of a light meal, was conducted into a dark room, where an unseen gentleman with a hollow voice, as from the tombs, delivered a lecture on astronomy, which, indeed, was so dreary, and so full of long words, that it almost made Lily cry; and then he exhibited on an illuminated table Jerusalem, which was like the spider at Rhododendron House, only magnified eight hundred million times; and to this strange entertainment was added a show which that of Rhododendron was monocayllabic. There was another dark room, another room from a pleasant gentleman with a bald head and a rough country accent, who was surrounded by bottles and glasses, poured a little coloured water from one into another, and turned green water into red, and popped little twisted pieces of tow into them, whereupon they went off like fire-crackers, and he trying his very hardest to blow himself up—which, indeed, in his ardor for science, he did, on an average, once in six months. "A piece of the flint's conder the receiver, and bockles of gass would arise," quoth the pleasant old gentleman; and then bubbles of gas did arise, and burst with a sharp crackling noise, and the audience clapped their hands, till another bubble rose, and somebody ran off to see a patent-potter's wheel, supposed to make any number of cups and saucers, elaborately painted, by merely touching a spring, but which habitually confined itself to spattering cascades of white mud upon the clothes of the spectators. Lily was delighted with every thing, only somewhat confused, and the lecture with the magnificent globe and the long name decidedly frightened her.

She was not sorry when, it being about three o'clock in the afternoon, they went across the Strand again. The lady had swept through the Adelaide Gallery in the disdainful manner customary with her, and now and again sternly reprehending strangers for crowding upon her, or treading on the skirts of her robe. The country cousins, however, did not seem to mind her much, and one of them was venturous enough to ask if the room not being big enough for her, she thought St. Paul's would be? Whereupon she tossed her head, and looked Perkins's steamguns at him. She condescended, however, to laugh at the galvanic shocks the cousins gave themselves, and declared that the invention was droll.

Lily observed that when they were in the street she always held her very tight by the hand, and looked about her a great deal, and that once or twice she put up one hand to take her away, to allow herself to be torn in ten thousand pieces first.

"Not that there is any danger," she continued, more to herself than to Lily, "not that I am afraid. Oh no. I am strong—strong enough for ten ancient men. But hah! let them come. What nonsense. My monsters are abroad. Are you hungry?" she went on, looking down at the little girl.

Lily, accustomed to the early and regular meals of Rhododendron House, answered that she would like to have her dinner, if the lady pleased.

"Dinner!" repeated the lady. "Absurdity! You are to dine by-and-by with the gentleman. You must wait. Come, little glutton, and have another cake."

She took the little glutton into another pastry-cook's, and presented her, as heretofore, with a Bath bun. And then when Lily had picked the caraway seeds and the spicule of lump sugar off the sticky varnished surface, she found she had no appetite for the sweet, saffron-coloured dough beneath. She sent hawked her little plate of bread, and the pastry-cook looked up so reproachfully in the gravy. She longed for a slice of the plain school-pudding, at which the big girls and the little girls used to fight to which they applied such opprobrious epithets. Seeing her distaste, the lady snatched away the Bath bun, and said a few words in French on the counter, and then ordered some ox-tail soup for Lily, but it was so hot that it burnt her mouth, and so pungent that it brought tears into her eyes, to say nothing of its being thick, and slab, and greasy; so the end of it was that the ox-tail soup shared the fate of the bun, and the lady, in a fume, pushed Lily before her into the street again.

"Intolerable little plague!" she cried, furiously. "What am I to do with you? Comparent yourself! Perhaps you shall be given to the black man. Entends-tu?"

A buxom mamma in flame-colored silk and a chinchilla tippet was passing over the way. Flesh—looked up with surprise as she heard the voice of the handsome savage woman who had dominion over Lily. Then a prudent look, as she gathered her chicks around her in a kind of nervous tremor, lest unkindness should be contagious.

"Blessings on us all!" murmured the buxom flame-coloured mamma, as Lily and her mentress went on their way, the latter scowling.

"What a Fury that woman looks!" How cruel it is the spoil a sweet innocent child darling. Fiscilla, my love, mind the crossing."

It was a very dangerous crossing—from the Golden Cross to the Strand. Metropolitan improvements have since diminished its perils; but in those days it was fearful ford. For, first, there was a man run over. Lily could only hear a yell, and see the rush of people to the spot, and a vague, confused crowd with a policeman clearing his way through it; but when the ranks of the throng opened and they came out carrying something between them, a hat, a cloak, and the jolly red face of the man—a van driver, who had unwittingly done the mischief—turn, high up in the air, a yellowish white, as the crowd cried out that somebody was killed, Lily turned quite sick and faint, and fancied that the old enough to swoon would have fainted on the spot. She would have run away; but the lady's grasp was firmer than ever, and she had herself seemed grimly interested in the catastrophe. She scanned the burden they were taking to Charing Cross Hospital; she questioned the policeman; and but for Lily's agonized entreaties that they might go away, she would have crossed the road to look at the accident.

They went into a hackney-coach after this; and the lady ordered the driver to proceed to Baker Street. Lily was taken to see Madame Tussaud's famous exhibition of wax-work. Old Madame Tussaud herself was alive in those days, and a very wonderful old lady Lily thought her, in her black silk bonnet and hood, handing about those terrible books at the door. And although there not Mr. Cobbett, looking so remarkably like life, with his broad-brimmed hat, and his spectacles, and his placid face, and breathing hard, like a benevolent grampus? And the recumbent lady with the black lace veil, whose bosom rose and fell? And the Jew-pedlar? And there not the kings and queens in valves and Roman chariots, looking quite as brilliant as real ones? And the cavaliers in armor, and M. de Voltaire with his shriveled face, and the old coquette in her hoop and brocade? Lily was in ecstasies, and for a time forgot about the poor man who had been run over. Here were all Mungrudi's questions, answered in the most splendid manner without the trouble of learning a single lesson.

The Rhododendron Museum was not then in existence; but the Chamber of Horrors was already one of the lions of London. 'Twas a strange place to take a little school-girl, out for a holiday, into; but the strange lady paid the extra sixpence—I don't know whether they admit children, now—and they went inside, and supped full of horrors. That horrible guillotine. That dismal cavern where the royal victims of revolutionary ferocity bore their captivity with such dignified resignation—in wax-work. That appalling torso in the emasgunned shirt. That gloomy dock full of murderers. Bishop and Williams were there, and Greenacre and Courvoisier; but it was too early yet for Goulds, and Rush, and Mannings.

Lily had not been long in the Chamber of Horrors before she began to think of the man who had been run over. The air of the show seemed hot and thick. She could scarcely breathe. The glass eyes glared upon her. The corded garments had a musty smell. She piteously besought the strange lady to take her out, promising to be very good and quiet if she would only take her away from that dreadful place.

"You are a little fool," said the lady. "La rue de ces marauds-là m'a donné de l'appétit." And then, with a sharp "Come along," she led the way out of the Chamber of Horrors. "Now," she said, when they had emerged amidst a hackney-coach, "we are going to dinner, and mind you are very good, or the sweep shall come and eat you."

Lily was too big to believe in any apocryphal devouring propensities attributed to the harmless, albeit unwashed, individual who carries the soot-bag; but the lady was so very strange, and, at times, so very fierce-looking, that she thought it not at all improbable that she herself, failing the sweep, could have done something in the child-devouring line. She shivered her head, and tried to look as good as she felt.

It was a very long way to dinner. They went through a number of brilliant streets and crescents, of which she did not know the names; but they were Oxford Street, Regent Street, and the Strand. Then they walked down a narrow street on to a narrow pier by the water-side. Then a man called out "Cheerawicks!" and they went on board a steamboat, where, to Lily's delight, they remained a whole hour. The ships, the wherries, the barges, the distant steeples, the bridges, the blue dome of Paul's, the towering Monument, the gray old Tower, filled her soul with joy. She quite forgot how frightened she was at the strange lady. She forgot how hungry she was, and was quite happy.

"To-morrow," said the strange lady, as they landed on the pier at Greenwich, and Lily followed her to a large handsome house, "to-morrow you will go to school."

"Not to-day, ma'am?" asked the child. "Not to-day, Mrs. Bunnycastle, eh?"

"Mrs. Bunnycastle," returned the lady, "is a ridiculous old sheep. You are not going back to her, but to another school, where you will be taught to be very sage, and to behave yourself."

The child was amazed, and lapsed into silence.

"What are you thinking of?" the lady asked, as they ascended the steps of the large handsome house.

"I was thinking, ma'am," Lily answered, "of what a curious smell of hot fish there was every where."

CHAPTER XXI.

LILY IS REGALED ON WHITE-BAIT.

A BURST of laughter broke from a balcony overhead as Lily and her protectress entered the large handsome mansion; and the child, looking upwards, could see a number of gentlemen congregated outside, who were leaning over the railings, which ran round the balcony, and appeared to be enjoying themselves very much.

"By Jove!" cried one of the gentlemen—but this Lily could not hear—"here's a female!"

"And brought the little one with her, too. She said she would," for propriety's sake.

"I wonder if she will oblige us with a rapid act of horsemanship round the room, after dinner."

"It's more likely that she will fly into one of her passions, and fling the water-souché, plates and all, at the waiters' heads."

"Or at us."

"I've seen her do something very nearly approaching that, once, at the Star and Garter, she grew jealous of somebody, and tried to strangle herself with a table-napkin."

"I've seen worse thing, the girl."

"Her daughter, possibly. Tigresses have cubs, sometimes."

"Hush! here's the tigress herself.—Countess, how delighted we all are to see you!"

The countess and Lily were received at the door of the mansion which smelt so strongly of warm fish, by a stout gentleman in a blue coat and buff waistcoat, who stood over a tub of ice and life appeared to be to show to every visitor how white, smooth, and polished, the centre of his bald head was, and how perfectly round the sutures of his skull were. He was continually bowing at, not so, the visitor of the establishment of which he was the respected landlord—he has been dead many years, and his name, I beg to say, was neither Hart nor Lawrence—and he butted at you, so to speak, with his baldness, like an affable albino. The pacific nature of the fat gentleman was typified by the snowy flag of truce which he continually waved. That flag was not precisely a napkin—that would have been too much like a waiter—nor a pocket-handkerchief—that would have been too much like a dandy—but a combination of the two: a cross between cambric and damask. But he ever waved it in peace and amity, as though to say, "I'm no enemy. This is the habitation of fish and of felicity. Let no cares sit behind your chairs. I know all my customers and respect them. If you do not choose to pay the bill on the spot you can send me down a check by the post, or by your body-servant at your convenience: only, don't dispute my charges, for that would hurt my feelings. This is not a vulgar cook-shop. Last week I entertained his Majesty's ministers. We don't want common people here. Let them go up the town, toward the Park, and have tea and shrimps for sixpence. Here, we desire the attendance of the superior classes only. Walk in, walk in, ladies and gentlemen. This is feelling time; and the bait is in excellent condition."

If a trader resolutely make up his mind definitively to address himself to the "superior classes," and if he carry out his intent with tact and nerve, he shall scarcely fail, I take it, to achieve success. The supposition is forward that tailor who boldly says, "Let others vaunt their sixteen-shilling garments: no puff of mine shall ever claim insertion in the columns of the press, and I will go on charging seven pounds ten shillings for a frock-coat. There are people who like to be mulct for waxcandles at a hotel, and who would think it derogatory to their dignity to pay less than seven-and-sixpence for a fried sole and a mutton-chop. Yes, there are persons who are uncomfortable unless they are overcharged. Dearness has a kink of affinity with high Toryism, and others of our glorious institutions. Cheapness is democratic: cheapness is leveling. I have always been of opinion that a daily newspaper printed on cream-laid bank post, but sparingly sold, and sold at the rate of half a crown a number, would be a success. It might have but a small circulation, but it would pay, and it would be read by the superior classes by the light of three-and-sixpenny wax-candles, after seven-and-sixpenny dinners, and while lighting a post-free fifteen shillings a bottle.

The validity or otherwise of this hypothesis is no excuse, however, for keeping a number of very hungry people waiting for their dinner. The lady passed the bald-headed landlord without a friendly inclination of the head. The landlord called out in a rich, but subdued voice—a voice like wood—"Show the Bentons in." A fat, obsequious waiter, with curved red whiskers, very like the claws of a lobster, conducted the guests up the newly carpeted stairway, and ushered them over to the mistress of the robes, a bouxom chambermaid.

As the lady, deftly unshawled, but still keeping on her bonnet, swept toward the Bentons, preceded by another waiter, the chambermaid, who had just taken off Lily's hat, and fluttered a brush over her brown curls, stooped down and kissed the child.

"Poor little innocent darling," she whispered. "Is that your mamma, my darling?"

"I don't know," answered the child, looking up to the face of her querist with a very trustful look, for by the young woman's voice she was kind and loving.

"Poor little thing," the chambermaid continued, "what does this pet have for dinner, then, baby? Why, they'd burn her tongue out! Don't you eat no devil, my dear."

Lily gazed at her with blank surprise. She had heard—what child has not? of the devil—and had been warned to avoid him and all his works; but she had never been cautioned not to eat him.

"Nor yet don't you take no punch, nor no sauce pickang," went on the chambermaid. "There, go along, dear, your ma's calling you."

"It's a shame to bring children here," the buxom chambermaid subsequently remarked to the waiter with the lobster-claw whiskers. "You can't do 'em no good, and it's enough to ruin their little stomachs. I don't mind the Eton boys that come here with their pa's and ma's, and manage to get tipsy unbeknown, and nearly dash their young brains out scrying monkey tricks outside the balcony, and then tear down the stairs like mad. I don't mind them. Mischief they've got to, and mischief they're full of. And, But what does that Frenchwoman want here with that little bit of a thing! I don't believe she's her child. She's been here three times to dinner this season. Last time she brought an old Frenchwoman who spilt snuff into her salmon cutlets, and got tipsy half an hour after the ducks came up. My belief, William, is, that she's nothing better than a playactress."

Another room of the dinner-hall threw open the Benbow, a pretty saloon overlooking the river, and announced the new arrivals.

He was a waiter with very light dun-colored hair and a pale pasty face. He was warm in appearance, but moist; the entire room, for it was scarcely an unnatural fancy to imagine that he had been fried in batter, and that, although now a waiter, he had, according to the law (as has broached) Theory of Development, sprung from a white bait.

Have you never observed how very like fish the waiters at Greenwich are? There is the John Dory waiter; the shrimpy waiter; the plump and plethoric; the white-bait waiter; the eel waiter, who wriggles very much as he waits.

A group of gentlemen advanced to meet the lady and her little client. They received her with many bows and more smiles. Lily was not at all frightened of them, for every one was grandly dressed they were all very kind and friendly to look. There was a large old gentleman with an embossed velvet waistcoat, and a great gold chain meandering over it, and a beautiful fringe of white whisker round his purple face. He had a fine hook nose, very prominent and very deeply colored, and to Lily he looked like a splendid Punch. She had seen Punch, once or twice, by sly peeps from the windows of Rhododendron House, and had woven a mythic legend about him that he and the Little Hunchback, and the porter who boxed the Barnecide's ears, were brothers. This old gentleman his companions addressed, but without much restraint, as Marquis. He had a loud voice, and often addressed the countess in that which was an unknown tongue to Lily. There were two or three gentlemen equally splendid, but younger, who were addressed indifferently as Tom, Dick, and Harry, whichever you please; and there was a spiteful-looking gentleman with very big black whiskers, which looked as though they had not been originally sable, but had acquired their present sombre hue by dint of pigment. This gentleman wore a high black stock, and a coat buttoned up to his chin, and his trowsers were strapped very tightly over his boots to the heels of which boots Lily saw something long and bright attached, with a spiky star at the end of each.

Finally, there was a very tall gentleman—a painfully tall gentleman, for there seemed no end to his legs—who kept a little apart from the others, and did not laugh so loud as they did. He had a long face, very thin and pale, and a good deal of beautiful black hair thrown back from his forehead. His hands, as Lily soon knew, were very small and thin; you could almost see through them. His clothes seemed to fit him very loosely, and when he spoke he lisped.

He was the last of the gentlemen who made friends with Lily. He was the last but one that He drew her toward him while the men were bestowing compliments on the handsome lady, and then asked her, in a whisper, a very soft kiss on her forehead. Not one of the other gentlemen had done that. Had they touched her Lily would have blushed, but their attempt would have risen, and she would have cried "Don't." But she did not reject the thin pale gentleman.

"And so your mamma has brought you to dine with us, little one?" he said, looking in her clear eyes.

The handsome lady was her mamma. This was news to Lily. She had in no way directly or his question, but began to chatter on what a pretty place it was, and how beautiful all the lights looked on the river.

"Ay, ay," returned the pale tall gentleman, nodding his head, "there are plenty of pretty things here, and plenty of people to look at them. Are you fond of pretty things?"

"Oh! I love them so dearly," the child cried, joining her small palms together. And then she began to tell him about the spider on the wall, and the wonderful picture in the Little Punch, and Miss Dallwallah's golden ear-rings, and a great doll with a blue satin frock and pink shoes and a sash, which she had left behind at home her, and which had belonged to Miss Knox crops, the poor girl who died before Lily came to school.

"You are a strange child," the tall gentleman said. "What's your name?"

"Lily Floria."

"The rose by any other name would smell as sweet. And how old are you, dear?"

"Nearly eight," quoth Lily; "and what's your name, Sir?"

"Tom Jones," replied the gentleman.

"No it isn't," pursued Lily, shaking her head "it's something much prettier than that. Do tell me, or I won't talk to you any more."

"Well," replied the gentleman, smiling, "my name's Long."

"Long what?"

"You little inquisitor! My Christian name is William, and people call me William Long. At school they used to nickname me Long Billy."

"And how old are you? I should so like to know?"

"I am twenty-eight."

"Then you're just twenty years older than I am. How nice! Are you married?"

"No," gravely answered the tall gentleman, who said his name was Long William Long. "I am Quite Alone."

"Quite alone!" quoth Lily, laughing. "All the girls told me so. I have always been Quite Alone till to-day. May I sit with you at dinner?"

Sir William was about to give a smiling affirmative to the naive question, when the countess—the handsome lady—was busily watching this little by-play from afar off, addressed the tall gentleman by the name of Good-for-nothing, and asked him if he could be induced to keep them waiting?

The speaker's face fitting with your little girl," he said, as he placed the child beside him.

Lily did not know any thing about flirting; but she had always felt that this man had been very kind to her, and she liked very much to sit near him.

"Flirting!" exclaimed the countess, scornfully. "You begin early."

"You had better teach the little one her A B C, in a hurry," returned Sir William.

"She'll get on fast enough if you take her away from school and teach her yourself," the old gentleman, who was a marquis, remarked, with a bow.

"When I want her to learn wickedness she shall come to you," retorted the lady. "Please to give me some souche, and, Sir William, I entreat you not to put the unhappy child out of mouth."

The lady brightened up more and more after each course, and when the sparkling wines were passed about, was quite radiant.

"I like this Greenwich," she said, holding a brimming glass of Moselle to the light; "it does me good. It makes me breathe. Give me Greenwich and Richmond, and you may sink the rest of your sad England to the bottom of your muddy Thames. How good these little dinners are! How crisp they are! Good-for-nothings, I drink to you." The lady was enjoying herself.

TO-MORROW.

THERE'S sunshine on life's path to-day,
The flowers bloom fresh and fair;
It is youth's balmy month of May,
There's fragrance in the air.
Around his way no cloud is cast
By memory or sorrow;
He looks with rapture on the past,
And hopeful on to-morrow.

But Time strides on, and from his wing
The autumn shadows fall;
Alas! the buds of early spring
Are withered, all and all.
And summer morn'ries only seem
A distant light to borrow;
While still the future will be sunly dream,
Joy may return to-morrow.

Then winter, with a ruthless hand,
Throws gloom across the scene;
And snow-storms fall upon his head,
Where sunshine late hath been.
Age shudders by the hearth a while:
And, bow'd by care and sorrow,
Looks to that future with a smile,
Where there is no to-morrow!

THE BLACK-EYED SMUGGLER.

"DID I tell you the story of Mary Simpson, the female smuggler?"

This inquiry was addressed to a knot of Federal soldiers grouped before a tent, standing in a row or so of others just out of Memphis. The questioner was a burly fellow with a good-humored face, in the plain uniform of a private, who seemed to be a favorite with the little company, all of whom insisted that they had never heard the story and would be delighted to do so.

"Well, here goes. Several weeks ago, by order of Captain Pillow of the Thirteenth Tennessee, I set out from Fort Pillow, some miles, you know, above here, to guide a party of four citizens to a point where a large delivery of cotton was said to be stored. We rode along through the woods at an easy gait, laughing and chatting pleasantly together, when, after making several miles, we were suddenly overtaken by a woman riding a mule—the sorriest looking mule I ever saw—and in the next instant we were all ordered to halt. Of course we slackened our pace to hear what the woman had to say, when, to the astonishment of us all highwayman, she drew a revolver, and aiming it straight at my head, ordered me to get down and give her my horse. Resistance was out of the question, of course, and I dismounted, and she mounted in my place. Then she turned to the four citizens, who seemed to be very much frightened at her appearance, and ordered them to march. Then she turned to me, and, with a mocking laugh, bade me farewell, and rode away, leaving the fair highwayman, in the words to practice, if she chose, on the trees, not having had the courage to make us her targets. She was clearly too much surprised at our coolness to shoot. She had supposed that, of course, we would surrender at the first demand, as we had no way and weapons visible; and when we simply laughed at her, she no doubt saw instantly how absurdly she had acted, and in the confusion of her thoughts permitted us to slip away unmolested.

"We rode on for a mile or so, chatting of the adventure, when suddenly it struck me that maybe it was not safe, after all, that this woman should be at large. I threw there were scores of female spies and smugglers in the rebel service, and no doubt she was one of the number. I determined, therefore, to ride back after her, and, leaving the party to make their own way toward the interior, at once struck into a by-path, and made all haste to report the affair at headquarters.

"Immediately upon hearing the story Captain Preston gave me a squad of men, and we set out briskly in pursuit of the woman and her miserable mule. The men were full of jokes at the idea of chasing a woman, and declared all sorts of conjectures as to the probable effect of a collision on the hearts of some of them bantering me sharply on my want of gallantry in not at once crying quarter with this invitation of the mule-heroine to exchange steeds. Finally, after riding some five miles, one of the men exclaimed 'There she is!' and looking down the road we saw she was there, in truth, riding leisurely up to an old house that stood by the roadside. It is unnecessary to say we rode overtaken, and had her mule by the bridle.

"'I've got you, have I, my boy,' your seat,' I said, as she was about to dismount. 'I am authorized by the commander of Fort Pillow to say that having heard of your late exploit, he would be happy to make your acquaintance; and, if you please, we'll go right back.'

"'Oh, boys, was the politest speech I ever made; even when I proposed to Nancy, the mother of my great strapping boys by the side of whom I wasn't half as polite as on this occasion; but the fair highwayman didn't seem in the least impressed by my style; on the contrary, she looked as savage as a meat-axe, and no doubt wished for the moment that she was a boa-constrictor that she might just swallow me whole. She was still trying to get down from her mule, but I again interrupted her with:

"'Keep where you are, please,' and with that turned her mule and gave the bridle to one of the men.

"'You're a brute I'she cried, savagely, her eyes snapping.

"'Thank you for the compliment," said I, coolly, and mounted my horse.

"'I won't go a step,' she said, as I gave the order to march.

"'But your mule will,' I answered; 'he's a splendid beast and loves good company if his mistress don't, and the men laughed.

"She gave up at last, murmuring, however, that no two men could have conquered her, but numbers overpowered her and she must succumb. With that she gave up her arms, and taking the reins into her hands jogged along pleasantly enough between two of the guard.

"Well, after a time we reached the fort, and the little woman, the pride of her generalship query examined. It was a decidedly delicate business, but I think the commander got through with it in a satisfactory manner, for he found upon her person orders from the rebel Colonel Hicks for a list of contraband supplies, such as gunpowder, cavalry boots, and similar articles—all of which, and had not been detected, she would no doubt have furnished.

"The next day, having been given a night's rest, she was questioned as to her mode of operation, and with no sort of hesitation told her story. She acknowledged that she was regularly employed by rebels in obtaining goods necessary for their comfort and smuggling them through the lines, which she boasted she had done with some success for a year or more.

"'What do you get for this service?' Captain Preston inquired.

"'One hundred dollars a month,' she answered, promptly.

"And how much of the money which the rebels give you to make purchases do you put into your own purse?'

She looked at him indignantly. 'I'd have you know I'm a lady, Sir,' she said; 'I'm not in the habit of stealing!'

"Oh!' ejaculated the Captain, and whistled, which was his companions, as much as to say, 'Here's an oddity—a smuggler and highwayman who won't steal!'

"Then came the questioning went on. Her purchases were usually made, she said, in St. Louis, whence she brought down the goods by steamer. In her last trip she had landed at Randolph, some miles, you remember, above Fort Pillow, and had passed through the lines in safety. The mule also was on her way, she said, to the house of a rebel sympathizer, whose name we obtained, and whose house at the head of wagons of violins, and after capturing a considerable quantity of contraband goods that had been smuggled out of Memphis.

"'And now,' said the amused Captain Postén remarked, when she had concluded. 'Now, if you please, what is your name?'

"'Mary Simpson.'

"'Do you never sail under any other?'

"'Oh yes. At Randolph I was known as Mary Timms.'

"That was about all we could learn then of the bishop's daughter, who married rascal, as she was lips. Some days after, however, I was sent up to Randolph to make inquiries as to her associations and movements there, and, by a little judicious management, soon gathered some very interesting additional facts. She was well known in Randolph and the surrounding country, having for a year or so ago passed under several aliases and been strongly suspected of acting as a spy for the rebels, and in that capacity carrying intelligence from Jackson, Tennessee, to the Hatchie. Over six months ago I found that she had escaped to the rebel General Worsart to purchase ammunition for his command. She was generally considered quick and determined, and not what would be called, wicked, which was a fault. Once, I was told, she had boasted that she could wind at will around her finger any Federal officer she had ever seen; but she found one exception, at least, in Captain Postén.

"I will not continue the story, boys, is yet to come. We found that this woman was married, and that her husband was actually one of our own Federal officers. In fact, when we first discovered that she was really fast she disclosed this fact and asked to see her husband, thinking, maybe, that for his sake she would be let off. But he would intercede for her and secure her some privileges in her confinement. Her desire was complied to the husband, but he positively refused to see her, saying she had brought disgrace upon him and their family by selling the enemies of the country, and she must take the consequences of her perfidy. He took steps, too, at once, to have his children taken from her care, which I didn't mean, for I felt that his boys should be taught to hate the flag he was fighting for. The man was a Tennessean, and you know, sometimes, when these Tennesseans are loyal they go the whole figure, suffering nothing in the shape of mercy to be shown to rebels.

"The woman seemed touched when her husband's answer was given her, but she soon recovered her spirits, and laughed at her fatherly refused to tell where the goods she had orders for were concealed; but we poked about, gathering up a thread here and a clew there, until at last we discovered evidence sufficient to justify the arrest of several persons as her accomplices, and the Captain began still to discover the contraband stock. Meanwhile Mary Simpson has an opportunity to think over her past life in prison, and she was deputed as she pleases of the future, which, just now, she must consider any thing but promising." And that ends the story of the Black-eyed Smuggler."

"But," said one of the listeners, "what became of her mule?"

"Oh, he was confiscated. The last time I saw him he was hitched to a cart, hauling wood for head-quarters."

"So all greatness fades. To-day the charger of a black-eyed, dashing, pretty woman-warrior; to-morrow hauling a great cart along muddy roads, with a wrecked, battered contraband for driver."

"Pshaw, Sergeant, you're sentimental. Put out your pipe, and let's to bed. Good-night, comrades!"

FORAGING IN LOUISIANA.—[See next Page.]

FORAGING IN LOUISIANA.

WE give on the preceding page a spirited illustration of the war in Louisiana, showing the manner in which the army is at times furnished with supplies. Necessarily, in advancing into the enemy's country, our forces are obliged to depend in some degree upon the resources of the region occupied for supplies of beef, etc., and probably no experiences are more pleasurable and full of excitement than those which are ordinarily encountered in expeditions such as our artist has presented.

JOHN MINOR BOTTS.

JOHN MINOR BOTTS, whose portrait we give on this page, and who occupied for many years a distinguished position in American politics, was born in Dumfries, Prince William County, Virginia, on the 10th of September, 1802. He early entered upon political life, attaching himself to the Whig party when, in 1824, it assumed its definite form, and becoming from the first one of its most ardent and prominent supporters. The previous year he was elected to the Virginia Legislature, and was afterward several times re-elected. In 1839 he was elected to Congress, and there distinguished himself as an advocate of a national bank, a protective tariff, and other measures of which HENRY CLAY was the great originator and expounder. In 1843 he was not returned to Congress, but four years after he was elected to that body for the third time. After the death of Mr. CLAY he attached himself to the American party, as a member of which he opposed the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and sympathized with those Southern members of Congress who opposed the passage of the Lecompton bill in 1858. Upon the secession of Virginia he fell under suspicion on account of his known hostility to the movement, and for some time after war had broken out was held under close surveillance by the rebel authorities, being once or twice arrested by military direction. He has steadily refused to lend his support to the rebel movement, but at the same time has refrained from any distinct avowals justifying arbitrary measures on the part of the Richmond Government, which, probably remembering his great popularity, has hesitated to visit upon him the punishment which it has no doubt desired to inflict. Since our army has occupied the Rapidan his house at Culpepper has at all times been open to our officers, many of whom have been entertained with lavish hospitality. His last entertainment was given on the 29th of April, when Generals GRANT, SEDGWICK, HANCOCK, BURNEY, HUMPHREYS, GIBBON, and some others were present, the affair being, in the language of a report, "of the most sumptuous character."

JOHN MINOR BOTTS.

ARMY WORK-SHOPS.

WE give below a view of the WORK-SHOPS of the Army of the Potomac. As illustrating the manner in which necessary repairs are made at the head-quarters of an army, the picture is full of interest. Our sketch is made from a photograph furnished us by our artist, A. R. WAUD, at the Army head-quarters.

WORK-SHOPS—HEAD-QUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

FAR AWAY.

Upon the shore
Of Evermore
We sport like children at their play;
And gather shells
Where sinks and swells
The mighty sea from far away.

Upon that beach,
Nor voice nor speech
Doth things intelligible say;
But through our souls
A whisper rolls
That comes to us from far away.

Into our ears
The voice of years
Comes deeper, deeper, day by day;
We strive to hear,
As it draws near,
Its awfulness from far away.

At what it tells
We drop the shells
We were so full of yesterday,
And pick no more
Upon that shore
But dream of brighter far away.

And o'er that tide,
Far out and wide,
The yearnings of our souls do stray;
We long to go,
We do not know
Where it may be, but far away.

The mighty deep
Doth slowly creep
Up on the shore where we did play;
The very sand
Is waved by hand
A moment since, swept far away.

Our playmates all
Beyond our call
Are passing hence, as we too may;
Unto that shore
Of Evermore,
Beyond the boundless far away.

We'll trust the wave,
And Him to save
Beneath whose feet as marble lay
The rolling deep,
For he can keep
Our souls in that dim far away.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, the business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as dealers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the price of pens sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$155 00 each.
100 Gold Watches	70 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches	18 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " " "	3 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Love and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Love and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00 each.
5000 Gent's Breast Pins	2 00 to 8 00 each.
3000 Watch Seals	2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lockets	2 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	4 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mounted Holders	4 00 to 6 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, then giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one Dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great cash profits should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

208 Broadway, New York.

Short-Hand without a Master,

By which the art of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, &c., may be attained in a few hours. 50th edition, with a supplement, sent, post-paid, on receipt of 25 cents, by RICHARD PARKER & CO., 66 Beekman And 85 Nassau Streets, New York.

New Array Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 167 Broadway, New York, want Agents in every county and every town, also for the sale of their new styles of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

CRISTADORO'S HAIR DYE.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO WOUNDED SOLDIERS.—All Soldiers who have been discharged by reason of wounds received in any battle, and who have not received the $100 bounty, can receive the same at once by applying, by letter or in person, at the Military and Naval Agency, No. 317 WALNUT St., Philadelphia.

JOSEPH E. DEVITT & COMPANY.

DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED NEWS, every week, contains graphic illustrations of live subjects: also, pictures in colors, new and popular music, supplementary sheets of fashions, entertaining literary reading, with other novel features. It is one of the most spicy illustrated weeklies now published.—Home Journal.

Great Chance to make Money!

$650 000 of WATCHES, JEWELRY, &c., given away with our Ornamental Print Packets. Every Agent purchasing 100 Packets will receive free a GENUINE SILVER WATCH. We also publish SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, by which $3.00 invested will yield $50. More money to be made selling our PACKETS and ENGRAVINGS than in any other business. For particulars of SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS, send for New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 & 38 Beekman St., N. Y.

G.L. & J.B. KELTY, WINDOW SHADE MANUFACTURERS, 359 BROADWAY.

White Holland for Shades. Only Agents for Bray's Patent Fixtures.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR of FASHIONS.—A brilliant display of beautiful novelties, music, elegant fashion plates, seven Full Size Patterns, an elegant Braid Shirt, with much valuable information, only 25 cents; or yearly subscription $1, with a premium of One Dollar's worth of EXTRA Patterns. Do not fail to subscribe immediately.

(Form'r'ly an Order.)

Mme. Demorest will find enclosed $1 00, and 5 cts. for postage on the premiums, for which please send me your Mirror of Fashions for one year, commencing with the Summer No.

Give your address in full, and address it to

MME. DEMOREST, 473 Broadway, New York.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability, combined with great power in Field, Marine, Theatrical, Opera, and general out-door day and night double-perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 5 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp. SEMMONS, Oculist-Optician, 8091 Broadway, New York.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The splendid Summer number, with elegant Illustrations, New Music, Beautiful Braid and Embroidery, and Seven Full-Sized Patterns, will be ready MAY 15.

1864 RATS, ROACHES, &c. 1864

As Spring approaches,
A FEW and SELECT
From their holes come out;
And MICE and RATS,
In spite of CATS,
Gaily step about.

For Rats, Mice, Roaches, Ants, Bed Bugs, Moths in Furs, Woolens, &c., Insects on Plants, Fleas in Dogs, &c.

"Only infallible remedies known."
"Free from Poisons."
"Not dangerous to the Human Family."
"Please send me out of their holes to die."

☞ Sold by all Druggists everywhere.
☞ 11 Boxes 11 of all varieties imitations.
☞ See that "COSTAR'S" name is on each Box, Bottle, and Flask, before you buy.
☞ Address HENRY R. COSTAR,
☞ PRINCIPAL DEPOT 482 BROADWAY, N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Johnson, Wellington, & Co.'s, Stores occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Rates charged low.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month expense paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Original Inventors, and 13 other NEW articles. Address JOHN F. LOND, Biddeford, Maine.

PHUN PHROM PHUNNY PHOLKS and Sensible Sense for 10 of your Common Cents. Do not fail to see No. 2 of the Phunniest sort of Phunning to be sent complete Budget of Comicalities, Witty Puns, and Entertaining Nonsense sent. Sold here, there, and everywhere. Price 10 cents. Dealers supplied by

THE AMERICAN NEWS CO.

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS.—A weekly journal of beautiful and graphic illustration, and a National and Family Newspaper in its most comprehensive sense, for news, entertainment, music, literature, and the Fashions. The Model Newspaper of America. Yearly $4, with Mme. Demorest's Mirror of Fashions for one year as a premium. Single copies 10 cts. Published at No. 39 Beekman Street, and sold everywhere. Do not fail to see it. Specimen copies mailed free on receipt of the price.

FAIR MÖDELARE, 50 cents and $1 each, sent free by mail. Address C. W. FIELD, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ask your Stutter

To show you one of

Howard's Patent Money Belts.

They will not sweat or wet through under any circumstances. They are light, durable, and elegant, and are made with compartments for

LETTERS, GREENBACKS, and PHOTOGRAPHS.

If your Stutter has not got them, you can have one sent you by return mail (postage paid) by reading Two Dollars to the

Howard Belt Co., 436 Broadway, New York.

Sutlers, Agents, and Peddlers wanted in every County, Hospital, and City.

"More enchanting than a Fairy Tale, more exciting than a Novel, its greatest charm is yet that every word is true."—LONDON NEWS.

HARPER & BROTHERS

Have just Published:

SPEKE'S AFRICA.

JOURNAL

OF THE

DISCOVERY AND SOURCE OF THE NILE.

By JOHN HANNING SPEKE.

CAPTAIN H.M. INDIAN ARMY.

FELLOW AND GOLD MEDALIST OF THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, HON. CORR. MEMBER AND GOLD MEDALIST OF THE FRENCH GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, ETC.

WITH MAPS AND PORTRAITS, AND NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

Chiefly from Drawings by Captain Grant.

8vo, 590 pp., Cloth, $3 50.

☞ LIBERAL TERMS TO AGENTS AND CANVASSERS.

Sent by Mail, Postage Free, on Receipt of Price.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Have Just published:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR JUNE, 1864. 25 cents.

VAUX'S VILLAS AND COTTAGES. A Series of Designs prepared for Execution in the United States. By CALVERT VAUX, Architect. A new Edition, Revised and Enlarged. With nearly 400 Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $3 00.

LYMAN BEECHER'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND CORRESPONDENCE. Autobiography, Correspondence, &c., of Lyman Beecher, D.D. Edited by his Son, CHARLES BEECHER. With Two Steel Portraits and Engravings on Wood. In two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth. (Vol. I. just ready.) Price $1 75 per Volume.

A POPULAR HAND-BOOK OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By GEORGE CUMMING MCWHORTER. 18mo, Cloth, $1 00.

FIVE YEARS OF PRAYER, with the Answers. By Rev. SAMUEL IRENÆUS PRIME, D.D., Author of "The Power of Prayer," "Travels in Europe and the East," "Life of Rev. Dr. Murray," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

THE RING OF AMASIS. From the Papers of a German Physician. By ROBERT BELMER LUTTON (Owen Meredith). 18mo, Cloth, $1 00.

HISTORY OF THE SIOUX WAR AND MASSACRES OF 1862 AND 1863. By ISAAC V. D. HEARD. With Portraits and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

A HISTORY OF THE INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT OF EUROPE. By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D., Professor of Chemistry and Physiology in the University of New York; Author of a "Treatise on Human Physiology," &c., &c. 8vo, Cloth, $3 50.

MARY LYNDAY. A Novel. By the Lady THEODORA FITZGERALD. Author of "The Discipline of Life." 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

DAILY WALK WITH WISE MEN. RELIGIOUS EXERCISES FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. Selected, Arranged, and specially Adapted, by Rev. NEHEMIAH HEAD. Large 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

THE CAPITAL OF THE TYCOON: a Narrative of a Three Years' Residence in Japan. By SIR RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, K.C.B., Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Japan. With Maps and Engravings. 2 vols. 12mo, Cloth, $3 00.

VANITY FAIR. A Novel without a Hero. With Illustrations. By W. M. THACKERAY. (New Edition.) 8vo, Cloth, $1 00.

ROMOLA. A Novel. By GEORGE ELIOT, Author of "Adam Bede," "The Mill on the Floss," "Silas Marner," and "Scenes of Clerical Life." With numerous Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, $1 25; Cloth, $1 50.

LIVE IT DOWN. A Story of the Light Lands. By J. C. JEAFFRESON, Author of "Olive Blake's Good Work," "Isabel; or, the Young Wife and the Old Love," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

HOOKER'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. Science for the School and Family. Part I. Natural Philosophy. By WORTHINGTON HOOKER, M.D., Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College, Author of "The Child's Book of Nature," "Human Physiology," "First Book in Chemistry," &c. Illustrated by nearly 300 Engravings. 12mo, Half Leather, $1 25.

LIFE ON A GEORGIAN PLANTATION. Journal of a Residence on a Georgian Plantation in 1838-1839. By FRANCES ANNE KEMBLE. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

KNAPP'S FRENCH GRAMMAR. A Practical Grammar of the French Language: Containing a Grammar, Exercises, Reading Lessons, and a Complete Pronouncing Vocabulary. By WILLIAM I. KNAPP, A.M., Professor of Modern Languages and Literature in Hartford University, N. Y., and Author of "A French Reading-Book." 1 vol. Half Leather, $1 50.

KNAPP'S FRENCH READING-BOOK; CHRESTOMATHIE FRANÇAISE: Containing I. Selections from the best French Writers, with Copious Notes; II. Specimens of Authors' French Grammar; III. Entire Pieces of Modern Belles-Lettres, Arranged in Progressive Exercises, and Vocabulary Notes, a Glossary of Idiomatic Phrases, and a Pronouncing Vocabulary. By WILLIAM I. KNAPP, Professor of Modern Languages and Literature in Madison University, N. Y. 12mo, Half Leather, $1 50.

DR. HOOKER'S CHEMISTRY. Science for the School and Family. Part II. CHEMISTRY. By DR. WORTHINGTON HOOKER, of Yale College, Author of "Natural Philosophy," "Child's Book of Nature," "Natural History," "First Book of Chemistry," &c. Illustrated by numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

GENERAL BUTTERFIELD'S CAMP AND OUTPOST DUTY. Camp and Outpost Duty for Infantry, Regulating Orders, Extracts from the Revised Regulations for the Army, Rules for Health, Maxims for Soldiers, and Duties of Officers. By DANIEL BUTTERFIELD, Major-Gen. Vol. U.S.A., and late Chief of Staff to General Hooker, commanding the Army of the Potomac. 18mo, Flexible Cloth, 40 cents.

☞ Any of the above works sent by mail, postage-free, on receipt of price.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $1 00
One Copy for One Year 3 00
One Copy for Two Years 5 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $3 00 each, or 11 Copies for $30.

☞ Two Dollars per annum in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar per line for inside and One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for outside Advertising, for each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Grover & Baker's

Highest Premium

Elastic Stitch Sewing Machines,

495 Broadway, New York.

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

$50 AMERICAN $50 LEVER WATCHES.

TRADE MARK, P. S. BARTLETT, WALTHAM, MASS., FULL JEWELED, WARRANTED, IN 6 OZ. COIN SILVER HUNTING-CASE, GOLD SPOTS, FANCY PERF. PIN, FOR $50.

Also very variety of gold Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches.

208 Broadway New York.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT.

DRY AND GROUND IN OIL

In several dark shades.

For English and Gothic Cottages, Outbuildings, &c.

ROBERT REYNOLDS, Agent, No. 74 Maiden Lane.

10,000 Copies sold in One Week.

THE NATIONAL ALMANAC

And Annual Record for 1864.

Containing recent, reliable, and ample statistics relating to the United States, each separate State, and all foreign countries.

It is an Encyclopædia of useful and interesting information, and is indispensable to all who read or think.

12mo. 600 pages. Price in paper, $1 25; in muslin, $1 00. Sent free by mail. Canvassers and agents wanted.

Address GEO. W. CHILDS, Publisher,

628 and 630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

For sale by Booksellers and News Agents everywhere.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.
HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.
HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR RESTORATIVE.

Superior to any other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural luxuriance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, ingredients which are highly destructive to the life and beauty of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

Hoyt's Imperial Coloring Cream.

Sup.ior to any Hair Dressing in use. Oils and Colors the Hair at the same time. Changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

N.B.—Ladies' Parent hair-dresser in attendance to apply the Hiawatha.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

Patent Army Pipe. Just out. Can be carried in the vest pocket, is self-cleaning, and an elegantly finished pipe; retail price 50c. each. One dozen sent free on receipt of $2 25. Circular sent free.

RICHARDS & CO., 97 William St., N. Y., Box 5121.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Headache, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLS, and sold by druggists generally. Depot per lb., Depot No. 5 Cortlandt St., New York, second floor. Sent free by mail for 60 cents.

WATCHES.

AMERICAN SILVER HUNTING CASED WATCHES, from $32 to $75.
SWISS SILVER HUNTING CASED WATCHES, from $16 to $25.
ENGLISH " " " $20 to $75.
AMERICAN GOLD HUNTING CASED WATCHES, from $70 to $150.
SWISS GOLD HUNTING CASED WATCHES, from $45 to $160.
ENGLISH " " " $70 to $200.

All warranted as timekeepers, and each article to be worth the amount charged for the quality sent.

Orders large and small faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.

T. B. BYNNER, 155 Broadway, N. Y.

$15 Per Day, $20

And a Gold Hunting-Case Watch given free to all agents who sell our Original and "sole Genuine" Extra Large Size Stationery Fine Package. One of our Wonderful Packages contains more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of "each package" will be found large quantities of "Fine Stationery," Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, "Engravings," Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cottage Keepers, Household Conjurations, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Parlor Amusements, Gents' Pocket Companion for 1864, Union Emblems, Games, Rare Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Gold and Gaddy Patents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars, for only 25c., Agents make immense profits. One hundred packages, with presents of jewelry and gift of a superb watch, above-table, and sole right for a town or county, sent anywhere on receipt of $10. Smart agents can sell 100 Packages in a few hours. Agents wanted to every town. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extraordinary Premium Inducements. Address the Great AMERICAN PUZZLE PACKAGE CO., Cor. Nassau and Ann Sts., New York. Only Original and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

HARPER & BROTHERS

Have Just Published:

THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON.

A Novel.

BY

ANTHONY TROLLOPE,

AUTHOR OF

"Orley Farm," "Rachel Ray," "Doctor Thorne," "Framley Parsonage," &c., &c., &c.

ILLUSTRATED BY MILLAIS.

8vo, Paper, $1 25; Cloth, $1 75.

☞ Sent by mail, postage-free, on receipt of price.

A Chinese Preparation.

Warranted to force the hair on the smoothest face, or money refunded. Sent, post-paid, on the receipt of $1. Address J. L. STONE, Albany, N. Y.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For (New Edition) descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address H. C. L. BEARS, 377 W. 23d St., N. Y.

Shults' Oaguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cts. each; must be sent to any part of the Union on the receipt of 80 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

DR. ZANE'S

Antidote for Strong Drink.

DRUNKENNESS.

Read the Testimony.

KEOKUK, IOWA, February 1, 1864.

J. J. KROMER, 403 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia:

DEAR SIR—I have had ordered one dollar for another box of "DR. ZANE'S ANTIDOTE FOR STRONG DRINK," and sent as soon as possible. I will say for your benefit, or satisfaction, that a best workman of mine has taken two boxes of your specimen, and has been a sober man for three months, and says he has not had the slightest desire for liquor in the last two months or more, and never thinks of it. Previous to this time, God only knows when he drew a sober breath.

Yours truly,

U. RAFLE.

For sale by all Druggists. Price $1 00 a box.

J. J. KROMER, 403 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Soldiers Discharged

For Wounds, $100 Bounty paid by applying at once. Blanks and information sent by mail.

SOMES, BROWN & CO., 5 Park Place, N. Y. City.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 300 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 25 CENTS, OR FOUR FOR $1 00.

Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 3709, Boston, Mass.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, examined dial, cut hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper.

A single one sent free by mail in neat case, with a beautiful chain, for only $8.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, for only $7.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

OR, COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "Extra Double-Gold Plated" engraved or gilgine turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine English Jewels or Act'l Set Movements," "M. J. Tobias" Independent Action, Self Balance, and has a NEAT MINIATURE COMPASS visible in the cap and attached to the movements, making it a "Correct Guide" to the Soldier or Traveler. Perfect time-keeper, "warranted one year." WILL STAND ANY, and is an

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch,

Used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15. Look! Just a Correct European Timekeeper of $50, 59 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces; and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."

ADDRESS CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

Davis Collamore & Co.,

479 Broadway, below Broome St.,

IMPORTERS OF FINE CHINA, WEDGEWOOD, PARIAN, &c., &c. ENGRAVED GLASS to order in great variety.

COLORED STONE CHINA DURING SUITE.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

Hardens and invigorates the Gums.

Purifies and Sweetens the breath. Cleanses, Beautifies, and Preserves the Teeth.

Sold by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers. Price 75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,

215 Greenwich St., New York.

GOLDEN BITTERS

* * * * * We respectfully invite attention to and consideration of the purity collected and reliable remedy for DYSPEPSIA, HEARTBURN, LIVER and STOMACH DISEASES. The Proprietors are proud to acknowledge the unparalleled success which has attended the sale of their valuable preparation, known in nearly every portion of the civilized world as the

"GOLDEN BITTERS."

We risk nothing when we term them a valuable preparation, for they are one of the few articles of the present day which are not a humbug; and we are willing and able to satisfy any person or persons who will call upon or send the celebrated "GOLDEN BITTERS," on a purchase for approving article. It is the wish of the proprietors to make the virtue of the article be tested before condemning. A decision of their merits by any one who has tried them is worth a million of purchased bogus testimonials.

FOR CREATING A HEALTHY APPETITE

they are invaluable, and are unequaled as a TONIC. They are mild in their action, and operate by giving vigor and strength to the system—not by any chemical compound in the solids, but through the medium of the living principle.

THEY ARE PURELY VEGETABLE,

being composed of Gentian Root, Camomile, Quassiæ, and many other remedial agents of the Vegetable World, all preserved in Jamaica rum.

AS A BEVERAGE,

they are the most wholesome, invigorating, and palatable stimulant ever offered to the public. And the fact of their being prepared chemically and scientifically, precludes the possibility of a bitter, unpleasant taste, condition in Bitters generally offered for sale. We especially recommend them to Ladies, and particularly to those suffering from

DEBILITY, WEAKNESS AND PROSTRATION.

Half a wine glass of these "Bitters" three or four times a day will produce a delightful change in those persons greatly debilitated.

The "Golden Bitters" have been tried, and not found wanting. They are put up in our own patent quart bottles, and for sale by Druggists, Grocers, &c., throughout the world. Each bottle bears a fac-simile of the signature of Hubbel & Co.

GEO. C. HUBBEL & CO., Sole Proprietors,

Hudson, N. Y.

Central Depot, American Express Building, N. Y.

A Treatise on DYSPEPSIA

Sent free to any address by

[JNO. J. KROMER, 403 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

TROPICAL BALSAM

Prepared by Carreno Brothers and Co.

The celebrated and unrivalled healing, tropical remedy for pain and inflammation, which has for many years past been in such general use throughout the Spanish Colonies, and all the Islands of the Caribbean Sea, is now introduced into this market, and will be found a most valuable remedy for Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, Sciatica, and all internal pains, also Diarrhœa, Cholera, and Dysentery. Each bottle contains directions for use in English, Spanish, French, and Portuguese. Sold by all Druggists throughout the United States, Canada, and the West Indies, and Wholesale at the drug depot generally in New York, and Brunswick in the State of Maine.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street. N. Y., 31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.

Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

AMERICAN STEEL COLLARS

PATENTED

APRIL 19TH 1864

Beware of Spurious Imitations. Will send, on receipt of One Dollar, a specimen equal to lines. None genuine unless pointed. A. JEANNERETT, 76 Nassau St., N. Y. Agents wanted.

Good News for the Army.

Hereafter we will send, post-paid, any of our PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS ordered by soldiers for themselves or friends, giving an album of the full value of the money sent.

Our Albums have the reputation of being superior to all others in beauty and durability, and range in price from 50 cts. to $50.

Our catalogue of

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS

now embraces about 5000 officers, army and navy, statesmen, actors, copies of works of art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our assortment of these is very extensive, including a great variety of views of the present war.

Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

E. & I. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 Broadway, New York.

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 386.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

GENERAL SHERMAN'S ADVANCE—BUZZARD'S ROOST PASS, GEORGIA.—[SEE PAGE 333.]

AT GETTYSBURG.

LIKE a furnace of fire blazed the midsummer sun
When to saddle we leaped at the order,
Spurred on by the boom of the deep-throated gun
That told of the foe on the border.
A mist in our rear lay Antietam's dark plain,
And thoughts of its carnage came o'er us;
But smiling before us surged fields of ripe grain,
And we swore none should reap it before us.

That night, with the ensign who rode by my side,
On the camp's dreary edge I stood picket,
Our ears mark'd our weary watch-mates who hied
A spy's stealthy tread in the thicket;
And there, while we watched the first arrows of dawn
Through the veil of the rising mist's quiver,
He told how the foemen had pitied in upon
His home by the Tennessee River.

He spoke of a wife in his weakness cut down
With that breath the traitor flag scorning;
And he said the same cry grew dark with a frown
That paled the red light of the morning.
For days he had followed the cowardly band,
And when one lagged to forage or trite
Had seared in his forehead the deep Minie brand,
And scored a fresh notch on his rifle.

"But one of the rangers had cheated his fate—
For him he would search the world over."
Such confidences, such assurance and hate,
Never saw I in woman-accursed lover.
O who would have thought that beneath those dark curls
Lurked vengeance so sure as death-rattle;
Or fancied those dreamy eyes, soft as a girl's,
Could light with the fury of battle?

So horse I sealed the bough, while grape-shot and shell
Overhead through the forest were crashing.
A cheer for the flag! and the summer light fell
On the blades from a thousand sheaths flashing.
As mad ocean waves to the storm-crowned bluff,
So on we dashed, heedless of dangers;
A moment our long line surged back at the shock,
Then swept through the ranks of the Rangers.

I looked for our ensign—ahead of his troop,
Pressing on with the coolest indifference,
His torn flag furled round him in festoon and loop,
He spurred to the side of his Colonel,
And his sabre was out, as I saw by his bright sword
Through shako and gaunty plume shiver,
With "this for the last of the murderous horde!"
And "this for the home by the river!"

At evening, returned from pursuit of the foe,
By a dash-scattered cannon we bivouac'd and lay,
And we buried him there in the sunset glow,
With the dear old flag knotted around him.
Yet how could we mourn when every proud strain
Told of foemen herded back in disorder,
When we knew that the North reaped her rich harvest grain
Unharmed by a foe on her border!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1864.

THE VICTORY.

THE earnestness with which the loyal people of this country are sustaining the war has been in nothing more signally shown than in the sobriety with which the great news of GRANT'S victory was received. Before he moved, every thing that was heard from the Army of the Potomac rendered hopeful, an unwillingness, a hearty faith in the cause, a grave resolution to fight to the end, which prepared us for a campaign entirely unprecedented. "My ground is of confidence," said "one who returned from the headquarters of GRANT a fortnight before he moved, "it is the moral as much as in the physical condition of the army."

In an hour like this comparisons are untimely and vain. We only know that the popular faith in the ultimate triumph of our cause—and no mis disaster, however grievous, has ever been fierce enough to shake—enables the country to contemplate its success without levity, but with a universal and sorrowful sympathy with the thousands of brave men whose dauntless constancy has saved human liberty, although it could not save themselves from bitter wounds; and with a lasting and regretful remembrance of the dead. The desperate contest upon the Rapidan, the dark battle through two long summer days, shown upon both sides the qualities which will make the regenerated nation invincible. Lee and his rebels had every prestige in their favor. They stood upon ground which their valor had maintained against us for three years. They were intrenched upon the Rapidan, where Fredericksburg, from which BURNSIDE had been forced to retire. They were flanked by Fredericksburg, where they had worsted HOOKER. They had before them Gettysburg, from which they had retreated in good order to Orange and Antietam, from which they had been allowed to retire. Far to their rear were the melancholy swamps of the Chickahominy, in which a noble army had been encamped so long within an easy possibility of victory, which had been surrendered with terrible disaster. All around them were the famous places of their triumphs or of their secure retreats. They were confronted with a new army whose unwearied bravery they had tested, but which they knew lacked the prestige of success. They saw new toils spreading for them, but they confided in the past, and believed they could secure the future.

Against such men, with such advantages, General GRANT organized his army and laid his plans. He knew the key of the military position. The defeat of LEE was the essential blow that must be struck. First of all, therefore, General GRANT secured absolute unity of purpose among his Generals. He established that moral discipline which is the source of permanent strength in every army. He brought with him the personal inspiration of vast and continuous success. He assembled a host. He and his officers, filled with the profoundest conviction of the importance of victory, imparted it by all they did and by all they were to the men. And when March and April were passed, when the soft May sun announced steady weather, and all the elemental conditions were ripe, he gave the word, and his faithful and indomitable ally, BUTLER, and the Union armies moved to a battle which they knew must be desperate, and which has been fought and decided.

The chapter of our history which opened on the 3d of May is not ended as these words are written. But the first week's work is of such augufty that we have the right to hope for a success which should bring every true American to his knees in religious gratitude—a success which will be a victory for the people of every country, and will mark an epoch in the advance of civilization. The words of the President are echoed instinctively in every heart. "While what remains undone demands our most sincere prayers to and reliance upon Him (without whom all human effort is vain), I recommend that all patriots, at their homes and places of public worship, and wherever they may be, unite in common thanksgiving and prayer to Almighty God."

TO A JACKSON DEMOCRAT.

A CALM and pleasant letter from "a Jackson Democrat" in Indiana, gives us an occasion to explain more fully our position in regard to the Presidency. Our correspondent thinks that he is one of the four hundred thousand War Democrats who have sustained Mr. LINCOLN heartily, because he is the constitutional President and is trying to save the Government. But he complains that we, with many others, evince a determination to defeat Mr. LINCOLN nominated at Baltimore, and that War Democrats have been rejected by Republican Conventions as delegates because they were not in favor of him as a candidate; policy, he says, which does not require the formation of a new Union party; and if so, ought not the Baltimore candidate to be a War Democrat?

Since the appeal is made to us, we answer, frankly, that for ourselves we know no other party than the Union men: than the men, that is to say, before the war, who adhered to all the parties, Democrats, Republicans, and Bell-Everett men, and who are now united in an unflinching and loyal support of the Union and of the Administration in conducting the war. It is for that very reason that we deprecate such an action as that of our correspondent. Are you a War Democrat, and do you mean by it? are a War Democrat, what do you mean by it? If you are a Union man, why do you insist upon using a name which is not necessary to other Union men who have not been Democrats? And what prevents the formation of a genuine Union party except a desire to create divisions like you to renounce your old party name? The Union men who were lately Republicans do not call themselves War Republicans, or Republican Unions, or Union Republicans. They say truly that they are not Republicans, in a party sense, but that they are Union men. And they say as plainly as they can that they will support heartily any true Union man whom the Convention shall nominate. Why should not you do the same? Why should you see that your insistence upon recognition as a Democrat is entirely inadmissible, unless you recognize other Union men as Bell-Everetts, or Republicans, which is plainly absurd?

Therefore the call to the Baltimore Convention, although issued by a Committee appointed by a Chicago War Republican Convention in 1860, is perfectly free from any taint of exclusion. General DIX, Mr. DICKINSON, Governor BRODDIE, Mr. EVERETT, General GRANT, or General BUTLER have been named as men who explain that they are not invited, because nothing is said of War Democrats, than Senators SEWARD or SUMNER, or GARRISON, or PHILLIPS, or JAY have to make the same complaint because nothing is said in it of Republicans. General DIX, Governor BRODDIE, Mr. EVERETT, and Senator SUMNER are not Union men. Therefore they stand on any other platform they will, of course, not feel themselves summoned.

Now Union men are ordinarily have decided preferences among candidates. Our correspondent prefers General BUTLER. That General is a man whom the whole country honors. But why, for our part, should Mr. LINCOLN withdraw? I do so, not because he is a Republican, for he is not. He is simply a Union man, and the strongest opposition to him is from such men who were formerly Republicans. We prefer him because he has proved by his administration of public affairs, that he has the qualities, the sagacity, the fidelity, and the ability which seem to us essential to our final success; and he has the experience, which at this time must count for much. We do not say that other men have not the indispensable requirements; but we think that no one very plainly, making every allowance, that he has. And we put it to our friend whether it would not be extremely foolish in us to advocate his giving place to another man, who seems to us less desirable, merely because that other had been formerly a "Democrat?"

If the majority of Union men, at any primary meeting or convention in the land, have been formerly Republicans and are now in favor of Mr. LINCOLN'S nomination, and send delegates to secure it, we should have no why our correspondent or any man, who is only a Unionist, should have any other than the common feeling of disappointment if they do not have our way. He may be very sure that the old Republican party will no more be revived than the old Democratic party will be. But the Baltimore Convention shall nominate a candidate of Democratic antecedents, our friend will see the Union men who were Republicans working and voting for him just as earnestly as they expect, and have a right to expect, their late Democratic friends will work and vote for a candidate of Republican antecedents, should he be nominated.

Meanwhile our "determination" that Mr. LINCOLN shall be nominated is only a very profound conviction that it is best for the country that he should be.

THE HUMILIATION OF ENGLAND.

THE expulsion of GARIBALDI from England is the announcement to the world that the pleasure of LOUIS NAPOLEON is the policy of Great Britain. It has long been the proud boast of that country that it offered exile to the political refugees of every land. Tyrants and their victims, CHARLES I. and LOUIS PHILIPPE, DON MIGUEL, ROSAS, LEDRU ROLLIN, MAZZINI, LOUIS BLANC, METTERNICH, GALIENGA — the escaped from the dungeons of Spandau, and Newgate, and Mazas, the fugitives from the palaces of the Continent, she would receive them all, and the foreign hand that would seize them should fall powerless as it touched the English shore. And now comes a hero, such as does not appear in modern history, not from a dungeon, but from the heart of his countrymen and the confidence of his King, who is welcomed to England by the great multitude of the people, from the poorest weaver in a London cellar, to whom the name of GARIBALDI has a certain music of hope, to the Prince of Wales. The people, the Government, the town, the country, complain of the greeting; the nation salutes him; his foot is raised for a triumphal progress through the summer land.

Behold what a people! was the cry. They salute the man whom the nations love and kings hate. What a country, which is so strong that feasts GARIBALDI, and sits at council with Austria, Prussia, and Russia! — when LOUIS NAPOLEON says quietly, "GARIBALDI must go;" and LOUIS NAPOLEON is obeyed! He does not prevent his coming. He does not whisper discreetly to Kings at Cannes. No, but he will have the humiliation utter and overwhelming. He waits for the very crowning moment of the English enthusiasm and delight in their guest, and then orders England to expel him, and England obeys! So grievous a humiliation has not been inflicted upon a nation since JAMES II. signed a prostitution to LOUIS FOURTEENTH. CARLYLE'S picture of the posture of England during the Continental wars of the last century is not more terrible. It is almost nothing so sad as this. It is the most melancholy confirmation of KINGLAKE'S picture of English submission to the same power in the Crimean War. It suggests the impotence of England and the ascendency of France more than any contemporary event.

The fact is stated in a letter to the London Spectator, a liberal and sagacious journal, frankly admits that "for the present there is nothing for it but alliance as hearty as common interests can make it between the British and France." Alliance—yes; but upon such terms? alliance upon condition that lips warm with welcoming the conqueror shall never join whispered with "Please go; he says you must not stay." What makes it worse is, that the same article confesses that there is no diminution of the ancient jealousy and the ancient fear. "England was and is armed against France, and France alone." Put this sentence with the other we have just quoted, and what does it mean but submission? Surely when it is known that GARIBALDI went not because he was ill, not because his physician said he must go, as LORD PALMERSTON declared, who, two years ago, declared that there might be war with this country when for a fortnight he had had Mr. SEWARD'S disclaimer in his pocket, but because the French Emperor ordered LORD PALMERSTON to order him away, there will either be a popular tempest which will shirl the present ministry from power, or Great Britain deliberately accepts the post of French lackey.

PICTURE PREACHING.

In the Gallery of the Metropolitan Fair there was a very striking and painful picture of "The Last Day of the Guillotine." It represents a huge room in the Conciergerie or some other of the prisons of Paris swarming with the victims of the terror. Of gentle and refined aspect, most of them, dressed in the fashion of the time made familiar to us by the portraits of MARIE ANTOINETTE and CHARLOTTE CORDAY, the crowd sits or stands, cowed and shuddering, while a wretch, who seems the very incarnation of the hideous ferocity of the Revolution, has climbed a column, and, elevated above the heads of the crowd, points leeringly at a woman whose name he calls, to join the melancholy procession to the scaffold which is seen in the corridor passing the grated door. The victim has half risen from her seat, clasping her hands, but without turning her head, while her lover sits not far away, mute, motionless, frozen with horror.

It is one of the most tragical pictures ever painted. At the first glance it seems too great an outrage upon human nature to perpetuate a moment so terrible. But after a little while the real justification of the work is found also in the utter loathing which seizes the mind of the spirit from which such atrocities spring. A thousandfold more fervent than the most eloquent description or denunciation the picture exposes the true character of the great crime, and helps to plunge the national indignation which thrilled the world at that time, and has made the very words French Revolution synonymous with the most revolting inhumanity. The student who in reading the English history of that period is disposed to quarrel with FOX'S coercive domestic policy, no longer wonders as he contemplates this palpitating scene, at the wide and willing support that policy received from the British people. What sacrifice was not cheap, he asks, that tended to keep the English Government removed by such crime as this? It is a terrible picture. It represents unalleviated human suffering. But its moral is clear, and the pain it occasions is justified by the lesson it teaches and the influence it exerts.

This is the way we make to the friendly expostulations we receive upon the publication of such cuts as will be found in this paper to-day. They depict the most shocking barbarities, the bloodiest crimes. "How can I take the paper home? How can I show such things to my children? Is this a family paper, if you curdle the with such horrors?" are the questions asked, and in a kindly spirit. But may not the children well be taught the character of the enemy with which their fathers and brothers are struggling, and the spirit of the barbarism which is seeking to overthrow the Government, and ruin the country? The earlier they learn it, the stronger the impression will be, the better and truer Americans they will become. Our paper is and ought to be a vivid history of the time, and it can not bring a living witness of the constant sympathy and care which follow the fortunes of the soldier, when they are tragical as well as glorious. Perhaps in some such considerations our friends who differ may find a little justification for strengthening the public nerve as well as pleasing the public heart.

GENERAL WADSWORTH.

OUR victory is costly. We all knew it would be. None knew it more certainly than General WADSWORTH, and none was more willing than he that the price should be paid. The story of his death in battle is simple. He only saw the danger that threatened the country. Before the first shot was fired, he knew that war had begun in earnest between the principles of Republicanism and democracy. He devoted his time, his influence, his means, every power he had, to the success of the cause which he knew to be the standing fast for the great original principles of the Government. As the crisis approached he went to the Peace Congress, and did willingly all that a man and an American citizen could by do. When the smoke of the opening battle cleared he was seen in the van of the brave troops of the Republic, and fell, nobly willing to serve his country and her cause. Personal ambition, self-seeking of every kind he put aside as naturally as every other difference. An aid to the young M'DOWELL at Bull Run, General of a Division at the Wilderness, his heart beat and his hand struck for the same object, the true welfare of his fellow-men.

In the midst of the war, solicited to stand in another post of duty not less important than the purely military one he held, he became a candidate for Governor of New York, upon the simple issue of unconditional maintenance of the Government and Union. He frankly expressed his views of public affairs in a letter full of sagacity and earnestness. He was not elected, and remained in the field. He was not elected; but his memory will be precious and sacred to the people of his State and of the country when that of many Governors will be forgotten or recalled with shame.

Brave, courteous, and gentle; beloved by his neighbors, and friends, and all who knew him; busied to the last moment before the march in caring for the comfort of his soldiers, he is seen next, and for the last time, his noble gray head bared in the bright May sunshine, leading those soldiers into the fiery storm of battle, and falling, shot through the brain. So they die, the old and young together. So, with infinite sorrow to a thousand hearts, all over the land, and the shore, among the hills, in the wilderness, the heroic blood is poured out which shall baptize into the faith and love of liberty the nation which it saves.

CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME.

MANY excellent ladies in Washington and elsewhere propose a general movement to dispense with superfluities and luxuries in order to reduce unnecessary importation and the price of the necessaries of life. The members of the society in Washington pledge themselves to use "no imported article of apparel" for three years. As a sign of earnest devotion and patriotism this is most welcome. It springs naturally from a profound conviction of the vital significance of the war; and if the spirit it evinces could become universal from the beginning of the rebellion we should to-day have many millions of dollars for actual use that have been squandered upon unattained display. It has always been a question whether, while the war has raged at a distance from our own homes, we have not been serious enough the sacrifice of individual comfort, and the success of this movement will be a kind of test of national earnestness.

We have no good an intention will not be marred by any folly in the fulfillment, and that a purely voluntary assent to the sacrifice will be the best test of its reality and value. There was a disposition, when the subscriptions to the great Fair were collecting, to whip in certain classes of persons and employments. The hotel keepers were stigmatized, we remember, as not having contributed to the fund. But the whole significance of the vast sum realized was that it was a free gift. When a committee passes round a compulsory contribution, a forced loan, have been regarded? It would then have been no indication whatever of real enthusiasm for the purpose, if there should be any moral coercion applied, there may be money saved, indeed, but there will be no sign of a free will in the money; and that will be just the important thing, because that shows the spirit which makes the saving of money service able to the cause.

The movement has been formally begun by women, but it is one in which we all have a common interest, and which we can every truly help or hinder with to conspire. The poor are doubly pinched by the large prices consequent upon the wild speculation which always accompanies great wars. Let us remember that charity, to others, to our country, and to ourselves, begins at home.

REV. DR. M'CLINTOCK.

ONE of our most valiant and faithful champions in Europe in the war begun with the life of Mr. M'CLINTOCK, who has lately returned home, and will hereafter occupy the pulpit of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, corner of Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street, every Sunday morning. He lost no proper occasion while abroad to vindicate the cause of his country, and his sagacity and ability have been of signal service. Of his general work the Christian World thus speaks:

"Dr. M'CLINTOCK has done a most glorious work for the cause of Christ during his residence in Paris. Through his able and influential letters the Chapel has been entirely self-sustaining; nor have his labors been confined to the duties which devolved upon him in connection with the Chapel. He has been a noble-hearted Christian patriot, and his letters have been satisfying for the welfare of his country. No one can be weak in England who reads the anniversaries, and there, like our friend Mr. Bunting, mildly battled for the right. Through his letters and speeches the great body of the Wesleyans in England have been our firm and steadfast friends."

WILLIAM SIDNEY THAYER.

MR. THAYER, late Consul-General of the United States in Egypt, died at Alexandria on the 10th of April—an event which we record with sincere regret in the course of this paper, as he has long been a contributor. He had been long in feeble health, but in his early youth and hope upon his old, and his friends trusted that an entire change of climate and occupation might work also an entire change of health. But profoundly interested as his important duties as a foreign representative of his country, thoroughly in sympathy with the great cause for which we are struggling, he resolutely give mind or body the absolute needful rest. Even the soft air of Egypt could not heal him: and at the age of thirty-four the accident, genial, energetic, accomplished man dies at his post, and dies leaving no one who ever knew him who will not long and deeply regret his loss.

ALL HAIL, OHIO!

ONE of the most striking and significant facts of the times is that upon the late call of Governor BROUGH for thirty thousand men, the State of Ohio responded by putting forty thousand men into camp in five days. SHERMAN's army now moving into Georgia "commits its lines of communication and supply to the men now mustering in the Northwest," says a Cincinnati paper; and it is supposed that SHERMAN will be stronger by twenty thousand veterans than if the call had not been made, or rather if it had not been so grandly answered. How faithful Ohio was to the glorious cause her majority against Vallandigham last year showed. How true and steady the Buckeye State is, this sudden rising of her noblest citizens proves.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—May 4. The resolution of Mr. Sherman came up as the special order—that a quorum of the Senate consists of a majority of the Senators elected; that if a majority of the Presidential electors, duly appointed, shall have voted for one person, he is the President elect; that the election of President devolves upon the House of Representatives, and the vote of a majority of the States represented in the House be cast for one person, as President, when first discovered, was objected to, 26 to 11.

—May 5. Mr. Chandler reported a bill to prevent persons from duelling, which provides that after August next all baggage and effects of passengers, and all other property conveyed by the United States through any foreign country, shall be inspected, and if any duelling apparatus be found, the same, with the vessel, vehicle, or conveyance, shall be confiscated.—Mr. Colfax reported a bill authorizing the establishment of a mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil, with the assistance of the owners, which were held to be not necessary. The bill was amended, and as so adopted.—Mr. Ward presented the credentials of Mr. Stewart, elected by the Legislature of Nevada to form a State government under the act of Congress, and to the United States Senate, each half year after January, 1864.—May 6. The bill to amend the act to further and more effectually promote the useful arts, granting six months extension to patentees in certain cases, passed.—Mr. Sumner moved to amend the Charter of Washington City was called up by Mr. Dixon, with an amendment providing for the education of colored citizens. Mr. Cowan moved to insert the word "white" as a qualification. Mr. Sumner moved to vote on the amendment until the expiration of the morning hour. The National Currency bill was taken up, and the first amendment offered by Mr. Sumner, increasing the tax on the circulation of State banks from two per cent. to ten per cent., was rejected by a vote of 34 to 11. An amendment establishing Clearing Houses in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Baltimore, of not exceeding one quarter of one per cent., was agreed to.—May 7. The bill to incorporate a public waking on additional grant of land to aid in constructing a railroad from St. Paul to the Lake Superior and Stone Lake and the mouth of the Sioux Wood River, or some point on the Mississippi River, was reported from the Navy for a copy of the record of the Wilkes Court-martial was adopted.—May 9. The bill for the erection of a branch mint at Philadelphia was passed.—Mr. Howard introduced a resolution for the relief of Fort Pillow. The Senate considered the Bank Bill at length, but little of the progress was made. The amendment of Mr. Sumner, to keep the circulation of the banks within certain bounds, was voted down.—May 10. A report from the Committee on the Conduct of the War, made a report in relation to the retreat of General Banks from Alexandria to Annapolis.—Mr. Colfax then read a dispatch from the Secretary of War announcing the capture of Fort Powell, where the Senate adjourned.—May 10. There was very little business done of an important character, except the passage of the National Bank Bill in an amended form, which was sent to the House of Representatives. The bill to prevent smuggling was passed.—The bill organizing the Arizona volunteer regiment, which passed the Senate, was passed.—The bill for Fortification Appropriation bill was passed, with amendments for repairs at Great Brewster, Boston, and Dover Islands, Portland Harbor, appropriating $50,000 therefor, and for repairs to the sea-wall at Buffalo, $27,000.—The House resumed the consideration of the bill guaranteeing a republican government to rebellious States. After a long discussion the bill was passed: yeas 73, nays 59. The bill provides for the republican form of territorial government, and that no military resistance shall be suppressed that measure as shall establishing a government inconsistent with the Constitution. Certain classes of persons who have voluntarily borne arms or held offices under the rebel confederate usurpation are excluded from voting or being elected to office. The bill was then laid aside to be reported with the admitted include a provision that involuntary servitude shall be prohibited and forever abolished throughout all that no debts created under the sanction of the usurping power shall be recognized or paid by the United States or any State.—At the evening session the bill extending to soldiers and sailors without regard to rank the benefits of the Homestead Law on rebel confiscated lands was passed.—May 11. The House was not in session to-day.—The Whole on the Special Order, viz., the bill to reimburse Pennsylvania for the expenditures made in the rebel invasion of last year. After rejecting several amendments the Committee rose, reported the bill to the House, which, however, was subsequently reconsidered, and the bill was again committed.—May 12. The bill for Pennsylvania militia, with an amendment appropriating $2,000,000 to reimburse the expenses of the State in repelling raids.—Mr. Morrill moved that evening sessions be discontinued during the remainder of the session, and to adjourn at such hour as it may see fit, which was adopted.—May 13. Mr. Dawes presented the following, declaring that F. F. Blair is not, and the other that Mr. Knox, the commissioner, is entitled to a seat in the House as the Representative of the Seventh Congressional District of Missouri. Under the latter resolution debate on Election, declaring that neither Mr. Lazo, the sitting member, nor Mr. Reese, had received a majority of the votes cast for Representative of the Seventh Congressional District of Missouri. Under the latter resolution debate on the bill of adjournment was made the special order.—May 16. The ill-treatment of prisoners in rebel hands.—May 16. Mr. Howard reported a resolution that the Senate was dissatisfied by adopting a resolution declaring Mr. Lane, the rebel sympathizer, unworthy a seat in the seat, which rejects the report of the Committee on Elections.

THE MILITARY SITUATION.

The Grand Movement of the Army of the Potomac is in progress. The order of General Meade to march was issued on the morning of the 3d. General Grant's cavalry took the advance, and was engaged until late at night in repairing the roads leading to Ely's Ford, on the Rapidan. About midnight another cavalry division moved to Germania Ford, and by daylight the whole army was under marching orders. The Second Corps broke camp at midnight, and the Fifth crossing at Ely's Ford before daylight on the 4th. The Fifth Corps crossed at Germania Ford, following the Sixth. No enemy appeared, and the troops were advance reached the Wilderness. General Lee not having, apparently, anticipated the movement. It thrashed his communications with Richmond, and forced him out of his formidable intrenchments around Orange Court House, covered by Mine Run. Accordingly, on Thursday morning, the 5th, before General Grant had fully established his lines, Lee established, in his disposition of troops, a determination to advance, evidently with the design of cutting our lines. On discovering his intentions General Warren was directed to attack him at once, which he did at about 11 A.M. A determined musketry fight of an hour and a half ensued, in which Warren handsomely drove him from his position, with the infliction of great loss. Griffin's division of the Fifth Corps led the attack, and suffered severely, its loss being nearly 1000 in killed, wounded, and missing. Wadsworth's division, our center, finding the enemy had attempted to interpose an overwhelming force between his division and Hancock's, both of whom, in accordance with orders, was marching in a direction to the right of the Fifth Corps. Hancock, impatient, his advances, consisting of Birney's division, came in contact with the enemy's right, and in time to intercept the rebel General, who, at 9 P.M. commenced a terrible assault upon Hancock's left. Gibbon's, Barlow's, and Getty, the latter of whom had been temporarily detached to form the extreme right of Hancock's command. The fight lasted hotly until some time after dark, and resulted in the complete repulse of the enemy at all points. Our loss in this engagement was about 1600 men. Scarcely any artillery was brought into action, from the character of the ground rendering it useless.

On Friday the fight-firing was kept up, and early on the morning of Friday, the 6th, the battle reopened. Longstreet's corps had succeeded in getting in the rear of the Sixth (General Sedgwick). The assault, which was made by Longstreet, was terrific. The enemy then endlessly attacked the left, under Hancock, but were again driven back with heavy loss. The contest was kept up the entire line. At a quarter past eleven o'clock a desperate assault was made upon the right, particularly upon the Fourth Division, commanded by General Jackson. The rebels were driven back, rallying by turns, and at their head, leading the charge, this noble soldier was shot in the forehead, and died on the field, remaining in our possession. A partial lull ensued about noon, when an attack was made upon the center, on General Wadsworth. His veteran columns temporarily yielded to the shock, but soon rallied and drove the enemy back, staggering back the massed columns of the foe with most frightful slaughter. During the afternoon comparative quiet prevailed, but about seven o'clock in the evening the rebels made a desperate attack upon our right, throwing it into confusion, and in fact turning the position. Our reinforcements were at once sent forward, and the loss in this engagement was quite heavy, but the rebels were finally driven to the ground from our own. General Seymour and a considerable number of our troops were captured. The fighting on Saturday, the 7th, and on other counts was of a similar character, but not so severe as on the previous days. The retreat of the enemy commenced on Saturday night, and at 5 A.M. on Sunday, the 8th, Fredericksburg was occupied by our troops. The rebels left us 2100 killed up to same time, and 4000 wounded, during the same period, and during the night wing, 4000; total, 6000. To military lost, as follows: Killed, 1500; wounded, 7000; missing Friday night General Lee withdrew from the field, establishing his lines on the Rapidan. Our movement was under the personal direction of General Grant, who had swung his left flank (Hancock's corps) around to the extreme right, thus threatening Lee's communications. This forced the latter to withdraw from his position to save Grant, and as we go to press, indicated that Lee had made a stand at Spotsylvania Court-House, about 12 miles from Fredericksburg, but that at that date, though there had been some hard fighting, no general battle had occurred. General Grant is evidently pushing his army from his supply-trains, so as to advance with the least possible delay, and thus avoid the consequences of Sedgwick's death. He was killed in the fighting on Thursday, the 5th, by a ball from a rebel sharpshooter. He remains were at Fredericksburg. General Sedgwick commanded the Sixth Army Corps, and had command of the Corps. Generals Robinson and Morris were wounded, the former severely, and General Shaler, division of Warren's Corps; the latter the First Brigade of the Third Division of Sedgwick's.

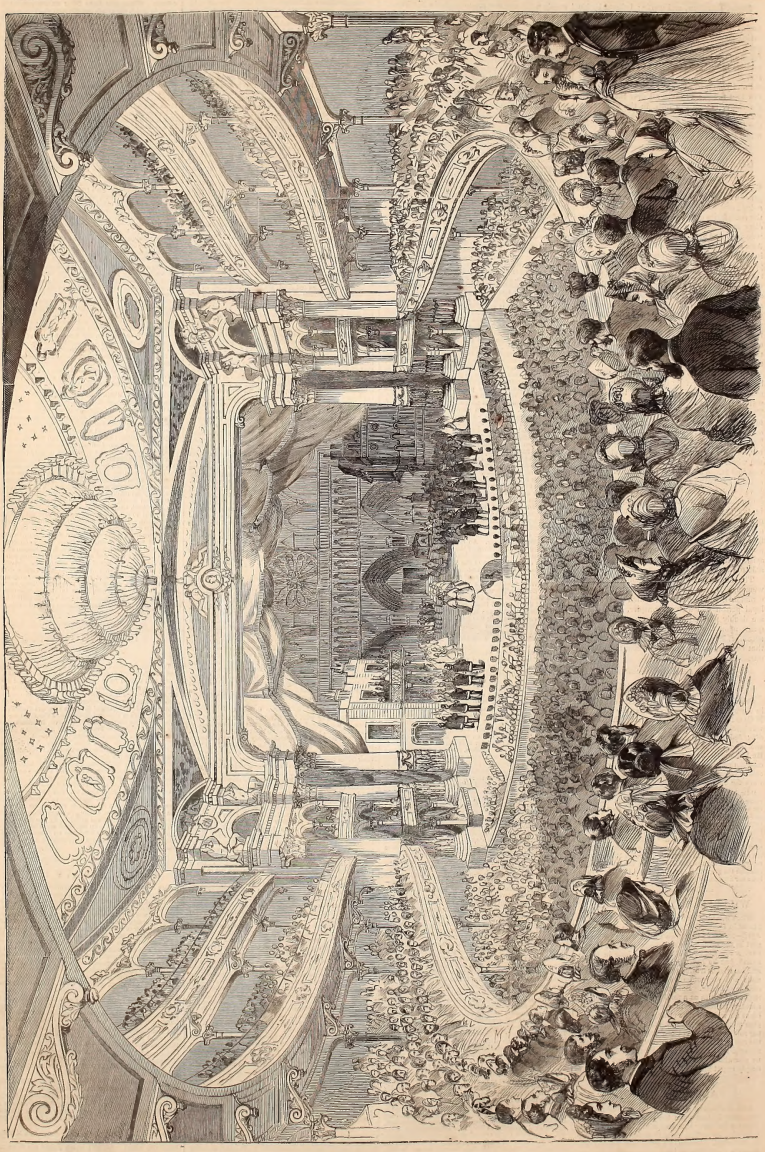
THE LOSSES.

Among the casualties reported from the field are the following: Generals Getty, Grant, Wadsworth, and Shaler killed; Generals Getty, Gregg, Webb, Owens, Robinson, and Morris wounded. The large number of Generals in either field and line officers were killed. Our total loss is not yet officially reported. We took prisoners up to Friday night. Very many of the wounded were but slightly hurt, and returned from the field to the army.

The rebel General Longstreet and Pegram were severely wounded, and many officers of the army were killed and wounded. Intercepted dispatches from Secretary Seddon to Lee and Beauregard show that the force of Fredericksburg was occupied on the night of the 8th, and that Longstreet's corps was being transferred at that point. Stores and medical help arrived promptly to the spot on the 9th and 10th.

GENERAL BUTLER'S CAMPAIGN.

Simultaneously with the advance of the Army of the Potomac, General Butler, from the Peninsula was ordered by General Butler, who proceeded to West Point on the York River, and landed with a force of about 20,000 men. Reports, as it intending to advance on Richmond from that line. On the 6th, General Butler moved up the river, and his cavalry from Fort Powhatan and other defenses on the James River to the vicinity of Chesterfield Station, on the south of the night, General Butler then withdrew his forces, and returned to Bermuda Hundred, who at once learned that the enemy had discovered their mistake our troops had fallen back, and were in force on the north of the river, and General Butler was master of the situation. The rebels attacked him in the morning of the 7th, but while army being transferred in 20 hours from Yorktown and Gloucester Point to the north side of the James River. Fresh reinforcements and a large number of gun-boats were immediately sent to him. The rebels consisted of the Tenth Corps, under General Gillmore, and the Eighteenth under General W. F. Smith. Fortifications were at once thrown up, occupied, and all the points along the river which commanded the position occupied and fortified. To cover this movement, cavalry expeditions were sent out in various directions, which destroyed railroads, the telegraph, and placing their communications in danger. Immediately upon getting possession of Bermuda Hundred, General Butler sent a force to destroy the railroad between Petersburg and Richmond, which was successfully accomplished, and the road severely wounded. The railroad bridge crossing one of the tributaries of the Appomattox, within about seven miles south of Petersburg, was set on fire and totally consumed, and the railroad track torn up and destroyed for a long enough for our forces to carry out other and more important operations. The movement was accomplished without much opposition, only a slight one, and that not to be accounted. On the 9th, General Kautz, with the 2nd and 3rd Cavalry Divisions, under Jones, while on picket duty in the Jones River, was fired upon by a party of rebels, who, on the first discharge of their carbine, and several of her officers and men were killed and wounded. The rest were



GRAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL IN PHILADELPHIA IN AID OF THE SANITARY COMMISSION.—[See Page 324.]

DEPARTURE OF THE UNION FLEET FROM NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA, ON MAY 4, 1864.—From a Sketch by a Naval Officer.—[See Page 334.]

ARRIVAL OF GENERAL BUTLER'S ADVANCE AT CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, ON MAY 5, 1864.—From a Sketch by a Naval Officer.—[See Page 334.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

CHAPTER XXI.—Continued.

THE dinner was a very grand one; but with all its grandeur piscine culinary art has progressed since those days, and by the side of a Greenwich banquet, as we now understand it, the repast might have seemed mean. Still there was an almost inconceivable variety of fish. Still rare wines came up with every course. The glass and damask would have appeared paltry in comparison with the sumptuosities of crystal and napery which are now displayed at such feasts; but it was a dinner fit for a king, and one Lily settled in her own mind of the precise description partaken of every day by the Caliph Haroun Alraschid. She fancied Giaffar calling for another salmon cutlets, and carving it deviled bait with his fingers. And then the bait themselves became the fish that turned in the pan and crouched the cook in the Fisherman and the Genii. And the pasty-faced waiters were black slaves with jewelled collars and armlets, and the rare wines were sherbet cooled with snow, and the child ate her dinner in a dream.

Sir William Long was faithful to his trust, and took the most sedulous care of her. He gave her some nice fried sole, and was cut off the waiters who would have approached her with perilous preparations of salmon and stewed eels. He bade the man bring him some Seltzer-water, and gave Lily a modest glass of the beverage mingled with Champagne. He gave her some white meat, which, with the thin brown bread-and-butter, she thought delicious, but he made her eschew the condiments of cayenne pepper and lemon. He watched over her with a careful tenderness, very curious to behold, and, though he drank fearfully long draughts of the rare wines, he took little more solid food than Lily herself.

"You must be very thirsty!" the child said, simply, as he drained another bumper of claret-cup.

"I am always thirsty."

"How funny! Why don't you drink tea, or go to the pump?—unless, of course, you are hot. Miss Babby will never let us go to the pump when we are hot. Miss Furbloe begged a jug of water from the cook once, when we had come in from a long walk, and broke out, two hours afterward, in a—O so dreadful rash. Mrs. Bunnycastle said it was a judgment upon have jobbed for in the same yard going on for nineteen year," continued the man.

"Now, what's the matter here?" the gruff voice of a passing policeman interposed.

Nothin's the matter," returned the flyman, gathering up his reins, and settling himself on his box. "I've got my fare, and I'm satisfied. Only next time that lady wants to be driven to Old Scratch, I'ope she'll 'ail another fly." With which he drove off.

The lady certainly did not possess, or else she did not care to cultivate, the art of conciliating the lower orders. The number of enemies she had made that day might have been calculated by the number of inferiors with whom she had come in contact.

They slept that night in a house in Golden Square, where this benignant person had taken lodgings, and the first thing she heard in the morning—for to her great joy she was not put to sleep with the strange lady, but was bestowed in a small adjoining bedroom—was an alarming commotion with the servant-of-all-work respecting breakfast: in the midst of which a stout landlady arrived, breathless, to give the lodger warning.

"Flesh and blood can't stand it no longer," said the indignant dame. "I'd rather have the parlors empty for six months than be scarified in this outrageous manner. No, marm, the Englishwoman ain't to be treated like a black Injin."

"And like the dirt under your feet," added the servant-of-all-work, who was in tears.

"And you'd better suit yourself elsewhere, marm," the landlady continued.

"Canaille!" the countess replied. "I would not remain another twenty-four hours in your wretched hole for twenty pounds a week. Take your swindling bill, and I will pay it. I leave this evening."

The day was a strange one, and the lady scarcely exchanged half a dozen words with Lily. She was in too great a rage after the commotion to breakfast in Golden Square, so took the child to a French coffee-house under the colonnade of the Italian Opera. Then they had a hackney-coach, and went a long long way through low and darkling Temple Bar into the City, until they reached a large house in a crowded street. They entered this warehouse, and the lady said to the assistant, "I think your girl is going to school, supply her with all she wants, and put it in a trunk."

The assistant was a joyous, middle-aged man in spectacles, and whose stiff shirt collar made indentations in his plump cheeks, submitted that it would take a good deal of stuff to furnish the young lady's outfit; and asked where he might have the honor of sending the esteemed order?

"I will take it away with me," she answered. "We will return in a couple of hours. Stay: can you take charge of the child for that time?"

The assistant replied that they would only be too happy to take care of the young lady for that period.

"Then stay here," said the lady to Lily, "and don't get into mischief. At four o'clock (it was now close upon two) I shall be here." And she went away.

"Is that your mamma, my dear?" the stout assistant with the spectacles asked, when the lady had taken her departure.

"Y—y—es," answered Lily, hesitating somewhat.

"Ah! Dear me! A handsome lady, quite the lady, in fact," he continued. "A proud one, too," he said to himself. "Looks as if she had a devil of a temper. A Tartar, I'll be sworn. Now, Miss Eldred, my good young lady, will you be good enough to come here, and we'll get this little matter in hand."

Miss Eldred was a tall lady, but the prefix "young" could be applied to her only in courtesy. She was bony, but handsome. She was clad in brown merino, which fitted her so straight that her dress looked like the section of a pair of trowsers. She smiled affably on Lily, and asked her whether she had ever been to school before? Upon which Lily told her all she knew about the Pyrenacades, and their fine growth, and soon grew quite companionable with her. And then the little matter of her outfit was put in hand.

Lily never spent a pleasanter two hours in her life. It was wonderful shop, and wonderful how to sell every thing. They showed her cabins complete with swinging cots, and lamps, and delightful little sea-chests with "Lily Eldred" in brass initial chests of drawers, which they fitted up on board ship bound for Australia. They showed her great black sea-chests with "Lily Eldred, Saloon, Madras," and "Lieutenant Rampelbuggins, Cape of Good Hope," painted thereupon in white letters. They showed her bales of cloth, stacks of stockings, hives of straw hats, bags, portmanteaus, writing-desks, dressing-cases, secretaires, chronometers, and cases of digestive biscuits.

"We sell saddles," the stout assistant remarked, with conscious pride. "We sell beer. We sell anchors, likewise school-books, also bonnets, and pickles, and parasols, and sticking-plaster. We are general shippers. If you require preserved beef, there are five hundred cases of it in the left-hand corner. Do you want any gun-powder? That's your sort. You've only to ask for a chaise cabby, my dear, and you can have it at per foot. We fit out every body. A bride, or an Admiral of the Blue, a midshipman or an Indian rajah, a little school-girl, or the governor of Cape Coast Castle; it's all one to us. When you go to school, and they ask who fitted you out as you hours' notice, just hand 'em the card of Cutwig & Co., will you?"

He presented the child with a packet of address cards on the spot. "We furnish funerals, too," he went on, chirpingly, "and we've sent out wedding-breakfasts in hermetically sealed tins; but we couldn't get the lobster salad to keep in the Indian Ocean, so that branch had to be given up. But if they want any Devonshire clotted cream at Singapore, or any canary-birds in New Zealand, they send to Cutwig & Co. for 'em. We might have done a powerful stroke of business in portable theatres for the colonies, but the late Mrs. Cutwig was pious, and wouldn't hear of it."

Meanwhile Miss Eldred, assisted by a slender pretty girl, whom she addressed as 'Melia, and who had her sleeves tucked above the elbow in trying various articles of apparel on Lily, and asking if she thought them pretty. And then the stout assistant, whose name was Ranns, asked Lily for her name, saying that he only knew her mamma as a customer, and a very good customer she was, and a handsome lady. He said her name was Floris, not knowing whether she would escape censure from the strange lady for making that revelation unlicensed; and then Mr. Ranns whispered something down a pipe, and in a quarter of an hour afterward a man in a fur cap suddenly popped up a trap in the floor, in one corner, and heaved forward into view a neat trunk covered with black linen canvas, and inscribed with the name of MISS FLORIS in capitals of white paint.

Stencilled and varnished at once, by our patient instantaneous process," remarked Mr. Ranns, rubbing his palms together in quiet complacency at the expedition in which he was served by Cutwig & Co. "Lord bless you! we'd knock all the names of the officers of a seventy-four, with brass nails and all, in four hours a minute. Yours is rather an uncommon name, my dear, else we generally have the names of every body in the Post-office Directory ready painted on portmanteaus, chests, and traveling bags, in sets of two hundred and fifty each."

At this stage of the conversation Miss Eldred suggested that the young lady must be hungry and Lily, pulling out her chronometer to see if a back parlor of triangular shape, smelling rather too strongly of new chests of drawers, fresh feather beds, and cabin stores, to be pleasant or comfortable. And there, Lily, and Miss Eldred, and 'Melia, and Mr. Ranns, dined off a round of beef, and a dish of pickles, and some nice apple-pudding. Lily observed that Miss Eldred dined in her bonnet, and Mr. Ranns with a hurry, with a pen behind his ear; likewise that the front of 'Melia's dress was so garnished with treasury tags that she might have done good service as a martial buckler.

"Half a glass of sherry, and a nice rosy-cheeked apple—a pippin, my dear, by hogsheads—for Miss Floris," chirped Mr. Ranns, "and then we must go to business. This is a mill that never stops, my dear. And, indeed, it never did. Business had been going on very briskly all through dinner-time; and a dozen times at least Mr. Ranns had been up from the table, and bustled into the shop to supply intending shippers with flannel jerseys, or lucifer-matches, or bird-cages, or anything in an equally miscellaneous description. The stout assistant's manner, in the absence of customers was, however, left to a lanky youth of vacant mien, whom Mr. Ranns described as being rather soft in the head, and a poor salesman, but a capital hand at accounts.

After dinner Lily was taken into the counting-house—a dark little box on the first floor, to which you ascended by half a dozen steps, and which was fenced all round by balustraded panels, like a family pew. Here the vacant youth kept the accounts of the house, in a series of immense volumes, covered in rough calf and bound in brass. He was a good-natured youth, and imbecile, and permitted Lily to peep into one of the ledgers, where she found a great deal of writing in a neat, fat, round hand, almost as beautiful as copies.

"We've got a new week day Bibles," remarked Mr. Ranns, facetiously. "We ship to all the world six days in the week, and go to church on Sundays."

Lily thought the big ledgers very beautiful but wondered by what clairvoyance the vacant youth could read the writing in the book in the dark.

"Are you fond of apples?" the vacant lad whispered to her, with a friendly leer.

Lily modestly avowed a partiality for the fruit in question.

"Then 'ere's another," pursued the clerk, "and another; I dote on apples, I do. I always buy 'em when I'm out with a view to my acceptance. My wages is eighteen. I gives my mother, which is a widder, twelve, and I spends the rest on apples. I'm to be a partner in Cutwig & Co. don't like it. It's wicked. I eats apples all day. They 'elps me with the figures." And the vacant youth disappeared in the dark, munching as he went.

And now nothing would suit Mr. Ranns—to whom this amicable conversation had not been heard—but that Miss Floris should be taken up the stairs and presented to Mrs. Cutwig, Mrs. Cutwig & Co. itself. So, up stairs went Lily, pleased and amused, and in a front drawing-room they found, reading newspapers with a look of side of wine before him, such a nice dear old gentleman, with a powdered head which waged to and fro, and with gold-rimmed spectacles, that was Mr. Cutwig, head of the firm, Co. and all. He was eighty years of age, and father of his company. "Might have been alderman and passed the chair long ago, but the late Mr. Cutwig was a lofty soul, and couldn't bear the corporation. She thought it low," Mr. Ranns.

He fitted her out, Sir," was the simple speech accompanying the presentation of Lily.

"Good lad, good lad," piped old Mr. Cutwig in a very shrill voice. "Mr. Ranns might have been on the shady side of forty). "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he'll be worth eighty thousand pound, and on the Court of Assistants. Here's a new shilling from the Mint, my dear."

He pulled out of his waistcoat-pocket a very dazzling piece of money, which, with a shaking hand, he gave to Lily. And then he added some scruples as to accepting it, but, at a dreamy sign from Mr. Ranns, she took it and thanked him.

"I came into this town nigh upon seventy year ago, by the Dover wagon, with one-and-sixpence in my pocket, in my pockets," piped old Mr. Cutwig. "I slept on a hop-sack in the Borough market. Many a little makes a mickle. Honesty is the best policy. Ask Ranns. He's a good lad, and has been with me, man and boy, over seven-and-twenty year. I always took care of my lads, and my boys always took care of me."

Here the old gentleman's head began to wag more rapidly, and Lily noticed that he was holding his newspaper upside down.

"He's breaking fast," Mr. Ranns mentioned confidentially, as, the interview being over, he conducted Lily down stairs, "but he's as good as gold. Under the care of nurses in his time, my dear. He'd get up at six o'clock and ship two tons of goods to the colonies before breakfast. He's a little out of date now, and when you come back from school you mustn't be surprised to see Ranns & Eldred over the door. But Mr. Cutwig will be there, continued in a contemplative undertone, "Ranns turns into Eldred, and Eldred into Ranns."

It was four o'clock when they reached the shop again. Lily's outfit was quite completed, and she sat down meekly on her trunk, and waited for about half an hour longer, when a grand carriage came driving furiously to the door, and the countess Gothain (there were two behind the carriage) descended and handed out Lily's protectress. The child saw the lady turn on the threshold as she entered and wave her hand in token of farewell to an old gentleman in the carriage. He was a splendid gentleman, with a fierce black mustache and whiskers, and Lily somehow fancied that she had seen him before. It was at the Greenwich dinner yesterday?

The handsome lady was radiant. Lily had never seen her in such good-temper. She was pleased with every thing, and, to Miss Eldred, was positively civil. Mr. Ranns handed her, with a low bow, a receipt for the child's outfit. The lady, just glancing at the sum total, instantly, and without question, disbursed the amount in crisp bank-notes. Then a hackney-coach was called, and the trunk hoisted on to it, and Lily herself was lifted into the vehicle.

The coach began driving away, when Mr. Ranns, bearing a package which seemed to be a small canoe wrapped in brown paper, came running after the vehicle.

"Beg pardon for the liberty, ma'am," he said, deferentially, "but would you allow this parcel to be put into the coach?" Miss Floris is such a dear little girl, and we forgot to take off five per cent. discount for her. It's only a Noah's ark, with Cutwig & Co's compliments. And Mr. Ranns ran back again as hard as he could into Cutwig & Co.'s premises: thus obviating the possibility of the lady indignantly declining the present, or launching the canoe bodily at his head.

But the lady didn't decline it. She was in far too good a temper to do that. In fact, she condescended to say that it was kind, very kind, very kind, of the people in the shop; and she so smiled upon Lily that the child felt quite giddy, and said so benignant, that the child gazed upon her face with an admiring awe, as though she had been an angel from Heaven.

"What do you think of that, little one?" she said, in a triumphant voice, flashing before the child's eyes a gold bracelet which encircled her wrist, and which blazed with diamonds. When suddenly she descried something shining in Lily's hand. It was the new shilling Mr. Cutwig had given her.

The child, blushing and stammering, explained that the nice old gentleman with the powdered head had given it her, and that she had at first hesitated to take it, but that the other gentleman had told her to do so. The lady was in a merry wrath, snatched the coin from her, and flung it out of the coach window.

"I've a great mind to throw the Noah's ark after it," she cried with a furious look. "You mean little wretch. Ma foi, you begin early to be a beggar. You are thrifty blood in you. He would take any thing, that base monster; and she went on scolding Lily, but in a rambling and incoherent way, for the next few minutes. But a good temper was all gone.

By-and-by they came to Thames Street, which was full, as Lily knew, of carts, and drays, and barrels, and sugar-loaves, and piles of dried hides, and other such things. And there, at the entrance to a narrow lane, stood an individual in a suit of oilskin, who was crying at the top of his voice, "Belong Ashore! The Belong steamer! This way to the Belong steamer!" till he almost deafened Lily.

There was a great bustle waiting by the side of this individual, and he had a truck and some luggage on it. The luggage belonged to the lady, and was a wooden pier, and so on board a ship, much larger than the steamer in which Lily had come to Greenwich. The deck was covered with people, luggage, and merchandise. Every body was running about in the most distracted manner, and a great bell kept ding-donging furiously. Then a rope fell across Lily's feet and hurt her toes, and the steam began to make a horrible noise, and the funnel began to vomit great masses of black smoke, and the captain, who stood on a bridge above the deck, gave a number of orders in a hoarse voice, which a dirty boy who stood below him repeated in a shrill one. And then the wharf and the warehouses began to move, and the people upon it, all seemed to be moving away; but it was the steamer itself, and its crew, and Lily, who were moving.

She was on board the Eurôpein steam-packet bound for Boulogne. The shore drifted away from her; the last sound she heard on shore was the voice of the porter, who said that the lady had had a trifling dispute respecting payment, and who was shaking his fist at her and bawling out:

"You call yourself a lady! You call yourself a lady! Yah!"

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

An unsuccessful lover was asked by what means he lost his divinity. "Alas!" cried he, "I fluttered her until she got the proud to speak to me."

"I say, Bill, what do those chaps mean by an accordion?" "Don't you know? Why, it's an exhaust bellows."

"Pa, bar Mr. Jones's eyes got foul?" "Why, my boy?" "Because I heard mother say at a party the other evening that Mr. Jones's eyes followed her all over the room."

Mr. Home, the medium, states that before his expulsion from Rome he was asked to sign the following declaration in the presence of the Chief of the Inquisition: "I, Daniel Douglas Home, do hereby solemnly declare and avow that I have not sold my soul to the Devil, nor have I any secret connection whatever, regular or holding communication with the Evil One."

What snows does summer never melt?—The snows of age.

A reformed gambler says that he who lives by the card may die by the card.

There is no danger of hard times among the shoemakers, for every man every shoe is sold before it can be got ready for the market.

"Don't put too much confidence in a lover's vows and sighs," said Mrs. Partington to her niece. "Let him tell you that you have lips like strawberries and cream, cheeks like a bunch of roses, eyes like an asterisk, and he such things otherse come from a tender head than a tender heart."

How many parts of speech are there?—It depends upon the speaker, who may sometimes divide his speech into several parts, and sometimes show a total want of parts in speaking it.

"Pray, Sir," said a young belle to the clerk of a circulating library, "have you 'Rose and Thorn,' by Miss ——, replied he, "but we have Woman as she should be!"

Man slip on water when it is frozen, and on whisky when it is not.

So long as a woman loves she lover rights on, steadily. A man has to do something between whiles.

A lady of somewhat dignified demeanor, having lost her way, said to a gentleman in waiting, "Boy, I want to go to Bond Street." "Well, marm," replied the boy, coolly looking at her, "I guess you'd better begin."

Many a judge has passed hundreds of sentences who could never parse one.

An offender fined a second time is not necessarily refined.

A man hearing of another who was a hundred years old, said, contemptuously, "Pshaw! what a fuss about nothing! Why, if my grandfather was alive he would now be a hundred and fifty years old."

The last case of indolence is that of a man named John Fish, who was so lazy that in writing his name he simply used the letter "J," and then punched a hole through the paper.

A farmer in a village in Hampshire was invited to attend a party at the Squire's the other evening, where there was much dancing, and kept it up late. The following morning he met one of the guests, who said, "Well, farmer, how did you amuse yourself last night? were not the quarterone exercises?" "Why, really, Sir, I can't say," said he, "for I didn't taste 'em; but the pork chops were the finest I ever did eat."

"OUR MUTUAL FRIEND"—Charles Dickens, of course.

A teacher, one day, endeavoring to make a pupil understand the true interpretation of a passive verb, said, "A passive verb is expressive of the nature of receiving action, as for instance, I am beaten—what did Peter do?" The boy, pausing a moment, with the gravest countenance conceivable, replied, "Well, I don't know, without he licked him."

Queen Elizabeth said, "Anger makes dull men witty, but it keep them poor."

What weapon of war is an angry lover like?—A crossbow.

An old woman in Yorkshire crossed a bridge that was marked as "dangerous" with warning sign. She fell through it, and was saved at the last moment by a man who caught her by the hair of the head. "Ah, Sir," said she, "the court understood you differently. They supposed you had allowance came from you." "No, Sir; I only removed a light cut it."

Why is a bachelor's cart like his boots?—Because it carries his wheels behind.

"Have the jury agreed?" asked the bailiff of a locked-up set of twelve, when he had left under care of his man, a juryman, and when he had seen that all was right with a can in his hand. "Oh, yes," replied Dunny, "they have agreede to sind out a verdict of Nolo Contendere."

DO YOU GIVE IT UP?

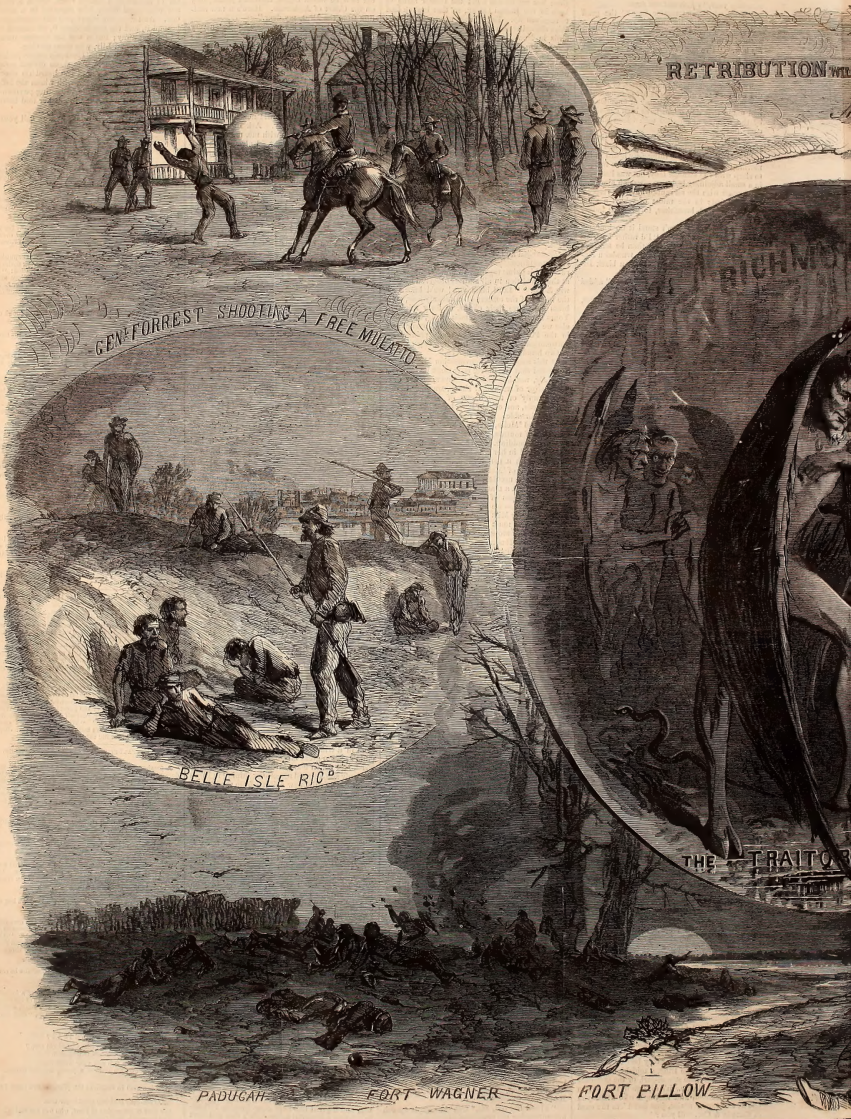
Why are the fixed stars like wicked old men?
Because they are old-fast (wicked).

The name of a fish not very uncommon.
The pride and the boast of a young married woman.
Her-ring.

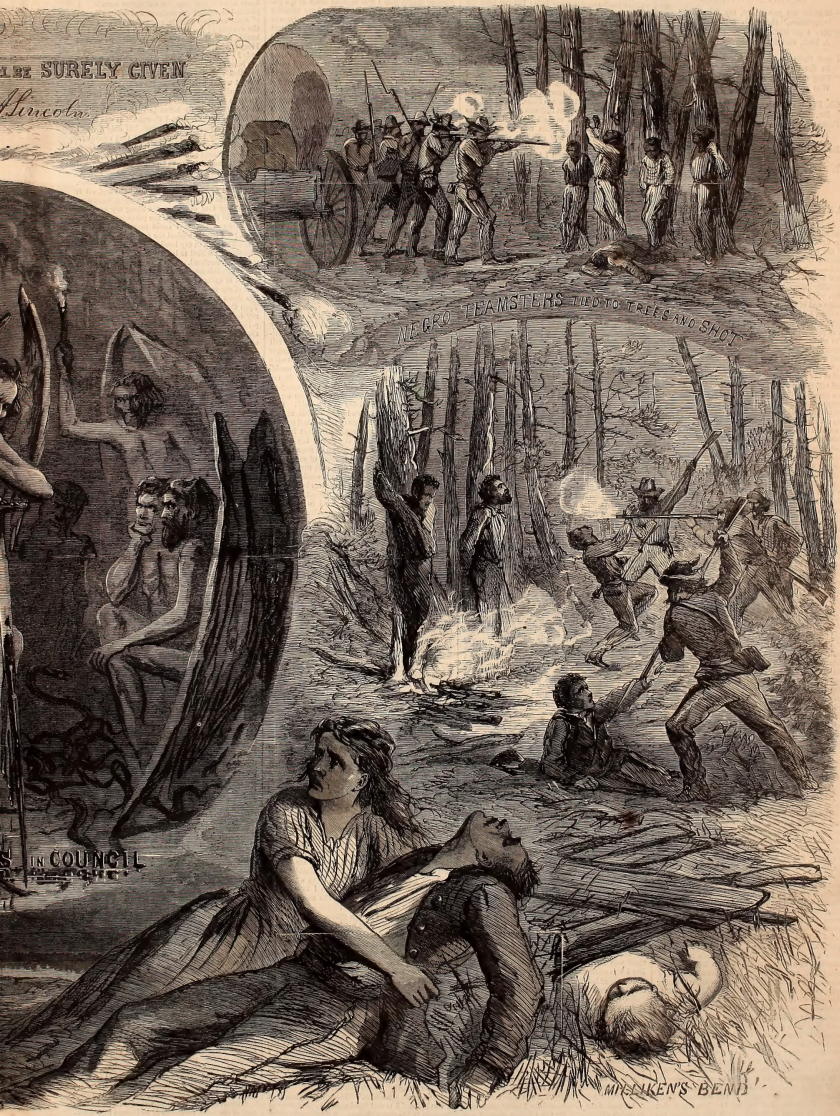
Why is a man in search of the philosopher's stone like Neptune?
He is sea-king (seeking) what never was.

We hear of the widow's mite, but who was the father?
The widow's mite (Midas).

Why is a married man without any children like a bald head?
Because he has no hair (heir) apparent.



REBEL ATROCITI



ES.—[See Page 334.]

GOING NOWHERE.

"Where are you going, my fair one?"
"Nowhere," she softly replied.
"May I go with you?" he asked her.
A look, and he walked by side.

I saw them go off together—
In the darkness disappear.
"They are going straight to their ruin!"
Was whispered close to my ear.

Oh, Parents! with sons and daughters,
Be sure they have Somewhere to go.
From their hearts teach them never to wander
Through the mazes of Vanity's Show.

Beware lest, in going Nowhere,
They come to a life of shame.
It lies in your fireside teachings,
And with you rests all the blame.

A NIGHT'S LODGING IN PARIS.

In 18—, before I had taken my degree at Oxford, and before, by my uncle's death, I had succeeded to the title, I made arrangements to spend the whole of the long vacation abroad. I was by no means desirous of a solitary journey, and was glad to find that ——, whose rooms were on the same staircase with my own at Brasenose, and with whom I was tolerably intimate, was also meditating a continental tour. We made arrangements for starting together at the end of the summer term, and in order to lose no time, I determined not to go into Scotland to my mother before my departure, but to travel as quickly as possible to Dover — had as little to detain him as I. We slept a night in the capital, and a night in the port, and three days after leaving Oxford were lodged in the Hotel Desein. Neither of us had ever left England before, and we were both full of the spirit of enjoyment. We reached Paris, still together, but the first fortnight of our journey had taught us that we were not very well suited for companions. I was by no means in the humor to endure tawny old market-woman, in her stiff white cap; I could spend a whole day in a church, and have still enough left for a port-folio full of sketches and screens and cornices, sacred St. Omer, Lille, Cambrai, Amiens, and other places of smaller note — grew terribly tired of all this. He said the scenery was detestable, he thought all the churches were shockingly out of repair, and was anxious to hasten his arrival in the French metropolis. But in Paris we were separated more than ever. In addition to the quarrel of our tastes, politics had by this time begun to break up apart. We both had a fair number of introductions to families moving in good society. But friends he were most placed with — and with whom we most pleased, though by birth entitled to hail their hands as high as any of the blood-blooded inhabitants of the Faubourg St. Germain, had been induced to give their countenance — to defend the unanointed usurper in the court of the Citizen King. An old friend of my mother's, married to a Marquis de ——, who took me under her especial protection, assured me that it was impossible for the loyal hearts who still cherished love and hope for the (temporarily) fallen cause of the white flag to associate with those who had degraded their race by recognizing the position of a usurpation as detestable as it would be opprobrious. I confess that I cared very little whether the elder or younger branch of the Bourbons issued the invitations for the academies at the Tuileries, and I had small hopes that Charles X. would be recalled. But I grew to like Madame de ——, and, as a necessary consequence, formed different acquaintances from those of my fellow-traveler. We had been in Paris about three weeks, and though we were staying in the same hotel, I had not seen —— for several days. We met by accident on the staircase of the hotel.

"We are quite strangers; where are you going?"

"To call on Madame de ——."

"What! will the legitimist Marquise! Shall we dine together?"

"By all means. Meet me here at six."

——— agreed to the appointment. It was about three o'clock in the afternoon.

The day was intensely hot. Reflected backward and forward from white stone houses-from the sun's rays seemed to scorch up all that was breathable in the atmosphere. The dense of the streets were hot to be endured. I entered the gardens of the Tuileries, hoping to find some slight shade for my dazzled eyes. I knew of few scenes brighter than those Tuileries gardens. The water was mounting and falling with its musical bonise, with the shallow basin, whence little boys, under the superintendence of a black-eyed bonne, were swimming their toy-boats. More children and more nurses were playing on the orange-trees, for the three National Guards were lounging about. Nor were their uniforms wanting to give color to the picture. The re-colored bunting flapped lazily over the dome of the palace. A man in a queer muffy-looking hat walked by: he had a pair of spectacles, and his button-hole showed a shred of ribbon. I sat for perhaps twenty minutes listening idly to the plashing fountain, wondering whether Auguste or Jules—he must have been either Auguste or Jules—would get his boat within reach by judiciously shelling over it with pebbles, and somehow Napoleon pinching some honored ear, or the lunged-for Louis chasing over his favorite. Then it that very garden, watching the figure of the man in the brown coat and the green spectacles, growing "one by degrees" in the narrowing vista of trees. Then I thought of Madame de —— and my visit; but remembered that it would be more decorously paid in the evening than in the afternoon. What should I do with myself? I felt strangely disinclined to move. And my head? What is it that seems to weigh it down? Is it the sun and the heat? I never felt any thing like it before. The pain attacked me suddenly. Pain! no, that is not the pain. Perhaps the sensation can not be described to those who have not felt it. I had suffered from violent headache for some days; but my head did not ache now. It felt dull and heavy. My natural impulse was to lift my hand to my brow. I willed the movement of my arm, if I may so express myself; but no movement resulted. I had no power to stir. I then became sensible that my respiration grew feebler, and that there was a kind of lull in the pulsation of my heart. It is difficult for me, as I have said already, to describe my condition. I can only say that I seemed suddenly to have lost life in me; my vital powers seemed to dwindle down to the smallest possible force. I existed, because I was conscious, but that was all. My senses remained to me; but not all in equal strength. The plashing of the fountain was as distinct as before the attack; eyesight was clear. Hearing dinned. Whether I could smell or taste, of course I could not tell. Of touch I had hardly any sense at all. There was a power of people within the sound of my voice. I willed to cry; but there was no sound. My tongue refused to articulate. I was horror-struck; but I was sensible of none of the usual symptoms of horror. My heart did not beat more quickly. I could feel no excess of alarm. Was this death? No; it could not surely be death. I had all my wits about me; and all my impressions were soundless. The fountain plashed on close round me just as it was wont. I alone was motionless. Then these flashed across me the recollection of a strange tale of my grandfather's, from which my grandfather's name had figured. I remembered that my mother had seemed distressed that the subject should be mentioned to me. I had made a casual allusion to it turned the conversation, and I had really thought little more about the matter. I remembered two mysterious expressions in the letters which I had received from my mother immediately after my departure, and two mysterious expressions which, when read in the light of my present brief experience, let me to the opinion that my family must have had some hereditary, constitutional evil, an evil which my mother had never yet dared to communicate to me. "I am very anxious," she had written, "about your health. Pray write often, or will not travel alone. Who is to be your companion? Do I know him? I know that you like no one for your long boy, and I should be sorry to think of your wandering through strange cities alone. Nothing is more dreadful than to be ill among a people who are intimate with your proposed compagnon de voyage, and if you are likely to remain together for the whole of the tour, I shall be happy." These flashed through my brain in a very few seconds. I knew that I must have fallen into a kind of trance. It could be nothing else. I had read and indelible kind; but I also felt intense curiosity.

I was sitting on a seat with a back to it, a few feet removed from the edge of the basin of the garden. My arms were folded, my head was slightly dropped on my breast, my legs were crossed at the ankles, my posture was that of perfect attention, so I sat rigid and immovable for what seemed to me an age. I imagined all kinds of possible explanations of my situation. I should be found, of course. I should be carried to my hotel; doctors would be sent for. I should learn what was the matter with me. What probably recover; these fits were rarely of long duration. Carried to my hotel! They would find my pocket-book in my pocket, and my name addressed à Monsieur ——, Hotel de ——. Would they? Was my pocket-book in its place? I could not feel. Suppose my pocket-book was left, as was sometimes the case, in another coat? What other means of identification were there of the street? A coat of arms on it, a hat with an English maker's name; neither of much use in Paris. But what matter was it to me? I was in no difficulty. I should of course be taken to the Hotel Dieu. What will they do to me, I wonder? Will they—ha! what was that?

"Qu'est ce que tu fais donc, petit méchant! Demande pardon à ce Monsieur que tu as—"

It was the voice of a child, a Alphonse, or Jules, in his infantile gyrations, had stumbled against me. I looked down at the little rosy cheeks, and the black threw me into a posture so objectively unnatural that I could not longer remain unnoticed. The nurse stopped short in her expostulation.

"Mais, mon Dieu! Il est mort!"

"No, I am not dead, I protest; but I am very much as that you have found out that I am not wholesomely alive. Now I shall be properly cared for. In a very few minutes I shall be the centre of a small crowd, and presently two or three gens d'armes shouldered their way through the straw. Then I shall be moved, and carried to my hotel. I felt —so, I did not feel; I was aware that I was quite still. One of them put his hand on my breast and held it there a while.

Presently the little group of by-standers, at command of an official, fell back. Hands, purses, and search was commenced in my pockets for some name or address. I was excited by the thought of this touch. You are not dead, but you are unable to express myself. I can not say "I trembled," "I held my breath," "my pulse beat quicker," there was no palpable evidence of my agitation. But I was excited.

They fumbled, finding only a watch, no portemonnaie, grumbling among themselves thereat.

No, there was no pocket-book. My heart sank; at least I felt as though my heart sank, as it often sunk. I can not tell how long this search occupied. My consciousness seemed now to become a little shadowy. I was aware of more people, a little less acute than in ordinary life. In the mean while a stretcher had been brought to the ground. I was lifted thereon, something was put over my face, and they bore me away. I could hear the fountain plashing, and the many children's voices ringing through the avenues. Oh that I could have spoken! Oh for power to say but one word!

We passed out of the garden; I could not be sure in which direction, for my eyes were under I perceived that we entered the crowded street. Presently we stopped; a door was opened, and I caught the hum of the moving world ceased. I was sensible that I was no longer being carried along, and guessed aright that I was in some office of the police. Here, I thought, the search for my trashes must end. They will send for a doctor; he will know of the probable duration of the fit, and will take such measures as will mollify the most painful symptoms, or perhaps release me from it altogether.

From the confused murmur of several voices in conversation which sounded in my ears, I gathered that in a room communicating with that in which I lay the officials were deliberating on my condition. I could not distinguish the words. Presently the voices grew plainer, and the speakers were evidently approaching. The face-cloth was removed. There were the same gens d'armes who had discovered me in the garden, accompanied by several others. A gray-haired man—yes, there no doubt of it—with them entered the little old gentleman in the brown coat and green spectacles, whom I remembered to have seen before my seizure. This, then, was the long-desired physician; I would tell them somewhere that I was not dead.

"He is stiff already. Such is not unfrequently the case in disease of the heart. I should have believed him dead before the hour which you say. In the garden of the Tuileries? I made there a promenade myself this afternoon. And neither name nor address? That is droll. Ah! it is already five hours! And I am invited to dine in a quarter of an hour! Poor young man! Close his eyelids, Gabriel; they have a mournful quite living. But mieur will permit me to sign the procès-verbal without delay. Let us go."

So much for my hopes of the doctor! And then an authoritative voice said, "Vous le porterez là sur le lieu de cette."

A door shut, and there was silence.

I began now to realize the awful horror of my position. Hopeless though it was to be dead, I experienced all those emotions which are said to be felt by the dying in cases where an accident plunges them from the midst of health and life to the immediate prospect of passing to another world. Most acute among these was the succession of my thoughts. I reflected on the frivolity of many of my occupations, on the time I had thrown away, and the small use I had been to any body. I remembered that my mother's last letter, full, as were all her letters, of expressions of the fondest endearment, had not been answered. And that last letter? I had told at school!—and my young life cut off horribly and mysteriously, none to be near me dying, none to know that I had become of me. All —— he would be waiting to dine with me. Where would he dine? I wondered. What would he do to me? Would he go to Paris, yet recover before—before what? Frightful, damning thought. I was dead; I was not dead. I was dead, but I felt. I was not dead. I feared, I said to myself; it was the manner of death.

I no longer all this I must confess that my agony was not so intense as now, knowing the circumstances in which I was placed, I should suppose it was likely that I should recover, or hope not that I was very calm, and I was very curious. I speculated on what would befall me almost as though I had been the unconcerned spectator of the adventures of another.

And what did "la bas" mean? The voice of assembly had spoken of carrying me "la bas." The door opened again. My eyelids were closed now, and I could not see who entered. I said to myself, say that I could not open my eyes. The voices were none of those which I had already heard. I felt myself lifted from the arms of the street lad, my ear with a sound slightly dulled, and I felt that I was covered with some kind of cloth. My bearers walked for about five fifteen minutes. There was a fresh sound of opening and shutting doors, and I was thrown rudely on some hard surface; not the soft decency of a bed, but on the office of my bearers, but thrown down like a worthless burden. Could I complain? I could not even groan.

But what was this? I felt rough pocks at my arms and legs. I was being stripped of my clothes. Was this for me? Was I to be buried in my shirt? I was over, and I felt weary and confused. A partial blunting of my senses spared me much of the pain I must otherwise have felt. I would still perfectly conscious of all that was going on around me, as far as any one can be conscious of what he does not see, hears, or touches. My hands were next, was stripped of my clothes—stripped entirely. Then I was carried through another door. Then I was softly stuck immediately smote my sense of smell. I was laid down on my back on an icy-cold surface. I felt somewhat higher than my feet. A horrible chill ran through me. was this grave? I could not tell. Nothing covered me, with the exception of a cloth which had been thrown over my loins. Was I in a coffin, waiting for a pauper's burial on the morrow? O God! to what a fate was I reduced!

No. It could not be the grave. It must be—the thought flashed across me in an instant. How singular that I had not thought of it before! It was of course was the destination of the unclaimed dead. That of course was what was meant by the là bas of the gens d'armes. I was in Morgue!

You may think it strange, but my first feeling was one of relief. I was not to be buried yet. Perhaps I might be saved from it altogether. So for the present I was safe. Safe! I was safe in only the avowed probability of my safety. I should lie here, perhaps, for days. It would be remarked that my bright shone with the signs of decomposition. Perhaps—would seek me in this grim receptacle of the dead. At any rate, there was hope. Should I starve to death? No; surely in cases of catalepsy the appetite is all but dead. The little life left in the body requires but little sustenance. At least, I felt no hunger. There was hope!

Then came a reaction. This horrible place that I was in! I could feel my head and feet, as lightly as courses in his grave-clothes. A deadly cold seemed to chill all my frame. And always that faint and stench! Oh, the horror of my—hideous thoughts of my companions. I was not alone. I began to speculate on the appearance of the place. I had heard what it was like. I had never seen it. I pictured to myself the mazed and rotting corpse of some unhappy suicide, recovered too late from the current of the Seine; for such suicides, I had heard, were the most frequent denizens of the Morgue. How close was I to that loathsome body? Could I touch it if I were able to put out my hand?

I talked with these fearful fancies, I hoped that the fit might not leave me till it was day. My blind helplessness was a sort of protection to me. To have all my horrors of life restored to me, and to be imprisoned for hours in that hideous place, would kill me in reality, I thought. And then better to lie there impotent as I was. If only I could sleep; if only I could escape from that consciousness which was all that was left to me.

I lay tortured and distracted by these reflections for what seemed of me to be many hours. Soon, I expected, it would be day. And then?

But now a strange shiver shot all over my frame. The blood seemed to rush to my head and fill it with violent darting pains. A tingling, somewhat resembling that of cramp, ran along my extremities. Did these mean that the paroxysm was coming to an end—that I could move—that I could speak? I hardly willed the samela to be true, as yet. The pain in my head grew more acute. Instinctively I willed to lift my hand, and press it on the aching temples. The limb moved to the volition.

Though this movement of my arm came to me as a kind of order of release, I yet hesitated to make trial of my recovered powers. I still kept my eyelids down. I held my hand fixed on my brow. Then the first thing sung in my mind was that in my force to try to effect my escape from my foul prison. I made a low sound with my voice. I put into motion such articulate words as I thought obeyed me. I moved my arm to my side again, and raised one of my legs. The pain in my head left me. I felt no suffering but absolute rest. Still I was affected by a strange weariness—a disinclination to use the smallest exertion. Courage! I thought; I am dead and save yourself. I lowered my eyes. A little light from a dull moon struggled in through the darkness. I was not guided by its help I could distinguish with tolerable clearness the aspect of my lodging. Immediately in front of me an illuminated clock—a dial with figures. Before I surmised, my friends would seek me. It fell on some six or seven hard cold beds of stone or wood, like that on which I was stretched. On several it showed nothing but the smooth shining surface. On two others, besides my own, it rested with a dull glimmer on something that was concealed the spirit of a man. One of these corpses looked little deadly than I did myself. It was not death I feared, I said to myself; it was the manner of death.

Then I thought all this I must confess that my agony was not so intense as now, knowing the circumstances in which I was placed, I should suppose it was likely that I should recover, or hope not that I was very calm, and I was very curious. I speculated on what would befall me almost as though I had been the unconcerned spectator of the adventures of another.

And what did "là bas" mean? The voice of assembly had spoken of carrying me "là bas." The door opened again. My eyelids were closed now, and I could not see who entered. I said to myself, say that I could not open my eyes. The voices were none of those which I had already heard. I felt myself lifted from the arms of the street lad, my ear with a sound slightly dulled, and I felt that I was covered with some kind of cloth. My bearers walked for about five fifteen minutes. There was a fresh sound of opening and shutting doors, and I was thrown rudely on some hard surface; not the soft decency of a bed, but on the office of my bearers, but thrown down like a worthless burden. Could I complain? I could not even groan.

But what was this? I felt rough pocks at my arms and legs. I was being stripped of my clothes. Was this for me? Was I to be buried in my shirt? I was over, and I felt weary and confused. A partial blunting of my senses spared me much of the pain I must otherwise have felt. I would still perfectly conscious of all that was going on around me, as far as any one can be conscious of what he does not see, hears, or touches. My hands were next, was stripped of my clothes—stripped entirely. Then I was carried through another door. Then I was softly stuck immediately smote my sense of smell. I was laid down on my back on an icy-cold surface. I felt somewhat higher than my feet. A horrible chill ran through me. was this grave? I could not tell. Nothing covered me, with the exception of a cloth which had been thrown over my loins. Was I in a coffin, waiting for a pauper's burial on the morrow? O God! to what a fate was I reduced!

No. It could not be the grave. It must be—the thought flashed across me in an instant. How singular that I had not thought of it before! It was of course was the destination of the unclaimed dead. That of course was what was meant by the là bas of the gens d'armes. I was in Morgue!

You may think it strange, but my first feeling was one of relief. I was not to be buried yet. Perhaps I might be saved from it altogether. So for the present I was safe. Safe! I was safe in only the avowed probability of my safety. I should lie here, perhaps, for days. It would be remarked that my bright shone with the signs of decomposition. Perhaps—would seek me in this grim receptacle of the dead. At any rate, there was hope. Should I starve to death? No; surely in cases of catalepsy the appetite is all but dead. The little life left in the body requires but little sustenance. At least, I felt no hunger. There was hope!

Then came a reaction. This horrible place that I was in! I could feel my head and feet, as lightly as courses in his grave-clothes. A deadly cold seemed to chill all my frame. And always that faint and stench! Oh, the horror of my—hideous thoughts of my companions. I was not alone. I began to speculate on the appearance of the place. I had heard what it was like. I had never seen it. I pictured to myself the mazed and rotting corpse of some unhappy suicide, recovered too late from the current of the Seine; for such suicides, I had heard, were the most frequent denizens of the Morgue. How close was I to that loathsome body? Could I touch it if I were able to put out my hand?

I talked with these fearful fancies, I hoped that the fit might not leave me till it was day. My blind helplessness was a sort of protection to me. To have all my horrors of life restored to me, and to be imprisoned for hours in that hideous place, would kill me in reality, I thought. And then better to lie there impotent as I was. If only I could sleep; if only I could escape from that consciousness which was all that was left to me.

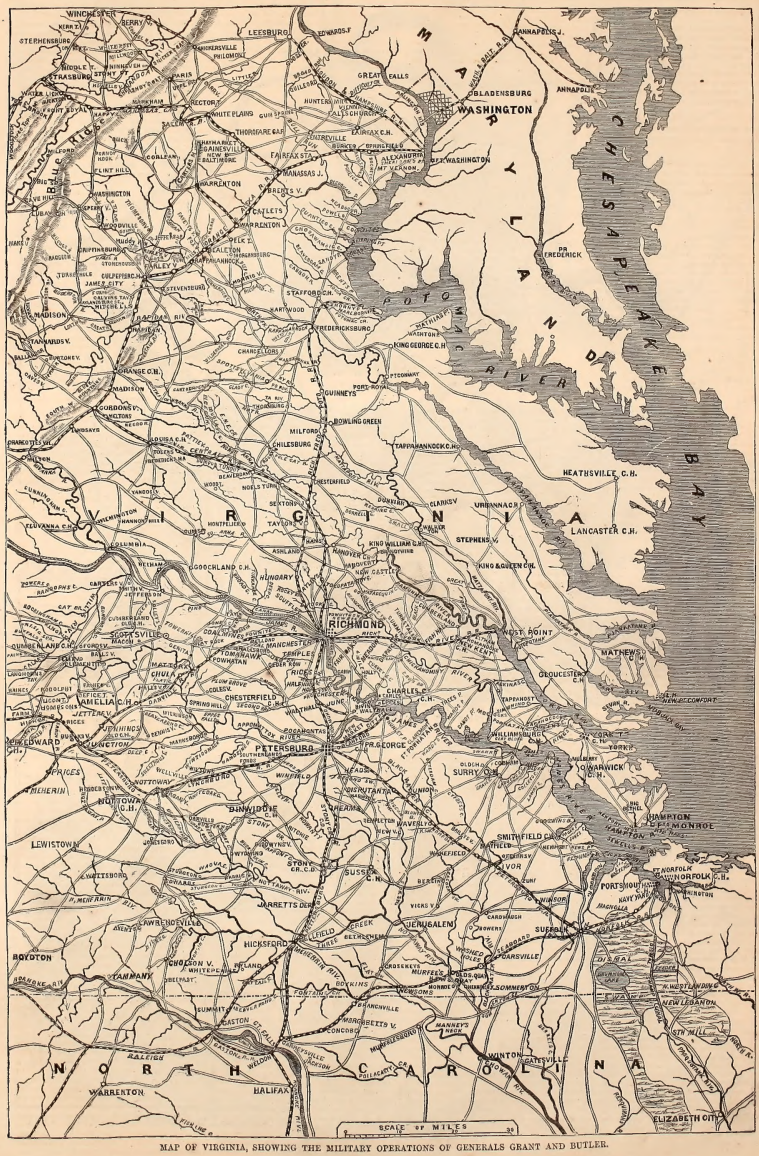
I lay tortured and distracted by these reflections for what seemed of me to be many hours. Soon, I expected, it would be day. And then?

But now a strange shiver shot all over my frame. The blood seemed to rush to my head and fill it with violent darting pains. A tingling, somewhat resembling that of cramp, ran along my extremities. Did these mean that the paroxysm was coming to an end—that I could move—that I could speak? I hardly willed the samela to be true, as yet. The pain in my head grew more acute. Instinctively I willed to lift my hand, and press it on the aching temples. The limb moved to the volition.

Though this movement of my arm came to me as a kind of order of release, I yet hesitated to make trial of my recovered powers. I still kept my eyelids down. I held my hand fixed on my brow. Then the first thing sung in my mind was that in my force to try to effect my escape from my foul prison. I made a low sound with my voice. I put into motion such articulate words as I thought obeyed me. I moved my arm to my side again, and raised one of my legs. The pain in my head left me. I felt no suffering but absolute rest. Still I was affected by a strange weariness—a disinclination to use the smallest exertion. Courage! I thought; I am dead and save yourself. I lowered my eyes. A little light from a dull moon struggled in through the darkness. I was not guided by its help I could distinguish with tolerable clearness the aspect of my lodging. Immediately in front of me an illuminated clock—a dial with figures. Before I surmised, my friends would seek me. It fell on some six or seven hard cold beds of stone or wood, like that on which I was stretched. On several it showed nothing but the smooth shining surface. On two others, besides my own, it rested with a dull glimmer on something that was concealed the spirit of a man. One of these corpses looked little deadly than I did myself. It was not death I feared, I said to myself; it was the manner of death.

"Mon Dieu! On ne sait jamais ce qui peut arriver! Cependant il a encore bien l'air d'être un cadavre. Filons au moins de cette diable d'odeur."

Muttering these words between his teeth, he took hold of my hand, perceived in an instant how utterly weak and helpless I was, lifted me in his arms, and carried me out of the room. I have never seen my nose's lodging since.



MARYLAND
VIRGINIA
NORTH CAROLINA
WASHINGTON
ANNAPOLIS
BALTIMORE
CHESAPEAKE BAY
POTOMAC RIVER
RICHMOND
PETERSBURG
FREDERICKSBURG
ALEXANDRIA
FORT MONROE
NORFOLK
PORTSMOUTH
LANCASTER C.H.
HEATHSVILLE C.H.
GLOUCESTER C.H.
MATHEWS C.H.
WEST POINT
WILLIAMSBURG
YORKTOWN
SURRY C.H.
SMITHFIELD
SUFFOLK
CHARLES C.H.
KING & QUEEN C.H.
KING GEORGE C.H.
PR. GEORGE C.H.
DINWIDDIE C.H.
SUSSEX C.H.
AMELIA C.H.
NOTTOWAY C.H.
LEWISTOWN
JETTERSVILLE
NEW EDWARD JUNCTION
MANCHESTER
CHESTERFIELD
HANOVER C.H.
ASHLAND
HUNGARY
GOODRICH C.H.
KING WILLIAM C.H.
KING & QUEEN C.H.
MILFORD
BOWLING GREEN
GUINNEYS
PORT ROYAL
TAPPAHANNOCK C.H.
LANCASTER C.H.
HEATHSVILLE C.H.
WARSAW
CHILESBURG
MADISON
CHANCELLORSV.
FREDERICKSBURG
STAFFORD C.H.
FALMOUTH
ALEXANDRIA
FAIRFAX STA.
MANASSAS J.
WARRENTON
WARRENTON
THOROUGHFARE GAP
GAINESVILLE
HAYMARKET
GREAT FALLS
OBLADENSBURG
ANNAPOLIS
PR. FREDERICK LEESBURG
EDWARDS F.
HARPERS F.
BERRY'S F.
KERRYV.
WINCHESTER
STERNHENSBURG
STRASBURG
STONY PT.
MARKSVILLE
PHILOMONT
PARIS
RECTOR
WHITE PLAINS
GUM SPRING
HUNTERS
FALLS CH.
VIENNA
DUMFRIES
OCCOQUAN
BRISTOW'S
ALEXANDRIA
MT. VERNON
WASHINGTON
BRENTS V.
CALLETS
WARRENTON
GOLDEN HAMILTON
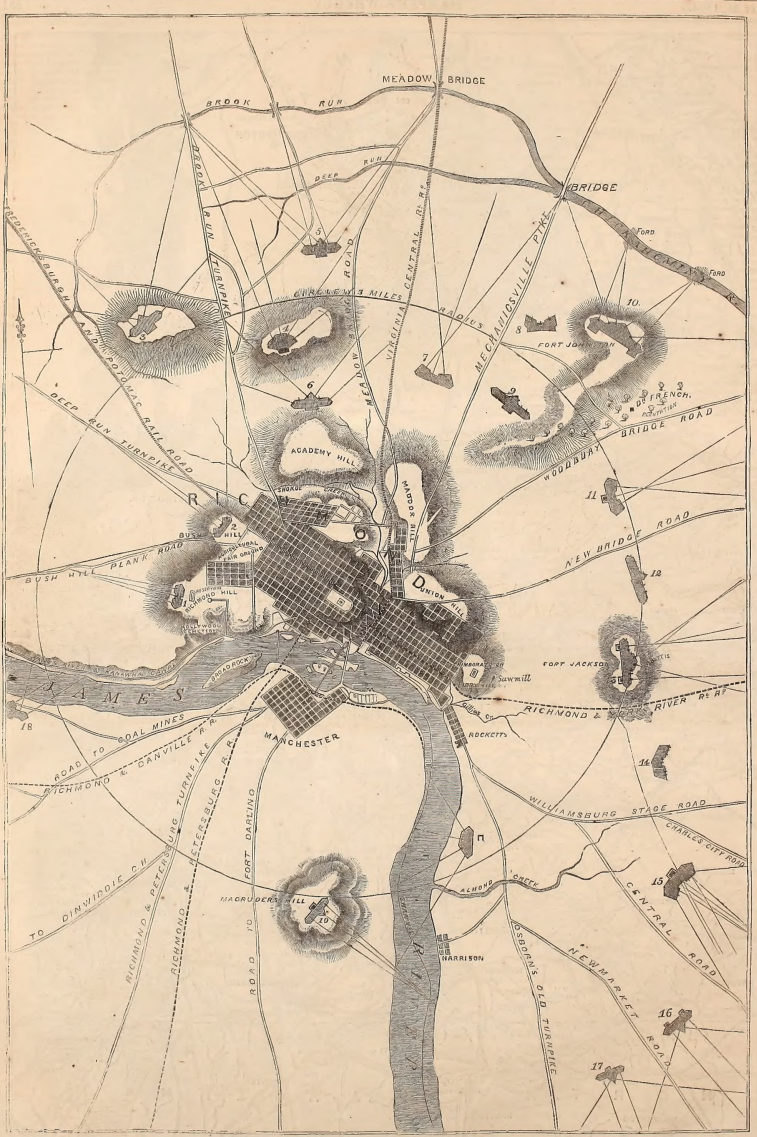
MIDDLEBURG
ALDIE
UPPERVILLE
ASHBY'S G.
SNICKER'S G.
MANASSAS G.
THOROUGHFARE G.
GAINESVILLE
HAYMARKET
GREENWICH
BRISTOW'S
CATLETT'S
WARRENTON
FLINT HILL



MAP OF RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, SHOWING ITS DEFENSES AND RAILROAD CONNECTIONS.—DRAWN BY CHARLES SHOLL, TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEER.—[SEE PAGE 334.]

GEN. JAMES S. WADSWORTH.

GENERAL JAMES S. WADSWORTH, who fell at the head of his command in the battle of the 6th inst., in the Wilderness, beyond the Rapidan, was one of the first volunteers of the war. His first service in the field was under M'DOWELL at Bull Run. About the 1st of August, 1861, he was commissioned a Brigadier-General; and during the long drilling months which succeeded General M'CLELLAN'S appointment to the command-in-chief General WADSWORTH won for himself the credit, among the most experienced army officers, of having his brigade, long before the close of the year, in the most efficient condition alike as to drill and discipline. In the spring of 1862 General WADSWORTH was appointed Military Governor of the District of Columbia; and on the advance of General M'CLELLAN to Manassas, and subsequently to the Peninsula, General WADSWORTH'S command extended to Occoquan Bay. In the winter of 1862–3, after his defeat as candidate for Governor of New York, he passed several months in the field, and was engaged at the battle of Chancellorsville. He was charged later in the season with a mission to the Southwest and the Gulf States, in connection with the organization of colored troops; and his latest position was that of General of the Fourth Division of the Fifth Corps. He gave his sons as well as himself to the service of his country, and used his large means with the utmost liberality to aid the national cause. He was nearly fifty-seven years of age.

THE LATE GENERAL WADSWORTH.

DESTRUCTION OF EAST TENNESSEE RAILROAD.

WE give on this page a sketch of the incident referred to in the following letter from a correspondent at Bull's Gap, Tennessee: "The First Brigade of the Third Division of the Twenty-third Army Corps started from camp on the morning of the 20th inst. to destroy the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad, and returned last evening, having torn up the road for fifteen miles between Lick Creek and Greenville, burning every bridge and railroad tie, and bending every rail, so completely destroying the road that it can not be repaired in months. The Second Brigade left on Sunday morning to destroy the railroad bridge over Watauga River, fifty-four miles distant. The force had a fight with the enemy under 'MUDWALL' JACKSON, completely routing him, and on their way back burned all bridges and tore up the entire track. The sketch sent you was taken on the spot."

DESTRUCTION OF SCHOONERS OFF HOMOSASSA RIVER.

WE give below a sketch of the DESTRUCTION OF TWO REBEL SCHOONERS OFF HOMOSASSA RIVER, FLORIDA, by a boat's crew from the United States steamer Sagamore. A correspondent on board the Sagamore sends us the following account of the affair: "About three o'clock on the afternoon of April 1 we saw a schooner making in for one of the rivers to the southward of Cedar Keys, and immediately gave chase with the steamer; but soon shoaled our water so much that we had to come to anchor and send off boats. One boat soon distanced the others, finding two schooners instead of one. The crews of both had run them ashore and taken boats for Dixie. Our boats' crew soon had good fires going on both of them. The first one boarded was a 150-ton schooner with an assorted cargo, the other was a 70-ton schooner loaded with castor-oil and poor whisky."

GEN. SHERMAN'S ADVANCE.

THE view of BUZZARD'S ROOST, which we give on the first page, from a sketch made by THEO. R. DAVIS, is of particular interest at this time. Buzzard's Roost is a gap in Taylor's Ridge, which runs parallel with Pigeon Mountain, and is situated between Tunnel Hill and Dalton, Georgia. The Rossi forms a very strong natural defense, and in February last, at the time of General PALMER'S advance, the enemy were enabled, in the shelter of the gap, to offer a stubborn resistance with but little risk, while inflicting serious loss upon the assailants. Our picture will enable the reader to form a tolerably accurate idea of the character of the country in which General SHERMAN'S army is now operating.

DESTRUCTION OF THE EAST TENNESSEE AND VIRGINIA RAILROAD.

DESTRUCTION OF REBEL SCHOONERS OFF HOMOSASSA RIVER, FLORIDA.

MUSICAL FESTIVAL IN PHILADELPHIA.

We give on page 324 a sketch of the opening scene of the Grand Musical Festival, in aid of the Sanitary Commission, in Philadelphia, on the night of the 4th instant. The feature of the occasion was the production of a new opera, "Notre-Dame of Paris," by WILLIAM H. FRY. The scene is described as most brilliant.

The festival, which opened with this representation is the beginning of a series of entertainments preliminary to the great Sanitary Fair to be held in Philadelphia in June. This Fair promises to be the most magnificent and extensive yet held, and will add another substantial evidence to the many which that city has already furnished of unconditional loyalty to the Union, and profound sympathy with the wants and sufferings of those who are battling in its defense.

GENERAL BUTLER'S MOVEMENT.

We give on page 325 two illustrations, representing the Departure of the Troops from Fortress Newport News, in the grand movement against Richmond, and the Arrival of General BUTLER'S Army at City Point. Our sketches were taken on the spot by a naval officer, and present an interesting view of the formidable character of General BUTLER'S movement.

REBEL ATROCITIES.

The picture on pages 328 and 329 illustrative of the atrocities committed by the rebels upon Union troops, white and black, is of particular interest at this time. The scenes presented represent only a few of the sad facts which rebel inhumanity has forced into the history of the time, but they are significant facts of the whole, while the design of the central scene most happily presents the origin of the black flag policy and the persons responsible for its adoption. All these butcheries were the result of the proclamation of JEFFERSON DAVIS, issued December 28, 1862, in which he declared that all negro slaves captured in arms be at once delivered over to the Executive authorities of the respective States to which they belong, to be dealt with according to the laws of said States. That the like orders be executed in all cases with respect to all commissioned officers of the United States when found serving in company with said slaves in insurrection against the authorities of the different States of this Confederacy." Under this proclamation the rebels proceeded to act at the first opportunity. At Galveston, January 1, 1863, part of a Massachusetts regiment was captured, and the rebels took two negroes, free-born citizens of Massachusetts, residents of Norfolk county in that State, and sold them into Slavery. Near the end of that month, twenty teamsters driving a wagon train of General ROSECRANS'S army were captured near Murfreesboro, Tennessee, tied to the trees by the road-side, and shot. In May, two negroes in the service and uniform of the United States were captured on picket at Port Hudson and forthwith hanged. On the 27th of May, the first assault on Port Hudson was delivered, and many of the negro troops fighting in that great courage were wounded and fell into rebel hands. Of these, some were murdered on the spot in the sight of their comrades. On the 6th of June there was an engagement at Milliken's Bend between about 700 negro troops and an overpowering force of rebels. A large number of the negroes were murdered on the field after they had surrendered. Some of these were shot. Some were put to death by the bayonet. Some were crucified and burned. Of those whom this last fate befell, several were white officers in command of the negro troops. And so at all points the work of butchery went on, culminating finally in the wholesale massacre at Fort Pillow, which is still fresh in the public recollection. The incident presented in one of our sketches —General FORREST murdering the servant of a Union officer—occurred about two years since, and is thus stated by Major-General SANDERS:

About the middle of the summer of 1862, FORREST surprised the post of Murfreesboro, commanded by Brigadier-General T. T. CRITTENDEN, of Indiana. The garrison was composed mostly of the Ninth Michigan and Second Minnesota Regiments and the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry. After some little fighting the troops were surrendered. A wealthy man, who was a servant of one of the officers of the Union forces, was brought to FORREST on horseback. The man had boasted of him, with many oaths, "what he was doing there!" The mulatto answered that he was a free man, and came out as a servant to an officer of the Union. FORREST, who was on horseback, deliberately put his hand to his holster, drew his pistol, and blew the man's brains out. The rebel officer stated that the mulatto man came from Pennsylvania, and the name officer announced the act as one of cold-blooded murder, and declared he would never again serve under FORREST.

The treatment of our prisoners at Belle Isle and in Southern prisons is well known to the public, and need not be referred to here.

MAP OF RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

We give on page 332 a Map of Richmond and its Environs, showing the fortifications erected by the rebels for its defense, and its railroad connections. Only two of the forts are named; the others are known by their numbers. It will be seen that on the south side the city is comparatively unprotected.

SLEEP AND DEATH.

SAY, when the infant sleeps its wakeless sleep,
Its life-blood cold—its heart can beat no more—
Its little eyes, 'neath bright, with hazy film
Are clouded o'er—

Say, is this death?
No! it is only sleep.

Say, when the warrior sinks upon the field,
The hard-fought battle o'er, his duty done,
The last weak cry that strikes upon the ear
"The fight is won!"

Say, is this death?
No! it is only sleep.

Say, when the old man having run his race,
And seen his friendships fade, his hopes decay,
Life's evening close, and in Heaven awake
A brighter day—

Say, is this death?
No! it is only sleep.

Say, when she hears it fresh, and love's young dream
Together binds two hearts, kindred souls, two lives,
The loved one perishes, one memory lives.
One blest survives—

Say, what is this?
Ah! this is truly death.

SURPRISED.

"TICKET, Sir, if you please!"

Between dusk and daylight—the warm gold of the sunset sky just fading into crimson, and the Express Train thundering over the iron track like some strong, fleetless demon, there had been considerably conscious of these things as he started from a brief, restless slumber, wherein his knapsack had served as pillow, and stared vaguely into the sharp Yankee face of the obdurate conductor.

"Ticket! I suppose I've such a thing about me," he muttered, hoarsely, pulling out his pocket and then the other. "Oh, here it is! I say, Conductor, are we near New York?"

"Twenty minutes or so will bring us into Jersey City, Sir—we're making pretty good time."

And the sharp-faced official passed on, to harass the next unfortunate man who had neglected to put his ticket in his hat-band; while Captain Silver dragged himself into a sitting posture, putting his two hands back of his head with a portentous yawn, and smiled to remember the fantastic dreams that had chased one another through his waking during that half-hour of cramped, uneasy slumber from which the conductor's challenge had roused him—dreams in which blood-red battle-fields, lurid night-marches had blended oddly with sweet home-voices, and the sulphurous breath of artillery had mingled with violet-scented fern-fair twilight woodground, and gusts of sweetness from tossing clouds of new-mown hay, through which the flying Express Train shot remorselessly.

And then Carll Silver began to think of other things.

"Conductor!" whispered the fat old lady opposite, in the bombazine bonnet and snuff-colored shawl.

"Yes 'm," said the man of tickets, stopping abruptly in his transit through the cars, and inclining his ear.

"That young man in the military cap, Conductor—I hope he ain't an escaped lunatic dressed up in soldier's clothes. He's been talking to himself. And I don't a bit like the way he keeps grinnin' to himself and rubbin' his two hands together. He's acted queer all day—and I'm travelin' all alone, Conductor!"

The conductor laughed and passed on. The old lady bridled in offended dignity. Bless her anxious heart! how was she to know that Captain Silver was only rejoicing in the possession of the glorious "surprise" he had in store for his mother and dimple-faced sister that night? Was it not a year—twelve long, long months—since he had looked upon their faces last? And now—

Oh, on your own way, Express Train, through quiet villages where daffodils sprinkle all the gardens with gold! Speed over the sloping hills, where springing grasses seem to fill the atmosphere with and brooks babble under swinging willows—past lonely church-yards, where the white hands of innumerable grave-stones beckon to you through the twilight and are gone; for every throb of your iron pulse brings one true heart nearer home! Shot and shell have spared him for this—the fever, the pestilence and foul malaria have passed him by; and now—

Suppose there should be an accident! He had heard of such things. Suppose the train should run! Suppose he should be carried home a dead, mangled corpse, the words of greeting frozen into eternal silence on his lips, before they had been spoken under the heavy eyelids! Strange that such morbid fancies should never have occurred to him in the roar and smoke of Gettysburg, yet come to him now, like guests that would not be driven away, when he was within twenty minutes of home! Why could it break his mother's heart; or would she live on? And would Kate Meriam care?—Kate Meriam, the bright-eyed, fair-haired, rose-cheeked school girl at him save through her long brown lashes, and whose coy mouth always made him think of scarlet berries against a background of snow?

"To think!" ejaculated Carll Silver, bringing his hand down upon the seat in front of him with a force that made the glass rattle ominously and struck a chill to the heart of the old lady in the bombazine bonnet and snuff-colored shawl, who knock down the man who ventured to tell me I was a coward, should be afraid to say frankly to a little slender girl that I love her! To think that the very touch of her glove, the sound of her footstep, the rustle of her ribbons can frighten my self-possession away, and make a staring, silent idiot of me! After all, what is a man's courage worth? There's no use in thinking of it. I shall die an old bachelor, for I'll never marry any woman but Kate Meriam, and I never shall dare to plead my cause with Kate. I wish I hadn't such an absurd streak of cowardice through me."

Yet Captain Silver's men had told a different tale when he led them over the bridge in that dreadful charge at Antietam. Cowardice! there are several different interpretations to that word.

"Carriage! carriage! No, I won't have a carriage. Get away from me you fellows! you're worse than the locusts of Egypt, and ten times as noisy," growled Captain Silver, energetically elbowing his way through the swarms of eager hackmen, who were making night hideous, at the foot of Cortlandt Street. "Do you suppose I'm going to spoil my precious surprise with a carriage?"

Broadway by gaslight! How strange, yet how familiar it seemed to the returning exile, with its stately facades of freestone and marble, seeming literally to rest on thousands of quivering fire, and its throngs of people, coming and going in everlasting succession, like the tides of a never-resting sea. Carll Silver's heart leaped up in his breast with a quick, joyous throb at the old accustomed sights and sounds. It was good to feel his footsteps ringing on Manhattanese ground.

No lights in the house! His heart stood still a moment. That was strangely ominous. But then he remembered that his mother was fond of sitting in the twilight, and dismissed the lingering doubt from his mind. How lucky, the door was on the latch and swung noiselessly open.

Hush! not a creaking stair or clanking spur must betray him through the old familiar hall he passed and into his mother's room, lighted only by the ruddy glimmer of a bright coal fire.

"Where is she, and what are they all?" ejaculated Captain Silver under his breath. "No matter—they'll be along soon; meantime I'll wheel this big chair up, and take a look, for the sly child if it is the first week in May. Won't they be a little astonished, though, when they come in? Upon my word, things couldn't have happened nicer! Faugh! what a smell of paint—whitewash, too, as I'm a living sinner! Confound it, I've kicked over a pail of the stuff! If the women-folks aren't house-cleaning!"

The Captain gave an indignant and contemptuous sniff as he surveyed the desolate scene.

"What comfort a female can find in turning things upside down, and plugging the house with soap and water twice a year, I can't imagine. Carpets all up—floors damp—curtains torn down—not one familiar object to greet a fellow's eyes after a twelvemonth's absence from home. Heigh-ho! I feel deucedly blue."

Which he did, and began to smoke and meditate.

There was a rustle and a tripping footfall on the stairs. The Captain took out his cigar and listened.

"That's Minny," said he to himself. "Mamma doesn't dance about like that."

He rose, and leaned against the door-casing as the dancing feet came nearer and nearer. How his heart beat! How his face shone upon a crimson merino dress and a little white apron on the threshold! And the next moment he had caught the light form in his arms, and was showering kisses on cheek and brow and lips and hair.

"Caught, you little witch!" he exclaimed. "That's to pay you for presuming to clean house without my permission! No, you're not going to escape!"

Such a piercing scream as she rewarded his fraternal demonstrations with! Carll Silver let go her waist, and stepped against the wall with a faint idea of breaking through the lath and plaster, and hiding himself in the general ruin. For, as early as he could, in making in his confusion, out, the voice was not that of his sister Minny, but—Kate Meriam!

"How dare you!" she ejaculated, with crimson cheeks and quivering lips. "I'll ring the bell and call the servants if you don't leave the house this instant!"

"Upon my word I'm not a burglar or an assassin," pleaded the astonished boy in self-possession in a measure as he saw Kate's breathless terror. "It was so dark I couldn't see your face, and I thought it was my sister Minny. Don't you know me, Miss Meriam—Captain Silver?"

"You are an impostor," said Kate, with spirit. "Captain Silver is in the Army of the Potomac."

"No, he's not, he's here," urged Carll. "How shall I prove that I'm myself? Kate! Miss Meriam—"

For she had sunk into the chair and began to cry. He knelt beside her with a rough attempt at comfort.

"Kate, you are not sorry to see me back again?"

"No," she sobbed, "only—only I was so frightened!"

The little, trembling, blue-eyed thing! Carll Silver had never seen her to leave before. It was the assumption of dignity now—no royal airs—only brown disheveled hair and cheeks like red-clover blossoms in a shower. "I'm sorry you saw me—how ridiculous it seemed to clasp the tiny palms in his one strong hand!

"Kate, dearest, I love you! With my whole heart, Kate. Nay, do not be so frightened—I would die to save you one moment's terror! Only tell me that you cannot be mine!"

And when the tears were dried, leaving the eyes like drenched violets, and the cheeks blushed brightly, Carll Silver had leave and license to keep one little fluttering hand in his, and knew that he was an accepted lover.

"But where are my mother and sister?" he asked at length. "And what is the solution of this strange riddle?"

"Don't you know," laughed Kate, "they do not live here any more?"

"Not live here!"

"No; have you forgotten that yesterday was the 1st of May? We occupy this house now—papa, and Aunt Milicent, and I."

"Oh!" quoth Captain Silver. "So they've moved. And I never to hear of it. Upon my word they treat me pretty coolly."

"Ah, but you would have heard of it," said Kate, "if you had written from camp by any of the letters instead of roving over the country without a word of warning to your friends!"

"Give me one more kiss, Katie, and I'm off to see them. One more, my betrothed wife. Does it not seem like a dream?"

"And you are my soldier now," whispered Kate, playing with the gold buttons of his coat with tremulous fingers. "Mine to send out into the battle-field to dream of and to pray for. Carll, I have always reprised that I had no gift for my country, now I can give my best and dearest to aid her cause."

Spoken like a soldier's wife, Kate," said Silver, with kindling eyes. "If you but knew how much better we rough men fight for knowing that woman's love and woman's prayers enshrine us with a golden, unseen armor—nonsense! I'm getting sentimental. Good-night."

So there were three surprises that May evening—one for Kate Meriam, (couldn't you have been surprised, Mademoiselle, to be caught and kissed in the dark, and never know who the kisser was?), one for Captain Silver (a very agreeable one, though), and one—the old original surprise, if we may so term it—for his mother and sister. And Carll has not yet left off congratulating himself that his "leave of absence" happened to fall in the flowery and magnetic month of May. For if he hadn't blundered into Miss Meriam's house and kissed her by mistake, thereby bringing matters precipitately to a focus, the probabilities are that to this day he never would have mustered courage to tell her of his love.

And when the golden armadas of the autumn leaves float down the forest brooks, and the blue mist of Indian Summer wraps the hills in dreamy light, Carll Silver is coming back to seal Kate Meriam's destiny with a wedding-ring.

ADVERTISEMENTS

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his long experience, Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced Advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no instance charged the premium, Government or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination; this is perfect proof that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you may have an excellent, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens, and will last you years instead of months. High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," on page 335.

AMERICAN NEEDLE CO., 447 Broadway, N. Y., Needle Manufacturers and Importers, Sewing Machine and Hand Stitched Hand Needles, Hackle, Gill, Comb, Card, Fine, &c.

THE SELF-SEWING AND NEEDLE SETTER, for all Sewing-Machines, price $1 50 for Box. Sent free by mail, with directions. J. W. BARTLETT, 447 Broadway, N. Y.

5000 Agents Wanted,

TO INTRODUCE OUR

NEW GOLD PEN.

This gold pen is something entirely new, and is now offered to the public for the first time, and is sold by an entirely new process, enabling us to offer them very cheap. Every pen is warranted to be of the finest Iridium pointed gold, and to possess all the elasticity and writing qualities of the highest priced gold pens made. Single pens sent by mail on receipt of the following prices: With Ebony or Rosewood Holder, 75 Cents. Cases.

No. 2. Medium Pen and Holder, . . . each 90 cents
No. 3. Large, " " . . . each $1 00.
No. 4. Largest Pen and Holder, . . . each $1 25.

Great inducements to Agents and the Trade. Send for our Circular. GEORGE A. HILL & CO., Sole Manufacturers, No. 251 Broadway, New York.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Cosmetic will force them in from 20 to 30 days, or no pay. Sent by mail (to any post-office) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—cash by mail. Address, with stamp for circular, W. ADDISON DICK. P. O. Box 5,643. N. Y.

$75 A MONTH.

$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines. Address JOHNSON, CLARK & CO., Boston or Pittsburgh.

OLD ABE'S JOKES:

OR, THE PRESIDENT AS A STORY-TELLER.

Comprising all his issues, except the "Greenbacks," being the first and only book of PRESIDENTIAL JOKES.

By Booksellers and News Agents, post-paid, 25 cents.
T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS, 306 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa.

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS.
The best Pill in the world for family use, and for all Bilious and Liver Complaints. Price 25 cents per box.
Address all orders to J. P. BRIDGE, M.D.,
Reading Physician GRAEFENBERG COMPANY,
No. 139 William Street, near Fulton, New York.
☞ Liberal terms to DEALERS and PEDDLERS. ☜

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS.—The live, spicy and most brilliantly illustrated paper in the world. Sample copy, 24 pp. 4to, with Demorest's Mirror of Fashions as a premium. Single copies 10 cents, mailed free on receipt of price, at No. 39 Beekman Street, N. Y.

DR. B. C. PERRY
DERMATOLOGIST,
49 Bond Street, New York,

Formerly of 29 Winter Street, Boston, treats successfully all Diseases of the Scalp, Face and Body. Loss of Hair, Moles, Blanching, &c., removed. Moth Freckles, and other Discolorations from the skin, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultations free.
For particulars enclose stamp for Circular.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $115 00 each.
100 Gold Watches ..... 70 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches ..... 40 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches ..... 18 00 each.
2,000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2,000 Gold Band Bracelets ..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2,000 " " ..... 3 00 to 5 00 each.
3,000 Cameo Brooches ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2,000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2,000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3,000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3,000 Cameo Ear Drops ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2,000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2,000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3,000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 6 00 each.
5,000 Gent's Breast Pins ..... 2 50 to 3 00 each.
3,000 Watch Keys..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5,000 Pair of Solitaire Sides ..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5,000 Sets of Bosom Studs ..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5,000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
5,000 Plain Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
5,000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
5,000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
5,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2,000 Gold Pens, Silver M'ed Holders 4 00 to 5 00 each.
2,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension Cases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Duryea's Maizena

RECEIVED TWO PRIZE MEDALS

(From Juries 3 and 4) at the

International Exhibition, LONDON, 1862;

AT THE GREAT INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AT HAMBURG, JULY, 1863, RECEIVED THE HIGHEST PRIZE MEDAL FOR ITS GREAT DELICACY AS AN ARTICLE OF FOOD.

Can be served up in an infinite variety of delicious dishes. Sold by all Grocers, with directions. Pamphlet, with 80 Receipts, will be furnished on application by letter or otherwise, to

WM. DURYEA, Agent, 166 Fulton St., N. Y.

D. BARNUM'S

"SELF-SEWER,"

FOR ALL SEWING-MACHINES,

Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting. NO Machine complete without it. Price $1 50, with directions, sent by mail. For sale for all Machines, at the inventor's headquarters, WILCOX & GIBBS' Sewing Machine Office, 508 Broadway, New York.

D. BARNUM.

Beautiful False Moustaches, 50 cents and $1 each. Sent free by mail. Address C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Enameled Chamber
FURNITURE

The best assortment of Enameled Furniture in all colors and styles, walnut and chestnut, plain and ornamental, in suite, wholesale and retail. Also Mattresses and Palliasses. WARREN WARD, 371 Canal St., N. Y.

New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 107 Broadway, New York, would again call the attention of the army reporters, for the sale of their new styles of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for circular.

DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED NEWS, every week, contains numerous illustrations of live subjects: also, pictures in colors, new and popular music, supplementary sheets of fashions, entertaining literary matter, with other novel features. It is one of the most spicy illustrated weeklies now published.—Home Journal.

Great Chance to make Money!

$650 000 of WATCHES, JEWELRY, &c., given away with our Extensive Sale Presents. Any Agent may make from 100 to 200 per cent. profit. Sample Watch, with Silver Extension Case, and Solid Silver Steel Engraving, by which 10 persons will yield $50. More money to be made selling our Patent and Engravings than in any other business. Send for particulars of Special Inducements, and for New Circular.
G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 & 38 Beekman St., N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular and Price Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., sent free. Address Prize Co., No. 98 Ann St., N. Y., and 15 Lincoln St., Boston.

U. S. 10-40 Bonds.

These Bonds are issued under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1864, and the interest on the same, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, is to be paid in coin, and the principal is payable at the pleasure of the Government, at any period not less than ten nor more than forty years from the date; and until their redemption FIVE PER CENT. INTEREST WILL BE PAID IN COIN, of Bonds of not over one hundred dollars annually and on all other Bonds semi-annually.

Instructions to the National Banks acting as loan agents were not issued from the United States Treasury until March 5th, but in the first three weeks of April the subscriptions averaged more than TEN MILLIONS a WEEK.

Subscriptions will be received by all

NATIONAL BANKS

which are depositaries of public money, and all

Respectable Banks and Bankers

throughout the country acting as agents for the National Depositary Banks) will furnish further information on application and

AFFORD EVERY FACILITY TO SUBSCRIBERS.

COUNTRY BOARD WANTED,

Within an hour and a half of the city. On the water preferred—for two families. Will pay liberally for the right accommodation, and will refer to where families be taken. Address H. F., care of HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW

A little of every thing relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, &c., &c., read revised and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Diseases of Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Affections of the Urinary Organs, Diseases of the Sexual Organs of Generation, Barrenness, Impotency, Sexual Weakness, Hysteria, Self Abuse, Chancre, Paralysis, Disease of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and Three Score Specialties. Marriage and Its Duties, Physiology of Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Engagement, Philosophy of Courtship, Analysis of Love, the Married, and a thousand of value to married and single, never before published in a volume, making a curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one; 400 pages: 100 illustrations. To be had of all Book Agents. Contains tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or will be forwarded to any address on receipt of $1 50. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1120 Broadway, New York.

Major-Gen. B. F. Butler.

Hon. Owen Lovejoy—Brad and Narrow Heads—E. McClellan—Horace Greeley—Hon. Wm. Pitt Fessenden—Sleeping in Church, its Cause and Cure.—The Soul Immortal—Benevolence—Skulls of Murderers, Thieves, &c.—Egyptian, Assyrian, Hindoo, Arab, Jew, Fellahs, Phœnicians, Slave, Barbarian, Civilized, and Why No Illustrated PHRENOLOGICAL JOURN'L to date.

Fowler & Wells, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, two Ex. No. Table Distribution, Bed 38x51. Price $3500.

Apply at Harper & Brothers, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—A brilliant display of beautiful novelties; music, elegant fashion plates, with Full Size Patterns, and Work Bread Sheet, with much valuable information, only 20 cents; or subscription $3, with a premium of One Dollar's worth of EXTRA Patterns. Do not fail to subscribe immediately.

(Form of an Order.)

Mme. Demorest will find enclosed $1 00, and 2 cts. for postage on the premiums, for which please send me your Mirror of Fashions for one year, commencing with the Summer No.

Give your address in full, and address it to

MME. DEMOREST, 473 Broadway, New York.

Fine Portrait of Lieut.-Gen. Grant, the largest and most correct Portrait published. Agents wanted. $5 per day made in its sale. Send stamp for circular.

JONES & CLARK, Publishers,
83 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Be not Stiffnecked.

When judiciously used, BRANDRETH'S PILLS seldom fail to cure, because they purify the blood. If we are sick from any cause we owe it to ourselves to use this remedy which Providence places within our reach.

Read the following in proof:

NEW YORK, July 8, 1851.

DR. BRANDRETH,

Sir: A Boy of mine was subject to fits from his infancy—his case was considered hopeless by the doctors, who thought he would be subject to them for life. After they had given him up, I was recommended to try your pills, and without much faith did try them, using them according to your printed directions. Four years ago I commenced giving them to him, and to my great joy and relief, he has had but ONE RETURN COBY of his affliction since. I consider him now perfectly cured.

The extraordinary benefit they did him, makes me always recommend them to my friends, and I would be glad for everybody to know their value. The case was the worst possible; he would have been helpless and almost useless, by unfit for any kind of business, from the length and severity of each attack—often lasting a whole night, and leaving him for two or three days afterwards entirely prostrate from weakness. Every kind of treatment was also extensively applied that was professionally advised. You may therefore judge what great reason I have for letting you have this statement in acknowledgment for the benefit received, and for the purpose of letting those who may be banishing all hope of similar circumstances, have my testimony in confirmation of the reliability of the other certificates, and perfect confidence, like myself, in the value of the pills. Yours respectfully,

JOHN WEBB, 18 Beekman St.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full direction. Purchase none unless the PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The splendid Summer number, with elegant illustrations of New Styles, Braid and Embroidery, and Seven Full-Sized Patterns, will be ready MAY 10.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, are sent by HARPER'S EXPRESS. No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. Address J. WORTH CARD, Biddeford, Maine.

PHUN PHROM PHUNNY PHOLKS and Sensible Sense for 10 of your Common Cents. Do not fail to see No. 3 of the PHUN PHROM PHUNNY PHOLKS, containing the most complete Budget of Comicalities, Witty Puns, and Entertaining Nonsense ever published here, there, and everywhere. Price 10 cents. Dealers supplied by

AMERICAN NEWS CO.

SOMETHING NEW
IN PLAYING CARDS.
LOVE SCENES.
Designs from French Artists.

The above new Playing Cards are the beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can also be used the same as ordinary playing cards, thus affording pleasure with amusement. Enclose 50 cents and two red stamps and send for sample pack. $5 per dozen packs. Liberal discount by the dozen. H. A. CASWELL, 63 Nassau St., New York.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability, combined with great power in Field, Marine, Theatre's, Opera, and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person in full view at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen the sight, without improving the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Calculations sent by mail. Address CHAMBERLAIN'S, Opticists Optician, 691 Broadway, New York.

DEMOREST'S NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS. Every week contains beautiful and graphic illustrations, and a National and Family Newspaper in its most comprehensive sense. Full of entertainment, music, information and the Fashions. The Model Newspaper of America. Terms: Single copy, $3. Mme. Demorest's Mirror of Fashions for one year as a premium. Single copies 10 cts. Published at No. 473 Broadway, New York, and sold everywhere. Do not fail to see it. Single copies mailed free on receipt of the price.

Short-Hand without a Master,

By which the art of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, &c., may be learned in a few hours. Sixth edition, with a supplement, sent, post-paid, on receipt of 25 cents. Address PITMAN & CO., Corner Ann and Nassau Streets, New York.

HOME SONGS OF THE WAR.

American Melodies. Over 30. Our Volunteers. Song and Chorus. Remember, 20.

Our Country's Call. Song and Chorus, 20. Emancipation. Song and Chorus, 20. A Life has Fallen. Song, 20. Softly now, softly now. Hymn with tune. Reprinted, 20. From the red battle-field. Song, 20.

Song, 20. The Dreamer Boy's March. Funeral. Copies of the above new and popular sheet music sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, 277 Washington St., Boston.

FIELD, NAVY, and OPERA GLASSES, of superior quality, at HORN, Opticians, 212 Broadway, corner of Fulton St. Send for description of Microscopes, Telescopes, Spectacles, and Eyeglasses at wholesale and retail. Send stamp for circular.

Musician's Omnibus—Contains 700 tunes for flute, violin, cornet, or fife, $1. MUSICIAN'S OMNIBUS complete, 1000 tunes, a complete Musical Library, $2, mailed. New Concertina Book—Full instructions and over 300 piece music, 60c. New Accordeon and Flutina Book, complete instructions, over 200 tunes, 90c., mailed. FREDERICK BLUME, 289 Bowery, N. Y.

Economy in Silks, Gloves, Ribbons, &c.

HOGEMAN & CO'S RENZINE removes Paint, Grease Spots, &c., from Silks, Gloves, Ribbons, &c., quick and easy. Only 25c. per bottle. Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers. HOGEMAN & CO., Nos. 191, 193, 195 Fulton St., and corner of 6th Ave. and 11th St.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PENS—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,

MORTON'S GOLD PENS,

THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description.

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in size to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 63 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with different Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens; although the Subscriber does not, himself, endorse, for individuals, any particular Pen.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for the time mentioned against accident.

The Numbers indicate size only. No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $9 25 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 2 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 50 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $5 a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 2 Pen; for $2 50 a No. 3 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 4 Pen; for $3 50 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 a No. 4 Pen; for $5 a No. 5 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridium Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection. Each nib and the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1860.

"The Quality" Nibs are intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true considerations) any Gold Pens made anywhere.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he begs leave to say that although manufacturing his Very Best Pencil Machine, he could not have made as Good Writing and Durable Pens, for the Money, as those he has furnished previously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens intended, and in particular the size of the Pen they prefer.—Another style or binder, coarse or fine.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk: and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering), in addition to the price of purchase, I will guaranty their safe delivery.

Twenty-seven cents additional per letter will be allowed the full premium on the duty received.

NO CLUBS, unless Orders of $10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, of 15 per cent. on $25, and of 20 per cent. on $50 or more, to one address at one time.

A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm.

This remedy has been used in the family of the proprietor and his friends for many years, and they have induced him to offer it for sale to the public, feeling confident, after a trial, that they will consider him a public benefactor.

In cases of Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism it is invaluable—in fact, if after a fair trial it fails to cure, the money will be returned. Price $1 per bottle.

Depot—Dr. Baker's Office, 1,128 Broadway, near Fourth Avenue. Sold by the principal Druggists. Remedies sent by mail or express to all parts of the country.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine.
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

50,000 AGENTS WANTED.

R. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

I will send a sample of either of the New Army Devices, Corps, Badges, Regimental, or Naval Pins for $1, Or a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Division, or Company Pin with Name, Rank, &c., on it, neatly and finely engraved thereon, for $1. Send for Wholesale Illustrated Circular.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 50 emblazoned cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Stripes on the backs. Any one can play at the old games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1 with usual directions to the trade. Sold by Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 165 William Street, N. Y.

Attention Company!

Clark's Conquest, a powerful stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of whiskers or moustache in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Conquest according to directions, failing it not as represented, by informing me of the fact, can have their money returned them at any time within 3 months from day of purchase. Price $2 00. Sent sealed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money.
Address, A. C. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 113,
Albany, N. Y.

CARPET WARP.

WOOL TWINE.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 94 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

REVENGE.

JONES. "Do you know, Sir, what I'll do, if the Government persists in carrying out this exorbitant tax on liquors and cigars? I'll not drink another glass of liquor or smoke another cigar. No, Sir, not one!"

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

DRY AND GROUND IN OIL

in sevenfi ften shades.

For English and Gothic Cottages, Outbuildings, &c.

ROBERT REYNOLDS, Agent, No. 74 Maiden Lane.

Do you want a good Magazine?

If so, subscribe to the Atlantic Monthly

which is prized by literary journals in America and Europe as the best American Magazine ever published. It is thoroughly national in tone, and its literary character is the highest possible. The best Americans writers contribute regularly.

Terms $3 a year, postage paid by the publishers. Liberal reduction to clubs. A specimen copy sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address TICKNOR & FIELDS, 135 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Perry Davis'

VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER,

Taken internally, cures sudden Colds, Coughs, &c. Weak Stomach, General Debility, Sour Stomach, Canker, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Cramp or Pain in the Stomach, Bowel Complaint, Painters' Colic, Asiatic Cholera, Diarrhœa, and Dysentery.

Applied externally, cures Felon, Boils, and all Sores, Severe Burns and Scalds, Cuts, Bruises and Sprains, Swelling of the Joints, Ringworm and Tetter, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Frosted Feet and Chilblains, Toothache, Pains in the Face, Neuralgia, and Rheumatism.

(See Directions accompanying each Bottle.)

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street. N. Y., 31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris. Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

Good News for the Army.

Hereafter we will send, post-paid, any of our PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS ordered by soldiers for themselves or friends, giving an Album of the full value they remit us.

Our Albums have the reputation of being superior to all others in beauty and durability, and range in price from 50 cts. to $30.

Our catalogue of

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS

now embraces about 5000 officers, army and navy, statesmen, actors, copies of works of art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our assortment of these is very extensive, including a great variety of views of the present war.

Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO,

501 Broadway, New York.

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

Watches and Jewelry

Of every description.

Orders, large or small, faithfully executed. Established 20 years.

T. B. BYNNER, 178 Broadway New York.

TROPICAL BALSAM and COCOA OIL

Prepared by Caterns Brothers and Co.

No. 83 Maiden Lane, New York.

